The above list is necessarily incomplete in places, because of the failure of clerks to index admissions to the bar; where the index does not indicate admissions to the bar as such, the only manner of ascertaining the members is by going through each order book, page by page—an endless and perhaps profitless task, and a method which of itself makes many omissions possible. The dates of the admission of the following members of the bar have not been acertained: W. P. Debolt, Alexander Gullett, Frémont Garrett, F. A. Hay, Ed. M. Ives, Allen Jaqua, F. S. McFarland, C. T. Pickett, E. B. Wood, and J. H. Williamson, and doubtless as many more have been omitted entirely.

Our first prosecuting attorney was James Rariden, appointed by the court on October 12, 1818, and after him were appointed Bethuel F. Morris, 1821; James Gilmore, 1822; Lot Bloomfield, 1823; Cyrus Finch, 1824; Oliver H. Smith, 1825; Amos Lane, 1826; Charles H. Test, 1827; Martin M. Ray, 1829; James Perry, 1830; William J. Brown, 1832; Samuel Bigger, 1832; Caleb B. Smith, 1832; William J. Brown, 1833; Samuel W. Parker, 1837; Andrew Kennedy, 1839; Jehu T. Elliott, 1839; John Brownlee, 1839; Jeremiah Smith, 1839; John M. Wallace, 1842; John Davis, 1844; Joseph S. Buckles, 1846.

After this, the prosecuting attorneys were elected, and they are as follows: William A. Peelle, Thomas M. Browne, William Garber, James N. Templer, Thomas M. Browne, Daniel M. Bradbury, E. B. Reynolds, Alexander Gullett, Albert O. Marsh, Josiah E. Mellette, Chauncey Medsker, Silas A. Canada, James B. Ross, Benjamin F. Marsh, James B. Ross, Clarkson L. Hutchens, Alonzo L. Bales, Charles L. Watson, Wesley O. Smith, Carl Thompson, Ernst E. Chenoweth, Bert E. Woodbury.

The prosecuting attorneys for the common pleas court were: William Moorman, John J. Cheney, Enos L. Watson, Thomas J. Hosford, Josiah E. Mellette and John J. Hawkins.

Since we have spoken above of the associate judges, who presided with the president judge over the circuit courts in the various counties during the early days, it may be of interest to note who they were. John Wright and William Edwards sat from 1818 to 1823, when John Sample replaced Wright. Wright was, however, soon re-elected, as in 1830 he and Edwards were presiding with Judge Test; in 1833 the associates were John Wright and William Peacock and they served continuously until 1839, when Daniel B. Miller and Littleberry Diggs were elected. In 1846 John Mock replaced Diggs, and in 1847 Daniel B. Miller was replaced by Peter S. Miller. In 1852 the picturesque, but otherwise useless associates were done away with by the new constitution and we hear of them no more. Ebenezer Tucker, in his history of Randolph county, intimates that in addition to the above, Stephen C. Stephens and John T. McKinney were associates; an error, as they were supreme justices of the state.

We have attempted thus far to give a list of attorneys who have practised, and are practising at the bar in Randolph county, and have touched briefly upon the judges of our courts. In now looking at the list of attorneys we shall select a few who have attained more or less prominence, and will ask our readers to bear in mind the fact that we shall not dwell at any length upon those whom we understand will have more complete sketches elsewhere in this work. Their great number makes it impossible, and the fact that many who never intend to practise law, or at least never do practise, take advantage of our constitutional requirements (or rather lack of requirements) to gain admission to the bar, makes it undesirable, that we should mention each of them.

James Rariden, long one of the most prominent figures at the bar, was one of the strong men of the state in its early history. He came from Centerville and was the leader of the Wayne bar, was seven years in the state legislature, four years in congress and a member of the constitutional convention of 1850. He located in Wayne county in 1817 and died there in 1856. Rariden was large, physically and intellectually, a strong character in his profession and in public life generally. Prominent in all literature of the early Indiana bar, he appears in Smith's "Early Trials" as an exceedingly interesting figure, for years the circuit companion of the author, who says: "We rode through the wilderness together, ate together, slept together and were just as near one man as two men could be."

Bethuel F. Morris practiced at his bar in the '20's and '30's, was prosecuting attorney in 1821-1822, and afterward served as judge of the Rush Circuit Court. About Cyrus Finch, of Centerville, who was admitted here in 1821, Mr. Smith tells the following story, which serves the double purpose of illustrating the judicial capacity of the associates and the ready wit of Mr. Finch: "We had a little pass before the associate judges of Wayne county. The case was an assumpsit; I was for the defendant and Mr. Finch for plaintiff. He proved that my client had promised by parol to pay a debt another person owed his client. The evidence closed; I thought I had him and took up the statute and read to the associate judges—'No action shall be brought to charge any person upon any promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, unless the promise is in writing, signed by the party to be charged.' This I supposed settled the case, but not so. Mr. Finch—'Hand me that book. If the court please, that law is void under the constitution of the United States which reads, 'No state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.'" I saw I was gone. The Court: 'The constitution of the United States must prevail; judgment for the plaintiff.'" It would seem that Finch's good fortune lay in the absence of the president judge.

Charles W. Ewing became one of the ablest and most brilliant lawyers at the Fort Wayne bar and afterward a circuit judge; Lot Bloomfield is mentioned as one of the distinguished lawyers of the state in his day. Martin M. Ray, who was admitted, with Bloomfield, in 1823 and afterward became prosecutor, was evidently a poor writer, a fact of which Mr. Smith did not hesitate to take advantage. The latter tells of an indictment drawn by Ray against one Henson for obstructing a highway with trees and logs, the words being so ill written as to look like "hen's and hogs." Mr. Smith, for Henson, moved to quash the indictment on the ground that there was no statute against hens and hogs running at large, and the judge (associate) declared the words to be "hens and hogs," quashed the indictment and admonished the prosecutor to write a legible hand thereafter, and "cross his t's and dot his i's and not be bothering the court with such questions."

Of Oliver H. Smith we have already written so much that further mention seems superfluous. He was a strong lawyer, and a self-made man who rode away from his home in New Jersey when a boy with no money, ran a coal barge from Pittsburg to Louisville and thence into Indiana in 1817, settling at Connersville. He was licensed to practice law in 1820 and made his first appearance at the Randolph county bar in 1825. He was made prosecuting attorney of the third district in 1824, at a time when the southern court was held at Vevay and the northern at Fort Wayne, and rode the circuit with Judge Eggleston for the next two years, attending court in each county twice a year. While he was never a resident of Randolph county, and probably never practised in our courts to any extent outside of the two years when he was prosecutor, yet his "Early Trials" has given us so much of our legal history that he must take a prominent place in any consideration of the bar of this county. He tells how, in 1825, in company with Judge Eggleston and James Rariden, he rode into Winchester en route to Fort Wayne, and put up at Paul W. Way's tavern, and how the next night their ponies all ran off and left them as they were encamped on the Wabash. The party trudged through the woods to Townsend's Prairie, procured new ponies there and rode on to Fort Wayne, then a town of two hundred population. Returning after court adjourned they found their captured ponies waiting for them at Winchester and proceeded on to Centerville in time for the opening of court there.

Oliver H. Smith had few equals in the state as a lawyer, and the bar of the state can never repay the debt it owes him for the wealth of legal reminiscence he has left it. He became a congressman and afterward United States senator and spent his later years in the practice of law at Indianapolis, where he was regarded as the head of the state Bar. He was a man great in stature, "full of energy, ready for any contest, strong in argument and laconic in style; an untiring student, grasping the main points of his cases and driving his business through with a powerful hand."

Amos Lane was widely known as a lawyer and politician, became speaker of the state house of representatives and then a congressman; John S. Newman was a fine practical lawyer, clear-headed, of strong, vigorous intellect, and was for thirty years one of the foremost lawyers in the state. He was noted as a skilful pleader, was an honest and conscientious lawyer, and gave dignity to the profession wherever he practiced. He came into Wayne county in 1807 and lived at Centerville and Richmond until 1860 when he ceased the practice of law, removed to Indianapolis and became president of the Merchants National Bank. He died in 1882.

Caleb B. Smith who was admitted to this bar in 1829 with Newman, was from Connersville. He studied law under Oliver H. Smith at Connersville and rose to rapid distinction as a lawyer. He was a member of the legislature, speaker of the house, twice elected to congress, and a member of Lincoln's cabinet. At his death in 1865 he was the foremost Republican orator in the nation.

James Perry, of Liberty, was a fine lawyer and debator; while not of the sort to impress a jury and secure a verdict in a bad case, he seldom failed to succeed when his cause was just, and ranked high as a commercial and chancery lawyer.

Samuel C. Sample was admitted to the bar here in 1831 and later became a circuit judge in Laporte county.

William J. Brown practised at this bar in the '30's afterward becoming a member of congress and assistant postmaster general. He was the father of the late Rear Admiral Brown, of Indianapolis. Henry Cooper, of Fort Wayne, is described as a man possessed of immense legal knowledge which he was unable to apply in his practice. Samuel W. Parker was a graduate of Miami University, licensed at Connersville and first practised in Randolph county in 1832. He stood among the first lawyers of his age in the state and was a great public speaker, serving two terms in congress. David H. Colerick, of Fort Wayne, first came to this county to practise in 1832, and in 1834 Andrew Kennedy, of Delaware county, who learned his law under Samuel W. Parker and rose to considerable prominence and success as a lawyer, was admitted here. James W. Borden became a circuit judge in De Kalb county some years after he practised at this bar.

Up to the year 1839 there were but two resident attorneys of Winchester—Zachariah Puckett and Jeremiah Smith. But in 1839 two Winchester men were admitted whose names have ever since been familiar to residents of this county: Moorman Way and Silas Colgrove. We have already written about the latter. Moorman Way was brought to this county in 1816 and in 1838 he became a student of law under James Perry, of Liberty, qualifying himself so rapidly that he passed his examination and was admitted to the bar the following year. From that time he practised at this bar continuously until the year of his death, 1881. He was a lawyer of the old school, quick and resourceful and well-grounded in the elementary principles of law. He stood as the head of the Randolph county bar for nearly forty years and participated in nearly every case of importance tried during that time. He contested every point in a case from beginning to end, never admitted anything against his client, rarely overlooked a mistake of his adversary and never gave up until there was no other course open to him. Before a jury he was effective because he understood men and knew how to apply his logic to their understanding. Remarkable powers of sarcasm and invective took the place of oratory and he never failed to make a mean action look meaner to the jury. He will be long remembered for his eccentricity, and he who searches the files of the circuit court will find abundant evidence of the high character and stupendous amount of his legal labors.

James Hanna, who was admitted to practice here in 1841, was afterward a supreme court judge, while Thomas D. Walpole, who came in the same year, was a distinguished lawyer at Indianapolis; Walter March and J. S. Buckles, of Delaware county, were both admitted here in that year; March was later a member of the commission which revised the statutes in 1852 pursuant to the new constitution. John Davis, later judge at Anderson, and one of the leading lawyers of the state, was admitted here in 1842, and Reuben A. Riley, who was licensed in the same year, was the father of the poet, James Whitcomb Riley.

In 1845 Carey S. Goodrich, a brother of Judge Edmund B. Goodrich, became a member of the bar and practiced extensively for many years.

Nimrod H. Johnson, who practiced here in 1843, was the father of Henry U. Johnson, of Richmond, and Robert Underwood Johnson, edtior of the Century Magazine.

Thomas M. Browne came to Spartanburg from Ohio in 1830, removed to Winchester in 1848 and studied law with William A. Peelle, was admitted to the bar and began practising at once, becoming prosecuting attorney in 1850 and serving four terms. He was in the state senate in 1863, then recruited and became lieutenant colonel of the 7th Indiana Cavalry, and saw active military service, coming out in 1866 with the rank of brigadier-general by brevet. He was United States attorney for the district of Indiana from 1869 to 1872, was the Republican candidate for governor in 1872 and was defeated by Thomas A. Hendricks. He practiced law in Indianapolis for a time, then served in congress fourteen years, during which time he was a recognized leader of the Republican party. He died at Winchester in 1891. He was a fine lawyer, profound in his knowledge of law, a tireless worker in the preparation and trial of his cases, peerless as an advocate, and yet, unlike many oratorical lawyers, a keen student of law. As a jury lawyer, Thomas M. Browne had no superior, at least in Indiana, and that in a day when he encountered such men as Daniel Vorhees, Benjamin Harrison and Thomas A. Hendricks. His mind was luminous, brilliant, his power of speech marvelous, his voice peculiarly penetrating and musical, and his diction beautiful. Some of his addresses to juries have been classed by prominent authorities as among the greatest efforts of the nation's lawyers. Judge Elijah B. Martindale, of New Castle, practised at this bar in 1851.

Martin B. Miller, of Winchester, was admitted in 1859. Mr. Miller practised for a time with Jeremiah Smith and then entered the army, being mustered out in 1865 with the rank of brevet colonel. After the war he was in partnership with L. J. Monks, Alexander Gullet, John Enos Neff and Emerson McGriff. In his profession he was slow and cautious, but characterized by equanimity of temper and disposition and sound judgments, and was a successful lawyer for many years.

Isaac P. Gray, of Union City, practised law from his admission in 1868 until he was elected governor of the state. He was twice lieutenant governor, and was governor from 1885 to 1889, and at the time of his death in 1895 was United States Minister to Mexico.

John Enos Neff entered the practise of law as a student under Thomas M. Browne in 1868, and in 1874 and 1876 was elected secretary of state. After the expiration of his term of office he returned to Winchester and practised with Martin B. Miller, but died within a short time, while yet a young man, with a bright future before him.

Matthew T. Allen, who also entered the practice here in 1868, afterward removed to California, where he became a judge—of what court the writer is unable to learn. He died recently in Los Angeles.

William A. Thompson began the practise of law in Winchester in 1871 and was in partnership with Albert O. Marsh and with his brother Joseph W. Thompson until 1890, when he removed to Muncie. He is a tireless worker, a keen analyst of legal propositions, and it is common knowledge among the profession that he searches laboriously into every branch of his cases and rarely leaves an authority uncited on any point. He is now engaged in active practise in Muncie as senior member of the firm of Thompson and Sprague. Joseph W. Thompson was admitted to the bar at Winchester in 1876 and was in practice here and at Shelbyville for a number of years thereafter, joining the firm of Thompson, Marsh & Thompson in 1889. He continued in this firm after the removal of his brother and finally after the election of Judge Marsh to the circuit bench. He has devoted a great amount of time and labor to the alphabetical arrangement of cases decided by the higher courts, is the author of "Thompson's Citations," and the numerous supplements thereto and is now engaged in legal work for the government in Washington, D. C.

Levi W. Study entered the profession of law at Winchester in 1872 and was in partnership with James S. Engle from 1874 to 1880. He had a keen, analytical mind, well adapted to the study and practice of law and could have been a highly successful lawyer. He died in 1886.

William Wesley Canada was in the active practice of law in Winchester from 1874 to 1897, when he was appointed by President McKinley as consul at Vera Cruz, Mexico, a position which he still holds and in which he has recently distinguished himself in our troubles with Mexico.

Andrew Stakebake, of Winchester, was a prominent Randolph county attorney for a number of years, being admitted to the bar in 1875. He died in 1897.

In 1876 Samuel R. Bell, of Union City, entered the practice of law, and was in active practice at the time of his death in 1914. Mr. Bell was a good business lawyer and always enjoyed a large practice. He was a man of unimpeachable honor, and while making no pretension to ability as a trial lawyer, yet he attended well to a large amount of legal business and was successful in his practice.

Alex. Voris is another member of the bar whose death has been recent.

The modern lawyer, as we know him, is so widely separated from the early lawyer, as we have tried here to portray him, that we can scarcely imagine a connecting link between the two; and indeed there is none outside the records of the court and such history as this. But up to a very few years ago Randolph county had in Enos L. Watson a lawyer who seemed and was the last link in the chain connecting the past with the present; he began the practice here in 1856, in the days of David Kilgore, Jere Smith and Jehu T. Elliott, when the new constitution was still new, and the old lawyers of the bar were perplexed and worried because their old forms of pleading were gone and John Doe and Richard Roe were stricken down by the legislative attack. He practiced with Judge Peelle until 1861, with Judge Cheney to 1871, with Judge Monks to 1875, with Judge Engle to 1883, and afterwards at different times with his son James E. Watson, John W. Macy, James P. Goodrich, Silas A. Canada and Union B. Hunt.

In the memorial of Mr. Watson which is spread upon the order books of the court, the practice of law in Indiana is divided into two epochs: the first, of which we have already written, was characterized by hardy, energetic lawyers, adventurous and generally well educated who came from the east in the infancy of our state, and rode the circuits on horseback, taking such cases as chance assigned them, going into trial pell mell without preparation and depending on ready wit and resource and a knowledge of elementary principles to carry them through; the second was characterized by the advent of young men who were born here or came in their youth with their parents, grew up in log cabins, worked on farms, attended the district schools, read law in the summer and of nights and mornings and taught school in the winter. To the latter class Mr. Watson belonged and yet he knew and practised with many of the representatives of the older school. He is remembered by most of us as an old man, but as an old man full of memories of his youth. For fifty years his figure, tall, angular and raw-boned, was a familiar one in the court room and on the streets of Winchester; in his prime he held first rank at the bar and for the ten years prior to his death he was its Nestor. He had a natural vein of humor which was doubtless developed in his student days under his preceptors, Moorman Way and Beattie McClelland. He was well grounded in the first principles of law, and had a keen analytical brain, and was a successful jury advocate and trial lawyer. His mind was a veritable store-house of informations and he had a wealth of anecdote always at his command; his sense of humor was so perfect that no matter how far he lost himself in indignation, bitter sarcasm and invective, he invariably saw something of the ridiculous in the situation and ended with a witticism that put everybody in a good humor again and took the sting from his sarcasm. His figure, his mind, his language, all were quaint and picturesque; simplicity was the key to his character, and Enos L. Watson was one of the most lovable men that ever followed the law. He died at Winchester in 1909.

Emerson McGriff practised at this bar for about ten years subsequent to 1885, and then removed to Portland, where he is now engaged in an active and successful practice; Daniel M. Bradbury and E. B. Reynolds both practiced at this bar and each served as prosecuting attorney for a term. Mr. Bradbury is now a resident of Indianapolis and Mr. Reynolds of Hagerstown.

James E. Watson, son of Enos L. Watson, commenced the study of law with his father and Judge Engle in 1885, was admitted to the bar here in the same year, and at once took his place in the front rank of the lawyers of the county. His mind is keen and analytical, well adapted to the law, his memory a storehouse of facts, and his wonderful gift of oratory makes him one of the most successful jury lawyers in the state. He practiced here until 1893 when he moved to Rushville, afterward serving in congress for a number of years. He has long been a national figure in politics and on the lecture platform, and is now engaged in the practice of law at Rushville. His brother, Charles L. Watson, was also a member of the bar of this county, practising with success for a number of years, during two of which he was prosecuting attorney. He is now living in Oklahoma.

Clyde M. Watts and Carl Tisor are other young men who succeeded remarkably in the few years they were members of the local bar. Mr. Watts is now a resident of Cheyenne, Wyoming, and is prosecuting attorney of Laramie county, and Mr. Tisor is also following his profession in the west, as prosecuting attorney of Custer county, Montana. Herbert I. Watts, a brother of Clyde M., is a member of the bar, but has not attempted to practice, having held for many years the responsible position of court reporter.

James P. Goodrich practised at this bar with great success until a few years ago, and is now a member of the firm of Monks, Goodrich and Robbins, in Indianapolis, his partners being Judge L. J. Monks, and John F. Robbins, of Richmond. Mr. Goodrich as a lawyer was noted for his energy and ability to transact a large amount of business in a very short time. He is one of the leading business lawyers of the state and has achieved national prominence in politics, being at this time the Republican national committeeman for Indiana. Union B. Hunt practiced at the Randolph county bar for a number of years, and was a highly successful lawyer. He is now engaged in business in Indianapolis, although, like Mr. Goodrich, he maintains his residence in Winchester.

Frederick S. Caldwell, who was admitted to practice at this bar in 1890, was for a long time a member of the firm of Engle, Caldwell and Parry, and one of the foremost lawyers of eastern Indiana. He was appointed in 1913 by Governor Ralston a judge of the appellate court, is now serving in that capacity and is the nominee of the Democratic party for that office for the fall election this year. Mr. Caldwell is a deep and careful student of law, methodical in his analysis of legal propositions, calm and self-possessed in the trial of causes, and effective before the jury.

Complete sketches of the resident members of the bar who are now engaged in the practice or on the bench, will appear elsewhere in this work, so we need only give them brief mention here. In Winchester there are the following firms and attorneys: Focht and Hutchens, composed of Fermen C. Focht and Thomas W. Hutchens; Benjamin F. Marsh, Edwin S. Jaqua, Walter G. Parry, Thompson and Thompson, composed of Carl and Frank Thompson; Wesley O. Smith, Jesse W. Canaday, Reverdy Puckett, Canada and Chenoweth, composed of Silas A. Canada and Ernst E. Chenoweth; Macy, Nichols and Bales, composed of John W. Macy, Jr., Alonzo L. Nichols and Alonzo L. Bales; John W. Newton, George H. Ward.

In Union City: Shockney Brothers, composed of Theodore and John A. Shockney; Dunn and Woodbury, composed of Ernest Dunn and Bert E. Woodbury; John W. Williams, William Fowler and L. L. Taylor.

Ridgeville: James B. Hiller, Nelson W. Ferguson.

Lynn: Samuel M. Westlake.

CHAPTER XV.

THE PHYSICIANS OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

(By Oscar G. Puckett, Esq.)

Apology—The Pioneer Physician, His Environment—Prevailing Diseases, Their Treatment—Calomel, etc.—Fever Treatment—Fees—Pioneer Ideas and Beliefs—General Discussion of Superstitions—Conjuring to Cure Disease—Indian Doctors—Sketches of Pioneer Physicians—Randolph County Practitioners Yet Living—Randolph County Dentists.

It was with some misgivings that I consented to write this chapter because so much time, research and care is required that I hesitated. However, I have made the attempt and will try to produce a chapter that will contain historical facts, a few reminiscences of interest, as well as a picture of the conditions of early medical practice in this county. I am conscious of my unfitness, and that I shall probably make some mistakes and many omissions. I make no claim to perfection. I desire to acknowledge my indebtedness and proffer my thanks to the many busy physicians of the county who have rendered me so much valuable aid, and without whose help this chapter would have been impossible. I am also indebted to Dr. G. W. H. Kemper's "A Medical History of the State of Indiana" for many of the facts herein contained. Many of the sketches incorporated herein are adapted from Professor Tucker's "A History of Randolph County," without which I would have been helpless in many instances. In a special way, I am indebted to Drs. F. A. Chenoweth and Charles L. Botkin, whose interest and assistance have been invaluable in securing much of the data of the Randolph County Medical Society. Neither must I neglect to mention Miss Lou Way, of Winchester, within whose memory is stored many facts concerning the early physicians, and who has furnished me so much interesting data.

THE PIONEER PHYSICIAN.

Dr. George McCoy, writing of the pioneer physician of Indiana, has the following to say of him: "It cannot be said that our early doctors were all men of eminent scientific skill or training. Few of them held diplomas from medical colleges, for seventy or eighty years ago medical colleges were not as thick in the land as they are now. The pioneer doctors learned all they knew by reading, observation and instruction under established practitioners and by their own after-experience. Men of fair education and good common sense in a few years gained good reputations as successful and safe physicians. They learned and were guided by actual practice more than by theory or the formulas laid down in the few books they were able to procure. Each doctor carried his own remedial agents—a small drug store—in a pair of saddle-bags of huge dimensions, and he dosed out with a liberal hand. They rode on horseback to visit their patients, day or night, far or near, through the dense woods and over slashy paths and rough corduroy roads, fording or swimming streams, and enduring innumerable hardships, which the physicians of the present day would not dare encounter."

During the years of the early settlement of Randolph county the numerous rivers and creeks were fouled and obstructed by fallen timbers, drifts and other accumulations of vegetable debris. The water from freshets and overflows stood reeking and stagnant on the lowlands and in the sloughs and bayous, and gave out their noxious exhalations for miles and miles around, while thick forests and tangled undergrowth, in rich and rank profusion, almost equaled the famed valley of the Amazon. The air was laden with the pestilential miasma, particularly in the autumn season, when biliary and malarial diseases were rife. Whole settlements were at times stricken down and were almost helpless.

The doctors found the ague, in many instances, more than a match for their skill. It was of the real shaking, quaking variety, the chill lasting not infrequently three or four hours, to be followed by raging fever and intense and insatiable thirst. So malignant was this type of fever that as many as three or four deaths of adults have occurred in one family in less than forty-eight hours. Peruvian bark and calomel would temporarily check the fever, but cold weather seemed to be the only thing that would stop this dreadful scourge, and even this failed in some instances, and the poor invalid either wore himself out or else wore out the disease. (What a blessing would have been a little of our knowledge of the relation of the mosquito to the prevalence of malaria and of crude oil to the larvae of the little pest.) In the early settlement the "regulars," in the treatment of fever, relied mainly upon one remedy—calomel. It was, indeed, extraordinary upon the part of the physician to treat any form of disease without the generous use of a large dose of calomel. One old physician has remarked that not to salivate a patient seemed to be regarded as allowing him or her to go to the grave without a saving effort.

Another idea, held by the pioneer physicians of Randolph county in common with all physicians of the time, was that a patient "sick of fever" must also be bled freely before an internal remedy was administered. The lancet held sway alongside of calomel. If, in raising a log cabin, a man was thrown from his "corner" and badly bruised, the practice was to bleed him copiously on the spot as the first step toward his recovery. In conversation with some of our old physicians who practiced in the "fifties," they, without exception, still claim that phlebotomy was the correct procedure, and that our present-day doctors would not lose so many cases of pneumonia if it was practiced.

There were, no doubt, many things to criticise in the methods of the pioneer physicians, yet we must all acknowledge that they stood out as shining lights in their day and generation, the equals, if not the superiors, of their contemporaries in all the other walks of life. They did their duty as citizens, and as physicians they were always found doing their best "according to their lights." The physicians of Randolph county have succeeded to a noble heritage; may they prove worthy of their great responsibility. Will Carleton has paid the old-time doctor a beautiful as well as a deserved tribute, when he says:

"This undecorated soldier, of a hard, unequal strife, Fought in many stubborn battles with the foes that sought his life.
In the night-time, or in the day-time, he would rally brave and well,
Though the summer lark were fifing, or the frozen lances fell;
Knowing if he won the battles they would praise their Maker's name,
Knowing if he lost the battles then the doctor was to blame.
'Twas the brave old virtuous doctor,
'Twas the good old faulty doctor,
'Twas the faithful country doctor—fighting stoutly all the same."

Our old-time doctor, even at a time when all men drank alcoholic liquors and really thought they were benefited thereby, knew the harm of it all. In a paper before a congregation of physicians, one of them was discussing tincture of arnica as an applicant in contusions. He was of the opinion that it was the whisky and not the arnica which was entitled to whatever credit which was due in these cases. This led him to make the following observation: "Whisky is sometimes good as a medicine if properly used. I have never, and never will, so use it as to turn a sick man into a drunkard."

About 1824 medical books were very scarce in Indiana. The first work on materia medica was probably brought into this county by a Doctor Longshore. The physician who could afford one work on each branch of the profession was considered well off. The book stores in Cincinnati, at this time, could not furnish a work of each branch. The work on materia medica was purchased of a young physician who had lately arrived from Philadelphia, and who was obliging enough to sell the same to Doctor Longshore. It was Murray's work, with notes by Chapman.

In 1843 Dr. Charles Parry, of Indianapolis, read a paper on the treatment of congestive fever with quinine, before the Academy of Medicine at Philadelphia. After this, quinine seems to have grown in favor with physicians. It is said that this drug was given until, in many cases, a quinine habit was formed, and children sometimes cried for it.

Dr. Cornett, in some of his writings, narrates some very interesting reminiscences, among which is the following: "In surgery as well as medicine, there has been an advance within my remembrance. I knew a surgeon half a century ago who made it a rule to trephine in every case of fracture of the skull, whether there was depression of the bone or not. He boasted that he had bone buttons enough, bored from the skulls of his patients, to furnish a full set for a double-breasted coat." This same doctor tells us further: "For a number of years I was the only physician in the county in which I was then practicing; I had to travel all over it on horseback by day and by night, without regard to weather or remuneration for services. Occasionally I found myself lost in the woods at night, and would have to tie up my horse and make my bed on the ground until morning." This unselfish spirit and devotion to duty was typical of the early doctors everywhere.

I am herewith copying verbatim an old physician's account of fever treatment: "When called during the fever and wild delirium, we seated the patient on the side of the bed and held him there, by the aid of assistants if necessary, opened a vein in his arm by making as large an orifice as practicable, and allowed the blood to flow until his pulse became soft and less resisting, or until syncope supervened. We relied more on the effect produced than the amount of blood extracted, our first object being to produce a decided impression upon the heart's action. Our patient, being in a sitting posture, and the blood escaping from a free opening, it did not require a great length of time to produce the desired effect. Often within ten to twenty minutes after faintness or sickness occurred the subject of this mode of treatment would become bathed in a copious perspiration, and the violent fever and delirium existing a short time before would have entirely passed away. Now, if the indications seemed to require it, we directed an emetic to be given, usually composed of tartarized antimony and ipecac combined, or wine of antimony. After free emesis and the sickness had subsided, if thought necessary, we gave a brisk cathartic, usually containing more or less calomel. After the primae viae had been well cleared, it was our practice to give opium in such doses as the case required, in order to allay all irritability of the stomach and bowels. We directed the usual febrifuges to be given if the fever should return, and these were given in such doses as required to arrest or mitigate it. We used no manner of temporizing treatment, but aimed our agents directly at the exterminating of diseases. Opium, ipecac, tartarized antimony, nitrate of potassa, spirits mindereri, and spirits of niter, with other means too numerous to mention, were all frequently brought into requisition.

"Under the above manner of treating a case of remittent fever, it was no uncommon thing, on our second visit, to find our patient sitting up, feeling 'pretty well, except a little weak,' and within a few days able to return to his ordinary avocations. When we met with more protracted cases, we had recourse to the Peruvian bark, gentian, columbo, and most of the ordinary tonics of the present time, excepting quinia, which was not then in use. For some time after quinia was introduced the price was such that Hoosiers could not afford to use it. The first I used cost at the rate of thirty dollars per ounce. I may state that tartar emetic was a favorite remedy in all the active or acute forms of disease.

"We seldom lost patients from acute diseases. It would have detracted from the standing of a medical man should it have been known that he lost a patient from inflammation. He might lose a patient from sheer debility and be excusable, but not from acute disease, provided he saw the case in an early stage of the attack."

FEES.

Many of the physicians of Randolph county who have labored so long and so faithfully may have gained honors, and grateful remembrance, but very few of them have accumulated wealth; none have made more than a living, with but few exceptions, and their fortunes amounting to but a few thousand dollars, were the results of careful economizing, fortunate investments, and small families. It seems that the healing art, though an honorable profession, is not a lucrative one, especially in small towns or the country.

Prior to 1820 charges were as follows over the state generally: A visit in town, $1.50, medicines additional; extracting teeth, 25 cents; cathartic pills, 20 cents per dozen; one dose calomel, 1 ounce paregoric and vial, 62½ cents; one dose of calomel and one dose tartar emetic, 50 cents; mercurial pills, 7½ cents each; accouchment cases, natural, $5.00; bleeding, 50 cents; one dose of jalap, 25 cents; pectoral powders, 25 cents each. In 1820 there seems to have been a decrease in the prices of drugs, and the doctor very considerably reduced his charges in proportion. Also I note that a visit in town fell to $1.00.

In 1848 I find the following fees customary: Visit in town, $1.00; with unusual detention, $2.00; prescriptions, with letters of advice, $5.00 to $10.00; consultations, $3.00 to $5.00; night visits, double; vaccination, 50 cents to $1.00; venesection, 50 cents; simple medicines, per dose, 25 cents; mixtures, 25 cents per fluid ounce; blisters, from 25 to 50 cents; accouchments, $5.00 to $10.00. The following charges, dated 1857, are taken from bills of a Randolph county physician: Accouchment, $3.00 to $10.00; fracture of an arm, $10.00; setting broken leg, $15.000; bleeding, 25 cents; letter of advice, with prescription, $6.50; vaccination, 25 cents; two dozen powders, kind not stated, 30 cents; one dose of calomel, one ounce paregoric, with bottle, 50 cents; six mercurial pills, 30 cents; one blister, 25 cents.

PIONEER IDEAS AND BELIEFS.

There was another state of thinking, due to several causes which affected our pioneer doctor, often causing him amusement, but more often vexation and disgust, and that was the superstitions entertained by most of the early settlers. These ideas dealt with almost every phase of life, from the most trivial to the most serious. If one left the house and forgot something for which he must return, he must set down before leaving again, or when leaving, pass out through a different door; rocking an empty chair was a serious offense, and was likely to cause death in the family; putting one corner of an ax bit down upon something and spinning it presaged bad luck; if in sweeping, two straws were dropped from the broom and by some means became crossed, a serious calamity was due to arrive in a year or less; in fact, one could scarcely do anything without its being an omen of some significance or other. Since these things entered so largely into the lives of our forefathers, and since, as far as I am aware, these things have not received treatment at the hands of the historian, I propose to discuss superstitions in general, and then give some attention to those having to do with our physician-friends in particular.

The derivation of the word superstition is somewhat enlightening as to its meaning. It comes from superstitio, which is itself a compound, being composed of super, above, or over, and stare, to stand; the word thus literally means to stand over, whence we have excessive religious belief, possibly a standing over a thing in amazement or awe. The word is loosely used to include all false faith or belief, its distinguishing characteristic being its irrational estimate of something imperfectly understood. We might also further say that the answer to the question of truth or falsity varies with time and place, hence it follows that the accepted belief of one time or people may be superstition to another. Most of the popular superstitions of the present are survivals of earlier science or religion. At a time when there existed no system of recorded observations of natural phenomena conclusions were of necessity drawn from external characteristics, and objects and events were supposed to exercise influences corresponding to the impression produced upon the sense or imagination. This manner of interpretation is responsible for a great mass of superstitions, especially those having to do with the treatment of disease. It is a characteristic of popular credulity that such notions, once prevalent, do not yield to contrary experience. If observation shows the principle to be inaccurate, reasons are always at hand to explain the error; hence the power of the ancestral habit, which we find arbitrary and which we call superstitious. With all pioneer peoples, such beliefs have an immense effect on action; the daily method of nutrition, attire, the hunt, agriculture, are determined by an infinity of regulations which are religiously handed down from generation to generation. In some cases it is possible to discover the principle of expediency which gave birth to the requirement; thus, the discovery of the ill effect marriages between near relatives, and of in and in breeding of stock, causes to be established a religious necessity, limiting the relations of the sexes according to certain rules, sometimes very complicated and ingenious, of which our present customs and laws are but the survival. But in multitudes of other cases no good reason can be offered for demands and abstentions which originally depend on inferences which it is impossible to reconstruct.

A considerable number of superstitions are connected with the heavenly bodies. From very remote times the observation of the stars and their movements has been considered important, but it has been with the night especially, that ancient religious ceremonies are associated. The most distinctive difference between the nights were found by alterations in the growth of the moon crescent; according to universal processes of thought, it was supposed that the time when the moon increases and becomes dominant, the principle of growth must prevail, and on the other hand, that her wane must be a season of general decay. Hence, it has been everywhere inferred that all operations designed to promote increase ought to be performed at the time of the new moon. That then potatoes should be planted, hair cut, etc. But if it is desired to cause shrinking, the work must be done when the moon is at the full so say the maxims of traditional agriculture, and at this time should be cut, alders, spruce, and other undergrowth, because the roots will in this case wither without sprouting.

Not less important in popular usage is the part played by the course of the sun. As he moves in a particular direction, so it has been thought that in order to produce beneficial results, mankind should proceed in a corresponding manner; in worship it was thought necessary to adopt a processional movement in the sunwise direction. Even in the ordinary movements of daily life this order was followed and traces of it survive to the present day. Thus, in order to make good bread or butter, it is essential that the motion should be in the same uniform direction, for reversal of the direction in which the kneading, stirring or churning is performed will undo the work accomplished, and make failure sure. From household maxims still preserved, it appears that the hand must be moved in a sunwise circuit. As the route taken by the sun is holy, so the opposite path will be evil, and has been adopted in practices of witchcraft and magic, and in the old Roman worship, the gods below were adored with this reverse circuit.

Among periods of human life, the terror which attaches to death has made it the center of a vast body of superstitious habits. A great number of actions and experiences are still popularly regarded as signs of approaching departure. The principle on which the phenomena are interpreted is that of association of ideas. Thus, ringing in the ears is a sure sign of death, because the church has usually rung a "death-bell" over the departed; carrying a spade through the house has like significance, because a spade is used to dig graves; a blue flame in the candle is ominous, for the lowering of the light forecasts the decline of life; a flower blooming out of season foreshows a decease; the unusually precocious child will never attain adulthood; and so on indefinitely. In like manner, the unusual also is a fruitful source of superstition; if every child was born with a caul (that is, a membrane encompassing the head) it is doubtful if this would have been taken as an especial sign of good luck.

A considerable number of superstitions relate to the times of the year, and revert to the practices of old religion. Thus, Hallowe'en is attended with observances which seem to have been dependent on its original character as a feast of the dead, when departed spirits were invited to partake in the fruits of the harvest; and were conceived as present at the sacrifice and merry-making. On this night it is usual to perform divinations, now reduced to mere jests, in which an unmarried person is expected to discover his or her companion for life. These practices must be regarded as the remainder of serious necromancy, in which the returning spirits were asked to reveal the future.

While the majority of superstitions are remains of antiquity, their inventions have not altogether ceased in historical times. Of this we have examples in the prejudice against the number thirteen, and in objection to Friday as unlucky, since in Christian thought the day of the Crucifixion and the number involving the addition of Judas were of necessity regarded as ill-omened. The superstition of the evil eye, that is, the belief that certain persons have the power to injure by a look, is still widespread in Eastern countries, where the belief yet lingers that the demoniac is divinely inspired. Nature worship lingers in such superstitions as those connected with the moon, the belief in its mysterious power to work good or ill, as seeing the new moon over the right shoulder being an omen of good luck, its influence on the weather, etc. The belief in ghosts reflects ancestor worship. The common notion about good luck brought by a horseshoe has been traced back to phallicism. Some of the most common of those things forming a basis for superstitious divination are as follows: Appearances in the air; fowls picking up grains of wheat; anagrams of person's names; man's features; use of numbers; by dice; by the heavenly bodies; by winds the Bible; by herbs; by playing cards; by mirrors; by dropping melted wax into water; by writings of paper; by the hand; by certain lucky or unlucky words; by the entrails of animals; by the navel of an infant; by the finger nails; and so on ad infinitum.

It should be said, before taking up the discussion of those having to do with healing, that there were a number of "schools" or methods of bringing about the same results, e. g., there were a number of methods of removing warts. One was by taking a part of the leaf fat surrounding, what might be called the eye of the left kidney of a hog, melting or rendering it by heating it just as hot as possible without scorching. This was to be applied to the base of the wart just where it came into contact with the healthy skin. Two applications were sufficient to remove any wart, but I am informed that you must, if treating one, go as if you intended to make the third application, when you will find the wart gone. Another method is to pick the wart until it bleeds a little, then take a grain of corn and rub it until some of the blood adheres to it, then throw it into the well. The wart will disappear as soon as the grain decays. Still, another method is by making use of the three greatest names, viz.: God, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. To treat a wart by this method you should take your patient to the top of a hill at sunrise, and just as the edge of the sun appears above the horizon, you must moisten the little finger of your left hand and rub around the wart three times and repeat:

"In the name of the three highest names,
That of the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost,
Just so sure as the blessed Mary
Will ne'er again bring forth a child,
Just that sure thou shalt disappear
Never again to bother this soul."

The reader will probably notice that this is "blank verse" and a little irregular, but I am assured that it never fails to bring results, if nothing more than to see a sunrise. This latter method might be called the "Eclectic" method of conjuration, for it doesn't hesitate to borrow from the others as well as furnish some original methods of its own. The three greatest names, sunrise, sunset, the north, south Zenith, nadir, magic squares, anagrams, the livers of bats, teeth of bats, the abdominal segments of the wasp are some of the agents used to bring about charms.

Measuring is another very common treatment for disease, especially "flesh decay" or "undergrowth." The patient is usually laid down upon a board and the length of the body is accurately marked. The length is then "measured" by the thumbs of the "operator" in the same way that a distance might be "stepped off," except that the unit is the width of the thumbs. During the process certain formulae are repeated, which I will not give for fear of securing the enmity of the undertakers. It might be further said that it is astonishing how many people patronize this sort of thing.

Controlling bleeding of the nose or bleeding from cuts is another class of treatments receiving special attention at the hands of the conjurer. One way of stopping the flow is by placing the right hand on the back of the head in the occipital region, the left over the lambdoidal suture so that it extends from the base to the points of the fingers, then calling upon the three greatest names and declaring that the blood shall cease just so sure as that the blessed Mary shall never again become a mother. Another method is by reading or repeating Ezekiel 16:6. I have heard some wonderful stories of the stopping of blood by this method, the conjurer being in some cases some distance away. It reminds one of Christ's miracle of healing the nobleman's son.

It is possible by conjuration to control the sex, either in children or the lower animals. Also in case of litters, as of kittens, pups or pigs to control the number as well as the sex. These results are brought about through the three greatest names, together with certain rigmaroles. All this must be performed at sunset, facing the west, and before the mid-period of gestation. To insure the baby's never having colic, give it a meat-rind as soon as possible after birth. In most cases this had better not be done in the presence of the attending physician. It is also recommended by most conjurers to take the newly-born babe up by the heels, as this will probably free it from many ills to which flesh is heir.

This list might be extended to fill a volume as large as this and still not have exhausted the subject. Since beginning to investigate along these lines, I have unearthed an astonishing amount of beliefs, superstitions, magic and witchcraft, all having to do with the supernatural. There are plenty of people in Randolph county today who believe in witches. Within the last year a woman in this county heated a horseshoe and dropped it into her churn because her butter was bewitched, and she hoped to scald the witch by so doing. There are a number of people of my acquaintance and of yours, my reader, who will risk a conjurer sooner than the best schooled doctor in the state. The desire of the fledgling to fly is proof of its ability to fly. Man's desire for immortality is a proof of the immortality of his soul. I wonder if all this superstition isn't a manifestation of the same thing?

Under this head I must not neglect to mention Indian doctors. An Indian medicine-man, Buck-on-ga-helas, was largely engaged in the practice of the healing arts in Fort Wayne in 1804. He was chief medicine-man and surgeon to Little Turtle, the great Miami chieftain. He acquired a great reputation in the cure of bites of poisonous snakes, but more particularly from poisoned arrows then used among the Indians. His practice was not confined to the Indians, but was quite extensive among the white settlers. There isn't much doubt but that this medicine-man had a few patients in and around what is now Ridgeville. There is some slight reason to believe that another medicine-man called Ma-te-a [who] practiced his art in this county.

These Indian doctors were sharp, shrewd Indians, well acquainted with all the medicinal qualities of herbs, especially as applied to the treatment of snake bites, poisoned arrows, and the diseases incidental to savage life. By far the greater part of their practice consisted of incantations and juggleries. The doctor would usually dress himself in the most grotesque manner, with face painted to inspire fright, then with a great variety of contortions of the body approach his patient. He would breathe on him, blow in his face, squirt medicine into his mouth and nose; rattle beans or pebbles in a dry gourd over him, at the same time keeping up the most horrid gesticulations and noises to frighten away the disease. After thus making his professional visit, he would retire to await the result of his effort. Doctor Kemper, in his Medical History of Indiana, tells us that the Indian doctor would compound his potion and then drink it himself in order to cure his patient. If our present-day doctors practiced this, would it have any effect on the taste of the potion? Longfellow, in a few of the closing lines of Hiawatha's Lamentation, has set out the rules of practice of the Indian when he tells us:

"Then the medicine-man, the Nudas,
The magicians, the Wabenos,
And the Jossakeeds, the prophets,
Came to visit Hiawatha;
Built a Sacred Lodge beside him,
To appease him, to console him,
Walked in silent, grave procession,
Bearing each a pouch of healing,
Skin of beaver, lynx, or otter,
Filled with magic roots and simples,
Filled with very potent medicines.

Then a magic drink they gave him,
Made of Nahana—wusk, the spearmint,
And Wabeno—wusk, the yarrow,
Roots of power, and herbs of healing;
Beat their drums, and shook their rattles;
Chanted singly and in chorus,
Mystic songs. * * *

Then they shook their medicine-pouches
O'er the head of Hiawatha,
Danced their medicine-dance around him;
And upstarting wild and haggard,

Like a man from dreams awakened,
He was healed of all his madness.
As the clouds are swept from heaven,
Straightway from his brain departed
All his moody melancholy;
As the ice is swept from rivers.

Forth then issued Hiawatha,
Wandered eastward, wandered westward,
Teaching men the use of simples,
And the antidotes for poisons,
And the cure of all diseases.
Thus was first made known to mortals
All the mystery of Medanim,
All the sacred art of healing."

SOME PIONEER PHYSICIANS.

I feel justified in giving herewith a few sketches of the lives of some of our pioneer physicians. I think this is advisable for several reasons: (1) These men lived in times which "tried men's souls." (2) That they should be remembered for what they were as well as what they tried to do, for the record of the physicians of Randolph county has been a creditable one; few moral delinquencies have existed. They have been observant and industrious. Our death rate has not been excessive even in the face of serious epidemics, which, in the past, have stolen upon us like thieves in the night.

Paul Beard, Sr., Lynn.—Professor Tucker's History of Randolph County tells us that this man was born in North Carolina in 1779; came to this county and settled below Lynn, near Lynn meeting-house, in the spring of 1817. He married Hannah Pearson in 1813. To this union was born nine children. Paul Beard was a physician; belonged to the Society of Friends, and died in 1857, aged seventy-seven years. His wife, Hannah, died in 1851, aged more than seventy-two years.

His character is summed up by saying that he was a noted man in pioneer days, both as a physician and as a citizen, being upright, respected and trustworthy, and skillful in his profession.

Jehu Hiatt, Winchester.—The subject of this sketch was born in Grayson county, Virginia, near the Goodspur Crossing of Blue Ridge on the New river, one of the sources of the Kanawha, in 1802. He was brought to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1814, and to where Richmond now stands in 1815, before Richmond was laid out. He attended the first sale of lots there in 1816. Richmond, in 1815, was a corn-field. Robert Morrison had a little store in the neighborhood. He went to Knightstown in 1830, and moved to Winchester in 1833, where he resided till his death, which occurred about 1891.

He was raised on a farm; worked at tanning and at shoemaking, and finally read medicine with his brother-in-law, John Thomas, near Middleboro, Wayne county, Indiana. He practiced first at Knightstown, and then at Winchester. He was raised a Friend, became a Hicksite, and some time before his death he announced that he was not a follower of any creed, but a "simple seeker after truth." He was one of the early Abolitionists when that "hated sect" was "everywhere spoken against." Dr. Hiatt, though for many years a widower, his wife having died in 1865, seemed cheerful and contented. A few years before his death he built, at his own expense, a small meeting-house on his place a short distance east of town. This was open to any sect, creed or party for meeting without cost. He was called away by that grim tyrant, which he welcomed as a kind messenger sent to translate him from this imperfect to that all-perfect, celestial home above where the supreme architect of the universe presides.

John E. Beverly, Winchester, was born in Marlboro District, South Carolina, September 17, 1816. During the autumn of this same year his father started to the great Northwest, settling in Wayne county, where they lived until 1828, when they came to Randolph county, settling seven miles west of Winchester, somewhat south of Maxville.

In the fall of 1843 he began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Woody. During the winter of 1846-47 he attended lectures at the Ohio Medical College. He began to practice upon his return with Dr. Woody, but shortly afterward the partnership dissolved, Dr. Beverly continuing alone. In 1857 he removed to Fairhaven, but returned to Winchester in 1859. In 1866 he moved to Richmond, returning to Winchester in 1874, since which time Winchester continued to be his residence till his death, which occurred in 1888.

Nelson T. Chenoweth, Windsor, was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1837. He served four years in the Union army in the Sixty-ninth Ohio Company E. He was reared on his father's farm; became a school teacher; studied medicine with his brother, Dr. John T. Chenoweth, then practicing in Williamsburg, Wayne county; in 1867 he graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute in Cincinnati. Upon his return from schools he formed a partnership with Dr. J. W. Botkin, at Unionsport, this partnership lasting but one year. In 1868 he moved to Windsor, where he practiced till his death, which occurred in 1909 .

James Ruby, Union City.—Doctor Ruby was born in 1807, in Kentucky; came to Wayne county, Indiana, when a small boy. He was twice married—first to Martha Myers, and second to Hannah J. Hamilton—the latter in 1847. He studied medicine with his brother-in-law and began practice at twenty; moved to Hollandsburg, Ohio, in 1850, and to Union City in 1867, where he lived and practiced until his death in 1876.

William J. Shoemaker, Ridgeville.—Dr. Shoemaker first saw the light of day in Richmond, Virginia, in 1820. His father was a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1837 the family came to Randolph county, settling not far from Ridgeville. William J. worked for his father in the woods until he was twenty-two years of age. In 1841 he entered Winchester Seminary, under Professor Ferris; he taught school; became Professor Ferris' assistant; attended the State University at Bloomington; studied medicine with his brother at Hanover, Ohio; practiced several years in northeastern Ohio; returned to Ridgeville in 1853, one thousand dollars in debt; in 1858 he moved to Kansas; during the winter of 1859-60 he was a clerk in the Legislature that framed the free constitution for Kansas; in 1860 he returned to Ridgeville, where he resided till his death in 1898.

John L. Reeves, Union City.—Dr. Reeves was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1827. He came with his parents to Randolph county in 1832, settling in Jackson township, near New Lisbon. He stayed with his father till he was of age. However, he began to read medicine before that important period, reading under the direction of Doctors Downing and Miller. He began to practice in 1854, at Pittsburg, Randolph county. In 1856 he located at Lancaster, Jay county, Indiana. In 1861 he enlisted in the army, joining the Fortieth Ohio, as lieutenant of Company F. He was promoted to captain and again to major. He attended the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati in 1866, after which he resumed his practice at Union City, Indiana, where he continued to practice till his death.

Dr. David Ferguson, Union City, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1813; graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1837; began practice in Butler county, Ohio, in the same year; seems to have gone to Clark county, Ohio, in 1838, where he practiced about eleven years; he came to Winchester, Indiana, in 1849; immediately after the war he settled in Union City. He was active in the Presbyterian church and also an active worker in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He died in 1884.

Dr. John Heines, Arba, was born in Maryland in 1827; graduated from the University of Maryland, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1846. He first practiced in Carroll county, Maryland, leaving there in 1864, and coming to Arba, this county, where he lived and practiced till his death in 1893.

John W. Botkin, Unionsport.—Doctor Botkin was born in Randolph county, Indiana, two miles northwest of the present town of Carlos City, Indiana, September 1, 1819. His parents, Hugh Botkin and Rachel (Keener) Botkin, came from Tennessee and entered land, the first to be entered in what is now West River township, in September, 1817. The last of the Potawatamie Indians (a band of four hundred) to leave the confines of the county, had their camp near his father's entry, and did not move westward until he was about three years of age.

His father had a large family, and he, as well as his brothers, did not wear trousers until he was ten years old, the long buskskin shirt being the fashion for boys of that age. His early education was received from the district schools and private teachers. He studied and practiced as was the custom of all young doctors in that day, with a Doctor Delaney, who lived in the southern part of Delaware county. He was associated with Doctor Delaney for three years, after which he began practice for himself in West River township, near Huntsville, in 1840, he being then twenty-one years of age. Here he practiced for sixty years, (except from 1878 to 1885, when he practiced in Winchester). This much is true of him that is not true of any other physician in the county, and probably never will be again, he was born and practiced medicine continuously in the county for sixty years. The only other predecessor he had in the practice of medicine in this township was Dr. Ellihue Hunt, who came from Kentucky. Dr. John McChristy, about 1850, practiced for a few years here and moved away.

Doctor Botkin endured all the privations that came to the early pioneer. His practice was extensive, covered a large territory, because doctors were few, and no means of travel except by horseback. For many weary years, he had to prepare his own medicines, from the roots, leaves, berries and barks of the various plants and trees that were indigenous to his community. It was many years after he began to practice before he could buy in the market the various tinctures and extracts that he had been forced to manufacture for himself, and these could be had only by going to Cincinnati and returning on horseback. He brought from Cincinnati the first ounce of quinine ever brought to the county, paying seven dollars and fifty cents for the same. He was contemporaneous with Doctor Taylor, a pioneer physician in northern Wayne county, and they were of mutual help to each other in their consultations.

Later in life he attended medical school at Cincinnati. He was a great student of his subject, as well as of men. His frank, open expression, his inborn integrity and honesty, in dealing with patrons, led all who knew him well to trust him. This drew to him a large business that extended over many years.

A younger brother, Dr. Jonathan Botkin, practiced with him for two years, dying in 1856. Dr. N. T. Chenoweth, long a physician at Windsor, began his practice with Doctor Botkin, as did Dr. A. H. Farquhar, who practiced at Ridgeville, this county. His son, Dr. T. W. Botkin, of Farmland, and his grandson, Dr. B. S. Hunt, of Winchester, have each been associated with him in practice. He had three other grandsons who entered the practice of medicine, Dr. Charles Botkin, now of Farmland; Dr. Clyde Botkin and Dr. Morton L. Hunt, the latter two now deceased. He established Dr. John T. Chenoweth in practice at Huntsville in 1860. He was a kindly man and very religious, his faith never being on display, he preferring to live it. He was married to Mary Peacock, of this county. To them were born five children. He died in January, 1901.

Doctor Teal, whose given name I am unable to give, was another early physician of Randolph county. He married Miss Lizzie White, who afterwards became Mrs. Leander J. Monks, in 1857. He was in the drug business as well as practicing medicine. They lived in the Monks house on Franklin street. He probably came from Dayton or somewhere in that vicinity. He died during the war.

Dr. James Liston, to say the least, was one of Randolph county's earliest physicians, coming here about 1820. He married Rachel Way, the youngest sister of Miss Lou Way's father. After practicing here for a short time he went to Peru, Indiana, and built the first cabin there. In 1849 he went with a large company overland to California in the capacity of physician. After several years he returned to his family, which he left near Peru on a farm. Some time after this he moved to Bunker Hill, Indiana, where he died in the early seventies.

Dr. Cook resided and practiced in Winchester during the cholera epidemic in 1849. During the epidemic he was called to Lynn on a mission of mercy, probably, and while there was himself stricken with the terrible scourge and died in three days. He left a sweetheart, Miss Amanda Way, to whom he was to have been married in three weeks.

Dr. George Edgerly was in partnership with Doctor Ferguson in the practice of medicine in Winchester in 1849. He remained but a short time, when he moved to Muncie, Indiana. I have been unable to find any further trace of him.

Henry Way.—Probably one of the first physicians to settle on Randolph county soil was Dr. Henry Way. He was born in Beauty Spot, South Carolina, on the Big Peedee river, in the latter part of the eighteenth century. He probably came to this vicinity about 1816, settling near Maxville. He belonged to the "First Families" of the South and was educated as such. He was thoroughly disgusted with the institution of slavery which fact is probably responsible for his leaving the Southland to come to a new country. He was active in the affairs of the Society of Friends, and as such, was actively engaged with Levi Coffin in the underground railroad. He became so offensive to the South that a price of five hundred dollars was put upon his head, dead or alive, whereupon he is said to have gone to Cincinnati, discarded his Quaker garb and beaver for a suit like the dandies of the times wore. He then made a tour of the South, going as far south as Mississippi, ostensibly visiting the plantations for some purpose or other, but really to incite the slaves to attempt an escape. It is said that he would make known his purpose to some slave who would circulate the report over the plantation. The Doctor would then steal out of the mansion-house in the dead of night and meet the negroes in some lonely spot and try to teach them how to proceed in order to successfully escape. He is said to have caused several hundred negroes to escape at this time. When he had returned, he gave a full account of his doings to the Cincinnati papers. When the southern planters found out how they had been hoaxed, their feelings were certainly not sweetened toward the North. Doctor Way was many years in advance of his time in his ideas of disease. One of his insistences was that consumption was contagious, and his instructions concerning the care and isolation of cases of this dread disease would remind one of those of a physician of today. Some time after the war he emigrated to Illinois, when he died about 1880.

Dr. Robert Woody came to Randolph county from Newport, now Fountain City, in the early 30's. He read medicine with Dr. Henry Way, after which he began to practice in Winchester, occupying the house now the residence of Judge L. J. Monks on Franklin street. Being a student of Doctor Way's he very naturally held many of his views on the political questions of the day as well as on disease. He is said to have been a very successful practitioner and stood high in the esteem of his fellow men. About the close of the war, he moved to Eaton, Ohio, where he died in 1867.

Jacob Bellville.—Another of Randolph county's early physicians was Doctor Jacob Bellville. He was born in New Castle, Delaware, about 1811. The family seem to have moved to near Dayton, Ohio, upon the representation of an elder member of the family the Rev. Jacob Bellville, the uncle of the subject of this sketch. It was the doctor's original intention to follow the avocation of a farmer, but he received an injury to his chest which made manual labor impossible, so he read medicine. In 1852, he came to Winchester, bought out the property and good will of Doctor Woody, moved into his home (now the Monks homestead) and began to practice. After two years, he returned to Dayton, Ohio, where he successfully practiced until his death, January 26, 1881.

Dr. George W. Bruce, Winchester, was born at Eaton, Ohio, January 17, 1822. Here he lived until he began the study of medicine. He began the practice of his profession at Huntington, Indiana; from there he moved to New Paris, Ohio, and in 1852 or 1853, located in Winchester where he resided continuously, except for a brief period prior to 1860, when he lived on a farm near Deerfield.

Doctor Bruce rendered distinguished and honorable service to his country in the war for the preservation of the Union. He was first appointed assistant surgeon of the Eighth Indiana Infantry, which position he held until January, 1863. He was then appointed to the same position in the First Indiana Cavalry, and served with that regiment until the expiration of his term of service. He was then appointed surgeon of the One Hundred Forty-second Infantry, which position he held until the close of the war.

Doctor Bruce practiced his profession continuously after his return from the army until about 1885, when his interest in mining properties in Missouri, claimed his personal attention. That he might properly care for these interests, he gave up the general practice of his profession. It has been said of Doctor Bruce that he never refused to respond to the call of distress because of the poverty of the sufferer, or from fear of not receiving compensation for his services. He died April 17, 1896.

Dr. C. S. Evans, Union City, was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, in 1832; came to Richmond, Indiana, in 1837, and to Spartanburg, Indiana, in 1852; to Hollandsburg, Ohio, in 1857; and to Union City in 1868. He read medicine with Doctor Lawrence, at Spartanburg, in 1852-55; practiced at Hollandsburg, Ohio in 1857-68, graduating from the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati in 1863.

He joined the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Ohio Regiment as assistant surgeon in the summer of 1863; had charge of the Cincinnati barracks, and then of a post hospital at Paris, Kentucky; rejoined the regiment in Maryland and then left the service, his time having expired and something over. He died in 1913.

Dr. Joel N. Converse, Union City, was born December 13, 1820, in Madison county, Ohio. He read medicine and practiced from 1841 to 1852, graduating in 1846, from Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio. He settled at Union City, in 1852, at the commencement of the town and resided there until the autumn of 1880, when he sold his residence and removed to Chicago, where he died in 1892.

Dr. Robert H. Morgan, Spartanburg, was born in Wayne county in 1827; attended school in various public and private institutions; read medicine at Marion, Ohio, with Doctor Lomax, 1850-51. He volunteered in 1861 in the Eighth Indiana (three months), Company D, Capt. Silas Colgrove. At the expiration of this enlistment, he re-enlisted in the Fifty-seventh Indiana; was commissioned First Lieutenant of Company D. He was discharged for disability in May, 1864. He probably began to practice in Marion, Ohio; from there he went to Nora, Illinois, and probably began to practice in and around Spartanburg about 1859, continuing there after the war till his death in 1884.

Dr. Elisha T. Bailey, Ridgeville.—Another one of the pioneer physicians of Randolph county was Elisha T. Bailey. He was born in Clinton county, Ohio in 1821; moved to Warren county, Ohio, in 1824; to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1829; to Green township, Randolph county, in 1847; and to Ridgeville in 1850. He read medicine with Stanton Judkins, of Newport (Fountain City), Indiana, in 1843-47; began to practice in 1847. He attended lectures at Miami Medical College in 1853-54. He was one of the pioneers of Ridgeville, having settled there before there was any town, and resided there until his death in 1890.

Dr. H. H. Yergin, Union City, was born in Wayne county, Ohio, in 1839, and came to Union City in 1867. He graduated from the scientific course at college, Delaware, Ohio, and at the Cleveland Medical College, Ohio, in 1864, pursuing the post-graduate course in the same school in 1866. He is a member of several medical societies including the American Medical Association. He was employed by the "Bee Line" and the "Pan-Handle" railroads as surgeon for accident among their employees.

Dr. Sylvania Remmel, Winchester, was born in Clinton county, Ohio, in 1818; her parents settled in White River township, Randolph county, in 1819. She began the study of medicine with Dr. Benjamin Puckett, an elder brother in 1858-61. She began to practice in Winchester in 1861. About 1862 her family moved to Illinois, where she continued to practice. In 1874, upon the death of her husband, she returned to Winchester, continuing her practice till her death in 1907.

Dr. John E. Markle, Winchester, was born in Ithaca, New York, December 2, 1838. In 1854, he came with his parents to a village now known as Markleville, where, in 1859, he began the study of medicine, with a Doctor Cook. In 1860, he attended a course of lectures at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati. He began the practice of medicine in Fishersburg, Madison county, Indiana, in 1861. When the dark cloud of war burst, young Markle enlisted as a private in Company E, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. For bravery displayed at various times, in some of the most trying and dangerous circumstances, he was promoted until he attained the captaincy of Company K.

On the 15th of October, 1865, he was commissioned assistant surgeon of his regiment which position he held until 1866, when he was mustered out of the service. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Portland, Jay county, Indiana. In the winter of 1867-68, he attended a second series of lectures at the Ohio Medical College, graduating therefrom in 1868. He continued to practice at Portland, until 1873, when he removed to Hagerstown, Indiana, and in the following year to Winchester, where he has since pursued his vocation. During the winters of 1878-79, he attended a course of lectures at Bellevue Hospital, New York, graduating therefrom in the spring of 1879.

He was pension examiner of this county under the Garfield and Arthur administrations, and also under General Harrison's administration. He was the first Secretary of the Board of Health of this county, serving as such two years. He was nominated and elected clerk of the circuit court, serving from September, 1897, to January, 1902, serving the same number of days as clerk that he did in the service of his country. He laid down life's burdens March 20, 1903. Doctor Markle was a useful and valuable man to society, and a large concourse of people assembled at his funeral to express their appreciation of this patriot, this man of science, this kind-hearted physician and surgeon.

In 1866, he was united in marriage to Miss Emily Victoria Johnson, which union was productive of two children, Minnie, who died in infancy and Dr. Grant C. Markle, who was associated with his father in practice at the time of his death.

Dr. William G. Smith, Winchester, was born near New Carlisle, Ohio, in 1837. He received a good common school education in youth, read medicine under Dr. John Crowley and graduated from the Ohio Medical College in 1869. He began to practice at Fairview, Randolph county, in 1863. From there he moved to Deerfield, where he practiced for five years. He then came to Winchester. He attended Bellevue College, New York City, from which he graduated in 1880. In October, 1874, Doctor Smith and Dr. J. E. Markle formed a partnership for the practice of medicine under the firm name of Smith and Markle. They continued in partnership until June, 1882. There was no time during these years that the firm did not enjoy a large and lucrative practice.

After the dissolution of this partnership Doctor Smith continued to practice alone until December, 1891, when he associated himself with Dr. Charles McNaull, a graduate of Bellevue College, which partnership continued to exist until the day of his death.

Doctor Smith was recognized by his contemporary physicians as a splendid diagnostician. He had the faculty of telling what ailments the patient had. His knowledge of anatomy was extensive and accurate, also a thorough knowledge of the physiology of the various organs; this is probably largely responsible for his phenomenal success as a general practitioner. He early associated himself with a society of doctors styled the "Medical Society of the Muncie District" in which he was an enthusiastic worker and supporter. He was also one of the fourteen original members of the "Randolph County Medical Society," organized in 1876. Doctor Smith's name is held in veneration by many of the county's present day physicians because of the kindly word of advice, the valuable aid given in time of need. In consultation, he was always kind and courteous to the physicians present, always disposed to look hopefully to the recovery of the patient.

In June, 1866, he was married to Julia Lucas. To them came three children, George, Bessie, and Harold, all of whom are at present living. Doctor Smith gave up the cares of this life in August, 1892.

Dr. John T. Chenoweth, Winchester, was born in Darke county, Ohio, November 19, 1833. He was a descendant of John Chenoweth who settled in Maryland, in 1716. He attended the district schools and was a pupil of Enos L. Watson in the early 50's. He fitted himself for teaching, and taught in the district schools. When a young man he learned the trade of brick mason. He was a contracting builder for a few years and most of the buildings that he erected are in a good state of preservation yet. January 4, 1857, he was married to Hannah V. Miller. To this union were born five children: Forrest A., Herschal V., Arthur, Ethel May, Martha M. He studied medicine with Dr. Lansdown of Greenville, Ohio, and attended the Eclectic Medical Institute during the fall and winter of 1859-60. In March, 1860, he located at Huntsville, Indiana, where he practiced his profession till 1865. During the first part of the Civil war he treated the families of soldiers without charge. While living at Huntsville, he with the help of others assisted in ferreting out the designs of the Knights of the Golden Circle. It was through his counsel that a Randolph county citizen went to Terre Haute and joined the Knights. After receiving all the grips, pass words, and instructions, this citizen visited the meetings at various places where he came into possession of all the plans of the order to aid the Confederacy. These plans were communicated to Governor Morton, who delegated this citizen to get evidence against these Knights.

In November, 1865, Doctor Chenoweth located at Williamsburg, Wayne county, Indiana, where he continued in the active practice of his chosen profession till the fall of 1874. During the fall and winter of 1874-75 he attended the Medical College of Ohio, at Cincinnati. He received his diploma from that institution in March, 1875. April, 7, 1875, he moved to Winchester, Indiana and was in very active practice till time of his death, which occurred April 19, 1903. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Free and Accepted Masons and Knights of Honor. He was true to all trusts thrust upon him. His hatred for all trickery and hypocrisy was marked. He was a lover of truth, honor and justice. Many young physicians would go to him for advice and were always repaid for their going. He was always ready to help the weak. During his first few years of practice he would go to see his patients on horseback, because of the bad roads. He was a lover of good horses and always had his barn full of horses that would take him to his patients without loss of time. His presence in the sick room was a tonic and the patient would always bless him, although some never paid him.

Dr. Lewis N. Davis, Farmland, was born in Clark county, Ohio, in 1849. His parents came to Randolph county, in 1851. In 1859 they emigrated to Saline county, Missouri, consequently the boyhood of Doctor Davis was spent in Randolph and Saline counties. He received a common and high school education. In 1870 he began the study of medicine with his brother, R. P. Davis, then of Redkey, Indiana. In September, he entered Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he graduated in 1873. After graduation, he remained with his brother in Redkey until August of the same year, when he moved to Farmland, where he remained till his death in October, 1912.

In May, 1882, he supplemented his college education by a clinical course in Cincinnati, at the Good Samaritan Hospital, and in 1889, took a course in the Polyclinic of New York City. He has contributed to the literature of his profession, giving to the world the results of his own practice and observation. He is a charter member of the Randolph County Medical Society, organized in 1876; of the Delaware District Medical Society; also he was a member of the American Medical Society. To these societies, he has contributed many able papers, also to the leading medical periodicals of the United States, some of which have been translated into German. His scholarly attainments and professional ability were universally recognized.

Dr. Richard Bosworth, Winchester, was born in Gallia county, Ohio, in 1832. In 1836, he accompanied his parents to Jay county, Indiana. Doctor Bosworth received a good education in the Liberal Arts, attending the public schools, the Jay county seminary, and Liber College. Taught school in the winter of 1849-50. Began to study medicine in 1854; continued to 1857, pursuing his studies a part of the time in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. Because of lack of means, he was obliged to leave the university before completing the prescribed course and begin practice. Accordingly he located at Pleasant Mills, Adams county, in 1857. He soon left this place and settled in Deerfield, where he practiced until the war. In the meantime, he had found opportunity to attend another course of lectures at the University of Michigan, but again he abandoned his studies and entered the Union army. In August, 1862, Doctor Bosworth was appointed surgeon-at-large for the state of Indiana. At New Orleans and other places, his duty consisted of inspecting hospitals, which duty he discharged until the following spring, when, by reason of a severe attack of bronchitis, he obtained leave of absence and returned home. After remaining at home for six weeks, the Doctor re-entered the service, becoming assistant surgeon of the Thirty-sixth Indiana, which position he held until the expiration of the regiment's period of service.

Doctor Bosworth, after his discharge, returned to Randolph county, and shortly, for the third time entered the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in March, 1865. He was again appointed surgeon-at-large by Governor Morton, and for some time thereafter was busily engaged in the discharge of his official duties. At the close of the war Doctor Bosworth returned to Winchester, Randolph county and was soon engaged in a lucrative practice. In 1867, he was appointed examining surgeon for pensions, which position he held for fifteen years, resigning in 1882.

Because of bad health, due to overwork, Doctor Bosworth, in 1880, retired temporarily from practice, going to the Pacific slope. Subsequently he spent one winter in Florida, from which state he returned much improved in health to resume his practice.

In 1864, Doctor Bosworth was married to Miss Sarah A. Hale. To this union were born three children: Rosecrans J., Leander U. and Flora M. all of whom are still living. Doctor Bosworth is an enthusiastic Mason, having taken all the degrees of the York Rite. At eighty-two years of age, the Doctor is hale and hearty, except for crippled legs which he received in an accident, in which his buggy was upset and he himself was dragged for some distance over the hard turnpike. The Doctor has been a liberal contributor to the churches of Winchester, and no proper help to worthy enterprise, charitable or otherwise has he withheld.

Dr. Isaac N. Trent, Muncie, a former practitioner in Randolph county, was born in 1854, in Carroll county, Indiana. He was reared on a farm till he had almost reached man's estate, when he began to work at the carpenter's trade. He attended the common schools until about seventeen years of age, when he entered the Battle Ground Collegiate Institute, at Battle Ground, Indiana. After two years work here, he taught school in Carroll county for seven years. He began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. W. N. Gates in Carroll. In 1879 he attended one course of lectures at the Ohio Medical College, and in 1880, one course at the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, graduating in 1881. He began practice at Losantville, Randolph county, forming a partnership with Dr. H. P. Franks. In 1886, while still maintaining his partnership with Doctor Franks, he went to New York City and spent a year in the hospitals and graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of that city in 1887; he then returned to his partner at Losantville and remained till 1888. He then went to Columbus, Ohio, for a year, and in 1889, settled in Muncie, Indiana, where he resides and practices at the present time.

Dr. Hamilton P. Franks, Losantville, was born in Hardin county, Ohio, in 1849. Doctor Franks was reared on a farm, received a common school education in his county and attended a school of dentistry at Newark, Ohio. He practiced his profession at Thornville, Ohio, for five years. Afterward he entered Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, then he entered the Kentucky school of Medicine at Louisville, from here he went to the Indiana Medical College of Indianapolis. In 1887-88 he attended the medical department of the University of New York, at New York City, graduating therefrom. In 1874, Dr. Franks moved to Losantville, Randolph county, and has practiced there ever since.

Dr. Alonzo H. Good, Selma, also a former practitioner of Randolph county, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1843. He received a common school education and entered the Union army in 1862, enlisting in Company D, Sixty-ninth Indiana volunteer infantry. He was wounded and taken prisoner in the first engagement, was paroled on the field of battle, sent to Paoli camp at Richmond, Indiana, where he remained until exchanged. He afterwards contracted measles which caused the loss of his voice and he was offered a discharge which he refused. In consequence he was transferred to the sanitary department. He was afterward offered a commission by Governor Morton as major in the Nineteenth Indiana Cavalry, which he declined, because he did not believe his physical condition fit to go into active duty. In 1864, he was transferred to the Ninety-fourth Company Volunteer Relief Corps, in which corps he served till the expiration of his term of service, being mustered out as first sergeant of the Twentieth Company Second Battalion, Volunteer Relief Corps.

Prior to his enlistment, Doctor Good began the study of medicine; in addition to this he was kept much of the time in the medical department of the army. Upon his return to Wayne county, he began to study with Drs. P. H. Jamison of Indianapolis and J. B. Clark of Economy, Indiana. In 1867, he began to practice in Bloomingsport, Randolph county, Indiana, continuing for fourteen years. In 1880 or 1881 he moved to Selma, where he still continues to practice his profession honored of all men.

Dr. J. H. Fahnestock was born in Miami county, Ohio, February 14, 1842. Moved with his parents to a farm near Versailles, Ohio, and later to near Union City, Indiana. He obtained his education from the common schools of Ohio. At the age of thirteen he began to read medicine, in the meantime working on his father's farm. In 1862, he enlisted in the Union army, serving almost three years. Doctor Fahnestock is a graduate of the Eclectic Medical School of Cincinnati, Ohio, and also from the Southern Medical Institute of Memphis, Tennessee. In 1877, he began to practice, locating near Union City. Some time later, he moved to Union City, where he enjoyed a long and very successful practice of his profession. At present he is located in Fostoria, Ohio.

In 1867, he was married to Margaret J. Benson, to which union was born six children all of whom are living.

Dr. George W. Thompson, son of Samuel and Edith Thompson, was born in German township, Darke county, Ohio, April 11, 1831. He moved into Randolph county, Indiana, at the age of thirteen, and in 1849, was married to Elizabeth Wiley. As a young man, Doctor Thompson began the study of medicine under Dr. Charles Austin and later practiced with him.

When the Civil war broke out in 1861, Doctor Thompson, answering his country's call, gave up his practice and enlisted in Company B, Sixty-ninth Indiana as Second Lieutenant and at the expiration of his enlistment in this regiment he served in the One Hundred Forty-seventh Ohio as chaplain, returning to his practice at the close of the conflict.

Doctor Thompson graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1878, and was active in the practice of medicine until his death, August 13, 1904. He was a member of Sedgewick Post No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, and also an active member of the Masonic order.

Dr. Joseph J. Evans, Winchester, was born in Wrightstown, Belmont county, Ohio, September 17, 1839. His father moved to Bremen, Fairfield county, Ohio, in 1840, when he was about one year old. In this old town Doctor Evans lived, attended its common schools until he was about seventeen years old. He attended the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, in the years of 1857, 1858 and 1859. He read medicine in his father's office up until 1862 and began the practice of his profession in the fall of 1862, in Straitsville, Perry county, Ohio, where he remained until September, 1867, when he moved from there to Winchester, where he has resided since that time engaged in the practice of medicine.

Dr. Martin Conner, Parker City, was born in Maryland, February 8, 1827. While he was very young his parents moved to New Castle, Indiana, then they seem to have moved farther west. He began to read medicine with his brother William Conner, who was practicing at Windsor, Indiana. William was himself a student of Doctor West at Hagerstown, Indiana. Dr. Martin Conner began to practice in 1854. In February of 1855, he was married to Susan R. Peoples, and in the fall of that year they moved to Parker, Indiana, where Doctor Conner practiced till his death in 1876. To this union were born six children, four of whom are yet living together with his wife, who is hale and hearty, doing her own work, keeping house for a son, she being in her eighty-third year.

Dr. Conner did not enlist in the army during the Civil war, but remained at home where his helping hand was always extended in helpfulness to the families of those who were at the front. The Conner home was open at all times to the distressed families of Union soldiers, and the hand of healing was laid on without money and without price. Doctor Conner died of that dread disease consumption, brought on by over-exposure in the practice of his profession. He was prominent in Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Methodist circles. He was laid in his narrow cell in Rehobeth graveyard in Randolph county.

The following list purports to be a complete roster of physicians yet living, with those professional items concerning each, which are important as history. In some instances the items are meagre, particularly in regard to professional training. It was impossible to see all of them and it proved to be equally impossible to secure answers to letters of inquiry, so it was necessary to give just what could be gleaned from the records in the clerk's office, which in some instances was scant enough.

Abel, O. E., born in 1860, in Jay county, Indiana; school of practice is Regular; practiced some years in Winchester; now at Trenton, Randolph county.

Barnard, P. C., born in 1868, in Henry county, Indiana; graduated from Central College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1901; school of practice is Regular; practiced at Oakville, Indiana, ten years, Hamilton, Indiana, two years, at present at Parker City.

Beauchamp, H. W., born in 1873, in Shelby county, Indiana; school of practice in Physio-medical; was located at Arba, Randolph county; present place of practice, Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Beck, Isaac E., born in 1863, in Jay county, Indiana; school of practice is Physio-Medical; was located at New Pittsburg; present location unknown.

Berry, N. D., born in 1854, in Darke county, Ohio; school of practice is Regular; formerly practiced in Spartanburg, but now of Muncie, Indiana.

Bosworth, Richard, born in Gallia county, Ohio, in 1832; graduated from University of Michigan Medical School in 1865; school of practice is Regular; practiced at Pleasant Mills, Indiana, Deerfield, Indiana; now of Winchester, Indiana, and has retired.

Botkin, Thomas W., born in 1844, in Randolph county, Indiana; school of practice is Eclectic; began in Unionsport, Randolph county, but now of Farmland, Indiana, and has retired.

Botkin, Charles L., born in 1878, at Unionsport, Indiana; graduated from Medical College of Indiana in 1904; school of practice Regular; practiced at Winchester and is at present at Farmland.

Blossom, J. C., born in 1872, at Decatur, Indiana; graduated from the Kentucky School of Medicine, Louisville, Kentucky, in 1900; school of prac-

THE RANDOLPH COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY.

The Randolph County Medical Society was probably the offspring of at least two small societies—The Union City Medical Society and The Winchester Medical Association. These societies were organized about 1857, and kept up their meetings with more or less regularity until about 1876, when they were reorganized under the plan of the American Medical Association. At first none but "regulars" were admitted, but now "every legally registered physician residing and practicing in Randolph county, who is of good moral and professional standing, and who does not support or practice, or claim to practice, any exclusive system of medicine, shall be eligible for membership."

At its organization the following officers were elected: J. C. Beverly, president; J. Heiner, vice-president; L. M. Jones, secretary.

The following physicians were charter members: J. E. Bennett, Hillgrove, Ohio; William Commons, Union City, Indiana; J. T. Chenoweth, Winchester, Indiana; N. T. Chenoweth, Windsor, Indiana; L. N. Davis, Farmland, Indiana; R. P. Davis, Redkey, Indiana, Jay county; C. S. Evans, Union City, Indiana; J. J. Evans, Winchester, Indiana; David Ferguson, Union City, Indiana; A. H. Good, Bloomingsport, Indiana; H. Harrison, Union City, Indiana; R. H. Harrison, Winchester, Indiana; John E. Markle, Winchester, Indiana; W. G. Smith, Winchester, Indiana.

The following have since become affiliated with the society: A. H. Farquhar, Losantville, in 1876; John Heiner, Arba, in 1876; J. E. Beverly, Winchester, in 1876; R. T. Maltbie, Farmland, in 1877; G. S. Evans, Saratoga in 1878; R. Ford, Saratoga, in 1878; R. Hamilton, Lynn, in 1878; H. H. Yergan, Union City, in 1878; W. J. Shoemaker, Ridgeville, in 1878; J. S. Blair, Lynn, in 1879; J. S. There have been five doctors elected president of the society for the second time, viz.: N. T. Chenoweth, in 1884-1885; C. C. Mills, 1893-1894; L. N. Davis, 1896-1897; A. G. Rogers, 1889 and in 1905; and J. H. Morony, 1913-1914.

In each case the honor was conferred in recognition of distinguished service to the organization.

PURPOSES OF THE SOCIETY.

In the constitution of the society, I find the following: "The purposes of this society shall be to bring into one organization the physicians of Randolph county, so that by frequent meetings and full and frank interchange of views, they may secure such intelligent unity and harmony in every phase of their labor as will elevate and make effective the opinions of the profession in all scientific, legislative, public health, material and social affairs, to the end that the profession may receive that respect and support within its own ranks and from the community to which its honorable history and great achievements entitle it; and with other county societies to form the Indiana State Medical Association, and through it, with other state associations, to form and maintain the American Medical Association."

"In all proper ways the public shall be taught that business methods and prompt collections are essential to the equipment of the modern physician and surgeon, and that it (the public) suffers even more than the profession when this is not recognized.

"This society shall endeavor to educate its members to the belief that the physician should be a leader in his community, in character, in learning, in dignified and manly bearing, and in courteous and open treatment of his brother physicians, to the end that the profession may occupy that place in its own and the public estimation to which it is entitled."

CHAPTER XVI.

NEWSPAPERS OF THE COUNTY.

(By J. L. Smith.)

JOURNAL.

The newspaper press was an early arrival in pioneer days. Wherever was found a nucleus of two hundred or three hundred people, some courageous spirit founded a newspaper. These early disseminators of thought were meagre in the amount of local information, but gave extended accounts of the political doings at Washington, and letters from over the water from "the latest ship." Politicians were the most frequent contributors of letters and their versatility was something at which to marvel. Display advertising was almost unknown, as the notices of merchants were set in two or three inches, single column and usually in smaller type than that of the other reading matter.

The first newspaper published in Winchester and also in the county of Randolph was owned by Henry H. Neff, in 1843, and it was called The Winchester Patriot. It advocated the policies of the Whig party and was continued for a period of nine years under Mr. Neff's management. As evidence of the enterprise of the editor, there is extant at the present time an extra issue, announcing the declaration of war against Mexico in 1846 and containing President Polk's message on that question. This supplement is the only remnant left of The Patriot as Mr. Neff lost nine volumes of his paper in a small fire at his home, but which did little harm to the rest of his personal property.

Upon the organization of the Republican party the paper became an advocate of the principles of that organization and the name was soon thereafter changed to The Winchester Journal. From this time up to 1870 the paper was owned by various publishers and likewise employed numerous editors. Among the number were Clint D. Smith, J. C. Beverly, Edward Walkup, Lon G. Dines and B. F. Diggs. Mrs. I. P. Watts, who was a sister of the latter, learned to set type in the Journal office in the days of the war when printers became very scarce. Glancing through the files of the paper one finds many incidents of rare interest. The paper was a strong supporter of John C. Fremont in 1856. In that year we notice a call for a Republican primary election. There is also announced a call for a woman's sufferage convention and the ladies are urged to attend and not to fear the charge that the organization "means to abet the slavery cause." We note also a call for the meeting of the Randolph County Teacher's Association at "Arbey."

This paper was a seven column quarto, all home print, and was given over very largely to politics. Prior to the war and throughout that period, the first page usually contained a speech from some leader in Congress. The second page was given over to editorial discussion and often the whole seven columns were taken up in this way. The third page contained Congressional news, usually about two weeks later than the occurrence of the events in Washington. The fourth page was devoted to agriculture.

In about 1870 Amos C. Beeson bought the Journal and was associated with his brother-in-law, Mr. Marsh. In 1872, John M. Hodson bought Mr. Marsh's interest and the Journal was continued in the name of Beeson and Hodson until 1881 when Mr. Beeson became sole proprietor. He continued as owner and publisher of the paper from that date up to his death in 1903. In the later years of his control his sons, Will C. and Charles, were associated with him in the conduct of the paper. Under their management the paper has established a constantly increasing and substantial growth. Its prime purpose has been to give all the news possible in clean, concise, but brief statements of fact. While it has always been Republican in politics it has not been radical or harsh in its treatment of party questions. At the present time the paper is owned by the Beeson brothers and there is no better equipped plant in eastern Indiana. The management has just installed a fine new Interstate typesetting machine, one of the very best on the market. In its job department all the latest and best machinery has been installed to take care of their trade.

HERALD.

In 1873 the Winchester Gazette was launched by James Williamson, but it had a brief existence, and in 1876 the plant was purchased by Rev. J. G. Brice and the present Winchester Herald was founded by that gentleman and his four sons, James, William, Norman and John, as an independent paper, with Democratic proclivities. It was issued from the third story of the Canada Block on the west side of the public square. A year or so later Enos L. Watson purchased a half interest, James Brice retaining the other half and the political complexion of the paper was changed to that of Republican. About a year later Mr. Watson became sole proprietor and removed the office to the third story of the Knecht building on the south side of the square. A year later still a half interest was sold to Lee Ault and it was conducted under this management for a few months, when a third interest was sold to R. A. Leavell, but the latter soon retired, selling his interest back. Again in a few months Mr. Watson became sole proprietor and later an interest was sold to Charles Harrison. The paper was edited by Thomas Harrison, brother of Charles, and this management lasted a year, when Mr. Watson again became owner. A few months later a half interest was sold to John Commons, of Union City, who moved to Winchester to take charge of the paper. A few months after his management began, he bought Mr. Watson's interest and conducted it for several years. Rev. I. P. Watts then bought the paper for his son-in-law, Emerson Addington. A year or so later Mr. Addington sold a half interest to Rev. W. O. Pierce, a well-known Methodist minister. Within the next year Mr. Addington retired and Rev. Pierce became sole owner. Within a few months Reverend Pierce sold a half interest to Seward S. Watson. This management lasted for two years until Reverend Pierce sold his interest to C. C. Peelle. The paper was published by this firm for four years when Mr. Peele retired and Charles L. Watson had a half interest for something more than a year. The latter sold his interest to Union B. Hunt, former secretary of State, who had editorial charge of the paper for the next two years. He sold it back to Charles L. Watson in 1893. Mr. Charles Watson again sold his interest to C. C. Peelle. Mr. Peelle was in the office four years longer when he sold to his partner, Mr. Watson, who has had full control for the last ten years.

In 1907, Mr. Watson became postmaster at Winchester and the paper has been turned over to the management of his son, John E. Watson.

Two or three times the Herald has conducted a daily newspaper, publishing the same for a year or two, but because of lack of support, the enterprise has failed.

DEMOCRAT.

At intervals during the period of the Civil war the Democrats established papers in Winchester but the period of their existence was limited. It was not until 1885 that a permanent organ of the party was founded by J. R. Polk. The same year The Ridgeville Banner was bought, consolidated with the Democrat and a stock company operated it. Later the paper was sold to Joseph Gorrell who successfully edited it for several years. It was then purchased by Lew G. Ellingham, present Secretary of the State of Indiana, who conducted the paper here until the autumn of 1894 when he removed the plant to Decatur, Indiana, and established the Decatur Democrat of which he is the present owner. The same fall another Democratic paper was started here by the Fawcett brothers, and after three or four months the paper passed to the management of Garland D. Williamson, who was editor and proprietor until October, 1, 1895, when J. L. Smith, of Vermilion county, purchased the outfit and at once installed new machinery throughout, enlarging it from the five column quarto, four pages home print, to a six column quarto, all home print. Mr. Smith conducted the paper until March, 1897, when he sold it to Esta N. Arnold and A. R. Abshire. Within the next twelve months the paper underwent several changes of management and in 1899 it was sold to Mr. A. C. Hindsley who is at present time recording clerk in the office of the Secretary of State of Indiana. Mr. Hindsley successfully conducted the paper from that time until April, 1911, when he sold it to C. K. Rockwell of West Alexandria, Ohio, and he in turn sold it in July, 1911, to D. W. Callahan, present owner and editor.

Mr. Callahan has built up the paper very materially both in its mechanical and editorial departments. Practically renewing all of the plant and more fully equipping it for all class of printing, installing a typesetting machine the present year, 1914. Mr. Callahan is a very proficient printer and in consequence has built up a fine job department.

The paper is a loyal supporter of Democratic principles, not only during campaign years, but the whole year round, often taking the initiative as an exponent of genuine Democracy, consequently it has a loyal Democratic host of supporters who swear by its interpretation of political policies.

In 1881, William P. Needham established a newspaper in Winchester which he called The Phantasmagorian. The chief aim of its proprietor seemed to be to discuss ethical, literary and philosophical themes, emphasizing in particular freedom in religious belief. Later the editor compiled a volume of essays from the newspaper which he called "Phantasmagorian Theology and Other Papers." Later still the name of the paper was changed to The Winchester Republican and conducted as such for a number of years, Mr. Needham also serving as city clerk during this period. His death occurring in 1899, the paper passed into the hands of Joseph and Lewis Day and was called the Winchester Press, but it suspended within the year and the plant was sold and moved elsewhere.

DAILY.

The latest entrance into the field of journalism was the Winchester Daily News, started May 15, 1914, by Mr. Arthur K. Remmel, who is both editor and proprietor. The paper is purely independent. The paramount purpose is to give all the news of interest to the community. Mr. Remmel although a young man has had extensive experience in newspaper work, having been employed in the Winchester Herald about ten years, served as reporter on the Peoria, Illinois Journal for four years where he was associated with H. M. Pindell. Mr. Remmel secured his position on the Peoria paper through the good offices of Charles Fitch, the noted newspaper humorist.

The News is a seven column folio and it has already made quite a good impression in the community. It is the earnest desire of the citizens that the paper shall succeed. A daily paper is an enterprise that the town can well afford to sustain and encourage.

UNION CITY.

At Union City, on the Indiana side of the line, in the fifties and sixties, eight or ten newspapers were started and flourished for a short time, the only one of that period surviving being The Union City Eagle which was founded by L. G. Dines in 1863. The earliest paper of which we have a record published in that city was The Union Train founded in 1853 by a Mr. Putnam. A little later than this The Crystal Fountain was started and conducted by a Mr. Jones and about the same time The Chip Basket was started by W. D. Stone. These efforts were only ephemeral and only their names were saved from oblivion.

The Union City Eagle had about the usual experiences of other early newspapers namely, that of undergoing frequent editorial control. Among those who served as editors and managers may be named L. G. Dines, W. S. Dines, B. F. Diggs, B. H. Bonebrake and Bentley Masslich, the latter conducting the paper from 1866 to 1885. It was then sold to W. S. Ensign. Mr. Ensign sold the paper to L. M. Davis who published it for a few years and it was then purchased by James W. Stanley. Under his control the plant was very materially improved; a high grade Mergenthaler typesetting machine was installed. On account of business reverses, Mr. Stanley was compelled to turn the plant over to his father and brother and the latter leased it to Don C. Ward. Mr. Ward is making The Eagle a first-class paper in every particular. He is publishing an eight-page daily which takes all the important local and neighborhood news together with state and national events, furnished by the Associated Press. In politics the paper is an independent Republican but the editor is disposed to give all parties a fair hearing. This is done by letters, interviews and clippings from the partisan press. Mr.

Ward is credited with being a good newspaper man whose first desire is to build up his community and protect its interests.

In 1872 The Independent was started by W. R. Hedgepath. The paper was a supporter of Horace Greeley for the Presidency that year and after the autumn election of 1872 it suspended.

In 1871 The Union City Times was founded by John Commons, Republican in politics and conducted by that gentleman for five years. It was then sold to George Patchell, present owner and publisher, who has successfully conducted the paper during this whole period. In 1895, Mr. Patchell began the publication of a daily newspaper which also achieved success increasing in patronage and influence up to the present time. Both daily and weekly papers have been regularly issued since that time. Mr. Patchell's plant is well equipped with all the modern conveniences conducive to best results in the art preservative, which of course, includes the standard Mergenthaler typesetting machine.

The Plain Dealer was founded as a Democratic organ by Stephen M. Wentworth in 1877. Mr. Wentworth had acquired some considerable knowledge in the offices of the Cincinnati Enquirer and The Philadelphia Enquirer and The New Era at New Orleans. This paper was for a number of years the only Democratic paper in the county.

Our best information is that after several years, at least six, the paper was sold and the plant consolidated with another local publication. At least when it sold the Democrats no longer had an organ.

Other towns in Randolph county which support local papers are Farmland, Lynn, Parker, Ridgeville and Saratoga.

The Farmland Enterprise was established in 1888 by Clint W. West, who conducted the paper for many years until he became postmaster of Farmland in 1903, when the paper was sold to I. C. Penery, present owner and publisher. The Enterprise is an eight-page weekly, Republican in political views. It is a good advertising medium and is well supported by the business men of Farmland. The office is well equipped with modern machinery including an up-to-date typesetting machine.

The Ridgeville News was established March, 1889. Like most other local papers it has undergone many changes of editorial management but for the last fifteen years has been owned by James W. Stanley. It is an independent newspaper with Republican propensities. The paper is well supported by the business men and the reading public. It also has a well equipped job plant which successfully takes care of the needs of the surrounding country.

The Lynn Herald was founded in 1898. It has always been Republican in politics but is never offensively partisan and touches but lightly upon politics except when campaigns are on. The paper has been owned for many years by Mr. Frank Wright, who is the present Republican nominee for the State Legislature from Randolph county. The Herald is well patronized by the business men and Mr. Wright has made it quite a successful venture.

The Parker Review was established in 1899. It is independent in politics, is the usual size, a six-column, eight-page paper. The present owner and proprietor is Mr. E. L. Ashcraft, who is an all around newspaper man and lives up to the best ideals set before the craftsman in this art.

At Saratoga a newspaper was established a few years ago, called The Independent, which has had a precarious existence. It has had a half a dozen editors but none have been able to make it a successful venture. At the present time it is owned by James Stanley of Ridgeville and the type is set and the paper printed at The News office in that town. Its field is so limited that its circulation is necessarily quite small.

CHAPTER XVII.

BANKS AND BANKING.

(By J. L. Smith.)

Few counties in Indiana, if any, have more superior banking facilities than has Randolph county. Within the borders of the county, at present, there are fourteen well established banks and two successful trust companies. Three banks operate under the national charters and eleven are state banks. The aggregate deposits of these institutions would total more than $3,275,000.

Banks are located in nine out of twelve townships of the county, so it may be seen that the population may be readily accommodated in financial needs and safe depositories.

The first bank in Randolph county was established in 1857 by James Moorman, Mark Diggs and Moorman Way. It was called the Moorman, Diggs & Company's bank. After a few years, Mr. Moorman bought out the partners' interests and conducted it alone as a private bank for many years. In 1878 a stock company was formed and The Farmers and Merchants Bank was incorporated under the state laws, with a capital of $80,000. A new charter was secured in 1898 and the capital stock was reduced to $50,000. It is still operating under the charter then issued. Its officers are William D. Kizer, president who has served for seventeen years; B. F. Marsh, vice-president; Philip Kabel, cashier; D. M. Simmons, assistant cashier. The capital stock is $50,000; the surplus and undivided profits, $13,500; the resources, $384,000.

The Randolph County Bank was established February 4, 1865, as a national bank, the first of the kind in Randolph county. Its capital stock was $60,000. It was successfully conducted for many years, until October 1, 1876, when its national charter was surrendered and a state bank was organized with a capital stock of $100,000. In 1898 this bank was reorganized and its capital stock reduced to $60,000 which is the amount of capital still maintained. Its officers are Seth D. Coats, president; T. L. Ward, vice-president; Charles E. Ferris, cashier. Its surplus and undivided profits are $18,000; resources, $381,000. Mr. Coats has been president for a period of twenty-four years and Mr. Ferris cashier for twenty-eight years.

The Atlas State Bank of Union City was established in 1896. It has had a successful career and has been a marked benefit to the community. Its present officers are C. C. Fisher, president; R. C. Schemmel, vice-president; B. F. Beatty, cashier. Its capital stock is $52,000; surplus and undivided profits, $6,000; resources, $375,000.

The Commercial National Bank, formerly the Commercial Bank of Union City, was reorganized in 1897. Its officers are George M. Edger, president; C. S. Hook, vice-president; J. F. Ruby, cashier; E. A. Frank, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $50,000; surplus and undivided profits, $110,000; resources, $375,000.

In 1880 there were four banks transacting business in Randolph county, namely, Farmers and Merchants Bank and The Randolph County Bank, both of Winchester, and The Citizens Bank and The Commercial Bank, located in Union City. Among the officers and stockholders it is noted are the names of many of the representative citizens. Connected with the Farmers and Merchants Bank were such men as Nathan Reed, James Moorman, Simon Ramsey, Thomas F. Moorman, Joseph R. Jackson, Albert O. Marsh, Amos C. Beeson, R. S. Fisher and John Hiatt.

Connected with The Randolph County Bank at that time were Gen. Asahel Stone, Dennis Kelley, Thomas Ward, Adam Hirsch, John E. Neff, L. W Study, John E. Campbell, Seth D. Coats and John Hiatt. Connected with The Citizens Bank of Union City were ex-Governor Isaac P. Gray, Nathan Cadwallader, Ephraim H. Bowen, Oliver H. Smith, Wm. H. Anderson, William K. Smith and Charles C. Smith. With the Commercial Bank of Union City were Charles Heady, James F. Rubey, Henry B. Grahs, Robert S. Fisher, James Moorman, William Anderson and John S. Johnson.

These earlier banks have undergone various changes. Some surrendering their national charters for state charters or vice-versa as the case might be.

Ten of the banks and the two trust companies were all established within the first ten years of the present century.

The Citizens Banking Company of Lynn was established in 1900. Its present officers are S. C. Bowen, president; W. R. Halliday, vice-president; Daniel Hecker, cashier; O. J. Pierson, assistant cashier. Its paid up capital stock is $30,000; surplus and undivided profits, $13,000; resources, $200,000.

The Ridgeville State Bank was established in 1901. Its officers are N. T. Sumption, president; John H. Huber, vice-president; John E. Rickert, cashier; W. E. Ward, assistant cashier; capital stock, $25,000; surplus and undivided profits, $9,000; resources, $195,000.

The First National Bank of Farmland was established in 1902. Its officers are L. W. Green, president; P. M. Blythe, vice-president; J. G. Blythe, cashier. Its capital stock is $25,000; its surplus and undivided profits, $5,500. Its resources, $100,000.

The Farmers Bank of Losantville was established in 1902. Its officers are D. W. Kinsey, president; J. R. Gilmore, vice-president; F. H. Thompson, cashier. Its capital stock is $10,000; its surplus and undivided profits, $1,000; resources, $70,000.

The Parker Banking Company was established in 1903. Its officers are L. A. Botkin, president; George O. Thompson, vice-president; Charles F. Halliday, cashier; S. C. Dragoo, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $25,000; surplus and undivided profits, $8,000; resources, $119,000.

The Saratoga State Bank was established in 1903. Its officers are Cyrus Bousman, president; C. E. Spitler, vice-president; E. A. Farquhar, cashier; B. W. Aiken, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $25,000; surplus and undivided profits, $3,000; resources, $80,000.

The Citizens Banking Company, of Modoc, was established in 1903. Its officers are John Christopher, president; Emmet B. Harris, cashier; Sylvia L. Hunt, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $10,000; surplus and undivided profits, $1,000; resources, $99,000.

The First National Bank of Ridgeville was established in 1906. Its officers are George M. Edger, president; C. Orr, vice-president; John M. Edger, cashier; Frank Harker, assistant cashier. Its capital stock, $25,000; surplus and undivided profits, $1,000; resources, $100,000.

The Farmland State Bank was established in 1907. Its officers are, S. M. Cougill, president; E. S. Jaqua, vice-president; I. M. Branson, cashier; G. W. Turner, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $32,000; surplus and undivided profits, $5,000; resources, $175,000.

The Greensfork Township Bank was established in 1900. Its officers are, C. E. Chenoweth, president; S. C. Bowen, vice-president; O. E. Auker-man, cashier; E. Chenoweth, assistant cashier. Its capital stock is $12,000; resources, $52,000.

The Peoples Loan and Trust Company, of Winchester, was organized in 1901. Its officers are James P. Goodrich, president; John I. Johnson, vice-president and J. E. Hinshaw, secretary and treasurer. Its capital stock is $30,000; surplus and undivided profits, $21,000; resources, $388,000.

The Union Loan and Trust Company, of Union City, was organized in 1909. Its officers are J. M. Turner, president; J. D. Money, vice-president; P. I. Turner, secretary and treasurer. Its capital stock is $35,000; undivided profits, $12,000; resources, $165,000.

CHAPTER XVIII.

HISTORY OF EACH TOWNSHIP.

White River.—This is by far the largest township in the county and the third largest in the state. It is from ten to eleven miles long and seven miles wide, embracing seventy-four sections, as follows: Township 19 north, range 13 east, sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Township 20 north, range 13 east, sections 1 to 4, 9 to 16, 20 to 29 and 32 to 36, inclusive. Township 19 north, range 14 east, sections 1 to 6, inclusive. Township 20 north, range 14 east, sections 1 to 36, inclusive.

The township is located directly upon White river, being divided by that stream into two somewhat unequal portions, the smaller part being on the north side, which is drained almost wholly into the Mississinewa by Hickory, Mud and Bear creeks. The south side lies wholly in the White River valley, being drained by the upper course of White river itself, and by Salt, Sugar, Sparrow, Eight-Mile and Cabin creeks, only a small portion in the southwest corner lying on the latter stream. This region was in the beginning a favorite with emigrants, and large numbers crowded into it from the time of its original settlement.

It is said to have been first reached, not by crossing from Wayne county nor by the exploration from the settlements previously made in the southern part of Randolph county, but thus: A party of men from South Carolina struck into the White River valley near its mouth, and threaded its entire extent in its utter wilderness state through what is now ten flourishing counties—Knox, Daviess, Greene, Owen, Morgan, Marion, Hamilton, Madison, Delaware and Randolph. They rode through the dense woods, camping out and picketing their horses at night and spending several weeks in the trip. What they lived on we cannot tell; they subsisted on something, however, for most of them were still in the land of the living full fifty years after that adventurous journey. For some reasons they were not satisfied till they arrived in Randolph county, a few miles west of Winchester. The whole valley of White river was then in possession of the Indians. Not a white man had ever dwelt anywhere throughout its whole vast extent. The French had planted themselves about Vincennes, and that settlement spread from the Wabash across to the White river; but above the French colony all was wilderness.

This party located lands for settlement, and finally in the fall of 1816 (some of them remaining), returned to South Carolina to make arrangements to bring a large company of emigrants from that distant country. And they came—a colony of about thirty persons, with their wagons and their goods, from South Carolina, across the Appalachian mountains, through Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, into Indiana, during the severe winter of 1816-17, meeting the snow on the summits of the Cumberland range, and keeping company therewith the whole way onward, arriving at White river in March, 1817, with the snow a foot deep, which left not before the April following.

And now just stop and take in that traveling scene: First, a trip from South Carolina to the lower course of White river in Southwestern Indiana. Second, a horseback jaunt through the entire White river wilderness to its sources in Randolph county, and a tarry in the woods of that region. Third, a return trip also on horseback through the sparse settlements of Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina to the Palmetto state. Fourth, a wagon journey from that southern land over mountain and stream, over horrible roads, through the cold and snow of that extreme winter, to plant themselves at last in the wilderness, fifteen miles from any other settlers.

When they came, indeed there were some cabins for some of them, as well as for one of the men who tarried in the wilderness, and who, being a believer in the Bible in general, and in that declaration in particular that "It is not good for men to be alone," had gone down among the settlers of Wayne county, in the White Water valley, and had found a virgin after his own heart, to whom he had been joined in the bonds of holy wedlock; and together they returned to his chosen home, and there for more than forty days that loved and loving couple dwelt in the desolate forest alone. Years afterward that bride used to relate how for six weeks of that first sojourn she saw no white face besides that of her husband. But the company came, and they, too, went to work, and it was not long till not one alone, but several dwellings were to be seen nestling among the trees.

The party who traversed on horseback the long and desolate valley of the White river were Paul W. Way, Henry H. Way, William Way, Robert Way (a lad of sixteeen, and nephew of the rest, and son of John Way), and William Diggs, Jr.; and Paul Way, in the fall of 1816, returned, as has been stated, and conducted a company from that country to this. That group of emigrants was as follows: Paul Way's family, seven in all; John Way's family, seven in all; Armsbee Diggs and wife, John Moorman and family, six in all; George Wilson and family, five in all; making a company of twenty-seven persons, belonging to five families. Moorman and Wilson stopped on Greensfork (Wilson probably in Wayne county), and the rest came on. Meanwhile, William Diggs had married, and, as already stated, was keeping house on White river. Henry Way married in the same way, about the same time, so that when the whole colony there united, they amounted to nearly twenty-five persons, all Ways and Diggses. Soon after others of the connection and their acquaintances came from South Carolina, among others the father of William Diggs, Jr., William Diggs, Sr.

At nearly the same time, say in 1817, families of the Wrights came, and also some of the Haworths, and by the summer of 1818 a large company of Wrights and others were present, insomuch that at the first election of county officers (held August, 1818), three had the name of Wright—John Wright, judge; David Wright, sheriff, and Solomon Wright, coroner. This John Wright in particular seems to have been an estimable man, since he was retained as judge by successive elections for twenty-eight years—1818 to 1846—an event probably without a parallel in the history of the county.

David Wright, Solomon Wright and Thomas Wright were sheriffs from 1818 to 1827. Another John Wright was commissioner from 1820 to 1822. Two of the grand jury were Isaac Wright and William Wright. Two of the first petit jury were Solomon Wright and Abram Wright. Thus in one year after they began to come, seven Wrights were holding official positions in the newly formed county. The Ways also were prominent. Paul W. Way was appointed county agent, at that time a very important and responsible position. Four Ways were on the first juries in 1818—John Way, William Way, Sr., William Way, Jr., and Paul W. Way. In August, 1818, there were, according to Hon. Jere Smith's statement, fifty or sixty families on White river and Salt and Sugar creeks, all of whom are supposed to have been in the present bounds of White River township.

We give some dates that are accessible:

1817—Simon Cox, east of Winchester; Benjamin Cox, east of Winchester; William Kennedy, near Mount Zion church; Solomon Reynard, on Eight-Mile creek; John Wright (Hominy), west of Winchester. 1818—Absalom Grey, east of Winchester. 1819—John Coats, east of Winchester; ———— Lasley, south of Winchester; David Lasley, south of Winchester; Peter Lasley, south of Winchester; Robinson McIntyre, near Maxville; Zachariah Puckett, near Dunkirk; Joseph Puckett, near Dunkirk. 1820—Henry D. Huffman, west of Winchester; Tarlton Moorman, west of Winchester; Albert Macy, west of Winchester; Thomas Puckett, near Dunkirk; Isom Puckett, near Dunkirk. 1821—James Driver, west of Winchester; Morgan Mills, west of Winchester. 1822—Stephen Clayton, west of Winchester; James Clayton, west of Winchester; John Robison, east of Winchester; W. Robison, east of Winchester; Mary Reeder, near Winchester; Martin A. Reeder, near Winchester. Of course there were other prominent families, among whom were the Wysongs, the Elzroths, the Edwardses and the Starbucks, besides others too numerous to mention, and very many of whom are to the writer utterly unknown.

ENTRIES.

Note.—W. N. W. 18, 20, 14, means west half of the northwest quarter of Section 18, Township 20, Range 14, etc.

There are in the township about forty-seven thousand three hundred and sixty acres.

The early entries were as follows: Shubel Ellis, N. E. 18, 20, 14, November 30, 1814; George W. Kennon, S. E. 26, 20, 13, September 10, 1815; William Way, Jr., W. N. W. 23, 20, 13, February 7, 1816; John Clark, S. E. 13, 20, 13, March 8, 1816; William Way, N. E. 22, 20, 13, June 5, 1816; Henry Way, N. W. 22, 20, 13, June 5, 1816; William Diggs, Jr., N. W. 24, 20, 13, September 27, 1816; William Haworth, S. W. 17, 20, 14, October 19, 1816; Henry H. Way, N. E. 27, 20, 13, October 29, 1816; Tarlton Moorman, S. TOWNS.

Maxville.—Location, section 20, township 20, range 13, on White river; Robison McIntyre and Robert Cox, proprietors; twenty-six lots; streets, north and south, Rairoad avenue, East; east and west, Main. Recorded May 28, 1850. [Note.—The town was established many years before that date, about 1832.]

The town was laid out in about 1832 by Robison McIntyre. The town plat seems not to have been recorded till May 28, 1850. The commencement of business and the establishment of the town, however dates back to 1832. Solonion Seamans built the first house, and kept the first store; he also had a hotel and was a physician. For a time a large amount of business was done. Maxville became the center of a brisk and thriving trade. There have been at one time places of business as follows: Two smith shops, one grist-mill, three stores, two physicians, one saw-mill, one church, one school house, two limekilns, one lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, one lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, one postoffice. It might in time have become an important town, if the old order of things had continued, but the Bellefontaine railroad was built and missed the town about two miles.

New Dayton.—It is a hamlet; not incorporated. It is not laid out as a town, but is simply a little hamlet with a name. There has been a store for twenty-five years, and a smith shop for thirty-six years. There is a church and a graveyard. The meeting-house was built in 1877. It belongs to the Methodist Episcopal denomination.

Sampletown.—Was on White river, two miles east of Maxville. Judge Sample entered land there January 16, 1817, and laid out Sampletown very early, but it never flourished. In May, 1820, a road was laid from Sample's mill to Huntsville, and another, in 1825, from Sample's mill to Lewallyn's mill (Ridgeville).

Vernon.—There seems to have been, at some time away back in the "beginning of things," a town by the name of Vernon. One of the roads laid out by the commissioners is said to end at the principal street of the town of Vernon. No one now seems to know the location of that ancient site. Probably it is identical with what is popularly known as "Sampletown," on the Windsor road, west of Winchester. A town was begun there, but it did not flourish and soon died away. The name which lived in the popular memory is Sampletown, from Mr. Sample, who settled there very early, as soon as 1820, or sooner. He built a mill on White river; his son established a tanyard and laid out a town, and the locality is called Sampletown to this day, yet the real name may have been (and probably was) Vernon.

Winchester.—Is in White River township, but its history is given in another part of this work.

BIOGRAPHY.

Thomas Addington, Sr., was born in 1778; married Tamar Smith in 1807 (who was born in 1786). He died in 1839, aged sixty-one years, and she died in 1845, aged fifty-nine years. They moved to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1807, three years before Wayne was a county, and nine years before Indiana was a state. There were then only three counties in Indiana territory, viz., Knox, Clark and Dearborn. They came to Randolph county, Indiana (Sparrow creek), in 1834. He and his wife rode horseback from North Carolina to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1807; they had during their lives thirteen children.

Rev. R. Brandriff, Piqua, Ohio, was born about 1800; he became a preacher very young, and, in 1822, was appointed to the Greenville circuit by the annual conference, in session at Marietta, Ohio, September, 1822; his colleague was Moses Crume, and the presiding elder was Alexander Cummins, and the circuit belonged to the Miami district. In 1822 the Greenville circuit included all of Preble and Darke counties, Ohio, all of Randolph and part of Wayne county, Indiana.

Mr. Brandriff states the matter thus: "We traveled from Chenoweth's, in Darke county, Ohio, to a brother Canada's (William Kennedy's), a few miles from Winchester, from there to Winchester. Winchester was then right in the woods, a very new place. My recollection is that there were two streets running at right angles, and on the northwest corner, was a log house, at which I preached. I think the name of the man was Odle, at any rate he was father-in-law of George Ritenour, at whose house we preached on the Mississinewa, near Deerfield. From this place I went to Sumwalt's, on White river. The good people had blazed the trees from Ritenour's to Sumwalt's, and I followed them as my road. From this place I went to Hunt's, and from Hunt's I followed an Indian trail to the East fork of White river, as there were no roads in that direction. When I arrived at Whitewater, I found a farm and a kind family who entertained me. I made their acquaintance, obtained permission to preach in their house, formed a class and had it as a regular preaching place. The family was one by the name of Williams. Insco Williams, the painter and proprietor of the Bible Panorama, which was so celebrated many years ago, and which was burned at Philadelphia, was a son of this family, and so also was Doctor Williams, now of Kansas. From here we went to Wiggins', or New Garden, or Newport, as since called. From there we went to New Paris, and preached in the house of John Cottom, who has since been a resident of Winchester. I will only add here that I am the first Methodist who ever preached in Richmond, Indiana. It was in the summer of 1822; some brother on the Oxford circuit, which I was then traveling, made the arrangements. They had heard of the boy preacher, and desired that I should visit them. A friend entertained me. I preached in a small school house, and was astonished at the interest the good Quaker took in me."

Simeon Brickley, Maxville, was born in 1822, in Preble county, Ohio; came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1843; married Eliza Ellen McIntyre; had four children, including two married daughters. Mr. Brickley was a farmer, a Methodist and a Republican; he was also a lime-burner, owning a splendid lime quarry on the banks of and on the bed of White river; he burned as many as eighteen to twenty kilns in a single year, from 600 to 800 bushels in a kiln. The other kilns in the neighborhood were smaller. There were three sets of kilns—Brickley, McIntyre, McNees.

Stephen Clayton, born in 1788, in Maryland; married Mary Chivens; came to White River about 1822, entered 120 acres of land west of the "Boundary;" he had eight children; seven grew up. He died in 1834, and his wife in 1859.

James Clayton (brother of Stephen), born in Maryland in perhaps 1798; came to Randolph county in 1822; married Abigail Way (sister of Paul W. Way); they had no children; he lived many years on his farm west of Winchester, afterward moving to Winchester, to Middleboro, and finally to Newport, where he died some years ago. His wife died at Winchester in January, 1880, while on a visit there.

Thomas Clevenger, White River, was the son of Jonathan and Sarah Clevenger, of Warren county, Ohio, both of whom died in 1870; he was the third of ten children and was born in 1816, in Warren county, Ohio, and moved to Montgomery county, Ohio, in 1829; married Mary A. Clarion, in 1839; moved to Randolph county, Indiana, one mile from Arba, in 1845, and to White River township, five miles east of Winchester, in 1863, where he resided for years.

THE COATSES.

John Coats, the first of the name in Randolph, was the son of William Coats, one of the three brothers emigrants from Scotland, above named. William Coats was the son of Philip Coats, of Scotland, and a sister of William Coats was the mother of Rev. John Coats, of Coatsville. William Coats had a large family, at least seven of whom came to the northwest from Carolina, as follows: John Coats, William Coats, Joseph Coats, Hepsy (Wright), Rhoda (Wrench), Hetty (Harrison), ———— (Beanblossom). John Coats was born in Carolina in 1786; married Sally Wright, daughter of Thomas Wright, in 1807 (she was born in 1789); they came to Ohio soon afterward, and, in 1819 moved upon White river, Randolph county, Indiana. John Coats and Thomas Wright, his father-in-law, lived for awhile near Covington, Ohio, upon what are now the famous and valuable stone quarries at that place. While residing in that region the Indians were troublesome. There was a fort not far off, and they moved into it for safety, the mother leading one child by the hand and carrying the other at her breast.

At one time Mrs. Thomas Wright and her daughter, Mrs. John Coats, were emptying meal into a barrel. An old Indian came into the house. He said nothing, coming in unobserved, till he reached the middle of the room. His hunting knife had slipped around in front, and, as he undertook to move it back upon his hip, they thought he was going to kill them. The children were lying on the bed, and the women forgetting all about them, ran wildly past the Indian out of the house. Recollecting the children, they rushed back, and, seizing them, ran with the whole group, five in all, to the shelter of the fort. Mr. Wright coming home in the evening found them there, and was much surprised at the fact. The Indian was peaceable and intended no harm.

These families came to Dadke county, perhaps in 1809, and lived there during the war of 1811-13, undergoing the manifold hardships and dangers of that perilous time. Messrs. Coats and Wright removed, in 1819, to Randolph county, Indiana, and, in process of years, their descendants became very numerous in that whole region, as well as elsewhere. John and Sally Coats were the parents of fourteen children; seven were born before their emigration to Randolph county, Indiana, and seven afterward.

John Coats entered eighty acres of land three miles east of Winchester; he was a farmer and a chair-maker. At one time he held the office of justice of the peace, and his jurisdiction extended at first to Fort Wayne, and possibly, to the northern limit of the state. Mr. Coats was county commissioner during several years. In religious connections he was a Friend; in politics, in olden time, a Whig, and in later years, a Republican. His death occurred in 1878, he being ninety years old; his wife had preceded him three years, her death taking place in 1875, and her age being eighty-six years. Twelve of their children grew up and were married and had families. All the sons and all the sons-in-law but one were Republicans. A reunion of the connection was held in the sixties at the family homestead, at which about 300 descendants of John Coats were present. Several other like gatherings have since taken place, with the attendance of hundreds of children, grandchildren, etc.

At a reunion held near Harrisville, in the summer of 1882, at the request of Rev. John Coats, of Coatsville, nearly two hundred of the connection were present. William and Joseph Coats, brothers of John Coats, Sr., did not reside in Randolph county. These reunions are annual affairs and are attended by hundreds.

Benjamin Cox, White River township, born in North Carolina about 1785, moved to Ohio in 1806, and to White River, east of Winchester, in the fall of 1817; he married Ann Rhoads and had eight children—William, John, Ruth, Ann, Patience, Lydia, Mary, Benjamin. He entered land on White river and lived there till he died (in about 1852), sixty-seven years of age; he was a recorded minister among Friends; his work was acceptable and useful; his wife died in her sixty- third year; while her husband was absent on a religious mission in North Carolina (he was gone about three months). Mr. Cox also taught school, having taught the first school in the settlement, about 1820 probably.

Littleberry Diggs, White River township, was born in South Carolina in 1893; he was the son of William Diggs, Sr., and a brother of William Diggs, Jr., called "Old Billy Diggs." L. Diggs married Lydia Way, in South Carolina in 1811. He emigrated to Randolph county in 1817; his wife died in 1827, and he married Hannah Mendenhall, March 11, 1841, dying himself in 1846. He had eleven children, eight by his first wife and three by his second; his second wife lived a widow forty-six years, residing with Isaiah P. Watts, her son-in-law, in Winchester, and died September 20, 1892.

Henry Edwards, White River township, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, March 2, 1795; married Polly Hamilton, October 18, 1815; came to Wayne county, Indiana, in the fall of 1821, and to Randolph county in the spring of 1831; died at the residence of his son, Hamilton Edwards, November 6, 1881, aged eighty-six years, six months and two days. He had been married sixty-six years, and had resided on his homestead fifty years; he was the father of eleven children. He was, in early life, a Whig, and later an Anti-slavery man, and still later a Republican; in religion, a Friend, and in occupation a farmer.

Mr. Edwards was buried in the Friends' cemetery, at White River meeting-house, in the presence of a large and sympathizing assembly. The discourse was delivered by Rev. Nathan Butts from the text, "When a few years are gone I shall go whence I shall not return."—Job. xvi, 22.

Jacob Fisher, White River township, was born in Pennsylvania in 1811; came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1826; married Delila Ruble, in 1837; had a large family of children; resided on White river, some miles west of Winchester, and died some fifty years ago.

John Fisher, White River township, came from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and from Ohio to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1824; he had fifteen children; twelve lived at home at one time, a rather lively, wide-awake family, one would think. Mr. Fisher has been dead more than seventy-five years; he was a Methodist; his children have mostly moved away to the West; he lived in White River township near White river.

Absalom Gray, White River township, born in North Carolina in 1796; came to White River in 1818; married Margery Cox (sister of Simon Cox), and afterward, Mary Pickett; he had fourteen children, eleven grown, eleven married. A. Gray entered eighty acres of land in Randolph county; moved to Iowa in 1845, and died there in 1875. He was a farmer by occupation; in religion, a Friend; in politics, a Whig, an Abolitionist and a Republican.

Simon Gray, White River township (son of A. Gray), born in 1826 in White River; married Nancy Smith, in 1846; has had four children. He is a farmer, and a thriving business man; his residence was burned down a few years ago, but he has built another fine dwelling. S. Gray is an enterprising and influential member of religious society and of the community; he is a Friend.

Stephen Harris, born in North Carolina in 1787; married Hannah Mace (who was born in 1784); came to Randolph county, in 1831, and settled east of Winchester two miles. He bought land of Samuel Cox, 160 acres for $223, entirely unimproved. He resided there nearly all the rest of his life, but died at Cherry Grove at the house of his son, William Harris, with whom he had made his home for a time. His death occurred in 1857, in his seventieth year; his wife died near Farmland in 1864, aged eighty years and three months. She, too, was residing with her son William.

Mr. Harris was a farmer, steady, sober-minded, thoughtful, industrious, upright; he was an Abolitionist and Anti-slavery Friend, and altogether a worthy citizen and a valuable member of society; he had five children—Benjamin, William, David, Henry, Stephen. They were all Friends and all Abolitionists, and all lived to be grown and married; they were every one born in North Carolina, and came with their father to Randolph county.

When Stephen Harris came, in 1831, some of the settlers were as follows: Benjamin Cox, Joshua Cox, Isaiah Cox, Simon Cox; Thomas Ward, an old man, grandfather of the present Thomas Ward; Joseph Moffitt, son-in-law of Thomas Ward; Thomas Pierce, brother of Burgett Pierce, still living near Deerfield; John Cox; John Coats, an old man, father of Joseph Coats, late of Union City, Ind.; William Coffin, an old man; Joel Ward, brother of Joab Ward; Zachariah Hiatt, Jonathan Hiatt. These all lived east of Winchester. John Walker and Harrison Rawson had been old settlers, but they went with the Mormons.

Jonathan Hiatt, father of George Hiatt, was born in North Carolina about 1770; married Rachel Williams in North Carolina; moved to Virginia before 1805; came to Champaign county, Ohio, in 1810, with eight children, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1818, with ten children, and two were born in Randolph, making twelve in all.

He was a farmer, and he settled near White River meeting-house, east of Winchester, in March, 1818, entering half a section of land; he died in 1836, sixty-six years old, and his wife in 1871, aged eighty-one years, in Wabash county; he was a Friend, a Whig and a strong anti-slavery man; an active temperance man, a good scholar and an estimable citizen, with good reputation and highly respected.

Henry D. Huffman, White River, was born in 1803 in Virginia; came to Ohio and to Randolph county in 1820; he married Eliza A. McNees, in 1831, and Mary J. West in 1866; he had thirteen children; was a farmer and teacher, and entered 160 acres of land just east of the Twelve-Mile boundary; he was prominent as a teacher in that early time, having had many of the children of the pioneers under his tuition. At one of the Old Settlers' reunions, held at Winchester some years ago, when he was about seventy years old, a class was formed by him from among the members of the association, his old "school boys," and had a "spelling bout," which excited much interest and considerable merriment. Mr. Huffman died in 1876, in his seventy-third year.

Barnabas Hunt, White River, was born in North Carolina in 1798; came to Ohio in 1804. While there his father had his property taken because he would not join the army in 1812. They came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1816. Barnabas married Hannah Lewis, daughter of Evan Lewis, in 1817; his wife was born in 1802; they moved to Farmland (three miles south of it) in 1847. He had three children. By occupation, he was a farmer; as to religion. a Friend; in politics, a Whig, an anti-slavery man and a Republican. He died in 1874, being seventy-five years, two months and twenty days old.

George Johnson, born in Virginia in 1818; came to Randolph county in 1833; married Charlotte Cook, 1845; no children; moved to Winchester in 1873; farmer; Democrat; and a member of the town council two years.

Endsley Jones, White River, born in North Carolina in 1810; came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1816, and to Dunkirk, Randolph county, in 1831; married Lydia Wright, daughter of (Hominy) John Wright and sister of Solomon Wright (Cabin creek) in 1837; has had four children; bought forty acres of second-hand land; was brought up a Friend, but joined the "New Lights;" was an Abolitionist; was an active stockholder in the Underground Railroad; once had a narrow escape from being murdered by a slave-holder in search of slaves.

Mrs. Endsley Jones—Lydia (Wright) Jones—was the daughter of John (Hominy) Wright, the youngest but one of fifteen children. Her father brought eight children with him to this county; four had come before, two married and two unmarried. Lydia was born October 5, 1817, three weeks after her father got here, September, 1817. Her father was born in 1775, and died in 1851, aged seventy-six years. Her mother was born in 1777, and died in 1867, ninety years old, being strong in mind and memory as long as she lived.

Nathaniel Kemp, born in Frederick county, Maryland, in 1813; came to Montgomery county, Ohio (near Germantown, Ohio), in 1824; married Margaret Byles, in 1835; came to White River, Randolph county (Kemp place), in 1841; bought 200 acres; has owned 690 acres, but it is now distributed among the children or otherwise disposed of.

In his prosperity he was energetic for the public good, and Randolph county will long have reason to remember Mr. Kemp as an enterprising, public-spirited citizen; he was a Whig, and a Republican.

Isaiah W. Kemp, White River, was born in 1839 in Montgomery county, Ohio; came to Randolph county in 1841; married Molly Wysong, and afterward Ellen Hippenheimer, in 1875. Mr. Kemp enlisted in Company H, Eighty-fourth Regiment; was appointed first sergeant, promoted first lieutenant and mustered out first sergeant with the regiment. Mr. Kemp was an active, thorough-going farmer and business man, and stood high among his fellow-citizens.

William Kennedy, White River, was born about 1797, and married Nancy Tharpe in 1814; they had no children of their own, but raised, partly or wholly, fourteen children; they came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1816, and to Randolph in the spring of 1817.

Reminiscences—Nancy Tharpe Kennedy. "My husband went to Cincinnati to enter land (160 acres), and I had to stay here in the woods, all alone, miles and miles away from any white people, being only a girl of seventeen years. My husband was an orphan boy, but God kept his promise. The Indians were very thick in the vicinity. They were constantly passing to and fro. The principal trail was three-fourths of a mile south of us. I used to be afraid, for I was just a girl of seventeen years old, and they were painted all up like fury. They were very kind, however, and we were kind to them. We would give them bread and meat, and they would be satisfied. One day one of the Indians asked my husband, 'What is your name?' 'Kennedy.' 'Well, Kennedy, no Indian ever kill you—you kind to Indian.' I have seen great numbers of Indians. Sometimes squaws would ride along on their nice ponies. Squaws would never walk. I have known twenty or thirty Indians to pass at one time. There was one Indian who often stayed with us; he was very kind and civil. I never saw an Indian drunk in my life. Some of the Indians were white and fair.

"Charles Conway and John Wright lived near Winchester, though the town was not then laid out."

Elisha Martin, White River, was born in 1812, in Butler county, Ohio; married Susan Kelly in Cincinnati, in 1831; came to Randolph county in 1832; settled first on Salt creek, and in two years moved southwest of Winchester. They had nineteen children.

John Martin, father of Mrs. Mary A. Reeder, Winchester, was born in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, in 1773; he came to Warren county, Ohio, before 1794; was a soldier in the United States army in the Western Indian wars, being with St. Clair and General Wayne in 1794 and 1795, and with General Harrison at Tippecanoe and the Thames, in 1811 and 1813, and with Colonel Croghan, at Fort Stephenson; he came to Randolph county in 1822, settling one and a half miles southwest of Winchester on White river; he was a great hunter, a regular pioneer, and when settlements became too thick he left and went to Missouri (1833); he died in 1839.

Robison McIntyre, White River, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1786. He removed to Butler county, Ohio, in 1807, and came to Randolph county in 1819. In 1813 he married Mary Taylor, who was born in 1787. They had eight children, seven grown and married. He came to Maxville in 1825, and laid out the town in 1832, which, however, was recorded in 1850. He was raised a Presbyterian, but in the West he joined the Methodists. He was an active and prominent man in the community. He died in 1871, in his eighty-sixth year, and lies buried in the Maxville cemetery. His wife died in 1854, aged seventy-two years.

Hiram Mendenhall, Unionsport, born in North Carolina in 1801, moved to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1806, and to Randolph county in 1837. He married Martha Hale in 1820, and they had ten children. He went to California in 1850 and died June 30, 1852, while on the way home from the Golden Land beneath the setting sun. He was a millwright and a miller. He built two mills and his brother, Nathan Mendenhall, built one also, where one of Hiram's mills had burnt down. The whole family were ingenious and seemed to be machinists by nature. Hiram Mendenhall always had two shops, a wood shop and a smith shop, and did his own repairing. He was led away by speculative notions at one time and was persuaded to start a "community" at Unionsport, between 1842 and 1846. Eight or ten families joined in the movement. It continued only two or three years, ending disastrously to the parties engaged, especially to Hiram Mendenhall, who bore much, perhaps most of the expense of the experiment. He was a strong and earnest Abolitionist, being the one who was selected to present the famous petition to Henry Clay at Richmond, Indiana, asking him to emancipate his slaves. The design had been to make the request in a quiet, unobtrusive manner; but, when asked when he would receive the petition, Mr. Clay told them to present it in public. They did so and he employed the occasion to make what seemed to the anti-slavery men present a cruel and causeless attack upon Mr. Mendenhall and the opinions he represented, though, doubtless, the pro-slavery partisans regarded Mr. Clay's address to Mr. Mendenhall as only a richly merited and well executed castigation for what they called his ill-timed impertinence. But years have fled and joined the ages before the flood and Henry Clay and Mr. Mendenhall were summoned on the self-same day by the Judge of the living and the dead, before His dread tribunal, to give an account of their stewardship and now there is at length, after so long a time, "no slave-hunt in our borders, no slave upon our land." The Abolitionists and Mr. Mendenhall as their spokesman were extensively condemned for their supposed impudence in making their presentation in public; whereas that was Mr. Clay's own work and intended, doubtless, to enable him to make a more severe attack upon Mr. Mendenhall and the Abolitionists in general. Hiram Mendenhall was at one time an extensive landowner, being possessed of more than one thousand acres of real estate in Randolph county. The unfortunate, though brief, socialistic experiment greatly weakened his financial ability and he went to the land of gold to renew his waning fortunes, but death claimed him for its own and what availed gold, or houses, or lands? Afar from the spot of his nativity and the home of his manhood, on board ship in the Gulf of Mexico, Hiram Mendenhall took the last look upon the scenes of earth and plunged alone into the great unseen! His wife long survived him, dying, still a widow, August 5, 1880, aged seventy-nine years one month and twenty-four days, having outlived her unfortunate husband more than twenty-two years. Henry Clay and Hiram Mendenhall died on the same day, June 30, 1852, the one at his home at Ashland, Kentucky, the other among strangers on board a homeward bound ship in the Gulf of Mexico, falling a victim to the dreadful cholera on his journey to his home and his friends. It pleased the haughty politician, in the day of his power, to browbeat the despised Abolitionist in the time when the name was a by-word and a reproach; but the stern logic of fact has vindicated the obscure petitioner and removed the obloquy from his name and proved that, though negro property had been sanctioned and sanctified by two hundred years of legislation, yet it could not stand the test of reason and truth and was obliged to succumb to fate. As has been stated, he died of cholera on board a steamer on his homeward voyage in the Gulf of Mexico, near Key West, on the coast of Florida. He died June 30, 1852, said to be the same day on which Henry Clay expired. A son who was with him on the ship at his death survived.

Morgan Mills, White River, born in Ohio in 1794, married Rebecca Driver, sister of Jacob and James Driver, in 1812. They emigrated to White River in 1821, two years after Mr. Sample came here. Mr. Mills settled at first near Sampletown, but, as soon as the lands across the boundary were put into market, Mr. Mills, with hundreds of others, crossed the boundary into the new purchase in 1823. He had twelve children, eight grown. He was a farmer and belonged to the Christian (New Light) church sixty-four years. Falling from the platform of a railroad train at Farmland and bursting his skull in the fall, he died of the injury six weeks afterward. His death took place April 3, 1878, aged eighty-four years four months and five days. His wife, Rebecca Mills, died in 1872, aged seventy-seven years seven months and sixteen days.

The Pucketts, White River. There were eight brothers of the Puckett family and seven of them were Quaker preachers, all except Joseph. Their names were as follows: Joseph, Isom, Thomas, Zachary, Daniel, Benjamin, Richard and James.

The five first mentioned emigrated to Indiana, the first four coming in Randolph county and Daniel settling in Wayne county. They are all dead many years ago. Joseph and Isom came in 1819 and Thomas and Zachary in 1820.

Joseph Puckett was born in 1784, in North Carolina. He married Mary Garrett. They came to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1817, and, two years afterward, to Randolph county. He entered land after they came. An interesting incident occurred in connection with the entry of his land showing that officials are friendly and accommodating in some cases, at any rate. He went on foot to Cincinnati and when he got there, he found that the quarter-section of his choice overran so much that he lacked ten or fifteen dollars of having money enough to make the entry. There he was, a poor stranger, on foot, alone in Cincinnati, knowing not a single person in that city and utterly at a loss what to do. The clerk who was doing business in the receiver's office, learning his dilemma, said to him, "You need not go back without your land; I will lend you the money myself," and he did, and Mr. Puckett got the certificate for his land and went on his homeward way rejoicing. Of course he sent the money in payment of the loan as soon as he could raise it, which, however, was not a very easy task. Mr. Puckett had ten children, eight boys and two girls. All of them lived to be grown and married. The children were these: Tyre T., Welcome G., Benjamin, Micajah, Sylvania, Levi, Francis, Joseph, Phebe Ann and Thomas.

The Pucketts were all Friends and those that lived to the time of the "Separation" went with the Anti-slavery Friends. They were originally Whigs and became Republicans. The Pucketts came first to Ohio but preferred Congress title to military title and came on to Randolph. They settled near Dunkirk, entering one hundred and sixty acres apiece, paying each eighty dollars down.

Isom Puckett was one of ten children. His mother's father was Daniel Taylor, who died when one hundred and five years old. The names of the family to which Isom Puckett belonged were these: Richard, Benjamin, Isom, Betty, Anna, Zachariah, Thomas, Joseph and James. The Puckett brothers, four of whom settled in Randolph county, all entered land in White River.

Joseph Puckett, Sr., brother of Isom and Daniel Puckett, died in 1836, and his wife in 1846. He was a Friend, anti-slavery, and in early times a Whig. His son Benjamin was a physician of the Botanic school and achieved a good reputation as a practitioner, being for many years a leading physician in Winchester.

Joseph Puckett, Jr., Winchester, was born in 1825 in Randolph county, being the son of Joseph Puckett, Sr. He married Eliza Ann Muckey in 1851. Mr. Puckett was a farmer's son and was brought up on the farm. He learned the carpenter's trade, following that business for several years. He afterward became a merchant and still later was appointed United States revenue officer, holding the position four years. He adopted the fruit-growing business and practiced it for ten years, after which he was appointed cashier of the National Bank at Winchester and served in that capacity for five years, leaving it in 1878. When young, he was an Abolitionist and since the rise of the Republican party belonged to that organization.

James Pursley, White River, was born in 1807 in Virginia and came to Indiana (Randolph county) in 1831. He was twice married. His first wife was the mother of seventeen children; his second of five. Twelve of the children lived to be married. He died many years ago.

Jesse Pursley, White River, born in 1775, in Virginia, was in the war of 1812; came to Indiana about 1830; resided in Union and Franklin counties several years; came to Randolph county in 1833. He was twice married.

His first wife was Winny Yardley and the second was Nancy May, the latter dying in 1877, seventy-six years old. He had fourteen children by his first wife and ten by the second. Fourteen lived to be married.

Jesse Reynard, White River, son of Solomon Reynard, was born in 1819, in Randolph county; married Anna Diggs, daughter of William Diggs of White River and also a native of Randolph county in 1842 and had seven children. He was an Abolitionist and a farmer, a Wesleyan and a Republican. He owned two hundred and seventy acres of land and resided east of Buena Vista. He was an intelligent, substantial citizen.

Solomon Reynard, White River, was born in North Carolina in 1788; came to Clinton county, Ohio, with his parents in 1805; married Rachel Green in 1816, who was born in 1799; emigrated to Randolph county, Indiana in 1817; settled on Eight-Mile creek, four miles west of Winchester. He had ten children and died in 1861 about seventy-three years old. He was an Abolitionist and a Republican.

William Robinson, White River, born in Washington county, Indiana, in 1816; Randolph county, 1822; married Mariam Hill, daughter of Benoni Hill in 1838 and afterward Ruth (Test) Bundrant; ten children, none married but two. He resided four miles east of Winchester; farmer, Friend.

Walter Ruble, White River, was born in Tennessee in 1790; moved to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1802; married Sarah Wright in Clinton county in 1811 and was married twice afterward. He had eleven children.

Durant Smith, White River, was born in Jones county, North Carolina, in 1802; was taken by his parents to Stokes county, North Carolina, in 1808; married Elizabeth Keyes in 1825, who was born in 1806. They came to Randolph county in 1829 and settled at first on the farm where he continued to live until his death (fifty-one years). His wife died in the fall of 1879. They had been married fifty-four years. Their family consisted of twelve children.

John Starbuck, White River. His parents resided in Surry county, North Carolina, and he was born there. They came to Virginia in 1823 and to Randolph county in 1831. He married Beulah Garrett; had nine children, and died in 1850. His widow is living with her son, Welcome Starbuck, east of Buena Vista.

Leroy Starbuck, White River, son of John Starbuck and brother of Walter and Welcome Starbuck, was born in 1817, in Stokes county, North Carolina, moved to Virginia in 1823 and to Randolph county in 1831; married Mary Johnson in 1847, and has one child born in 1850. He was a Republican; a farmer, owned one hundred and sixty acres of land east of Buena Vista in White River township. He used to belong to the Wesleyans, but later to the Christians.

Randolph Turner, White River, was born in Virginia about 1788; married Elizabeth Heaston, daughter of Abram Heaston and sister of David Heaston; moved to Tennessee in 1818; kept a hotel at the foot of Cumberland mountains on the west side near Crab Orchard; went to Alabama in 1826 and died in 1828. In Alabama he was a farmer. They had seven children, three of whom came to Randolph county. Mrs. Turner, widow of Randolph Turner, came to Indiana in 1833 with her father, Abram Heaston, bringing three children. She lived with her father till he died and then with her son, William Turner, until she died in 1861, being at the time sixty-five years old.

Paul Way's family, seven in number; John Way's family, seven in number; Armsbee Diggs and wife; John Moorman and family, six in number; and George Wilson and family, numbering five—a company of twenty-seven persons in all, came to Indiana in 1817. The Ways started from South Carolina in the fall of 1816 and the company arrived in White River March, 1817, snow ten inches deep. [Note—John Moorman and George Wilson stopped on Greensfork, southwest of Lynn.] Snow fell on them at the top of the Blue Ridge and there was snow all the way to White River, melting off in April. They crossed the Ohio on the ice at the foot of Main street, Cincinnati. They came by Richmond, Newport, Williamsburg, Cherry Grove (Brocks and Frazier lived near Cherry Grove); from Cherry Grove the route was through the woods with no track for fifteen miles. John Way, father of Jesse Way, stretched a tent and the family lived in it all summer.

William Way, Sr., White River, born in 1756, came to Randolph county, in the spring of 1817. He had ten children. He settled below Winchester. He was a Friend, a Whig and died in 1839. Several of his children were somewhat noted. Paul W. Way, county agent, surveyor, hotel-keeper, etc., died in Winchester; John Way, blacksmith, died in Winchester; Henry H. Way, physician, died in Illinois; Matthew Way died in Carolina; Hannah, wife of Tarlton Moorman, mother of twelve children, died in Carolina in 1877; Abigail, wife of James Clayton, died at Winchester in 1880, eighty-three years old; Lydia, wife of William Diggs, died many years ago; Mary, mother of Dr. Beverly, of Winchester.

John Way, father of Jesse Way, Winchester, blacksmith, was born in North Carolina; married Patience Green in North Carolina and they came to Randolph county on White river in the spring of 1817. They had seven children.

John Way was a blacksmith in South Carolina; a farmer from 1817 to 1830 and a blacksmith from 1830 to the end of his life. He entered one hundred and sixty acres five and a half miles west of Winchester and lived there till 1830, then moved to Winchester and died there in 1856, his wife dying also in 1858. He was a Friend, Whig, Abolitionist, Republican.

Paul W. Way came to White River in 1816. He was a famous man, active and prominent. He was county agent, county surveyor, many years, etc., etc. He surveyed the town plat of Winchester, laid out the state and county roads, etc. He was justice of the peace, farmer, hotel-keeper in Winchester, etc. Many an old lawyer and judge remembers the times at Paul Way's tavern. Paul Way died in 1856, age, seventy-one years. He was a Whig, an active, enterprising citizen, and greatly esteemed among his fellow-townsmen and by the public at large. He had four children.

William Way, Jr., brother of H. H. Way, emigrated to Randolph county in 1817; moved to Newport (Fountain City), Indiana, and many years afterward to Wisconsin. He was twice married; had several children and died in Wisconsin at a ripe old age. He was a Friend, a Whig, an Abolitionist, an anti-slavery Friend and a Republican. He was throughout his life a farmer and possessed the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

Jacob A. White, White River, was born in 1793, in Rockingham county, Virginia. He came to Preble county, Ohio, marrying there Mary Neff, sister of Henry H. and John Neff. Mr. White emigrated to Randolph county about 1822. He had ten children, all of whom were grown. He died in November, 1848, having been taken in a buggy, a few days before his death, to the polls to cast his vote for General Taylor and being in the fifty-fifth year of his age.

David Wysong, White River, was the son of Valentine Wysong. He was born in Virginia in 1799 and came with his father to Randolph county in 1817 or 1818. He married Eliza Irvin, daughter of John Irvin. They had twelve children.

Abigail (Way), wife of James Clayton, lived for many years west of Winchester, some years in Winchester, also at Newport (Fountain City), Indiana. Her husband, James Clayton, died at Newport. Mrs. Clayton was a woman of high intelligence, sterling integrity and firm devotion to principles. She had no children, though she had been married more than fifty years.

John Conner, Winchester, was born near Atlanta, Georgia, in 1801. He came to Cincinnati in 1814, and learned the tinner's trade, marrying in Greene county, Ohio and moving to Randolph county, in 1831; kept store awhile with his brother, William Conner. John Conner rented forty acres of land near Lynn; moved to Winchester in 1835 and to Portland in 1840, living near the latter place on a farm south of the Big Salamonie river and in 1857 returned to Winchester. He began in 1835 to carry the United States mail from Winchester to Fort Wayne and continued that employment till 1861. Enlisting in the army in the fall of 1861, he died near Atlanta, Georgia, in 1863, in sight of the place at which he was born. Mr. Conner had three children; his wife dying in 1874 by a collision with a railroad train at the age of seventy-nine years. Mr. Conner was an old-time Democrat but he became a Republican in 1860. His life was one of great and peculiar hardship, transporting the mail over the northern route, mostly on horseback, through mud and frost, fording and swimming creeks at times in the earlier period, sleeping in the woods one night each trip between Winchester and Fort Wayne. For a few years he carried loads of silver for the entries of land at the Fort Wayne Land Office. In some cases, thousands of dollars were taken at one trip. Edward Edger, then postmaster of Deerfield, "stated that at one trip in about 1837, Mr. Conner had two thousand dolars (in silver) stowed away in his mail bag."

Hannah (Mendenhall) Diggs, Winchester. Her great-grandfather's name was Mordecai Mendenhall, living in North Carolina. The whole connection were millers and millwrights and he among the rest. Her grandfather, Stephen Mendenhall, was born about 1750 and raised thirteen children to be grown and married. He came to Richmond about 1814; moved to Clinton county, Ohio, soon afterward and died there about 1822. Her father was Nathan Mendenhall. He was born in North Carolina (Randolph or Guilford county) in 1773; came to Highland county, Ohio, in 1806; moved to Clinton county, Ohio, and remained in that county till 1837; came in that year to Randolph county and settled near Unionsport. He was married in North Carolina to Ann Harlan, who was born in 1772. They had nine children.

Hannah (Mendenhall) Diggs was born in 1811; married Littleberry Diggs in 1841 and has had three children. Her mother's name was Harlan, who was the daughter of Enoch and Edith Harlan, North Carolinians. His father was William Harlan, son of Ezekiel Harlan, son of George Harlan, son of James Harlan. Enoch Harlan had ten children, born between 1770 and 1792. Rebecca (Harlan) Hampton, daughter of Enoch Harlan and aunt of Hannah Mendenhall.

Nathan Harlan, son of Enoch Harlan, was born January 10, 1770, and died about 1840, seventy years old.

The other children of Enoch Harlan were: William, born October 6, 1771, died 1844, aged seventy-three years; Ann, born October 19, 1773, mother of Hannah Mendenhall, died 1857, aged eighty-four years; Nathaniel, born October 9, 1775, died 1824, aged forty-nine years; Jonathan, September 7, 1777, died 1846, aged sixty-nine years; David, born January 2, 1780, died 1871, aged ninety-one years; Solomon, born February 13, 1782, died 1869, aged eighty-seven years; Hannah, born March 20, 1784, died 1842, aged fifty-eight years; Enoch, born February 26, 1786, died 1866, aged eighty years; John, born May 9, 1790, died 1876, aged eighty-six years; Rebecca, born August 3, 1792, living in Iowa, aged eighty-nine years. [1882.]

A truly remarkable family for their age, nine of the number ranging from sixty-nine to ninety-one years, and averaging eighty-one years.

Solomon Harlan, a son of Enoch Harlan, and uncle of Hannah Mendenhall, born February 13, 1782, had children as follows: Rebecca Ann, John M., David Faris, William Foster, Rachel Fallis, Jonathan, Solomon Haynes and Jane Faris.

Emily Jane Harris, Winchester, wife of Dr. J. M. Harris, died at Winchester January 15, 1881, aged fifty-two years; she was born in 1829, being the daughter of David and Jane Hampton. David Hampton came from Ohio (Warren county) to Randolph county in 1818. They had eleven children, eight sons and three daughters. Emily Jane was one of the students at the first opening of Earlham College, near Richmond, Indiana.

Abram Heaston, near Winchester, was born in Germany about 1755; came to America and to Virginia before he was grown; married Matilda Short; emigrated to Randolph county in 1833, settling three miles south of Winchester, and purchasing land. He was nearly seventy years old when he came to the west, and died in about a year (about 1834); his wife died in Virginia; he had seven children. Five of them came to Randolph county, viz., Evelina, David, Samuel, Elizabeth and Virginia; he was a farmer and a tanner, and followed the business of a tanner till he came to this county; he was a Presbyterian and a Democrat. Abram Heaston was the maternal grandfather of William Turner, formerly residing near Salem, now near Camden, Jay county, Indiana.

Anna Maria Baker (Butterworth, Moore), Winchester, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1813; in 1832 she married James Butterworth, who was an Englishman, having been born in that country in 1810; he was a mechanic, and removed from Baltimore, successively to Pittsburg, Dayton, Richmond, and finally, in 1836, to Winchester; they had four children, who all lived in Randolph county, three of the four being residents of Winchester.

Mr. Butterworth was killed in 1845 by the bursting of a cannon. It had been used by one of the parties in the campaign of 1844, and had been taken and spiked and hid by the other party in a straw stack; and, upon being found several months afterward, in the efforts by Mr. Butterworth to "unspike" the gun, it exploded, and Mr. Butterworth lost his life. His widow married Mr. James Moore soon after, in 1846, with whom she lived till his death, in 1875; she then resided in Winchester with her son-in-law, W. W. Canada, Esq., who married her youngest daughter, Carrie E. Moore.

Harvey Patty, late of Winchester, was born in Ohio; came to Randolph county in 1835; married, first, Martha Jane Armfield, and then Malinda Maulsby; he had five children; his first wife died in 1848, and he died in 1856. He kept store in Huntsville; afterward he moved to Winchester and kept the Franklin House hotel; he finally went to Economy, and, while he was preparing to go to Kansas, he fell sick at Economy, and died there in 1856. He was an early Abolitionist; had been a Whig, was a strong temperance advocate, and every way an estimable and excellent man.

Ernestus Putman, father of Mrs. Edward Edger, was a resident of Virginia, working at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, during the war of 1812, and came to New Madison, Darke county, Ohio, from Washington City, in 1819; he was the father of ten children.

Mary (Martin) Reeder, Winchester, was born in 1798, April 16, in Hamilton county, Ohio; she was married, in Warren county, Ohio, in 1815, to David Reeder, who died in 1821; she came to Randolph county in 1822. Mrs. Reeder resided in Winchester over sixty years. Every house now standing in Winchester had been built since she came to the town. She lived all that time on the same lot, on South Main street, on the same premises with her son, Martin A. Reeder. The building east of Riley Hiatt's hardware store was (part of it) built about the same time that Mrs. Reeder settled in the town.

Peter Reinheimer, Winchester, was born in Schuylkill county, Pennsylvania, in 1815; came to Fairfield county, Ohio, in 1837, and to Germantown, Indiana, in 1838, and to New Paris, Ohio, in the same year; took a horseback trip to Philadelphia in November, 1839; returned to Centerville, Indiana, in March, 1840; married Elizabeth Irwin in 1841; went to New Paris, Ohio, in 1840, and moved to Winchester, Indiana, in 1865.

Nathan T. Butts was born on the 25th day of July, 1838, in Randolph county, Indiana. His parents, Thomas and Elizabeth Butts, came to Indiana from Ohio in 1834. Mr. Butts was elected to the Legislature of Indiana in 1872 and was an earnest worker in the cause of temperance. The "Baxter Liquor Law" was prepared by Mr. Butts and Mr. Baxter, representative from Wayne county; the local option clause in this law was the work of Mr. Baxter, himself, hence it took the name of Baxter rather than Butts. It was sometimes known as the "Baxter-Butts Bill." Mr. Butts was chairman of the Committee on Temperance and made the most effective speech of any in favor of his temperance bill, and it was due to him, more than anyone else, that the bill became a law.

James Clayton, born in Kent county, Maryland, August 8, 1819, was the son of Stephen and Mary Clayton, who located in Randolph county in 1820. The former died in 1834, the latter in 1858.

William H. Demory, a colored man, was the son of John and Sarah Demory, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, July 4, 1826. His father and mother were slaves. His mother obtained her freedom from her master when she was eighteen years of age. His father remained in slavery until 1826, when he ran away and came to this state and county. His escape was fraught with many exciting incidents; at one time he was captured but succeeded again in regaining his freedom. Mr. Demory paid a great deal of attention to horticulture. He had a good education, having been educated in Oberlin College, Ohio.

David Heaston, son of John and Mary Heaston, was born in Virginia February 3, 1792. His parents moved to Montgomery county, Ohio, when he was nine years of age and entered the land now occupied by the National Soldiers' Home, near Dayton.

Amos Hall was born in Clinton county, Ohio, September 4, 1839. Mr. Hall was identified with the county as the superintendent of the infirmary, an account of which is given elsewhere.

Elias Kizer was born in Virginia in 1800, and came to Randolph county in 1821, locating near the present site of Stone Station. In 1831 he removed to his farm, north of Winchester, where he remained until his death, in 1867. In 1824 he married Margery Ward, to whom were born three sons, Thomas W., Henry and Caleb. Mr. Kizer was one of the early pioneers of the county, and for more than forty-five years was prominently identified with its development and improvement. He took the contract for carrying United States mail between Winchester and Fort Wayne; sometimes he made the trip himself, but more often he hired someone to do it for him. Mr. Kizer kept a hotel in Winchester for a number of years. He served the county as commissioner and was a "Jackson Democrat."

Thomas W. Kizer was born in Randolph county, Indiana, November 24, 1824. He is the eldest son of Elias Kizer, who resided east of Stone Station, in Ward township, and was a prominent citizen of this county in its pioneer period and later history. In 1831 the family removed to the farm north of Winchester, now owned by the subject of this sketch. Here the latter passed the days of his boyhood and youth, attending the school in the winter, and working on the farm during the remainder of the year. When a young man, he became a clerk in the store of Jesse Way, at Winchester, and at a later date embarked in the retail grocery trade for himself. Two years later he engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he continued for three years, resuming the grocery business at the end of that time. Subsequently he became a farmer and grain dealer, following this enterprise until 1878. He is a competent business man, and by a life of energy and activity has acquired a comfortable fortune.

At various times in his life, Mr. Kizer has been called to occupy public positions of honor and trust. Toward the close of President Fillmore's administration, he was appointed postmaster at Winchester, but was displaced by Pierce, the successor of Fillmore. In business he is prompt, energetic and honorable, and has won many friends, among whom he is highly esteemed. He was one of the first members initiated into Winchester Lodge No. 121, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has been for years a prominent Odd Fellow.

Although not himself a church member, he has contributed liberally to the support of churches in the community, while his private and public life has been moral and upright. He has been married—first, to Miss Susannah Way, daughter of Jesse Way, Esq., on the 4th of January, 1846. Ten children came to bless this union, six of whom are now living. His wife died January 15, 1874, and on the 4th of January, 1876, he wedded Miss Ann Rebecca Weaver. Within five years, however, he was again called to mourn the death of a devoted and loving wife. She fell a victim of consumption on the 12th of January, 1881. On the 22d of December, 1881, he was united in marriage at Lawrence, Kansas, with Mrs. Alice M. Allen. Mr. Kizer was closely identified with the management of Fountain Park cemetery. No man could have been more devoted to the interest of any organization than he was in Fountain Park. Mr. Kizer was a very popular man, known perhaps as well as any man in the county, and his burial was attended by the largest number of people ever assembled for a similar purpose in Fountain Park.

David Lasley was born in Pennsylvania, April 1, 1800. He was the oldest of a family of eleven children. They moved to Montgomery county, Ohio, in 1814 and to Randolph county in 1819 and purchased the farm south of Winchester, where he lived until his death. He was father of Daniel Lasley, county superintendent of public schools, for six years. He married Hannah Parker in the fall of 1827.

Other prominent early citizens were George Hiatt, Elwood Hiatt, Job Hinshaw, Edmund Hinshaw, Eli Haworth, John W. Jarnigan, Joshua M. Johnson, Peter Lasley, Jacob Lasley, Philip Lykins, William Monks, Tarlton Moorman, Stephen Moorman, Robinson McIntyre, Henry T. McIntyre, Joseph Monks, Thomas McGuire, Tyre T. Puckett, Calvin Puckett, Nathan Puckett, John Pickett, John Richardson, William Ruble, Nathan Reynard, Walter Starbuck, William Starbuck, Charles Summers, Andrew Smith, Simpson Scott, John Tisor, John Van Pelt, Edward Wright, David Wysong, Harvey Wysong, and scores of others whose names we have not been able to learn.

DESCRIPTION.

Washington township contains about forty-four squares miles, being eight miles north and south and five and a half miles east and west. The southern part lies upon Greensfork and its two main branches and various smaller ones, and the north part upon the headwaters of White river and Salt, Sugar, Sparrow and Eight Mile creeks. The valley of Greensfork is a fine body of land, excellent and fruitful from the very first opening of the country; and, by the industry and thrift of the early settlers and the activity of their successors, that region has become the very garden of Randolph county. In fact, the whole townhsip is a flourishing and prosperous region. The settlement of Washington was next after that of Greensfork. The first occupation of Greensfork was during 1814. It is not certainly known that any settlers came into Washington township in 1814, though two entries of 160 acres each, both made by the same person, were made in 1814, one in May and the other in October. Seven entries were made in 1815 by five persons, in the order named: Curtis Clenney, Obadiah Harris, John Ozbun, Paul Beard and George Frazier. Whether these came first, and, if so, which one, is not now known.

The names of the principal pioneers of Washington township will appear in the following list of entries, made up to August, 1827, though, of course, this does not determine the dates of settlement, nor the actual settlers, as they may have been here either before or after the entry, or not at all.

It is a curious fact how often certain names occur in the census of 1880 in Washington township; e. g., there are 103 Johnsons, 98 Hinshaws, 33 Hodsons, 30 Lykinses, 27 Hutchenses, 20 Kellys, 17 Jones (including children). In Greensfork there are 49 Bowens, and others still occur with great frequency. Other names, moreover, that were very frequent in pioneer days, have nearly disappeared.

Washington township contains 28,260 acres of land, more than 10,000 of which had been taken up within five years of the first settlement.

The preponderating religious element at the first settlement of the township was Quaker. A large body of the pioneers belonged to the Friends, and, in a short time, two meetings were established, viz., Lynn and Cherry Grove, which have been maintained in a vigorous and prosperous existence to the present time. Other societies, also, found early footing in that region. Methodist "circuit riders" threaded the whole country, proclaiming redemption through a crucified and risen Savior. A Presbyterian church existed in 1846, and for some years before and after that time, called Liberty church. Other churches have been formed and maintained with a more or less vigorous growth for many years past at Bloomingsport and Carlos and Pleasant Hill.

TOWNS.

Bloomingsport.—This town is the second oldest in the county, having been laid out in 1829. Though so old, its growth was never rapid; still, considerable business has been done at the place. The proprietor of the town was Nathan Hockett. Alfred Blizzard built the first house. Mr. Beeson kept the first store. Dr. Paul Beard was the first physician in the region. There was no physician in Bloomingsport for many years. Dr. Gideon Frazier lived in the village a long while ago. Other physicians have been Drs. Gore, Strattan, Kemper, Good, Coggeshall, etc. Merchants have been Messrs. Beeson, Comfort, Ballard, Budd, Hyatt, Wright, Coggeshall, Hockett, etc. There have been a potter's shop, a wheelwright's shop, a saw-mill and a grist-mill. There have been two churches—Methodist and United Brethren. The latter has been abandoned.

Bloomingsport, like most of the interior towns in the county, is much decayed, and its business has greatly decreased. It is finely located in the midst of an excellent country, and many active and enterprising farmers reside in the region.

Lynn.—The town was laid out by Daniel Freestone in 1847 and later in 1850 was replatted by Philip Brown. It is located about one-half mile from the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad and is today one of the progressive towns of the county. When the railroad was built a half a mile to the west another town was built up near the depot which for a time interfered somewhat with the growth of the town, proper, but of late years the old town has become a fixture and today it is in a flourishing condition. It has all kinds of business represented there and supports a bank as well. It is situated in a very rich fertile district and is supported by a progressive class of people and contains many beautiful homes and churches. The high school at Lynn is not only a credit to the town but to the county as well. It has a population of 1,200.

Rural.—Location, Sections 9 and 16, on the Richmond & Grand Rapids railroad between Winchester and Lynn. The town was started about 1870, on the completion of the railroad from Richmond. Rural has one church and store and elevator conducted by Ernest Study. There is no pike, and not even a cross-road, but only an ordinary public road crossing the railroad. The village is so healthy that no physician can live there. The distance to the nearest graveyard is four and a half miles.

Snow Hill.—There is a locality called Snow Hill about three miles north of Lynn, on the pike toward Winchester at the crossing of an east and west road. There used to be a store at that point but there never was any town. The store has been long discontinued.

Hawkin's Station.—On Grand Rapids railroad, not incorporated in sections 16 and 21, one mile south of Rural and three miles north of Lynn; there is a switch and a station and a cattle-pen from which to load stock, but no other sign of a town. It is sometimes called Snow Hill Station because its location is the nearest railroad point to (old) Snow Hill and one mile west of the point that formerly went by that name.

Springboro.—Curtis Beals, proprietor. Location, southeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 29, township 19, range 14, between Bloomingsport and Winchester, northwest of Lynn four miles (supposed to be Joseph Gess); twenty-eight lots; recorded February 15, 1834; town extinct.

West Lynn.—On the railroad west of Lynn. Benjamin Hunt, proprietor; seventy-four lots. The town was laid out in 1873 by Benjamin Hunt on the Richmond railroad, half a mile west of Old Lynn. There is but little growth at the new station, the business, of which there is considerable, clinging with much tenacity to the old town.

BIOGRAPHY.

James Abshire was born August 1, 1777; came to the West early; was in the Indian wars, being once three days without food except black-haws; settled in Randolph county, northwest of Cherry Grove meeting-house in about 1821, and resided there till his death in 1868, a very aged man, ninety-one years old. He had a large family some of whom and among them two of his sons, Isaac and Berry, are still living in the same neighborhood. [1882.]

James Abshire was in pioneer days a famous hunter and in later life he delighted greatly in recounting his adventures with the wild creatures of the forest. Once in hunting near a pond, he heard some animal rustling among the bushes. Watching for the creature, as he sat there rifle in hand, out peered the head of the beast, when lo! it was a bear. A bullet from the trusty weapon suddenly put an end to the life of the savage monster and added one more trophy to those already gained by the veteran hunter. His acquaintance with the woods was thorough and extensive and he knew the haunts of every herd of hogs in the region and when a settler wished to find his porkers all he had to do was to go and ask old Father Abshire and the locality would be pointed out at once, or the stalwart hunter would set out as a guide to the identical spot where that particular herd had its habitat and its lodging-place.

Mr. Abshire spent his youth among the Blue Ridge mountains in Virginia. At the age of twenty-three he married Elizabeth Overholtz. Soon afterward he emigrated to Preble county, Ohio, his goods being brought through the forests in a one-horse wagon. October 8, 1812, he enlisted in the United States army under Capt. Richard Sloan, Sixth Regiment, Fifth Brigade, First Division Ohio militia. They were stationed on the frontier at Fort Nesbitt, in the vicinity of Eaton, Preble county. He served till April 8, 1813. Once, while on a scout, he was lost and lived on nothing but blackhaws for three days.

In the winter of 1821, he moved with his family to Randolph county, settling one mile northwest of Lynn on the west side of Mud creek where stood a dwelling having neither floor, windows nor doors. Arriving in the night, during a severe snow-storm, they built huge fires and camped out. The next day the house was made habitable and they took possession of their domicile. In the spring they made their clearing and before long set out an orchard which is living yet. In 1828 he moved to the farm upon which his residence continued till his death, in 1868, at the ripe age of ninety-one years. His children were eight—Aaron, Nancy, Mary, Chloe, Isaac, Abner, Elizabeth, James B.

Travis Adcock, south of Lynn, east of the Johnson schoolhouse entered the first piece of land in that region in May, 1814, shortly after Thomas Parker came into the woods west of Arba; but when Adcock moved to that wilderness we do not know. He may have come the first on Greensfork. He was one of the first jurymen (in 1818). He had his name changed, for some reason, from Adcock to Emery.

James Barnes was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1817; came to Randolph county in 1841; married Harriet Mullen in 1838; has had eleven children. His father was John Barnes, who came to Wayne county near Randolph line in the spring of 1817.

William Barnes was born in 1815, in North Carolina. He came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1817. He married Sarah Hogston in 1834 and moved to Randolph county in 1837, first to Greensfork township and then to Washington township. They had six children living. He was a farmer, a Methodist and a Democrat.

Joseph Baxter was born in 1787 in Pennsylvania; came to Ohio and in 1824 to Randolph county, near Rural. He married Sarah Pegg in 1829. They had six children. Joseph Baxter, Sr., died in 1863, seventy-six years old. He was a Democrat in politics. Mrs. Baxter's father, John Pegg, entered land in Randolph county, November 7, 1816, and probably moved here about that time. The entries do not always, however, determine the time of settlement. The entry was made sometimes months, possibly years before, and sometimes not till months or even years after the settlement; and not seldom it was the case that the person who made the entry never effected a settlement at all.

Paul Beard, Jr., was born in North Carolina in 1812, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1817. He was the son of Dr. Paul Beard who emigrated to this county at that time and entered land near Lynn meeting-house. Paul Beard, Jr., married Mary Cox in 1833. They had nine children. Their names are Levi, Ezra, Ann, Asa, Eunice, Louisa, Lindley, Ruth, Henry. Lindley joined the Sixtieth Indiana Regiment in his eighteenth year. Mr. Beard was an elder in the Society of Friends and a Republican. His wife was also an elder. They resided on the farm entered by Paul Beard, Sr., near Lynn meeting-house for Friends.

Benjamin Bond was born in North Carolina in 1797; came to Wayne county, in 1811; married Ellen Goldsmith in 1827; she taught the first school in Milton, Wayne county, Indiana. They have had nine children, all sons; six lived to be grown and all the six were soldiers in the Union army in the war of 1861. Samson was in a Minnesota regiment and was discharged for disability. Hezekiah was in the First Minnesota and died in Salisbury prison. Benjamin was in the Eighth Indiana and in the Third Cavalry; died in five months in the service. Pelatiah was a member of the Eighth Indiana (three months), and in the Forty-first Indiana; served three years and one month. Daniel was in the First Minnesota and served in the Eastern army; was captured at Petersburg in 1864 and spent many sad and weary months in various prisons—Libby, Andersonville, etc.—escaping at last from the guard upon a march from one prison to another; he served four years in all. Edward, in the First Minnesota Heavy Artillery, served nine months.

Daniel Bond, brother of Pelatiah, was an enterprising and successful teacher. He taught three years at Spartanburg, several years in Westfield, Hamilton county, besides other places.

Benjamin Bond came to Randolph county in 1834; entered forty acres of land on Sparrow creek; moved afterward to Washington township in 1837, and to Minnesota in 1854, returning to his old farm in Randolph county in 1857.

We here give reminiscences of Curtis Clenney, read at Old Settlers' meeting, June, 1868:

"I was born in Orange county, North Carolina, in 1783, and am now more than eighty-five years old. I was shifted from place to place when I was a child and got no learning. I determined to leave Carolina and came to Elkhorn, in Ohio, near Westville, six miles from Richmond, Indiana, in 1803. In 1812 I volunteered in the United States army. We set out for Detroit but the march was countermanded between Dayton and Piqua and we were ordered back to the frontier. Our regiment was stationed at Whitehead, two miles above Williamsburg, Wayne county, Indiana. We had to scout all the time but were in no battle. I was up Greensfork to the Beard settlement. A deer-lick was found on Paul Beard's land and I have often shot deer there. I was a soldier three months and twenty days and was honorably discharged. I bought my land February 13, 1817, before Randolph was a county."

[NOTE.—The tract book gives Curtis Clenney's entry as being January 17, 1815; two years before he dates the transaction himself and before Indiana became a state. One would suppose Mr. Clenney would be correct. Perhaps he is, but the figures are as here stated.]

"The first year I packed my meat thirty miles on my back. Breadstuff was scarce enough. Salt was $4.00 a bushel and wet at that. I could tell many hardships but I forbear. Most of the pioneers are gone. Ten years may perhaps see the last aged head laid low in death and behold the last pioneer pass on to his reward. May God prepare us for His glorious rest! Amen!"

[Mr. Clenney himself was summoned home not very long after this was written by his trembling hand.]

Mr. Clenney was born in North Carolina in 1783; came to Westville, Ohio, in 1803; entered the United States army in 1812; served three months and twenty days and was honorably discharged; entered his land southeast of Lynn, January 17, 1815, and moved to it soon afterward. Twelve children were born to them, ten of whom grew to manhood. He remained among men, indeed, to a ripe old age, even to fourscore years and ten. Mr. Clenney was a Baptist, belonging to the Concord church of that faith in Wayne county.

W. A. W. Daly, ex-sheriff of Randolph county, Indiana, was born in 1833, in Preble county, Ohio; came to Randolph county in 1843; joined Company B, Ninetieth Indiana Regiment (Fifth Indiana Cavalry), enlisting August 25, 1862; was captured July 31, 1864, released March, 1865, and mustered out in June, 1865. He married Mary Hinshaw in 1857; has had nine children. He held the office of sheriff of Randolph county for four years (1874-78), discharging the duties of his position with honor to himself and to the satisfaction of the community.

James Frazier came from North Carolina to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1811 and to Randolph county in 1817, settling one mile east of Lynn. He entered 160 acres of land at Cincinnati. His wife's maiden name was Susanna Stanley. She was born in North Carolina in 1767 and he in 1772. He died in 1822, about five years after coming here. They had ten children, all of whom were born before Mr. Frazier came to Randolph and seven of whom came with their father to the county.

Jacob A. Hinshaw came with his mother, Phebe Hinshaw, to Washington, south of Lynn in 1832. She entered land where Jacob A. Hinshaw lived. J. A. Hinshaw married Peninnah Scott in 1845 and had eleven children. He was raised a Friend but afterward joined the Methodists.

Joshua M. Johnson was born in 1831, in Randolph county; married Amanda Pegg, daughter of Reuben Pegg and had thirteen children. He is a blacksmith and a farmer. He was postmaster twenty-seven years. Two of his brothers are New-Light preachers—George and Isaac.

Mrs. Gray, of Buena Vista, has been the mother of seventeen children by two marriages.

Ruth (Moody) Johnson was the wife of William Johnson, of Johnson's Station. She was a recorded minister among Friends after about 1858. She traveled through Ohio and Iowa and elsewhere as a preacher. In 1862 she pursued her work of faith and patience throughout seventeen counties in Iowa, mostly among Friends and she was everywhere received with kindness and in Christian love.

Isaac Moody was born in Grayson county, Virginia, in 1790; came to Ohio in 1814; married Mary Heaston, from Pennsylvania, in 1823; emigrated to Randolph county in the same year and settled near Lynn, east of James Frazier's. He had only two children and was a "Body Friend." He was in early times a Whig and in later years a Republican. He lived a farmer and died in 1865.

Samuel Moody was the father of Isaac Moody and the grandfather of Ruth (Moody) Johnson. He was born about 1760, in Pennsylvania (or Virginia). His father came from Ireland. Samuel Moody came to Ohio in 1814 and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1821, near Lynn. His first wife was Jane Cox and his second wife was Jane Cadwallader. He had four children; was a Friend and a farmer. He died in Ohio in 1825, about sixty-five years old.

John Moorman was born in Richmond county, North Carolina, March 23, 1760; married Rebecca Diggs about 1783 and came to Randolph county, in 1816. They had ten children.

John Moorman, Jr., son of John Moorman, Sr., was born in Carolina in 1807 and was brought to Randolph county, Indiana, by his father, in 1816. He married Agatha Butler and they had two children. He died in 1866, aged fifty-nine years and she died in 1875, at the age of sixty-two years.

Henry D. Nichols, Lynn, was born in Randolph county, in 1832, in Greensfork township; married Elizabeth Gray in 1854; had eleven children.

He moved to Lynn in 1864 and lived there mostly ever since as farmer, carpenter, merchant, clerk, boarding-house keeper, hotel keeper, etc.

Thomas Phillips came in 1821, being born in about 1790; he died in 1872, about eighty-two years old; he was an intelligent and enterprising citizen, an enthusiastic Republican, an ardent Methodist and a friend of every good work.

Isaiah Rogers, Bloomingsport, was an early settler, coming from New Jersey to Randolph county in 1821 or 1822.

The Thornburgs, of Washington.—The Thornburgs have been and still are numerous in Randolph county. A strong branch of the family settled in Stoney Creek township and another in Washington. Those who resided in the latter township in pioneer times were Nathan, Edward and Isaac. Nathan had four children—Isaac, Jesse, Nathan and Ann. The Thornburgs there were all Friends and went with the anti-slavery branch in the "Separation" of 1843.

William Engle, a farmer and dealer in real estate, was born in Burlington county, New Jersey, December 13, 1811. He is the son of Isaac and Sarah (Price) Engle, and is the ninth of a family of eleven children. His father was the son of Robert and Jane Engle and was born in New Jersey, March 15, 1773. His mother was the daughter of Thomas and Hannah Price and was born in New Jersey, March 17, 1774. His parents moved to Warren county, Ohio, in the year 1825, where they remained until their deaths.

Mr. and Mrs. Engle were the parents of twelve children: Isaac, born December 11, 1834; Wesley H., April 21, 1836; Robert, September 21, 1837; Elias, December 9, 1838; Calvin S., September 9, 1844; James S., September 13, 1846; Daniel H., May 11, 1849; Albert, May 26, 1851; Price, October 5, 1852; Josiah, born October 30, 1854; William, born December 13, 1841, was wounded at the battle of Pittsburg Landing and died in the hospital at St. Louis, May 2, 1862. Samuel R., was born March 22, 1843, and died June 26, 1845.

Moses Lasley was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, April 1, 1810. He is the son of Peter Lasley, who was born in Pennsylvania; his mother, Christina (Carnes) Lasley, was a native of Maryland. Mr. Lasley, with his parents, settled in this county in 1819. He was married March 28, 1833, to Margaret Johnson who was born in Virginia August 12, 1812.; her father, Henry, and mother, Agnes (Umphres) Johnson, were natives of Virginia. They have had born to them four children.

Other prominent men of the early period of Washington township were: Isaac N. Bales, James Barnes, W. R. Coggeshall, William Engle, Silas Hinshaw, John Hinshaw, Jonathan O. Lane, Moses Lasley, Benjamin Miller, John Miller, Joel Mills, Henry Oyler, Jabez Ozbun, John Price, James Price, Abraham Sheely, Benjamin Smith, Obadiah Stilwell and many others.

Greensfork Township.—Greensfork is bounded north by Wayne and White River, east by Ohio, south by Wayne county and west by Washington. It was first settled in April, 1814, and, with White River, first created in 1818. Its size as it now exists is about forty-seven sections, seven miles north and south and six and a half miles from east to west, besides the "pocket." It includes the head-waters of Nolan's and Green's Forks, of Greenville creek, and a little of the head of Dismal creek. The land was originally heavily timbered, but farms now cover it everywhere, only forest enough being left for farm use.

The first settler was Thomas W. Parker, April, 1814, on fractional section 32, town 16. Other settlers in 1814, so far as now known, were: John W. Thomas, summer of 1814, entered land July 21, 1814; Clarkson Willcutts, Ephraim Bowen, Ephraim Overman, James Cammack, Eli Overman, Jesse Small, John Peelle, Obadiah Small, John Small had the Thomas Hough place north of Spartanburg, 1815. John Cammack, near Arba, came in 1816. John James settled between 1816 and 1818. Reuben Clark settled near the toll-gate, north of Arba, in 1819. John Mann moved to near Gilead in 1820. Thornton Alexander (colored), northeast of Spartanburg, 1822. David Semans, Windsor Wiggs, Sr., William Locke purchased the Dan Comer place north of Spartanburg in 1828. Stephen Barnes, various places, 1830; F. G. Morgan, Thomas Middleton, Joseph Shaw, Abner Cadwallader, Thomas Cadwallader, John Randle, Harrison Anderson, J. W. Clark, W. Taylor, west of Spartanburg, 1836. In 1828 there were near Spartanburg as follows: David Bowles, Willson Anderson place; George Bowles, widow Moore place; Henry Bailey, on the McKim place; Stanton Bailey, Moorman farm; Cornelius Overman, Crist farm; William Osborn, Ben Elliot farm; Philip Hockett had lived on the Sam Middleton place; Richard Corbett, on his old place; widow Small, Hough place; James Jackson's place had been settled; William Arnold, Frederick Fulghum. The above account is as full as it can now be made, but of course there were many more.

The "Quaker Trace" was cut through in 1817.

The entries of land, as given in the records, are chiefly as follows, up to 1829 inclusive: Clarkson Wilcutts, S. E. 28, 16, 1 W., January 19, 1814; James Cammack, east half section —, 16, 1 W., 323.16, January 22, 1814;

Ephraim Bowen, N. E. 28, 16, 1 W., 160, April 13, 1814; John Thomas, N. W. 33, 16, 1 W., 156.58 July 21, 1814; Thomas W. Parker, 32, 16, 1 (fraction), 156.88, August 16, 1814; Ephraim Overman, N. W. 27, 16, 1, 159.50, 1814; Eli Overman, S. E. 33, 16, 1, 156.58, December 13, 1814; Nathan Overman, S. W. 27, 16, 1, 159.50, September 13, 1815; Samuel Mann, Section 29, 16, 1, 349.28, June 28, 1816; David Kenworthy, S. E. 2, 18, 14 east, 160, November 2, 1816; James Frazier, N. E. 2, 18, 14 east, 160, November 23, 1816; Ephraim Overman, N. W. 14, 16, 1, 159.90, November 29, 1816; Absalom Thomas, S. E. 27, 16, 1, 159.50, January 21, 1817; Henry Bailey, S. W. 34, 16, 1, 161.50, August 14, 1817; Obadiah Small, east half 10, 16, 1, 77.26, September 17, 1817; Rice Price, Section 18, 16, 1, 380.88, November 14, 1817; Pleasant Winton, S. Many of the sections are fractional, since the old boundary intersects the townships in angular direction from north to south, and fractions are formed on both sides of the boundary line. The surveys both west and east from the meridians each way are made to the boundary. There are about forty-seven square miles and about thirty thousand acres in the whole township. The entries in succeeding years were more rapid, since, by 1840, nearly the whole county had been taken up.

Greensfork is occupied by a population largely noted for industry and thrift, for quiet, peaceable habits and general morality and good order. For many years no intoxicating drinks have been sold openly within its limits. Its schools maintain a high grade of excellence and it has an unusual proporton of churches and church members. There are at least seven churches in the township, occupied by the various denominations. The churches are Friends, at Arba and Brown; Methodist Episcopal, at Spartanburg; Disciples, at Spartanburg and Gilead; United Brethren, at Pinhook and in the west part of the township. Two of the schools of Greensfork are of a superior grade—the township school at Spartanburg and the Union Literary Institute at Edgewood in the east part of the township. Greensfork was entered between 1814 and 1839, inclusive. First settlement was made in Greensfork; first entry occurred in Wayne.

TOWNS.

Arba.—Henry Cammack, proprietor; recorded October 30, 1855; fourteen lots. The town must have been greatly enlarged since its first platting, since the dwellings extend a long distance on both sides of the pike running through the place, there being probably thirty or forty residences within the limits of the village. It is in the southern part of the township. William Fulghum had the first store. Noah Turner had the first smith shop; Isaac Parker had a wagon shop; William Parker had a harness shop after awhile. Friends' meeting-house (a pole cabin) was built in 1815, about forty years before the town began. The first grist-mill was established by Parker & Wright. They owned a saw-mill also. The first meeting-house in the county was at Arba—built by Friends. The first school was taught in that house by Eli Overman. The earliest settlement in the county was in the region around this town and a splendid region it is, truly. The country is rich, the farmers are wealthy. The dwellings are neat and many of them elegant; the society is good and the general tone of morals and manners is of a high character. The place has always been noted, in fact, for its strict standard of temperance and sobriety. The region was settled largely by Methodists and Friends; and their teachings and practice have maintained a superior standard of intelligence, morality and thrift.

Newburg (Spartanburg)—William McKim, proprietor; location, section 10, township 16, range 1, on the "Quaker Trace," Moorman Way, county surveyor; twenty lots. Streets: North and south, Main street, four poles wide; east and west, street three poles wide. Plat made 1832; recorded February 18, 1833.

Spartanburg (includes the above)—William McKim, proprietor; fifty-five lots. Streets: North and south, Mill, Main, Sycamore; east and west, First, Second; recorded October 28, 1834.

McKim's First Addition.—William McKim, proprietor; seven lots; recorded November 17, 1848. The town is located on section 10, on the old "Quaker Trace," four miles north of Arba and three and nine-tenths miles south of Bartonia, on the Arba pike. It was laid out in 1832 by William McKim. Of course, everything was new, and the whole country was "in the woods." Most of the houses were cabins and all was rough and primitive. Spartanburg has grown from a "huddle," with a few log cabins among the beech trees to a thriving country village in the midst of a beautiful, fertile and highly improved region. The town stands on a fine rising ground, overlooking a splendid country. The school building is a two-story brick, suitable for a township high school, with ten fine schoolrooms, two recitation rooms, etc. Two Sunday schools are in operation and regular religious services in each of the churches. An Odd Fellows lodge and a Knights of Pythias lodge are in the village. A large trade is carried on in hogs, grain, flaxseed, wagons, reapers, plows, etc. No saloon has existed in the place for years.

Altogether, Spartanburg is a fine little town. When first laid out, the name of the place was Newburg but for some reason it was changed to Spartanburg. It is one of the few interior villages in Randolph which is having a vigorous and solid growth. There is one hotel, two churches, a graded school, one smith shop, one wagon shop, three stores and bank and a brisk business is maintained.

BIOGRAPHY.

Such biographies as belong to Greensfork and are not arranged under other heads are given below in alphabetical order:

Nathan Arnold was born in North Carolina in 1783; married Elizabeth Horn, daughter of Jeremiah Horn, in North Carolina, in 1804, and died in the same state in 1826.

Elizabeth Arnold, widow of Nathan Arnold, was born in North Carolina in 1785; came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1827, and afterward to Randolph. She had eleven children. Seven came with their mother. She died October 28, 1851, aged sixty-six years. Mrs. Arnold belonged to the Friends.

Stephen Barnes was born in Johnson county, North Carolina, in 1793, and his wife, Cidna, in 1790. They had seven children, all born in Carolina, their names being Rebecca, Abington, Maria, Samuel Allison, Sarah, Henry, Adolphus. All are dead. The family left North Carolina in 1828 and came to Wayne county, Indiana, two and a half miles south of Bloomingsport, and in 1830, into Randolph county. In 1833 they settled at Spartanburg. Here Mrs. Barnes died in 1854 and her husband in 1864.

Ephraim Bowen, Sr., was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, October 22, 1769; emigrated to Mason county, Kentucky; married Hannah Hall in that state; came to Greene county, Ohio, in 1795, seven years before Ohio became a member of the Union, and arrived at Randolph county, October 22, 1814, the day he was forty-five years old. He was the fourth settler in the wilds of Randolph. He brought six children with him and two were born afterward, making eight in all. The children were Nancy, James C., Jane, Squire, Rebecca, Hannah, born before coming to Randolph; and Rachel and Ephraim L., born in this county. Nancy, born in 1799, married Robert Thomson; had six children; James C., born in 1801, fourteen children; Jane, 1803, married Joshua Small, several children; Squire, 1805, thirteen children; Rebecca, 1807, fourteen children, married David Semans; Hannah married James Harrison, five children; Rachel married William Davis, several children; Ephraim L., twice married—Ruth Dwiggins, Anna Jane Corbett, eight children.

Ephraim Bowen entered the northeast quarter of section 28, township 16, range 1. He was perhaps the first justice in Greensfork. He died in 1858, at eighty-nine and his wife in 1849.

James C. Bowen, Greensfork, son of Ephraim Bowen, was born in Greene county, Ohio, in 1801, and came to Randolph county, in 1814, being thirteen years old. He grew up in the woods and married Elizabeth Jeffrey in 1829. They have had fourteen children.

James C. Bowen's wife died in 1879, sixty-eight years old. He was justice of the peace nine years. He was Methodist in religion and a Democrat in politics. He lived within half a mile of the spot where his father settled in the forest.

Many curious things are told by Mr. Bowen, Mr. Parker and other pioneers, many of which have been already given and many more might be related. In the pole cabin meeting-house at Arba there was no place made for fire. They would burn wood into coals in a heap outside the cabin and then carry a mass of coals into the house upon a kind of hand-barrow, partly covered with dirt. Thomas Parker used to care for the house and burn the wood into coals and when Friends had come to meeting, they would help carry the "fire-place" inside the house, laden with a mass of living fire.

In early times, there was a distillery above Arba, south of William Horn's. It was owned by Elihu Cammack's uncle, Amos (Cammack). Considerable whisky was drank at gatherings and as a natural result many got "groggy" by its use.

In the pigeon roosts, one locality of which was near Spartanburg, the trees were loaded with nests, built of sticks, somewhat like baskets swung to a limb, the inside being beautifully lined with soft and tender moss.

Pigeons would live on mast and hogs also would keep fat nearly the year round, during the fall and winter upon the mast and in the summer upon wild pea vines which grew two or three feet high, and as thick as thick clover. Hogs would run in the woods and grow wild. The old ones would be marked and then the whole drove running with these old ones would be claimed by the same owner. But where none in a herd were marked the herd belonged to nobody and any person might kill such. They would fatten themselves wholly without corn and entirely upon oak, hickory and beech mast.

Thomas Cadwallader was born in 1795 and came to Greensfork township, Randolph county, about 1830, in company with his brother Abner, settling in the woods. Abner died many years ago but Thomas lived on, a steady, quiet, humble, thankful life for fifty-two years, upon his little farm where first he pitched his tent under the "shadow of the beeches." He was all his life a member of the Society of Friends belonging at Arba. He departed this life at his residence near Arba, Sunday, April 23, 1882, in his eighty-seventh year. The funeral services were held at the Arba Friends' meeting-house on Tuesday following his death. They were in the simple and impressive style common among the Quakers. His aged companion survived him. They had been married nearly or quite sixty-five years. He was born during the second term of Washington's administration and was old enough to vote for James Monroe at his first election. His birth occurred the same year with Wayne's treaty with the Indians at Fort Greenville, Ohio, 1795, so that his life measures the whole interval since the power of the savage tribes over the great Western valley was broken by the master hand of Gen. Anthony Wayne.

Mr. Cadwallader lived all that long earthly life in the fear and love of God and his happy spirit rests, doubtless in the heavenly mansions. His brother Abner, father of Hon. Nathan Cadwallader, of Winchester, came as stated above with his brother Thomas, but did not very long survive, dying in middle life.

John Cammack, Arba, was born in South Carolina; moved to Randolph county, in the fall of 1816, one-half mile west of Arba. He died in 1832, having had twelve children; seven were boys and five were girls.

William Mitchell Campbell, stock-buyer and farmer, was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1818; married Mary Ann Rude in 1840; removed to Middleboro, Indiana, in 1844; to Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1848; returned to Middleboro, Indiana, in 1849; changed his residence to Randolph county, one and a half miles north of Lynn, in 1850; moved to Winchester in 1856; to Greensfork township in 1860; and to Spartanburg in 1863. He has had six children. He was sheriff of Randolph county three terms. Mr. Campbell volunteered July 13, 1861, in the Nineteenth Indiana Infantry, Company C, being commissioned Second Lieutenant and receiving afterward promotion as Captain of Company I.

William T. Chenoweth, born in Maryland in 1802, came to Ohio in 1838, and to Greensfork, Randolph county, Indiana, in 1840; married Keturah B.

GREENSFORK TOWNSHIP BUILDING.

Murray in 1825; had twelve children—ten boys and two girls. He was a steady, thoughtful man, quiet, reliable, discreet, economical, enterprising and successful. In politics he was a Whig and a Republican. He was not a church member, but inclined to the Baptists. Mr. Chenoweth died in 1876, seventy-four years old.

James W. Clark, Spartanburg, was born at Fort Wayne, Indiana, in 1828. His father died in 1835 and his mother returned in 1836 to the home of her father, Hezekiah Cartwright at Spartanburg. He lived on the Frank Morgan place. Mrs. Clark went upon the Hough place. J. W. Clark was then eight years old. The village was then very small. Where the Disciple church stands was at that time a buttonwood pond, the size of a town lot. He was married in 1854, to Mary E. Moore, daughter of Elymas Moore.

Reuben Clark came from Pasquotank county, North Carolina, to Franklin county, Indiana, in 1807, nine weeks and three days on the road, coming two hundred miles to the mountains. Route, Ward's Gap, Poplar Camp, Furnace, New River, Abingdon, Wythe Court House, Crab Orchard, Nicholasville, Lexington, Nelson's Tavern, General Gaines' plantation, twenty miles from the Ohio, crossing at North Bend, near General Harrison's home. Two families came, besides two young men and an old soldier—fifteen in all. The men walked all the way, except three miles. They had two one-horse carts. Mr. Clark had nine children. He moved to Randolph county in 1819, north of Arba, near the toll-gate.

Frederic Fulghum, Arba, born in North Carolina, in 1799; married Piety Parker, sister of Thomas Parker; came to Arba in 1821; had nine children; died in 1879, aged seventy-nine years ten months and twenty days. He was a Friend, a Whig and a Republican; he left South Carolina on account of slavery, having had an estate of slaves left him by his uncle, Frederic Bunn; but he would have nothing to do with the estate, and never even went to see about it.

Orpha Griffin (widow of William Griffin) came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1830; married Job Elliot in 1836; had four children, and died in St. Joseph county, Michigan, about 1860.

Aaron Hill (son of William Hill) was born in 1810; came to Randolph county in 1823; married Piety Arnold in 1832; his first wife died in 1853, his second wife was Rachel Horner (in 1859), and she died in 1880. Mr. Hill moved to Wayne county, a short distance south of Arba. He had a saw-mill, run by water-power, and he bored a hole and fixed a box so that when the box would get full the wheel would go a little, and that would start a hominy pounder, and thus the pounder would go, by starts, all night.

When his father came to Richmond, in 1816, there was only one frame house in the place. Mr. Aaron Hill said: "The first school I ever attended was in a hewed-log cabin, at Richmond. On the north, and also on the east side, a log was left out and the opening was closed with greased paper. My father lived one year on the county line east of the toll-gate, which stands south of Arba, and after that west of Arba. Of our family of nine children, two only were born in Randolph. I was thirteen years old when my father became a pioneer in this county." He stated further: "Deer used to go in droves, ten or fifteen, or even more in a drove. They were more abundant than sheep. They had paths leading to ponds for water, and in these haunts the poor creatures were often shot by the remorseless hunter. Possums, porcupines, ground hogs, turkeys, pheasants and what not were all over the woods. Pheasants would make the forests fairly shake with the strange noises made by their "drumming" on the logs. My father had one ox and one horse, and worked them together as a team. They were very stout, pulling through the swamp and sometimes breaking a stay chain. The ox alone would pull equal to two horses, plowing roots 'like the nation.' He would plow corn and eat both rows as he went, unless he was muzzled."

William Hunt, Arba (son of Barnabas Hunt), was born in 1822, in Wayne county, Indiana; married Eda Fulghum, daughter of Frederic Fulghum, in 1843; came to Randolph county in 1844, and had eight children; was a farmer and a Friend; was a Whig, and a Republican; was an Anti-slavery man, but remained with the "body."

William M. Locke, Spartanburg, was born in 1805, in North Carolina; married Wealthy Middleton in 1827, and afterward Sarah Middleton, sisters of Thomas and Samuel Middleton; two children; Randolph county, 1828, living first on Daniel Comer's place; went back to North Carolina until 1831; then to Spartanburg 1831 to 1836.

John 'Mann, Spartanburg, was born in Pennsylvania in 1805; came to Ohio when a boy, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1820. He entered 120 acres of land lying southwest of Spartanburg, near Gilead meeting-house, walking to Cincinnati for the purpose. He was married in 1836, by James C. Bowen, justice of the peace, and had ten children. One son, Isaac, was drowned in the service during the war of the rebellion.

Samuel H. Middleton was the son of Benedict Middleton, who was born in Virginia about 1867; was a farmer; moved afterward to North Carolina; had a family of eight or ten children, and died in 1840 in Carolina, aged seventy-three years.

Seven of his children came to Indiana in early times; five of them to Randolph county, viz., Samuel H. Middleton, Thomas Middleton, Hannah (wife of William Locke), Anna (wife of John Tharpe), Ailsey (wife of Endsley Moore). The wife of Benedict Middleton was a Baptist, and died in Carolina in 1808, seventy-three years of age.

Samuel H. Middleton was born in 1794, in Virginia. He went with his father to North Carolina in 1798, and came to Richmond, Indiana, Christmas Day, 1826. They brought six children, two having died in Carolina, coming in a two-horse wagon, and were five weeks on the road. His brother, Thomas Middleton, came with him part of the way, and finished the journey by steamer down the Ohio to Cincinnati. The Middletons were of English descent. The Tharpes were of Scotch descent. The father of Jeremiah Tharpe's wife was a Quaker and a slave-holder. Near the time of the Revolution, that society became convinced that slave-holding was a sin, and they passed a resolution that their members should free their slaves or be disowned. Francis Clark, father of Mrs. Tharpe above, freed all his slaves, twenty-one in number.

Jeremiah Tharpe, father of Mrs. Samuel H. Middleton, died in Carolina in 1808, having had eight children, as follows: Eli, Jonathan, John, Jeremiah, Nancy (Kennedy), Ursula (Wheeler), Christiana (Middleton), Mildred (Thornburg). The children all became grown, and all were married. They all came to Indiana during the time from about 1812 to 1830, several of them settling in Randolph county.

Thomas Middleton was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, in 1799; he married Margaret Webb in 1825; he came to Whitewater, Indiana, in 1826, and to Randolph county in 1830. The company from Carolina consisted of four families, and they were forty-two days on their journey. The families were those of Mordecai Hiatt, Eli Kersey, Thomas Middleton and Samuel H. Middleton.

Isaac Mann came from Pennsylvania, and settled very early (perhaps in 1816) on the Harrison Anderson farm below Spartanburg. He had seven children, and died in 1847, an old man.

Malachi Nichols, Washington township; born North Carolina, 1804; came to Randolph county in 1816 (near Arba); married Sarah Mann, 1825; had ten children; died of cholera, 1849.

Ephraim Overman was the fifth settler in Greensfork township, and in Randolph county as well. He came in the fall of 1814 from Randolph county, North Carolina, and was the next settler after Ephraim Bowen. He came, probably in November, 1814, and he lived in a "camp" for some time in the fall of 1815. He had five children, all boys—Jesse, Eli, Ephraim, Silas and Reuben.

His brother, Nathan Overman, had ten children, seven sons and three daughters. Their names were Joseph, Reuben, Cornelius, Abner, Isaac, Jason, Zebulon, Mabel, Mary, Rebecca.

Jesse Parker, late of Bethel, Wayne county, is the son of Thomas and Anna Parker, and was born in Rockingham county, North Carolina, near South Carolina line, in 1807. He came with his parents to Arba, Randolph county, in April, 1814, that family being the first white settlers in Randolph county, though land had been entered in the county in 1812, some fifteen months before his settlement.

He married Phebe Puckett, daughter of Benjamin Puckett, in 1826, and they had seven children. Jesse Parker's parents died some years after their arrival in Indiana, his mother in 1823; she was the second or third person buried in the Arba graveyard.

Jesse Parker was born in North Carolina in 1766; came to Randolph county, Indiana, early; had seven children—Thomas, Joel, Piety, Eda and Jesse and two others. He died 9th, 24th, 1843, aged seventy-six years eleven months and two days.

Squire Bowen, a pioneer of Randolph county, son of Ephraim and Hannah Bowen, born in Greene county, Ohio, April 10, 1805; he was the fourth of eleven children, five of whom are still living (1882); he removed with his parents to Randolph county October 22, 1814, and settled two and one-half miles from Spartanburg, where his father entered a quarter section of land. Squire lived upon this farm for fifty-three years; here he spent the greater and best portion of his life. His mother died in 1844, and his father followed in 1858. After the death of his mother, the care of the father fell to the lot of Squire.

The boyhood of Squire was similar to that of the sons of most pioneers. At the time Squire's father settled in this county, there were only eleven white people living in the territory of which the county was subsequently formed. Having no neighbors but the uncivilized Indians, they were thrown upon their own resources to clear a homestead from the unbroken forest. All of the products of the farm that were not used for home consumption were marketed at Fort Wayne, a distance of about ninety miles. The only means of conveyance was by wagon drawn by oxen. They were compelled to cut their own road through the dense wilderness. It required from sixteen to twenty days to make the trip and return. All of this work fell principally to the lot of the subject of this sketch.

Notwithstanding the almost entire absence of schools, Mr. Bowen, by dint of his own efforts, with the assistance of a very brief attendance at school in Greene county, Ohio, and at Arba, this county, in the old log pioneer school house, used as a Friends meeting-house, he obtained a fair common school education.

He was married to Elizabeth Dwiggins, of Wayne county, August 13, 1829.

James Dwiggins Bowen, son of Squire and Elizabeth Bowen, was born in Greensfork township, Randolph county, December 23, 1832; he was raised on the farm entered by his grandfather, Ephraim Bowen, in 1814, of which he became owner and proprietor; his farm consists of 200 acres, of which 140 acres are in a high state of cultivation. His boyhood was quiet and uneventful, spending the greater part of his time in cultivating the farm; his education was limited to the common district schools, with the exception of one term at a commercial school at Indianapolis in 1855. He was enrolling officer of his township during the war, an appointment from the government; he made three trips to the front to look after the sick and wounded soldiers from his district. He was married to Mary E. Chenoweth, daughter of John B. and Sarah B. Chenoweth, of Carroll county, Maryland, September 13, 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Bowen had a family of nine children, three boys and six girls.

Ephraim L. Bowen is a native of Randolph county, Indiana; he was born at the family homestead in Greensfork township on the 20th of March, 1819; his father, Ephraim Bowen, was one of the first white men who located in Randolph county, and bore a prominent and active part in its development and improvement. He remained at home assisting his father until twenty years of age, and was then united in marriage with Miss Ruth Dwiggins, a native of Wayne county, Indiana. He then began farming for himself in Greensfork township.

Within twenty years after his marriage, death bereaved him of the companionship of the wife, whose love had stimulated his youthful labors in the felling of the forest and the "making" of a farm; whose words of cheer had revived his drooping spirits at the end of days of weary toil, and whose careful economy had materially promoted his temporal success. She died on August 5, 1858. Eight children had been born to them, two of whom preceded their mother to the grave. Six survived her, viz., James H., Elizabeth A., Hannah L., Mary E., Jennie and Squire C., all of whom grew to maturity and were married. James H. died September 12, 1874; Mary E. died May 12, 1876, and Jennie died July 1, 1877. Mr. Bowen was a second time united in the bonds of matrimony, choosing for his companion Mrs. Anna J. Corbett, daughter of John and Mildred Thornburg. She was born December 16, 1827, in North Carolina, and came to Randolph county with her parents when a child.

Charles Crist is a resident of Greensfork township. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1801; his father moved to Maryland in 1814, and he lived there till he was grown. He married Mary Flatters in Maryland in 1831. She was born in 1809. They moved from thence to Marion county, Ohio, in 1831; thence to Hancock county, Ohio, in 1834, and to Darke county, Ohio, in 1847, and finally to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1854.

Hugh Gard, farmer, was born in Preble county, Ohio, March 12, 1820, is the son of Lot and Ann (Vance) Gard, who were natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. Gard became a resident of this state when quite young, remaining until 1860, when he returned to his native state. The event of his marriage took place February 11, 1862, to Sarah Dunn, who was born in Pennsylvania September 12, 1830. Her parents, Joseph and Debra (Evans) Dunn, were natives of Pennsylvania, the former born September 30, 1792, and the latter March 2, 1795.

John C. Ruby, farmer, postoffice Spartanburg, son of Samuel F. and Jane Ruby. They were married in Darke county, Ohio, September 15, 1836. Father was born in Kentucky April 27, 1812; came with his parents to Union county, Indiana. Afterward studied medicine with his brother, James, at Bethel, Wayne county, Indiana, and became a very successful physician.

Other prominent pioneers of Greensfork township were Joseph Shaw, John H. Taylor, Luther Tillson, James Armstrong, Archibald Armstrong, Frederic Fulghum, Henry Hawkins, Adam R. Hiatt, Samuel G. Hill, Henry W. Horn, Emsley Jackson, John W. Jackson, James M. Jackson, John W. Jackson, Robert Jordan, Samuel Kessler, Samuel L. Jennings, Joseph Shaw, Levi J. Linzey, George W. Mann, James St. Myers, Reuben Randall, James B. Rubey, William Sasser, William Slick, Joseph H. Thorp, P. M. B. Thompson.

West River Township.—Its boundaries at present are as follows: North by White river and Stoney creek, east by Washington, south by Wayne county, west by Nettle creek and Stoney creek.

West River township was laid off in May, 1831, then comprising all west of Huntsville and eight miles north and south, taking the whole southwestern portion of the county, and by several changes became what it now is. Its extent is forty square miles, eight miles north and south, and five miles east and west. The township takes in West River valley (so far as it lies in Randolph county), as also the headwaters of Martindale creek, running southward into White Water and of Cabin creek, flowing northward into White river.

The region is rich and beautiful, the surface is rolling and the scenery picturesque; the country is capable of a high cultivation. tI was settled as early as 1816, and perhaps even sooner than that. Hugh Botkin entered the township in 1816, settling southeast of Huntsville. When he came he found already here several settlers, the exact date of whose arrival, however, is not known. Among them were these: Mr. Odle, one mile south of Botkin's; Joshua Wright, one-half mile south of Botkin's; Jesse Cox; Jonah Heaton, three miles northwest of Huntsville. Seven entries had been made in 1815, and three were made in 1816. Mr. Botkin effected his entry of land September 29, 1817, and before his had been sixteen entries. Joshua Wright (probably with his brother James) purchased his tract nine days before, and Jesse Cox seventeen days after Mr. Botkin. The other names (except Jonah Heaton's), do not appear at all as patentees. They were either "squatters" or lived on land entered by some one else. Jonah Heaton "entered" in 1819. William M. Botkin said that in 1817 there came to the region several settlers, viz., Joshua Ballinger, Samuel Jackson, Valentine Gibson, William Gibson, Joseph Hollingsworth (bought out Mr. Odle), William Peacock (afterward associate judge). Most of these names stand among the list of entries, some of them, however, not till the lapse of several years. William Smith came upon West river somewhere west of Botkin's, near the "boundary," August, 1817, and Jeremiah Smith said that the following were in the neighborhood when his father moved into the county.

William Blount and his two sons-in-law, John Proctor, Evan Shoemaker, John Jordan, Arny Hall, Thomas Brown, John Gwynn, James Malcom, Samuel Sales, David Jones, Isaac Barnes, came in 1818, as did also John E. Hodges, William Hunt and Frederick Zimmerman. Few of them appear as patentees. Evan Shoemaker lived on the tract east of the "boundary," and just across from the Mount Pleasant Methodist meeting-house. Mr. Zimmerman bought out the Blount place, and resided there till he died, and his daughter Anna (widow of John Retz) occupied it until her death. All of these except two were located on Sections 7, 8, 17 and 18, township 18, range 13, in West River Valley. Those near Hugh Botkin's were farther east. William Blount made the first entry in the township, in section 8, now the Retz homestead farm, April 10, 1815. Hodge and Barnes made their entry in July, 1815. They did not move to their land till 1818. Mr. Smith stated that they came out from Pennsylvania and made their purchases, and returned to the east, coming back to settle in 1818. Moses Martindale was unquestionably a very early settler, among the first, if not the very first, in the region. He made his first entry September 2, 1817, the extreme southeastern corner of what is now West River township. In two weeks' time he took up another tract, E. ½ S. W. ¼ 11, 18, 13, on the headwaters of the stream which gained the name (doubtless from him as the first settler upon its banks) of Martindale creek. These entries of Martindale's were south and southeast of Botkin's, and near the other settlers in that vicinity. Of course, others also had found their way into the wild woods, but we have not been able to trace them.

The Congressional townships, with the sections, have already been named. The number of acres in West River township is about twenty-five thousand six hundred.

The entries by years have been as below: 1815, seven entries, 1,230.68 acres; 1816, three entries, 400 acres; 1817, twelve entries, 1,831.98 acres; 1818, nine entries, 1,440 acres; 1819, eight entries, 826.44 acres; 1820, no entries; 1821, one entry, 80 acres; 1822, four entries, 322.96 acres; 1823, one entry, 159.37 acres; 1825, no entry; 1825, three entries, 228.97 acres; 1826, one entry, 80 acres; 1827, one entry, 80 acres; 1828, four entries, 405.20 acres; 1829, four entries, 331.88; total entries, 58; total acres, 7,417.48; being an average of 128 acres per entry. The amount as above comprises about one-fourth of the land in the township.

The "new boundary" passes through the western part of the township in an angular direction, yet the sections are not fractional, since the survey is reckoned from the second meridian. The meridian and the base line were located and the range lines estimated, and then the land east of the "new boundary" was surveyed first, and, in process of time, that west of the twelve-mile strip was surveyed also.

FIRST THINGS.

We have been able to trace but few "first things" for West River township. The beginning and progress of religious work may be seen in the detailed statement for the churches.

The mills were mostly in other portions of the county, and West river was not much of a mill stream near its upper course, and these settlers went chiefly down into Wayne county to find milling facilities already in operation. William Smith is said to have started a mill of some kind, but whether by horse or water power we cannot state. He was a blacksmith as well as a farmer, and one of the earliest things he did was to put up a shop in which to work at his trade. These smith shops were scattered over the county at various points, though we can name but few. Richard Robbins had one farther north in Stoney creek; James Frazier and his son Francis after him worked as a smith east of Lynn. The Fraziers were of a superior sort, being bell-makers as well as smiths.

Several families of Hunts came into that locality from Kentucky—shrewd, energetic, upright people, who have left their mark, and many of their posterity also in this region. Most or all of them were Methodists, and one at least was a preacher, Rev. William Hunt, or "Old Billy Hunt," as he was familiarly called, for many years until his death long ago. Coming from Kentucky as they did, and belonging to the well-to-do classes, it was but natural that they should oppose the Abolitionists, which most of them did with a hearty good will for years during the early days of that struggle. The logic of events, however, is its own teacher, and most of their descendants of the present day are, like the mass of Randolph citizens, stalwart Republicans.

West River township, as also Nettle Creek, was in 1824 the scene of a most terrific tornado, which tore and twisted the giant forest trees for miles into inextricable confusion. This immense mass of timber lay for a decade or less upon the surface of the ground, and presented a literally impassable barrier. The fallen timber furnished in fact abundant opportunities for concealment, and in some cases fugitive slaves hid themselves in its coverts from their pursuers. In one instance, a man-hunter, baffled of his prey by this impregnable refuge, asked one of the old Abolitionists how far the fallen timber reached. The strudy pioneer, determined to keep the truth on his side and to mystify his questioner, replied: "Four or five miles west, and how far into Ohio I never heard." The fact hidden beneath this verbiage was that the fallen timber extended perhaps a mile east, and to the Ohio line was fifteen or twenty miles. But the slave-catcher never got any runaways out from that awful tangled, twisted, piled-up mass of tree trunks and brush and fresh-grown shrubs, all heaped into one vast untraceable labyrinth.

This same gang of man-hunters (for there were several) threatened to come and clean out that terrible place. "Do," was the reply; "we wish you would; it ought to be away, but none here has ever had the courage to begin the work." The villains swore awhile and cursed the Abolitionists and then they let the fallen timber stay where it was, as other people before them had done. The jungle is said moreover to have been employed also as a den for a gang of robbers and counterfeiters, whose operations caused much trouble, some arrests and several trials in the attempt to rout the pestilent gang from the county.

One party is stated to have been in so desperate a pinch upon trial for passing counterfeit money, that, on asking to let him see the bill a moment, it was handed to him, when lo, quick as a flash, he swallowed the bank note, and the case against him had to be dropped, for the evidence had gone down his throat. Upon the court record the name of this very man appears coupled with a criminal charge, and upon that entry Mr. Smith makes substantially this comment: "Here is the first appearance of this name in the court records of Randolph, but not by any means the last, for it adorns (or otherwise) these pages off and on for at least twenty-five years to come."

Some old men tell tales, not needful to repeat at length, of charges and arrests and attempts at rescue, of prominent names coupled with rumors of forgery and counterfeiting, of surmises against residents of the region for the concealment of the haunts and the implements of crime among the secret coverts afforded by the fallen timber.

PIGEON ROOST.

The same region was remarkable also, moreover, as having furnished the place for an enormous pigeon roost located in the woods not very far from Huntsville during several years. Season after season would gather at the same spot countless millions of those feathered and winged travelers. Subjected as they were to ceaseless attacks by men and boys, and losing hundreds and thousands of their number every year, after some time had elapsed, the annual gatherings seemed gradually to decrease in amount, and finally the famous pigeon roost became entirely deserted. The merciless cruelty of the featherless and wingless bipeds, who would tramp for miles through the woods to reach this helpless mass of fluttering and roaring life to make their causeless and deadly attacks upon these unsuspecting and bewildered victims was fearful. Mention may be found, slightly more at length possibly, in the reminiscences, of both the matters briefly touched upon above. The pigeon roost has been forsaken probably for full eighty years, and the fallen timber has been cleared away by natural decay, by human toil and by fire, that terrible destroyer of the works both of nature and of man, for nearly as long a time; and now no visible token, no trace is left to tell of the unspeakable havoc which on that sultry July afternoon in the summer of 1824 was made by that rumbling, crashing, thundering tempest as during those hours of mortal terror it lay in most terrific power, whirling and tearing and twisting those giant tree trunks as though they had been but chaff and stubble beneath its might. Nothing is left, in fact, except the memory of the terrible storm in the minds of a very few elderly persons and a name—Fallen Timber—a postoffice at a lone farmhouse miles away from even the pretense or semblance of a town was once located there. It ought to be said, perhaps, that this post-office finds it habitat not in West River, but in Nettle Creek township, which lies adjoining the former on the west.

FIRST SCHOOL.

Ira Swain, whose father came in 1815 to Wayne county near Randolph line, says that the first school in that neighborhood was held in a little cabin, 14x18 feet, probably in 1816 or 1817. The floor was puncheons and so was the door, and the benches were split poles with legs put in with an auger hole. The older pupils got wood enough at noon. That could be done without much trouble, though it took a large quantity of wood. But the trees were close at hand, and all that was needed was to take care that in felling they did not hit the house nor the children.

TANNERY.

Hugh Botkin was a tanner, and he had a tanyard in operation only a short time after making a settlement in the county; and some of the old troughs that were made and put into the earth remained more than eighty years, firm, sound and solid.

TOWNS.

Buena Vista.—Proprietors, William Gillam, John Heaston, Benjamin Peacock; twenty-five lots, two streets—Washington, east and west; Main, north and south. Recorded July 1, 1851. The first store was built in 1854; Benjamin Peacock set up a hotel; Ezekiel Kirk and Benjamin Heaston were original residents; Dr. Keen lived there awhile, as also did Dr. Blumenbach. There has been a Presbyterian church, but it has gone down, and the house has been used as a barn for many years.

As late as 1880 there were two stores, one saw-mill, one smith shop, one tile factory, one wagon shop, one church, a postoffice, all of which have disappeared. It is six miles from Winchester, three and one-half miles from Huntsville, eight miles from Farmland. The name of the postoffice was Cerro Gordo. The country around Buena Vista is very good. Residents near Buena Vista are John Jenkins, Leroy Starbuck, Welcome Starbuck, Walter Starbuck, Jesse Rynard, Tyre Puckett, William Demory, etc. [1882.]

The region is well settled, and filled with thriving and prosperous farmers. Unionsport is quite near Buena Vista, only two miles distant. A meeting-house connected with a burying ground is about half a mile west of the town on the pike between the two villages. The church was built by a union effort, and was given into the care of the Friends, who occupied it for a time, but their occupancy ceased. It was rebuilt by the Christians.

Huntsville.—Twenty-eight lots. Miles and William Hunt, proprietors. Location, Sections 27 and 28, 19, 13, near the head of Cabin creek. Recorded March 6, 1834. Keener's Addition—Stephen Keener, proprietor; eight lots, four outlots. Recorded December 29, 1848. Hunt's Addition—Twenty-nine lots, Bezal Hunt, proprietor. Recorded August 23, 1850. William J. Shearer, surveyor.

James Pugh had a tanyard in 1834; Miles Hunt kept store; Parker Jewett had a smith shop. Huntsville stands in a fine and fruitful region far enough from other and larger towns to have some room to flourish. It became quite a thriving country village, but lack of a railroad has doomed it to decay.

Swain's Hill Postoffice, five miles from Losantville; three miles from Huntsville; near the twelve mile boundary at Ira Swain's.

Swain's Hill was simply a postoffice. Mr. Swain was a prominent settler and an influential partisan, and desired a postoffice to be located in the vicinity for the convenience of his neighbors and himself; and his dwelling being on a sightly and beautiful hill, the name of Swain's Hill was conferred on the office, and Ira Swain himself was made postmaster. It has long since been discontinued.

Unionsport.—Location in White River and West River townships, two miles west of Buena Vista; Hiram Mendenhall, proprietor; thirty-two lots; S. D. Woodworth, surveyor. Recorded March 30, 1837. It was located in the center of the proposed Union township. The town seems to have been well supplied with streets. Bloomingsport, six miles; Maxville, three and one-half miles; Huntsville, three miles; Winchester, seven miles; Lynn, nine miles; Buena Vista, two miles.

John O. Wattles lectured in this region some seventy-five years ago, and induced a company to form a community in about 1840. It went on for a short time, but before long "winked out," and many citizens lost heavily by the socialistic experience. A woolen factory was established in 1856. The mill was burned and another built in its place in 1866. It was owned later by Amos Mendenhall. A grist-mill once stood where the factory was located.

The village is beautifully situated on rolling ground, the houses are bright, neat and tasteful, and altogether the town presents a delightful and cheerful aspect.

BIOGRAPHIES.

Hugh Botkin, born Virginia 1775; Tennessee, 1786; married Rachel Keener 1801; Wayne county, Indiana, 1815; Randolph county 1816; thirteen children, seven boys and six girls. All thirteen lived to be grown, and all but one were married. He died in 1836 and his wife in 1837. He was a farmer and a tanner, as also an active Methodist, and a prominent and respected citizen. He lost his dwelling by fire, and did not succeed in amassing a fortune, but his children rank among the thriving and substantial citizens of the region.

William M. Botkin, son of Hugh Botkin, born in Randolph county 1823; married Martha A. Hiatt in 1849, and Dosha Butler in 1868; ten children. He was an enterprising, wide-awake, prosperous farmer and business man, and was county commissioner one term (three years). He was an active Methodist, a thorough Republican, and an earnest temperance man, and an honor to the community in which he dwelt, having been a resident of the neighborhood during his whole life.

William Chamness was born in North Carolina in 1793, and came to Randolph county in 1816, settling west of Bloomingsport on a farm owned by Elijah Bales, where old Billy Rish once lived, the land having been entered by Benjamin Jones. He married Charity Moore, and afterward Margaret Hinshaw. He had eleven children, ten of them coming to be grown and married.

John Charles was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1828. He is the son of Daniel Charles, who came from North Carolina to Wayne county in 1812, having been born in 1799. John Charles came to Randolph county in 1845. He married Eunice Swain in the same year, and Nancy Clark in 1862. He had six children; he carried on a drug store in Economy during several years. He was elected justice of the peace for White River township, but the burden of labor or of honor proved too great, and he resigned the position before his time was half out. He was township trustee three years. He was an elder among the Friends; was an old Abolitionist.

William Cox, born in 1773 in South Carolina, came to Stillwater, Ohio, early, and to Randolph county in 1823, and settled in West River. He died in 1857, aged eighty-four years. He had been married three times. The names of his wives were Elizabeth Thomas, Nancy Mills and Laura Owens.

Daniel Cropper, son of Bela W. Cropper, was born in Kentucky in 1825; went to Warren county, Ohio, in 1828, and moved to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1833. He married Elizabeth Thornburg in 1849, and had five children. He resided in Huntsville, and was a farmer and hotel keeper. His father entered 160 acres of land, and after paying for that, and paying also the man who moved them from Ohio to Randolph county, he had just $25 left. A rich man he was, farm all paid for and money to spend. His father was a worthy member of the Baptist church, and a preacher among them.

Daniel Hunnicutt was born in 1770 in Virginia, and married Jane Walthal, who was born there in 1780. They moved to Fayette county, Indiana, in 1827, and to Randolph county in 1832. They had seven children, all of whom were born in Virginia. Mr. Hunnicutt was a farmer, and belonged to the Friends. He died many years ago.

John T. Hunnicutt, born 1816, near Petersburg, Virginia; Fayette county, Indiana, 1827; Wayne county, 1828; West River, 1832; married Jane T. Charles, 1851, and Deborah (Hollingsworth) Arnett, 1872; five children.

Peyton Johnson was born in 1809 in Campbell county, Kentucky; married Elizabeth T. Butler; came to Randolph county in 1834; had five children, all grown and all married.

Robert Lumpkin was born in 1756; married Elizabeth Forrest in 1785, who was born in 1766; moved to Tennessee, then to Randolph county, 1831. He was a wagoner in the Revolutionary war. He had twelve children, and raised eleven of the twelve. He died in 1842, eighty-six years old, and his wife died in 1846, eighty years old.

Albert Macy was born in North Carolina in 1774; married Nancy Hall; came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1819, and settled near Huntsville. They had eight children, seven of them having been born in North Carolina, and one in Randolph county. His daughter Phebe was the wife of Ira Swain, of Swain's Hill, West River township. Mr. Macy died many years ago.

William Macy was born in 1786 in Guilford county, North Carolina; came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1821; married Hannah Hinshaw in 1809, and died after 1867; had fifteen children, seven in North Carolina and eight in Randolph county, Indiana, all of them born between 1809 and 1836. Six of his daughters married Hadleys (two families). William Macy moved to Morgan county, Indiana, about 1860. He was a Friend, active, prominent and trustworthy.

Rufus K. Mills was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1823. He married Elizabeth McPherson in 1844, and came to Randolph county in 1857. They had three children. He was township trustee five years and assessor several years. He was one of the old-line Abolitionists and early Wesleyans.

Anna (Zimmerman) Retz is the daughter of Frederick Zimmerman, and was born in Randolph county, Indiana, in 1821. She married John Retz in 1837. They had thirteen children. Her husband, John Retz, died in 1876, being sixty-six years old, and having been born in 1810. She resided on what was her father's farm, on which he settled in 1818. One of her sons was killed when coon hunting by the falling of a tree. She was an Episcopal Methodist, as also was her husband. He was a farmer and a worthy citizen.

Robert Starbuck, Buena Vista, is a native of North Carolina, having been born in Stokes county in that state in 1814. He came to Virginia in 1823, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1833, settling near Buena Vista. He married late in life, being fifty-six years old at the time. His wife was Lucy Ann (Green) Gillam. They had one child. He was a farmer, merchant, trader, hotel keeper, etc.

Ira Swain, Swain's Hill, youngest son of Elihu Swain, was born in Tennessee in 1809; Wayne county, Indiana, 1815, near Randolph line; married Lydia Macy; came early to Randolph county; had several children; was a farmer and an active business man. He was treasurer of Randolph county during one term.

Thomas Worth was a native of North Carolina, and came to Randolph county in 1812. He was born in 1802, and married Sarah Macy, and afterward Nancy (Macy) Marshall. He had ten children—Theodore, Eliza, Aaron, Mary, Lucinda, Anna, David, Emily and two others. David was a member of the Sixty-ninth Indiana, and died in the service. Aaron has long been an active and efficient preacher in the Wesleyan church. Thomas Worth was a hearty supporter of the Wesleyans and an old-fashioned Abolitionist and an out and out Republican.

Frederick Zimmerman was born in Tennessee. He moved first to Pennsylvania, on the Susquehanna river, and then to Ohio, and after that to West River, Randolph county. The removal last mentioned was made in 1818. He bought out William Blount's 160 acres, and resided in the same place till his death in 1835. He had married in Tennessee Catherine Bowerman, and his widow survived him twenty-one years, dying in 1856. They had fourteen children. He was a Methodist and a Democrat.

Jeremiah Bly, farmer, postoffice, Trenton. This worthy citizen was born May 13, 1829, in Germany; he came to Ohio in 1845, and after making several changes in his location, he finally settled here in the fall of 1848.

William Miller Botkin, a farmer and son of Hugh and Rachel K. Botkin, was born in Randolph county, Indiana, July 7, 1823. He was the eleventh of a family of thirteen children. His father was born in Pendleton county, Virginia, November 17, 1774, and his mother in Knox county, Tennessee, February 25, 1786. They were married in Knox county, Tennessee, in the year 1801, and removed to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1815, and to Randolph county in 1817. His father entered 120 acres of land, and continued to live on the farm until his death; his father died February 27, 1836, and his mother January 24, 1857.

He was first united in marriage to Martha A. Hiatt, daughter of Louis and Charity Hiatt, of Clinton county, Ohio, December 20, 1849.

After his marriage, he settled on his father's homestead, which he had commenced to purchase from the heirs; he continued the purchase of shares until the entire estate came into his possession.

Williard Haynes, farmer, was born in Herkimer county, New York, February 11, 1823. He was educated in the common schools of this county, which, in 1835, were in their pioneer state. He was married May 21, 1846, to Delilah Wright, who was a native of Clinton county, and born there December 3, 1822. Stephen Haynes, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Dutchess county, New York, January 12, 1800, and after making some changes, settled in this county in the year 1834; his wife and mother of Williard, was originally Laura Gaines, a native of Vermont, and born there about the year 1804; deceased March 25, 1875, in this county. The father of Mrs. Haynes (Empson Wright), was originally from Virginia, where he was born November 15, 1797. He came to this county about the year 1824; deceased November 28, 1853, on the land which he entered. His wife was originally Rachel Rubel, born February 1, 1801, in Tennessee (now deceased). The worthy wife of Mr. Haynes was a consistent member of the Christian church, and he was a Republican, and one of the substantial farmers of the neighborhood in which he resided. Seven children have blessed this union—Laura E., born March 5, 1847; Sarah E., October 23, 1849; Louisa M., December 22, 1851; William H., April 23, 1855; Lucy A., October 3, 1857; Stephen C., October 13, 1859, and Harrison W., February 22, 1862.

Levi Johnson, merchant, Trenton. He was born February 6, 1831, in this county. Mr. Johnson has been married twice; the first time to Maria Blake, November 21, 1857; she was a native of Virginia, and born there in the year 1840; she deceased September 15, 1858. The second time he was married to Bettie Butler, November 21, 1861; she was born in Campbell county, Virginia, June 17, 1842. They have one child—Lillie T., who was born November 13, 1862. He was educated in the common schools of Virginia, and followed farming and teaching music for twenty-five years; he also taught in the common schools in early life; was for eleven years engaged in the mercantile business. He was elected to the office of township trustee of West River township in April, 1880. His father, Jonathan Johnson, was originally from Virginia, where he was born in 1803, and deceased in West Virginia in the year 1862.

Other prominent pioneers of West River township were John B. Mills, William Adamson, Milton H. Beeson, A. Botkin, Henry H. Brooks, Isaac Farquhar, Jonah L. Catley, Milton Coffin, Daniel Cropper, Allen S. Cropper, Elisha Cox, Jesse G. Haines, William B. Harris, Willard Haines, Alpheus Hoofland, Martin Hoover, John Jenkins, Joshua G. Jones, George Keever, Ephraim Lee, John B. Mills, Oliver H. Millspaugh, John Moyer, David F. Pursley, Joshua J. Sheppard, Rev. Daniel Worth, John Moyer, Oliver H. Millspaugh and George Moore.

Franklin township is located in the northern part of the county, being the smallest in extent of territory, as also the latest in formation. The township embraces twenty-four square miles, being six miles long by four miles wide. Franklin township lies in the valley of the Mississinewa river, on both sides of that stream, the river dividing it into two unequal parts. As to surface, the township is mostly rolling, though in some portions inclined to be level.

The streams of water in the township are the Mississinewa, in the north part, flowing westward; Day's creek, entering the Mississinewa on the north, and Bear creek on the south. Day's creek comes from Jay county, and Bear creek from White River township. Mississinewa river is in this portion of its course a large and important stream, serving a good purpose for water power. Bear creek is of considerable size, and in early times was utilized to some extent.

Like the rest of the county, this part of Randolph was covered with a heavy growth of deciduous timber of many kinds, among which oak, sugar maple and walnut were prominent. Many of the early pioneers made great quantities of sugar from their maple orchards in those original days, and though some things may have been scarce, "sweetening" was not. Deer, bears, wolves, etc., were plentiful, as were also turkeys, squirrels and all the animals of various kinds common to the climate and region, and hunters found the Mississinewa valley a very paradise for them. One of the first settlers killed six deer and wounded a seventh before ordinary breakfast time.

The first settlement in Franklin was made in 1817 by Meshach Lewallyn, an elderly man with a large family. The great body of the township remained a wilderness for many years afterward. A few settlers, however, made a location upon the river in the neighborhood, Mr. Lewallyn as just stated, in 1817, and Joab Ward in 1819.

Mr. Lewallyn, about 1819, built a mill on the river, which has been a noted point ever since that day. The Mississinewa was in time of flood navigable for flat-boats to Lewallyn's mill, and not much above.

This place became the nearest point of connection between the settlements in Wayne county and the Wabash valley, and for many years produce in large quantities was brought through the wilderness to Lewallyn's mill, and Joab Ward built boats and sold them to the produce owners to float it down the river into the Wabash valley. Many curious and some dangerous adventures occurred in connection with that old-time navigation down the booming Mississinewa during the spring flood upon the stream.

The Indians were yet residents of the region, and some tragic occurrences took place near Ridgeville. Fleming was shot and wounded near Joab Ward's, and killed at Meshach Lewallyn's, though not by him nor any of his family. Shadrach Lewallyn, one of Meshach's sons, shot and killed an Indian, and the natives were greatly enraged and made threats of vengeance. They were, however, quieted by the pacific efforts of Meshach Lewallyn, as also of David Connor, the Indian trader, who, though a rough and wild man himself, had yet a great influence over the savage red men of the forest; and he often employed it in the interest of peace and order, insomuch that he was, in solemn state, and with imposing ceremony, according to their custom in such matters, installed a chieftain among the Miamis.

Joab Ward, who came to Ridgeville in 1819, bought land on credit of Mr. Lewallyn; and for ten years those pioneers were literally in the woods, cut off from their fellow-countrymen, and dwelling far amidst the mighty forests. The next settlers after the Lewallyns and the Wards, were, so far as now known, James Addington and David Hammer, who entered, and, it is to be presumed, settled upon section 10, about two miles west of Ridgeville and on the river.

We are unable to follow the course of settlement further with any certainty. About 1830 the current of emigration began to set with a slight force in that direction, which grew still stronger in 1832 and 1833, and from that time and onward till 1838 the township came to be filled with occupants, at least the land was by that time almost wholly entered. Not much needs to be said as to early efforts in the line of education and religion. The usual "woods schools" in the greased-paper log cabin were established in these forest nooks also.

As to religion, noble souls and pious hearts found a dwelling place in those outposts, and the Gospel Shepherd sought out the stray sheep in the wilderness, giving to them the needed care and comfort. And what was thus sown has proved to be good seed cast into a fruitful soil, which has in these latter years, brought forth thirty, sixty and a hundredfold.

TOWNS.

Carlisle.—Location on Mississinewa river, section 12, 21, 13, directly opposite the old town of Ridgeville, Edward McKew, proprietor; D. W. McNeal, surveyor; twenty-eight lots; recorded October 18, 1836. Ridgeville (first plat) was recorded September 21, 1837. Carlisle was south of the river, and Ridgeville was (and is) north of it. Both the towns were still born. Sixteen years after 1836 no town was at either place, and the plat had relapsed into ordinary farm land. Ridgeville was laid out again, however, in about 1853, and this time the town began to grow. Yet it did not do much for a long time, not, in fact, till the Pan-Handle track was completed through its limits. But Carlisle never so much as "peeped." We have never heard that it ever had even so much as a beginning.

Ridgeville.—Location, section 12, town 21, range 14, north side of Mississinewa river, William and John Addington, proprietors; Jere Smith, surveyor; sixteen lots; street east and west, Main street; recorded September 21, 1837. Ridgeville (new town), Arthur McKew and Joab Ward, proprietors; 128 lots; streets, north and south, Race, Walnut; east and west, Water, Main, First, Second, Third. Location, section 12, north of Mississinewa river, at what is now the crossing of the Pan-Handle and Grand Rapids railroads. Recorded January 5, 1853. Thus it is seen that Ridgeville was laid out twice, and has had nine additions at various times. It was platted by William and John Addington in 1837. There had been a mill built by Meshach Lewallyn and a flat-boat factory, carried on by Joab Ward for years, but not even the semblance of a town had come into being. And even after the village was located by Mr. Addington (who was the proprietor of the mill after Lewallyn), no growth took place. Only three or four houses were erected, and the town seemed still-born. For sixteen years no business of importance was transacted in the place, and the lots had been remanded to their original farm state.

Some of the men who were, or had been, residents up to 1852, were Meshach Lewallyn, miller; Joab Ward, farmer and boat-builder; William Addington, Jerry Barker, Legraves and Jenkins. Jenkins had a store in 1837. Jerry Barker built a hewed-log house soon after. Lewallyn's mill was built about 1820, and in 1836 was owned by William Addington. At first, it was only a corn-cracker, and was afterward changed into a flour-mill, with a hand-bolt (water mill). The stones were home-made. Joab Ward and Arthur McKew re-laid the town in 1853, calling it Newtown. It stood on the Deerfield state road, as also at the crossing of the Pan Handle (P. C. & St. L.) and the "Shoo-Fly" (Richmond & G. R.) railroads, and on the Mississinewa river, at the head of flat-boat navigation. A fine bridge spans the Mississinewa south of the town. The country is good and the lands are fertile. During the summer of 1880 the people of the town and region began to build pikes from Ridgeville into the surrounding country.

In 1853 the Union & Logansport railroad was projected, and there was large activity at Ridgeville. In 1853-54 there were thirty carpenters at work in the town at once. Railroad work, however, soon ceased. The Logansport road was not made until 1867, and the "Shoo-Fly" in 1872.

The railroad ceased in 1857, and the town lagged. Mr. Sumption's hotel prospered, and the stores, also, but up to 1866 there were no more than one hundred people, perhaps not so many. From the completion of the Pan-Handle railroad, the growth of the town has been constant. The foundation of Ridgeville College was laid in 1867, the instruction began in 1868, and the college building was inclosed and occupied in 1869.

The Mississinewa river passes near the town on the south side. For many years this place was the point whence flat-boats were sent down the stream, laden with flour, bacon, apples, etc. Joab Ward built great numbers of these in the earlier days. That business, however, stopped long ago.

Ridgeville is now a prosperous and thriving town, and an important and growing center of business and trade. In the vicinity is a great rock crusher and hundreds of carloads of crushed rock are shipped annually. Ridgeville has a broom factory second to none in the United States, one bank and several good business houses. A fine state of moral sentiment exists, and temperance and good order largely prevail. Saloons for the most part, have been suppressed, and wherever the public feeling and principle are strong enough to prevent their existence, good morals are sure to be in the ascendant.

Joseph Lay Company, Ridgeville.—The Joseph Lay Company, manufacturers of brooms, was organized by Joseph Lay and Samuel C. Lay, in Ridgeville in 1886, and was maintained as a mutual company until 1901 when it was incorporated under the state laws. The company at that time consisted of Joseph Lay, Samuel C. Lay and L. P. Sims. They organized with a capital stock of $100,000.00.

Their output per year is about 70,000 dozen brooms. They employ one hundred men, fifty of whom are employed in Ridgeville and expend $60,000.00 per year for labor, alone. This company makes a specialty of factory brooms, which are brooms of unusual weight. This company is the largest manufacturer of heavy brooms in the United States and uses on an average, per year, of 70 tons of bamboo, 50 of rattan and 360 tons of broom corn. They are importers of rattan and split bamboo direct from China and are the greatest consumers of this product of any other institution in the United States. 360 tons of broom corn per year would represent the growth of more than a thousand acres.

The presnt officers of this company that have done so much for the business interests of Ridgeville are Samuel C. Lay, president and treasurer; Lester P. Sims, vice-president; Harry J. Lay, secretary. This company also has a plant at Mattoon, Illinois. They manufacture house brooms especially at that place. Mr. Arthur J. Lay is the manager of that plant.

Another important commercial enterprise of Randolph county is the A. & C. Stone & Lime Company, Ridgeville, Indiana. This company was organized in about 1903, by John Armsfield and C. C. Cartwright, of Portland. Mr. Will Nichols was superintendent for a number of years. They purchased thirty-eight acres of land east of Ridgeville and immediately began to crush stone for ballast, railroads and building of public highways.

The company has been very successful and has grown to enormous proportions. Running constantly at this time three large crushers with an output of from 160,000 to 175,000 tons of stone annually. It requires over 3,000 cars to ship the material while hundreds of loads are hauled by wagons. The capital stock of this company is $250,000.00. This is represented by two plants, one at Ridgeville and one at Greencastle. This would make the Ridgeville plant valued at approximately $125,000.00. This institution has been of great benefit to the people of Randolph county as it has been the means of making better roads possible. The company as organized at the present time has the following officers: A. B. Meyer, president and general manager; C. C. Cartwright, vice-president; Ed Meyer and William C. Cartwright, secretary and treasurer; John Collett, local manager.

BIOGRAPHIES.

Jesse Addington was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1814, and his wife, Margaret Sullivan, in North Carolina in 1815. She came to Washington, Indiana, in 1828, and moved to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1831. They were married in 1834, and moved to what is now Franklin township in the same year. They settled on Bear creek, "in the woods," three and a half miles from Ridgeville.

Joseph Edger, Ridgeville, was born in 1822 in Harrison county, Kentucky, came to Darke county, Ohio, in 1824, his father died there, and he was brought up by his uncle, Edward Edger. In 1837 he accompanied this uncle to Deerfield, Randolph county, which town having been laid out a few years before that date had not yet began to grow.

Since that primeval period, there have been as merchants, among others, Beales' branch store, in a log cabin; H. L. Searl, B. W. Hawkins, Fitzpatrick & Edger, Putnam & Avery, etc.

Joseph Edger married Alice Kinnear in 1846, and has had six children. He has lived at Deerfield, Winchester and Ridgeville; went to New Orleans and Texas, hunting a home, but came back to Ridgeville.

George Huffman came to Randolph county, two miles west of Winchester, in 1818; moved to Franklin township, on Bear creek, in 1838, and died in 1863, having had ten children.

Arthur McKew was the son of Edward McKew, who moved to Ridgeville, Indiana, in 1831, from Fayette county, Indiana, and previously from Cincinnati. He was born August 14, 1819, above Cincinnati, in Ohio, and was taken to Fayette county, Indiana, in 1819, and Ridgeville in 1831. He married Margery Ward, daughter of Joab Ward, and sister of Hon. Thomas Ward, of Winchester, Indiana, in 1844. They had six children. He farmed in Jay county four years, but returned to Ridgeville. He was county commissioner of Randolph county two terms, and president of Winchester National Bank for sixteen months. He was a Methodist. Arthur McKew died in January, 1882, highly respected and greatly lamented; he was in his sixty-third year.

Jeremiah L. Mock, son of Daniel Mock, of Ward township, was born in 1815, in Ohio; came to Randolph in 1828; married Matilda Pierce in 1834, who was the daughter of Burkett Pierce and born in 1817, and died in 1873. Mr. Mock had ten children and resided in Franklin township, northeast of Ridgeville for twenty-eight or thirty years, being a member of the Democratic party and in vocation a farmer.

Pardon Sherman was born in 1801, in Greene county, New York. He married Mary D. Parke in 1826; they came to White river, Randolph county, in 1835, and to Franklin township in 1837. He entered eighty acres. They had six children. Mr. Sherman was one of fourteen children, eight boys and six girls, all grown, only eight of whom, however, were married. His wife died in January, 1882, and her husband ended his life among mortal men in about a month afterward.

Francis and James Stevens came in 1830 from Monroe county, Ohio.

to Franklin township, west of Ridgeville. Francis during his life had nine children and James had seven children. They each entered eighty acres; they were both farmers.

Andrew and Alexander Stevens came in 1835. Andrew had eight children. Alexander had twelve children. Andrew has been dead many years. Alexander has been dead fifty years. James Stevens has three sons living in Jay county. Andrew Stevens had three sons—Garvin, Jacob and Francis. Alexander Stevens had two sons, Joseph and Elijah. The Stevenses have always been active farmers and Democrats from olden time.

Robert H. Sumption, Ridgeville, was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1817; moved to Deerfield, Indiana, in 1835, and graduated at Greencastle, Indiana, in 1845, teaching school more or less during his time of study. He married Berilla Ward in 1845 and moved to St. Joseph county, Michigan, teaching and farming till 1854. They returned to Ridgeville in that year and he kept hotel in that place till 1872. They had three children.

Joab Ward, Ridgeville, was born in North Carolina, December 14, 1790; came to Ross county, Ohio, about 1800 and to Champaign county, Ohio, on King's creek between 1813 and 1819; married Amy Grave in 1813; moved to near Ridgeville April 7, 1819; changed his residence for a short time to a farm east of Winchester for fear of the Indians, but returned soon afterward to his former abode near Ridgeville and never moved elsewhere from that time till his death. He bought of Meshach Lewallyn a small tract of land, reckoned to be fifty acres, at $3.00 per acre. The land was situated south of the river near the present water tank. Mr. Ward built a house, scutching down the logs and making a stick chimney and a clapboard roof. In about 1838, he put in new sills, raised the building to a story and a half, pebble dashed and shingled it, making, also, two brick chimneys and it is a good house to this day, still occupied as a residence, after standing ninety years. A fine spring was near, which in those times was reckoned a very great advantage. He had fifteen children, one still-born and twelve grew up.

Joab Ward had been a trader in Ohio but he had "broken up," and plunged into the Western woods, going to the bounds of civilization, Ridgeville then being the extreme outskirt and corner of white settlement. His health was poor and his prospects were not bright. Without means, without health, with a growing family, he still lived in hope and did his best, looking and wishing for better times. He first settled in a camp, cleared some land, made sugar, killed deer, etc. He was a great hunter, having killed more than once two deer with the same shot. At one time he killed six deer and crippled the seventh in one morning before ordinary breakfast time. He used to hunt deer by driving sharpened stakes into the ground with points upward at the places where the deer would jump into the field, often crippling them thus. Several times four were killed by him in a single day. He died November 7, 1874, having lived there nearly fifty-six years and being eighty-four years old. He was a Whig and a Republican. His wife was a very religious woman, though she was deprived by long distance from meetings of religious societies; she died in 1864. Both are buried at White River burying ground.

Mr. Ward was employed for many years in building flat boats for sale to persons who wished to transport merchandise during the season of floods down the Mississinewa to the Wabash valley for traffic with the Indians and the early settlers in that region. He was for nearly sixty years a prominent citizen of that portion of the county, the township receiving from him the name it still bears. Mr. Ward was greatly respected and highly esteemed, though quiet and unassuming and not inclined to press into active public life.

Benjamin Addington was born in Wayne county, Indiana, June 28, 1824. His father, Joseph, was a native of South Carolina and his mother, whose maiden name was Ceilie Townsend, was born in North Carolina. They came to Randolph county in the spring of 1834. The father died in 1837 and the mother in 1853. His grandfather Townsend was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Mr. Addington was married in 1850 to Rebecca Harrald, who died March 4, 1876. They were the parents of seven children.

Elisha T. Bailey, physician, was born in Clinton county, Ohio, September 19, 1821. His father, Hiram Bailey, was born in Sussex county, Virginia, in 1796, and his mother, whose maiden name was Rachel Thomas, was born in Warren county, Ohio, in 1802. The parents removed to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1830, where they remained until death. The mother died in 1868 and the father in 1872. Elisha, their son, attended the common school and worked on the farm until twenty-two years of age, and then began the study of medicine under Dr. Stanton Judkins, brother of Professor Judkins, of Cincinnati. In 1846, he was examined by the Wayne county Medical Board and licensed to practice medicine. In 1847, he located at Emmettsville, Randolph county and practiced four years, then attended the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, graduating in that institution. In 1854 he located at Ridgeville, where he continued the practice of his profession. He was appointed postmaster at Emmettsville in 1848, and at Ridgeville in 1862. He also served as township trustee four years. In 1845, he was married to Julia A. Morgan, a native of Randolph county, who died in November 17, 1854. On the 27th of September, 1856, he married Paulina Mack. Her father, Jeremiah L. Mack, was a native of Ohio, and her mother, Matilda (Pierce) Mack, a native of Randolph county. The second marriage was blessed by four children.

Abraham Roe, farmer, was born in Ohio April 10, 1819. His father, Ezekiel, was born in Pennsylvania and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Funk, a native of the same state. His father died June 20, 1860, and his mother in 1863, both in Randolph county. Mr. Roe came to this county at a time when Indians and wild game abounded. He killed, according to his own testimony, almost one thousand deer, the largest part of this number having been killed in this county, and his father was also a successful marksman. Mr. Roe was married, February 28, 1844, to Hannah Renbarger, a native of Randolph county. They were the parents of four children, only one of whom, Elizabeth, now survives. She is the wife of L. L. Williams. Mrs. Roe is the daughter of Abraham and Rachael (Luellen) Renbarger, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Ohio. Mr. Roe always followed the occupation of farming.

Mrs. Angeline Whipple, housekeeper, Ridgeville, was born in Randolph county, Indiana. Her father, Reuben Whipple, was born in Delaware county, Ohio, in January, 1834. Her mother, whose maiden name was Mary Orcutt, was born in Darke county, Ohio, October 18, 1838. Mrs. Whipple was married on the 4th of May, 1876, to Newton McKew, a native of Randolph county, and son of Arthur McKew. Her husband was born July 13, 1854 and died July 6, 1879. They had two children.

Other prominent pioneers of Franklin township were: Benjamin Addington, Elisha T. Bailey, Joseph Butterworth, John M. Coon, Christopher C. Hiatt, William N. Janes, Isaiah C. Milner, Alexander Wood, John E. Smithson, Isaac N. Straton, George W. Wesler and Robert H. Sumption.

Ward Township.—As at present constituted, it embraces township 21 north, range 14 east of the second principal meridian, comprising a full township of thirty-six sections, equal to 23,040 acres. It lies wholly in the Mississinewa valley. That river passes through the township in a direction nearly west and toward the north side of the township, the larger portion being south of the river. Massey's Hickory and Mud creeks from the south and Goshen creek from the north, flow through the township to the Mississinewa. It is one of the northern tier in the county, extending on the north to the Jay couny line. The surface is level or moderately rolling. Near the river the land is somewhat hilly; farther toward the head of the streams, it becomes between the two rivers.

rather level, though less inclined to be marshy than if nearer the "divide"

Originally, like the county in general, the earth was covered with a thick and heavy forest of many kinds of trees, the weight and burden of which sixty years of wearisome labor, performed by two or three generations of hardy yeomanry, have scarcely been able to remove. Indeed, much still remains, greatly more in fact, than the farm needs. To get rid of the timber has, in days gone by, been a fearful task; a task, too, till within a few years, well-night useless, except that it was taken out of the way. The labor of clearing the ground and of fencing the fields, is greater by far than would readily be supposed, and the amount of work of that kind that the farmers of Randolph county have accomplished since first the white man's ax became a factor in the human problem in this region, is past all belief. The ringing ax, the crashing branches, the thundering trunk, the resounding maul, the cracking of the teamster's whip, all the various noises of a woodman's life, have for ages past been the music of the clearing.

EARLY HISTORY.

A few settlers found their way upon the Mississinewa very early in the history of the county. When, in August, 1818, the first election was held in the then new county of Randolph, several families resided in the Mississinewa valley and most of them east of Deerfield. Just who were there at that early time cannot now with certainty be determined. The first entry in the Mississinewa valley and in Ward township as well, appears to have been near the river and not far from the east side of the township. It comprised a whole section, section 13, township 21, range 14, and was entered by James Strain. We have not met his name in any account of the primitive settlement of the valley.

The next entry was by Daniel Richardson. The land lay directly north of Strain's section, and on both sides of the river. June 10, 1817, or three weeks after Richardson's entry, eight other entries were made, all quarter sections but one, one thousand three hundred and sixty acres in all. The parties were James Wilson, Benjamin Lewallyn, David Kite, Daniel Kite, James and John Jacobs, Joel Canady, James Reed. These tracts all lay in sections 7, 8, 9 and 10. These lands extended from Burkett Pierce's on the west, to one and one-half miles east of Deerfield, three miles in length, but did not include the town itself. With Meshach Lewallyn's and James Strain's, the whole extent of the river for seven miles had been taken up, except one and three-fourths miles in two "gaps." In the course of three years or by October, 1820, most of the rest of the land on and near the river and several tracts along Mud and Hickory and Goshen creeks had been purchased.

Martin Boots and Henry Kizer had located on Mud creek, the latter far up near Stone Station. James and Tense Massey, Allen Wall and others, had settled on the river east of Deerfield. Robert Taylor was on the creek which comes from the north to the Mississinewa, at the Ritenour church. Samuel Cain, Jeremiah Lindsay, Jacob Weaver and William Jackson had entered land on Hickory creek, south of Deerfield. James Jacobs had entered the Ritenour land. Joseph Hinshaw entered the land embracing the west part of Deerfield, June 23, 1817. The east part was in section 16 and therefore school land.

But though the Mississinewa valley was nearly all occupied within three or four years, or by the close of 1820, yet the growth of the region was exceedingly slow. The valley was isolated. The settlers could scarcely get out in any direction. They were away from any great route of travel. One of the chief western thoroughfares passed through Winchester and connected the central portion and the White river valley with the world at large. But not so with the Mississinewa. The regions north did not open till 1835 to 1837, and then only was the whole county occupied and the world "swallowed them up" with settlements on every side. Deerfield sprang up and for many years became an important trade center. The swamps between Winchester and Deerfield stood almost as an impassable barrier until a late period. As late as 1859, there was a "corduroy bridge" on that northern road, one and one-fourth miles long. Imagine the road then, thirty or forty years before that time. But the forests have been cleared and the swamps drained and the northern "pike" has been built and Ward township has gained full connection with the rest of the world.

Through the whole county and in Ward township as well, religion found early and effective entrance. As soon, perhaps, as 1823 or 1824, may be even before that, the "circuit riders" had ridden through swamps and crossed those creeks and found and fed those sheep in the wilderness. Meetings were had at Riley Marshall's, Allen Wall's and elsewhere east of Deerfield, and at some friendly dwelling west, perhaps at Mr. Ritenour's. But very early Ritenour's meeting-house was built and that graveyard established, and not long afterward the old Prospect meeting-house was erected and that second cemetery also dedicated to the memory of the dead ones dear. Two generations have come and gone and those now ancient meeting-houses have completed their work and fulfilled their mission. How many, many times have their sacred walls echoed the sound of the Gospel message as it fell upon the eager ears of the scores or even hundreds of anxious listeners gathered from their simple forest homes to take part in the holy service and feed their longing souls with heavenly manna. Still, schools were found even there. The log cabin, the huge stick chimney, the greased paper lights, the split pole seats, the puncheon floors, the slab writing desks against the wall, were prepared by these forest dwellers and not a few who have since "made their mark" among men had their "start" in the wooden schoolhouses of Ward township. Hon. Thomas Ward, Hon. Enos L. Watson, Thomas Kizer, Esq., Col. Martin B. Miller, Isaac Jenkinson and more besides, emerged from those dim forest shades into the brighter sunshine of the county-seat or elsewhere. Mr. Ward says that he never attended any school in his life except those taught in a greased paper log cabin.

Ward Entries—James Strain, Section 13, 21, 14, 1816; Daniel Richardson, S. W. 12, 21, 14, 1817; James Willson, N. W. 10, 21, 14, 1817; James Willson, W. S. W. 10, 21, 14, 1817; Benjamin Lewallyn, S. E. 30, 21, 14, 1822; William Simmons, N. E. S. E. 12, 21, 14, 1826; Samuel Helm, N. W. S. E., 24, 21, 14, 1826; Samuel Hodges, S. E. S. W. 5, 21, 14, 1826; James G. Birney, E. S. E. 29, 21, 14, 1826; John Baugh, S. E. S. E. 12, 21, 14, 1826; Israel Taylor, N. E. N. W. 14, 21, 14, 1828; Burkett Pierce, E. N. E. 7, 21, 14, 1832; Daniel B. Miller, E. N. E., 23, 21, 14, 1831; Perry Fields (part of) 16, 21, 14, 1834; Andrew Key, N. E. S. E. 14, 21, 14, 1836.

Ward township was entered mostly between 1836 and 1838 inclusive, during which time an immense amount of land was purchased in Randolph county of the United States and great numbers of families took up their abode within its limits. Among the chief settlers on the Mississinewa may be named Burkett Pierce, Joab Ward, Elias Kizer, Daniel B. Miller, William Simmons, Messrs. Ritenour, Parsons, Cain and others not now in memory.

Mr. Parsons built the first mill on the Mississinewa after Lewallyn's at Ridgeville. That mill stood some years; was washed away and Mr. Ritenour built another one hundred yards lower down.

Joab Ward's house was the scene of the encounter of the Indians with Ward and Kizer and the shooting of Fleming in the bushes by Jesse and John Gray was near by. David Connor's trading house was above Deerfield and the Mississinewa valley witnessed many early trials and perils springing from the whisky so freely dealt by the traders of those times to those poor natives of the forest wilds. But those were days of ignorance. The children of many of the whisky-sellers of pioneer times are among the most sturdy advocates of total abstinence of the present day. Let our motto be, "Out of the darkness, into the light." Rather than widely parade in unseemly prominence any of the evil traits in the characters of the ancestral dwellers, it were better to follow the primal example of filial affection, and, like the children of Noah of old, taking a garment upon the shoulders of two with mingled feelings of reverence and sorrow lovingly to shield the unsightly failings from public gaze and in the full noontide radiance of this latter day, walk ever forward toward the light, onward and upward, ever into the light, honoring our fathers for their heroism, copying filially their virtues, shunning their failings, that our pathway may be like "the path of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day."

ROADS.

Three old routes of travel passed through Ward township—from Winchester to Ridgeville; from Winchester to Portland via Deerfield, and from Greenville northwest through Deerfield, Ridgeville and Fairview.

The smooth and gravelly surface, the solid highway, is widely in contrast to the "corduroy" that used to stretch its rough and weary length for miles and miles at intervals toward the northern regions—northward, constantly northward, farther and still farther, across swamps, through jungles, over creeks and rivers, through bottomless morasses, into the gloomy, overshadowing forests, those rude paths, those primitive roads—they could not be called highways—would unroll their endless extent. And now these awful "corduroys," which used to jerk and shake and pound and rattle, with their endless "pounce" and "bounce," by sunlight and starlight, in rain or in shine, come winter come summer, do that fearful work no more forever!

TOWNS.

Deerfield.—Location, sections 16 and 17, 21, 14, south side of Mississinewa river. The village was laid out in 1833 by Messrs. Curtis & Butler and surveyed by D. W. McNeil, of Portland. The town is located north of Winchester on the state road laid out from Greenville west, and running by Fairview into Delaware county. A pike connects the place with Winchester. The "Pan Handle" (P. C. & St. L.) railroad is within about a mile south of the town. In 1837, four log cabins constituted the sum total of that embryo town. In one of them, Henry Taylor played at keeping hotel and also sold whisky. In another, Henry Sweet worked as a blacksmith. Jonathan Thomas lived near and was a farmer. William Anderson was also a resident but what was his occupation is to us utterly unknown. Edward Edger came there to show the dwellers in those woods what could be accomplished in the business of a merchant, bringing with him a magnificent stock of goods, the value of which could not have been less than $200. After a time, a second store was opened by John Jenkinson. A somewhat amusing instance of apparent larceny occurred in connection with Mr. Jenkinson's stock of goods. Some ribbons were missing and in these days the absence of a few rolls of ribbons would be readily discovered. The lost treasure was looked for high and low and were given over at last as having been stolen. They had been stolen in fact, but not by felonious biped burglars. They were found weeks afterward in a mouse hole in one of the logs of the wall. George Ritenour owned a mill one mile below Deerfield very early, as he was one among the very first settlers in the region. The village grew at one time to be of considerable size and was in early days the center of a large and prosperous trade, the best time in that respect being from 1845 to 1855. Much grain and stock changed hands there; many goods were sold; a woolen factory, a grist-mill, etc., were built and altogether, that town became a lively place.

But the era of railroads in this region began and drew the current of business elsewhere. Especially since the Union & Logansport and the R. & G. R. R.'s have been made has the town rapidly declined. At one time a grist-mill had a great run of business, people coming from Wabash, Centerville, Greenville, etc. There were other mills, but the Deerfield mill had a great reputation and drew much custom from an extensive region. At one time Deerfield was the only postoffice between Winchester and Fort Wayne.

Randolph.—Location, on Pan Handle railroad, eleven miles west of Union City, one mile south of (old) Deerfield, three miles east of Ridgeville. Recorded May, 1867; seventy-four lots, 44x125 feet. The growth of the place has been slow, and it is yet quite small, being too near Ridgeville (a point where two important railroads cross each other) for extensive trade. Some business, however, is done and considerable grain and stock are handled.

Saratoga.—Location, section 25, 21, 14, on Pan Handle railroad, fifty-two lots; J. C. Albright, proprietor. Recorded August 10, 1875. The town was begun under the name of Warren Station, about 1867, when the Pan-Handle railroad was built, though the plat seems not to have been recorded till 1875. It grew up immediately upon the completion of the Union & Logansport railroad and has become the center of some trade. In 1880, there were three stores. It now has one bank, one postoffice, one hotel, one schoolhouse, two churches—United Brethren, frame, 1870; Methodist Episcopal, brick, 1877, also all merchandise is handled here; one cemetery. The town has some growth and does a fair business. It is seven miles from Union City, four miles from Randolph and five miles from Deerfield.

Stone Station (Clark Post Office)—Small unincorporated town and station on Richmond & Grand Rapids railroad on sections 30 and 31, 21, 14, four miles from Winchester and four miles from Ridgeville. It is not a laid out town but a small station on the Richmond & Fort Wayne railroad, started about the time of the completion of that road, 1870. The place is small with but little business. A fearful casualty occurred at the place in March, 1882. The boiler of a steam saw-mill exploded, killing several persons outright and wounding others.

BIOGRAPHY.

Benjamin Clevenger was born in Pennsylvania in 1816 and came to Randolph county, Indiana, about 1850; married first in Pennsylvania but lost his wife there and was married again in Randolph county, in 1851. His second wife was Sarah Ann Smiley, who was born in 1838 and whose parents moved to Randolph county the same year. Mr. Clevenger moved to Pennsylvania after living awhile here, but he returned again and took up his permanent abode two miles east of Deerfield on the Greenville state road. He had only three children. He was a thriving farmer, owning about one hundred and forty acres of land; a Democrat in politics and township trustee during two terms, 1876-80.

William Doty was born in Maryland. He came to Butler county, Ohio, and to Randolph county, Indiana, the latter removal having been made in 1828. He was the father of eleven children. Mr. Doty was a farmer, residing just across the Mississinewa river from Deerfield.

Samuel Emery.—Among the quaint personages of the pioneer times of Randolph county, Samuel Emery was conspicuous. We regret that no detailed history of him has been obtained. He was an early settler, among the first and he died a very old man, yet no one has been found who can give a definite history of his life. Andrew Aker in his "reminiscences," furnishes a hint from which to draw a picture of the odd, quaint, sturdy, brave, honest backwoodsman. He says, in substance: "There came to my store in Winchester a strange, uncouth-looking fellow with a bundle of skins on his back. His pants were buckskin and ripped up to the knee; the rim of his straw hat was half torn off, his shoes were ragged and tied up with hickory bark and everything else in proportion. He wished to 'trade out' his roll of buckskins. He got several articles; we reckoned up and found the account nearly even. He then said, 'I wish to get some other things—powder, lead and flints; will you trust me?' I asked Charles Conway. 'Oh, Sam Emery is all right; he is one of the substantial citizens out on the Mississinewa.' So I 'trusted' him, and he paid promptly. He traded much with me afterward, dealing always fairly like the honorable man that he was." Samuel Emery lost some money and was considerably worried, for "money was money" in those times; besides, no one likes to lose a thing by having it stolen at any time.

Edward Edger, then at Deerfield, thinking perhaps he could guess where the money had gone, since "boys will be boys," and sometimes think they need more than their "pap" thinks they do, advised Mr. Emery to a certain course which he followed faithfully. He took the Bible and read a certain chapter five nights in succession and told his family that he was doing it to find out who took his money and that the one who had taken it would die on the fifth night. The last night as the old man took down the Bible for the fifth time and began to read, one of the boys sang out, "Stop, dad; you might have a death in your own family!" He stopped and made no more inquiry for his money.

Perry Fields lived east of Deerfield on the old state road. He was born in North Carolina in 1802. His father moved to Tennessee in 1804. Perry Fields married Millie Bragg in 1826, and in 1833 they emigrated to Randolph county, settling in Ward township. He bought one hundred and sixty acres in the school section and soon after, forty acres more. He kept on buying at various times until he owned three hundred and sixty-five acres. They had five children. Mr. Fields was a Methodist and a Democrat. Mrs. Fields died very suddenly in the early winter of 1880. She was found in the morning, just before breakfast, sitting in her chair dead. She had been a member of the Methodist church for nearly sixty years; in fact, ever since she was a young girl. [Perry Fields died August, 1882, aged eighty years.]

Jesse Gray was born September 9, 1789, at Newberry, South Carolina. His mother was a native of Ireland and his father, having been born in Maryland, fought through the war of the Revolution and emigrated to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1810. Jesse Gray married Sarah Stone in 1808 and in 1811, in company with a brother-in-law, they set out for Indiana, the wives, children and movables "being brought upon horses equipped with pack-saddles." They did not sleep under a roof upon the route, but, finding some relatives in Knox county, Kentucky, they stopped there, doing this the more willingly since the Indians north of the Ohio river were hostile; the war with England was at hand, and the Indians mostly sided with the British. At the first call for volunteers, Jesse Gray answered the call and joined the first company from that region. They were placed under General Harrison's command at Cincinnati and served in northwestern Ohio. Returning from the war at its close, he found a wife overjoyed to see her husband once more, no word from him having reached her ears during his absence. They next moved to Wayne county, Indiana, soon afterward to Butler county, Ohio, and in 1820, according to his memory, they emigrated to the banks of the Mississinewa river, in Randolph county, where he spent the time upon which in his old age he looked back as his happiest years. His life was, however, by no means quiet, but full rather of adventure and romance. Deer-hunting, bear-killing, Indian-shooting and such like were but the events of his every-day career. He roamed the forests far and wide, Wayne, Randolph and Jay counties, and we know not how much larger a scope of country, were the scenes of his wild pranks and his narrow escapes. Northern Randolph is full of verbal reminiscences of the old hunter, but accurate details are nevertheless not easily obtained. When Fleming, the Indian, was killed at Lewallyn's by Jesse Gray and Smith, the mulatto whom Fleming had wounded, Gray was living on Mud creek near Elias Kizer's. On account of the trouble arising from that homicide, he left the county and the state and resided for several years near Hill Grove, Ohio. Mr. Clapp, resident near Deerfield, saw him at Bridge's Mill, below Greenville in 1826. Tyre Puckett says that Jesse Gray was indicted for the killing of Fleming and that his father, Joseph Puckett, was one of the grand jury that found the indictment. William Warren says he was at Jesse Gray's house in 1832 and that he resided then near Hill Grove, Darke county, Ohio. A lady resident near Deerfield says that her sister lived on old Jesse Gray's place five years, from about 1845 to 1849, and that was north of the Loblolly, near the line of Adams and Wells counties; that he was then a very old man with a number of great-grandchildren and great-great-grandchildren. Judge Wharry, of Greenville, an old man and an almost life-long resident of that town, says that Jesse Gray, as early as 1824, had killed the Indian Fleming, had fled from Randolph on account of it and was living near Hill Grove. He had a good farm there of one hundred acres, but was a famous hunter. Judge Wharry says he has bought great quantities of furs and deerskins from Jesse Gray while he dwelt at Hill Grove and also that Mr. Gray must have moved away to the "Loblolly" about 1840. Darke county history mentions Jesse Gray as settling probably the first in Jackson township, a mile or two from Union City, Ohio, and not far from Hill Grove. After residing for many years north of the Loblolly, he is said to have removed to Jay county, in the region of Camden, and to have died there some years ago. His father, John Gray, is thought to have lived and died one mile north of Deerfield, having had eleven children. Jesse Gray himself was twice married and had a large family. His brother, Hezekiah, went to Texas and died there.

Henry Kizer was born in Botetourt county, Virginia, in 1776; came to Ross county, Ohio, and then to Randolph county, in 1821. He had entered land in 1820, east of Stone Station, in Ward township. His wife was born in 1770, being six years older than her husband. He died August 12, 1823, and his wife died the next day, August 13, 1823, both in middle life. They were earnest Methodists. Thomas W. Kizer, in speaking of his grandmother, when looking at the old family Bible, feelingly remarked: "There is not a word in this old book that grandmother has not read over and over." They had four children, all sons—Elias, Henry, Adam, William.

Daniel Mock was born in Rowan county, North Carolina, in 1784, coming afterward to Greene county, Ohio; he was in the war of 1812, receiving afterward a pension as a soldier. He became a settler in Ward township in 1824, fixing his location on Clear creek. Mr. Mock had ten children, eight of whom were married.

John Mock, the son of Daniel Mock, settled east of Deerfield, on Clear creek, being born in 1811 and coming there with his father from Ohio in 1824. John Mock married Elizabeth Cain, and also Miss Watson, a sister of Hon. E. L. Watson, of Winchester, Indiana. Mr. Mock had a large family; was a farmer and a merchant of Deerfield and a prominent citizen in Randolph county.

Amos Orcutt was born in 1825, in Darke county, Ohio, coming with his father to Randolph county, in 1838. He married in 1848, Phœbe Ann Sutton and had six children. He resided two and a half miles northwest of Deerfield.

Burkett Pierce was born in Virginia in 1793. His father and mother were Samuel and Delilah Pierce and they moved to Ross county, Ohio, in 1800, ten miles from Chillicothe. Mr. Pierce was married to Elizabeth Ward, daughter of Joab Ward and sister of Thomas Ward in 1815, she having been born in 1797. They moved to near Deerfield, Randolph county in 1819 or 1820, and Mr. Pierce resided in the same vicinity until his death. His wife departed this life in 1859, aged about sixty-two years. Their children have been seven in number, to-wit: Matilda, born in 1816, married Jeremiah L. Mock, had eight children and died in 1876; Uriah, born in 1818, married Martha A. Mock, had six children and died in 1878; Delila, died an infant; James married Mercy Whipple, had thirteen children, three pairs of twins; Joel married Sarah Collins and Julia Sherman, the last having one child; Nancy, 1828 (W. C. King), no children; Sarah, 1832.

John B. Sipe is the son of Samuel Sipe, of Ward township. He joined Company C, Ninetieth Indiana Regiment (Fifth Cavalry), August 8, 1862, and served nearly three years, receiving his discharge after the close of the war, June 30, 1865. Two of his brothers were in the same company, viz., Isaac and Martin (Van Buren). The latter was prisoner of war at Richmond, Belle Isle and Andersonville for many months, but was at length set free and joined his regiment. They were all mustered out together. He resided on the old homestead. The voters of Ward township chose him as their trustee in the spring of 1880.

John H. Sipe was a farmer of Ward township. He was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, in 1802; married Mary Brubaker in 1824, came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1842; has had nine children. In the early time of his settlement here, he engaged extensively in teaming and made much money in that way. John Thomas and Perry Fields had had a saw-mill near Mr. Sipe's, where the state road crosses Clear creek, east of Deerfield. Mr. Sipe rebuilt the mill and kept it in operation till the spring of 1880.

Samuel Sipe was born in Pennsylvania in 1798; married Barbara Brubaker in 1823 and came to Ward township, Randolph county, Indiana, in 1847. They had ten children. He entered no land, as he came to the county too late for that. He owned, however, two hundred and forty acres; was a thriving, prosperous farmer, a prominent and energetic citizen and was a member of the Democratic party in politics. He died in 1875, being about seventy-seven years old and was buried in Deerfield cemetery, near the old chapel west of the town. His wife survived her husband. She died October 8, 1882.

Temple Smith was born in 1806, in Adair county, Kentucky; went to Highland county, Ohio, in 1811, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1819. He resided thirty-six years west of Bloomingsport—six years at Buena Vista, two years at Farmland and fifteen years east of Stone Station, Ward township. He married Priscilla Crossley in 1827 (born in 1809). They had twelve children. His wife died in January, 1882.

Allen Wall was among the very first residents of the Mississinewa valley, above Deerfield. He was born in North Carolina in about 1779. His wife's maiden name was Sarah Beechy and they had ten children, all grown and married. Mr. Wall entered forty acres about two miles east of Deerfield, north of the Mississinewa, settling in the region about 1817-18. Samuel Emery lived not very far away, though he came years later. Mr. Wall died in 1835, aged about fifty-six. His wife died in 1841. Nearly the only settlers east of Deerfield in 1819 were the Masseys and the Jacksons. Robert, James and Tense Massey were there some time before. James, at least, was in the county and on the Mississinewa in the summer of 1818. James and Tense Massey appear to have made their first entry in sections 10 and 11, January 26, 1818, and William Jackson in section 21, October 2, 1819. Mr. Wall was a farmer and he and his people were Methodists. It is likely that he was a Democrat, as most (though, indeed, not all) of the dwellers in that region were and are of that political faith.

John R. Warren was born in North Carolina in 1813; came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1821, and married Ann Newton in 1834; moved to Ward township, Randolph county, in 1836; entered 160 acres of land and shortly afterward 160 more. He owned at one time 980 acres and had it all under fence. His first wife died in April, 1878, and his second wife in October, 1879. He has had ten children.

Jason Whipple, Deerfield, was born in 1804, in Rhode Island; came to Delaware county, Ohio, in 1817; married Eliza H. Bass in Rhode Island in 1824; moved to Jay county, Indiana, near and north of Liber in 1836, and to Deerfield, Randolph county, in 1847. He had thirteen children. They reside in Randolph, Jay and Adams counties, Indiana, in Missouri, Minnesota and still elsewhere. He has been a farmer, a mechanic and a miller. Mr. Whipple built a steam grist-mill at Deerfield in 1855. It was afterward owned by his son, Willis Whipple. He was twice married.

Thomas L. Addington, farmer, P O. Randolph, was a native of Wayne county, Indiana, and was born January 26, 1829. His father, James Addington, was a native of South Carolina and came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1806. About the year 1809, he married Miss Nancy Lewallyn, by whom he had thirteen children: John L. (deceased), William (killed by lightning in 1852), Benjamin G., Rachel, Thomas L. (our subject), Isaac and Mary. The elder Addington died in Kansas in 1860, while there visiting friends. His father-in-law, Meshach Lewallyn, came to this county about the year 1818, and erected the first mill on the Mississinewa river. He came with his parents to this county in 1832 and settled in the woods; he attended school in a log cabin with slab seats, greased paper windows and a board, supported on pins in the wall, for a writing-desk. He was married in September, 1852, to Miss Marybeth Woodard, by whom he had two children—Melissa and William. Mrs. Addington died in 1854 and in 1857 he married Miss Nancy Pierce, daughter of Burkett Pierce. By her he had four children: Marybeth (deceased), Elizabeth, Elsworth and Anthony.

David Almonrode (deceased) was born in Rockbridge county, Virginia, November 16, 1814, and was a son of George and Margaret Almonrode; he came to this county with his widowed mother about the year 1836; he was first married, June 7, 1838, to Miss Esther Bousman, daughter of Adam Bousman, an early settler of this county. They had six children.

Other men prominent in the early history of Ward township were: William O. King, Elisha L. Lollar, William Montgomery, Thomas G. Mullen, Uriah Pierce, David Pogue, Doctor John Purcell, Jesse Riddlebarger, James A. Sipe (a Mexican soldier), John Smiley, Walter Smiley, William Stick, John R. Warren and Alexander Vorhis. Mr. Vorhis was located near Deerfield until about 1890 at which time he moved to Winchester.

Mr. Vorhis by his personal characteristics won many friends and enjoyed the confidence of the public. In 1863 he married Hettie M. Drew, Shelby county, New York.

Wayne Township.—Wayne township was created in 1838. It lies on the east side of Randolph county, Indiana, with Jackson township north, Darke county east, Greensfork township on the south and White River township at the west. The township is about eight miles north and south and five miles east and west, containing about forty sections. It lies on both sides of the old (Wayne's) boundary, embracing most of township 17 and the south part of township 18 north, range 1 west and the north part of township 19, and all of township 20, range 15 east. It is located upon Greenville and Dismal creeks and also on White river and Little Mississinewa river. The surface is mostly level and some of it quite low, though probably its entire extent is tillable by proper drainage. Greenville creek is in the southeast, Dismal in the central east, Little Mississinewa in the center and northeast and White river in the west. The western part was first settled in 1818 and onward. The first settlers were at Jericho. Amos Peacock, Benoni Hill, Hiram Hill and Abram Peacock were perhaps the first. They came in 1818. Joshua Foster came very early in 1819 or 1820. Robert Murphy, three and a half miles south of Union City, came in 1834. Settlers in that region and soon after were James Griffis, in 1833; Smith Masterson. William Kennon lived on the State road in 1832. He was the father of Smith Kennon, northwest of Bartonia. John Dixon lived one and a half miles north of Murphy. Mr. Green lived on the state road. The first important mill in Wayne township was Cox's, on White river, about five miles east of Winchester, built in 1825. It was sold to Joseph and Benjamin Pickett before a long time and bought afterward (1853) by William Pickett and run till 1864; stood idle through five dry years and was pulled down in 1870. The first school probably was in Jericho settlement, among the Friends in 1822 or 1823. Mariam Hill taught the school in Friends' meeting-house, with twenty or twenty-five pupils.pupils. Friends' meeting was established about 1821 at Jericho. The first school near Robert Murphy's he said was about 1838. Several settlers came in that year and the neighbors built a little log cabin schoolhouse with no windows, but a log cut out for light. The first meeting-house in his region was at South Salem. They used to go to Coletown, Ohio, at first where was a Congregational church. The members of the Friends' meeting were Benoni Hill, Amos Peacock, Henry Hill, Abram Peacock, Elijah Cox, William Cox. There was no preacher in the meeting for a long time. The first one in the bounds of the meeting was John Jones. It was a quaint but affecting sight to witness those faithful souls gathering in that humble woods cabin and sitting in utter quiet, without a word of prayer or exhortation or song, waiting in stillness on the Lord for the power of His purifying spirit in their hearts, meeting thus week by week, month by month, year by year, without weariness and without failing, humbly and in love both with God and with men.

Different settlers came at various times. Some of those who are now prominent came later. James Griffis moved to the Griffis farm in about 1838; Norton, near Bartonia; Graves, old town of Randolph; Bailey, who kept a store and tavern just east of Randolph in 1846, and for years before and after came very early. The father of Thomas S. Kennon, northwest of Bartonia, came in 1830. Mr. Shockney, father of Samuel Shockney, west of Bartonia, emigrated from Maryland in 1840. Williamson, on the State Line pike, south of Union City, settled there in about 1838. Elihu Cammack, on the State road, east of Bartonia, settled there in 1846, but was born near Arba in 1817. William Pickett settled in White River township in 1828 and in Wayne township at the Cox Mill property in 1853. The Pollys and the Masons came in early. George Thomas, son of Benjamin Thomas, near Newport, Indiana, settled in Randolph county (Jericho), in 1835, and his wife in Wayne township in 1818. William A. Macy, north of Elihu Cammack, came there in 1852. John Hartman, northwest of William A. Macy, settled there in 1848. Gullett, west of Robert Murphy's, came to that place about 1836. Poor settled near the Griffis farm. Joshua Foster came to the same neighborhood early—1820 or sooner; Sheets, north of Union, in 1830.

The "Bee Line," the original Indianapolis & Bellefontaine road, was the second road in the state, built in 1851-53. The "Pan Handle" was begun about the same time, and constructed to Union City from Columbus soon after, but completed to Logansport about 1867. These roads are now parts respectively of two immense railroad corporations, holding each thousands of miles of track and millions of dollars' worth of fixtures and apparatus.

At first, emigrants in great numbers passed westward and in a few years vast droves of cattle came East on the same route. Many persons kept hotel and pasture and feed stations for people and for droves. Immense crowds of cattle used to go East along this route during twenty or thirty years—in fact, until the Bellefontaine railroad stopped the business, in 1853—seven or eight hundred fat cattle would be in a single drove. The road would be tracked in straight, deep hollows, as if logs had been "plumped" down lengthwise and taken up, leaving a huge mark across the road.

In Wayne township, James Griffis kept one of the chief stations for droves for many years. William Robison, whose father lived not far east of Winchester, said his father kept a tavern and also fed cattle more or less. The charges seem to have been low enough, compared with these times. The price for man and horse (supper, lodging and breakfast for both) was thirty-seven and a half cents. He says also that the boys had often to sleep in the barn on the hay-mow to make room for the travelers in the house. The business of feeding droves seems to have been lucrative. At least, the men who followed it appear generally to have become wealthy, principally, perhaps, for two reasons—first, they had of course large tracts of land for pasture; second, the feeding gave them a home market for all the corn and hay they could raise. The business of keeping tavern was indeed important in those early days. When all the travel from east to west went through "hy land." great means of accommodation would be needed; and, as it is always, a public demand created a general supply, and on all the chief roads and in every town, one of the chief occupations used to be to keep travelers.

Entries of land were made in Wayne township by the records as follows: Jeremiah Moffitt, N. W. 18, 20, 15, 160 acres, December 1, 1812; William Chenoweth, S. E. 24, 17, 1, 160 acres, September 24, 1817; William Chenoweth, S. E. 25, 17, 1, 160 acres, September 24, 1817; Abram Chenoweth, N. E. 26, 17, 1, 157.83 acres, September 24, 1817; Abram Chenoweth, N. W. 26, 17, 1, 157.83 acres, September 24, 1817; Abram Chenoweth, S. W. 26, 17, 1. 127.83 acres, September 24, 1817; Jeremiah Cox, section 19, 20, 15, 640 acres, February 6, 1818; Abram Peacock, N. E. 30, 20, 15, 160 acres, April 15, 1818; Henry Hill, E. S. E. 30, 20, 15, 80 acres, April 15, 1818; Amos Peacock, E. N. E. 31, 20, 15, 80 acres, April 15, 1818; Benoni Hill, E. S. E. 31. 20, 15. 80 acres. April 15, 1818; Jeremiah Cox, S. E. 18, 20, 15, 160 acres, May 29, 1818; Christopher Baker, W. S. E. 20, 20, 15, 80 acres, May 17, 1818; Joshua Cox, W. N. W. 30, 20, 15, 80 acres, December 10, 1822; Amy Cox, W. N. E. 29, 20, 15, 80 acres. September 24, 1824; Jefferson L. Summers, N. W. N. E. 33, 17, 1, 39.64 acres, April 12, 1826; Solomon Cox, E. N. E. 29, 20, 15, 80 acres, May 16, 1826; Joshua Buckingham, E. N. E. 6, 19, 15, 79.60 acres, August 11, 1826. The rest of the township, i. e., th great body of the land therein, lay vacant for several years, being entered chiefly from 1834 to 1838.

The first entry in the county seems to have been made within the present bounds of Wayne township. The location is about a mile west of Harrisville, on the White river. How the man who made the entry got away in there, so far from any settlement, and why he entered that particular quarter-section, would be interesting at this day to know, but probably the facts will be forever hidden in the tomb of the forgotten past. This entry was made more than a year before the first settlement, which took place in April, 1814, and some fifteen miles southeast, on Nolan's fork.

The next entry was made by the Chenoweths, directly east of Bartonia, on Greenville creek, being section 26, 17, 1, a part of which is still owned and occupied by the widow of Abram Chenoweth, who died a few years ago. Abram Chenoweth, the father of the Abram of later days, entered three quarter-sections in section 26 on both sides of Greenville creek, in 1817. During the winter following (February 6, 1818), Jeremiah Cox, of Wayne county, who had been employed in milling for years in that region, came up to White river, a mile or two above Harrisville, and entered a whole section —section 19, 20, 15—on both sides of the river, with a view of erecting mills after awhile in that new county—a purpose which he accomplished about 1825. The same year, April 15, 1818, Abram and Amos Peacock and Henry and Benoni Hill made entries and effected a settlement shortly after, in 1818. They are supposed to have been the first actual settlers in Wayne township.

The growth of this region was but slow. After the Chenoweth entries and the Jericho colony, but little was done till many years later. The Chenoweth land was not settled till more than twenty years later (1840). The Coxes, the Peacocks and Hills came in from Wayne county and the south, but the next considerable movement entered the territory south of Union City, breaking across the line from Ohio and the East.

The Chenoweth who entered the land so early in Wayne township (September 24, 1817), lived near Spring Hill, Darke county, Ohio. He was the grandfather of Abram Chenoweth. The first Chenoweth who resided on the land was Abram Chenoweth, cousin of the one spoken of just above. He made the settlement about 1840.

By the end of 1826 only eighteen entries had been made, and that by fourteen persons. These entries comprised about thirty-one hundred acres. Nearly all, or 2,650 acres, were taken up in a few months, almost at first, from September 24, 1817, to May 29, 1818, by the settlement of Friends. They lived there, nearly in seclusion, for many years, having communication with the White River settlers toward the west, but not much any other way, except, indeed, to go to the Whitewater mills for grinding, and the Whitewater yearly meeting for religious purposes.

The first religious meeting in Wayne township was probably that of the Friends, at Jericho, and the first school the one in their meeting-house.

There are not many churches in this township. There are, outside of Union City, only four—Methodist, at Bartonia; Friends', at Jericho; Christian, at Harrisville; and Disciples, at Salem. The Friends began their society about 1820; the church at Bartonia was built about 1850; the one at Harrisville, about 1860; and the one at Salem, perhaps about 1855.

TOWNS.

The towns in Wayne township are, or have been, Bartonia, Harrisville, Randolph, Salem and Union City. We describe them in order:

Bartonia.—Edward Barton, proprietor; A. D. Way, surveyor; location, junction of Spartanburg and Arba pike with Greenville state road; twenty-seven lots; recorded October 1, 1849; streets, none named in the plat. Distances: Spartanburg, four miles; Union City, seven and one-third miles; Winchester, eight miles; Harrisville, six miles; Saratoga, four and three-fourths miles; Arba, seven and four-fifths miles. The town is located at the point where the Richmond pike running northward reaches the Greenville & Winchester road, and stands upon section 26, 17, 1. At one time there were two stores, a smith shop, a cabinet shop, a turning shop, a postoffice, a meeting-house and two physicians. But little is left at present.

Bartonia is one of the polling places of Wayne township, the other two being Union City and Harrisville. Bartonia is half a mile east of the site of the old town of Randolph, which, however, has been extinct for sixty-five years or more. The country around is rolling and fertile, and the residents are thrifty and prosperous, and some possess a comfortable fortune.

Harrisville.—Location, in Wayne township, upon sections 17, 18, town 20, range 15; on the Bee Line (Big Four) railroad, four miles west of Union City, and seven miles east of Winchester; recorded June 17, 1854; Job Harris, proprietor; E. L. Watson, surveyor. The town arose with the Bellefontaine railroad. The business of the town was but little at first, and the improvement of the village has since been slow. There is but one public road, and that running north and south across the railroad track. The town is too near Union City to command much business. The antecedents and commencement of the place are as follows: In 1841, and about ten years before the birth of the town, two small cabins stood upon the site where now appears the hamlet of Harrisville. One was occupied by Michael Ingle, father of Philip Ingle. Mr. Ingle died of cholera some years afterward on the Mississippi. The other settler was William Dickinson, who lived near where the church now stands. About 1851 Job Harris undertook to open a small store. He shortly afterward laid out the town. Before long William Locke set up a blacksmith shop, and William Benson built a saw-mill. Mahlon Fous followed, making pumps, and sometimes tried his hand at repairing wagons. Dr. Dreer undertook to practice medicine, and Mr. Bone made and mended shoes. Job Harris kept a postoffice. Here we have the picture of the town in its earlier years, and truth compels us to state that the business of the ambitious little "ville" is not greatly more extensive at the present day. Its citizens seem to have been attached to the place. Philip Ingle resided here from the first. Mahlon Fous and William Locke also. The Bee Line railroad passes through the place and furnishes to the vicinity the convenience of a daily mail.

Randolph (old).—One mile west of Bartonia, on Greenville state road. Randolph was probably the first town laid out in Wayne township, but the business was never considerable. In 1846 there were two stores and one hotel, but probably nothing else. The hotel was kept by Bailey, and the stores were by Bailey and McIntosh. The town did not prosper, and was wholly extinct by 1852. At one time James Polly kept hotel in the town. It is a curious reminiscence of that old dead town that one of its lots was sold for taxes, and was bid off for a dollar or so by an old colored man named William Lewis, and he undertook to make it a residence, hauling logs there to build a house. The owner of the farm which included the town forbid him entering upon the lot, and he never made good his title to the premises. What a man with plenty of money could have done, cannot now be told, but the colored man had to succumb and lose his dollar and the labor in hauling the logs to boot.

Salem.—Location southwest of Union City, east of "Old Boundary." Nine lots; plat recorded December 25, 1849. David Polly, proprietor. Salem is located on the road running east from Jericho, three miles from the latter place. McIntosh & Polly had a store there in 1847. The town began about 1850. A postoffice was established about 1852 by the name of Balaka. The town was begun mostly in the woods, and did some business for a time, but it has had the common fate of small towns near, but not on, a railroad. Silas Gist had a cabinet shop. J. Locke had a smith shop. The persons who have sold goods there have been D. Polly, McIntosh, Wiggs & Polly, Joseph Shaw, Elijah Frazier, Hardin Law, Downing & Harkrider, Alfred Dixon, Montgar. The blacksmiths have been J. Locke, Joshua Harlan, Amos Coughren, Thompson, William Anderson and others. Cabinet shops: Silas Gist, John T. Adams, Springer, Harlan, etc. Wagon shop, Harlan. There has been a Disciples' church sixty years or more, which has lately been remodeled. Among the settlers in the region have been Benjamin Dixon, Silas Dixon, Samuel Downing, Robert Murphy, William Woodbury, 1839; Nathan P. Woodbury, 1839; Edwin R. Woodbury, 1839; Peter Hoover, Ezekiel Gullett, Samuel Gullett, David Polly, 1840; Barnahill Polly, 1840.

Hayesville.—Is a little suburb of Union City, Indiana, located about a mile southwest of that town, at the junction of the south pike leading to Winchester and the pike, extending from the south line of the county northward to Union City.

James Alexander, a prominent farmer of Wayne township, was born in Warren county, Ohio, January 8, 1818, being a son of Daniel and Sarah Alexander, who removed from the county of their nativity to Preble county, Ohio, in 1823, and not very long afterward to Warren county, in the same state. Daniel Alexander was a farmer, and James grew up a farmer's son, sharing from boyhood the labors and hardships of those rough and rugged days. His marriage occurred September 2, 1840, with Miss Julia A., daughter of Jacob Alexander. Eight children have been born to them, and six of the eight survive, viz., Milton H., Mary J., Sarah E., Hugh T., Henry J. and James B. Mr. Alexander is not an early pioneer of Randolph county, emigrating thither not till 1851.

Branson Anderson, born in 1814 in North Carolina; he came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1833; he entered forty acres adjoining John Hartman's old place on the west. Mr. Anderson married Hester Green in 1842, and they had ten children.

John Anderson, born in 1785 in Maryland, went to North Carolina when young; married Priscilla Sexton about 1802; came to Richmond, Indiana, 1829; came to Randolph county in 1833; settled north of Greenville creek, near Abram Chenoweth's (Jacob Macy farm), entering forty acres of land there. He had twelve children, all grown, and ten married before he died. His children were eight boys and four girls. He died in 1850, and his wife in 1863, at the age of seventy-seven years; she was buried in Hoover's graveyard. Mr. Anderson was a Democrat.

Henry Burket was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, and is a son of Isaac and Catharine Burket, the former a native of North Carolina, and the latter of Ohio Mr. Burket was raised on a farm, receiving only a common education. In 1854 he married Miss Jane Hulse, by whom he had five children, three of whom are yet living. His wife died on April 12, 1870, and on the 17th of the following September he married Mrs. Rachel A. Grim, by whom he had three children.

Elihu Cammack, son of John Cammack, born in Arba in 1817; married Rebecca Wiggs in 1837. Lived near Arba on the old farm till he moved to his home on the state road, east of Bartonia, in 1846, in the green woods.

Abram I. Chenoweth, the first of the Chenoweth family of whom we have any record, came from England to America in 1720. They were two brothers, named Arthur and Richard Chenoweth, who settled in Berkeley county, Virginia, and each married and had several children. Arthur had several sons named James, John, Abraham, William Thomas, Arthur and Richard The fifth son, Thomas Chenoweth, married Mary Pricket, who bore him twelve children, namely, Martha, Sarah, Mary, John, Thomas, Arthur, Richard, William Elijah, Ann, Hannah and Abraham. This youngest son, Abraham Chenoweth, married Rebecca Herr, May 1, 1790. They had fourteen children. whose names were Martha, William, Jacob, Ann, John, Susannah, Mary, Noah, Sarah, Hannah, Abraham, Rebecca, Joel and Gideon. Their third son, John Chenoweth, married Mary Barger April 13, 1820, and by her had six children, namely, William, Jacob B., Abraham J., John B., Susan and Rebecca. John Chenoweth, the father, died on the 26th day of January, 1851, and of the children, William died February 20, 1837, and John B. died August 7, 1853. The mother died October 12, 1876.

Of the last above-named children, Abraham J. Chenoweth is the subject of this sketch, and was born in Pike county, Ohio, on the 9th of July, 1826. When quite young, his parents removed to Darke county, Ohio, and settled in Washington township. Here he grew up, surrounded by the privations of a frontier life, and accustomed to the labor and toil of the backwoods. He was educated in the primitive schools of that day, and acquired the rudiments of an education. On the 25th day of August, 1848, he was married to Miss Celia Harris, a native of Campbell county, Virginia, and the daughter of Benjamin and Susan Harris, who were among the pioneers of this county. From this marriage have sprung eight children.

In November, 1848, Mr. Chenoweth came to this county and settled on the northeast quarter of section 26, in Wayne township. Of this land, he had received from his father eighty acres, and by purchase from his brother, Jacob, he had acquired the other eighty. The land was wholly unimproved. In fact, Mr. Chenoweth cut away the underbrush and trees to make an opening for his log cabin, into which he removed and began the work of life. As a farmer he was eminently successful. To the original homestead he added other lands, until at the time of his death he was the owner of 576 acres.

Mr. Chenoweth united with the Methodist Episcopal church when he was fourteen years of age, and for thirty-eight years he was a consistent and influential members thereof, having been a class leader thirteen years. He was exact in all his business transactions, cordial with his acquaintances, a kind-hearted and generous man. He died of typhoid fever November 9, 1878, and his mortal remains were followed to their final earthly resting place in Union City cemetery by a large and sympathizing company of sorrowing relatives and friends.

Samuel Downing, M. D., was born in Chester county, South Carolina, April 6, 1805; his parents were John and Margaret. The father died in 1870, aged ninety-three years, and the mother about 1866, also very old. Dr. Downing was one of eight children. His father came from South Carolina to Bourbon county, Kentucky, in 1813, to New Paris, Preble county, Ohio, in 1815, and to Darke county, Ohio, in 1817, which latter point became his permanent residence, Samuel Downing being then twelve years old. In 1828 he began the study of medicine, privately for the most part, in which laborious but greatly useful profession he finally achieved an honorable success. In 1829 he married Elizabeth Baird, and to them were born ten children, seven of whom, as also his wife, survived him. They removed to the wilds of Randolph county, Indiana, in 1837, settling four miles southwest of what is now Union City, Indiana, near what afterward became South Salem, upon a tract of land containing 215 acres. At first he was largely a farmer, but, as the county became more thickly settled, his medical duties chiefly absorbed his time and strength, for in those backwoods regions, to ride on horseback day and night, winter and summer, was no "child's play," but the business rather of a robust, stalwart man. February 5, 1843, he was baptized into the Christian faith by Rev. Elihu Harlan, to which profession he held fast with greater or less steadfastness to the end of his days. In 1859 he made an extended tour into Missouri and through the farther West in search of a new location, and in 1864 he removed to northern Michigan as a pioneer into those regions. After a residence of some five years in that state, he returned in 1870 to Randolph county, Indiana, and died after a stay of eight months there, July 7, 1871, at the house of his son, James L. Downing, at the age of sixty-six years three months and one day.

Francis Frazier, bell-maker, was born in 1802 in North Carolina; came to McCowan's creek, Ohio, in 1811; came to Randolph county, Indiana, one mile east of Lynn, in 1817. His father was James Frazier, also a bell-maker; married Lucinda Claywater in Clinton county, Ohio, in 1823, and they had eleven children.

Paul Gittinger was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, January 25, 1820, being a son of Jacob and Mary E. Gittinger, who emigrated to Darke county, Ohio, in the autumn of 1833, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1838. They settled in the dense, nearly unbroken forests of Jackson township among the deer, turkeys and wolves, locating in the northeastern portion of the township and of the county. Paul Gittinger was nearly grown when he came to Randolph county, and having enjoyed some opportunity of early education, had engaged soon afterward in the business of teaching school, and continued in that employment (during the winter season) for twenty years. The school houses at the time in that new half-settled region were rude enough, made of round logs, with puncheon floor, clapboard door, stick chimney, dirt fire-place and hearth and clapboard roof held to its place by weight-poles. The furniture consisted of split saplings for seats and puncheon writing desk, supported by pins driven into auger holes bored in the logs forming the walls of the house. Mr. Gittinger lived to see these rustic cabins replaced by comfortable and tasteful edifices, substantially and even elegantly built, and supplied with convenient and often beautiful furniture. He did much toward accomplishing this pleasing change, serving as a trustee for Jackson township during several years, besides his efficient and successful labors in the school room. His marriage took place November 13, 1844, the maiden name of his wife having been Miss Berilla Gist, whose parents were natives of Kentucky, removing to Darke county, Ohio, in the early time. Mr. Gittinger had six children.

James Griffis was born in Virginia about 1797. His parents brought him, when but a child, to Ross county, Ohio, settling in the Scioto valley, not farm from the year 1800, when even that region was well-nigh buried in the deep woods. They both died when he was young; and as a lone orphan boy, poor and destitute, he was obliged to struggle up to manhood as he could.

The means of education were but scanty, and he got but little, and that little "by the hardest." In youth, he worked mostly on the farm. In early manhood, however, he practiced flat-boating and rafting, taking boat loads of pork and flour and corn, etc., down the Scioto river to the Ohio and down that river to the mouth, and so along the Mississippi to the points for market along its banks, and frequently to New Orleans itself. He was engaged also at times in taking droves of cattle from Ohio across the Alleghany mountains to the New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore markets. Thus he passed his life till about thirty-five years old, still remaining, notwithstanding all his hard toil, comparatively a poor man, realizing, by all this hard and rough traveling through the land and along the water-courses, not very much more than a livelihood. In 1832 he emigrated from the valley of the Scioto to the banks of Greenville creek in Randolph county (the old Williamson farm, just west of the Ohio line), in the unbroken forests of Wayne township. After residing a few years at the place of his first settlement, he removed to the tract of land which continued to be his residence to the end of his life, the beautiful knoll where, years afterward, stood as a waymark for the weary traveler, and where stands, till this day the substantial and comfortable dwelling erected by him many years ago.

John V. L. Harlan is a native of the county. He is a son of Joshua and Lucinda Harlan, and was born on the 26th day of December, 1848. He was educated in the common district schools, and taught school one term. He learned the blacksmith trade and worked at it for some time. On January 27, 1872, he married Lucy A. Hartman, daughter of John Hartman, whose biography is given in this work. They have had five children, two of whom are dead. Mr. Harlan is now engaged in farming, living on his own farm, five miles southwest of Union City. He and his wife are both members of the Christian church.

Solomon Hartman is the son of John Hartman, Wayne township. He was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1855; came with his father to Randolph county in 1848; attended Buckeye Seminary Union Literary Institute, at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. He taught school before he was seventeen, and has taught twenty-five winters. He married Sarah Ann Williamson in 1858, and they have eight children. He was a prosperous and successful farmer, taking delight in caring for all his affairs in a neat and thorough manner. Though considered slightly eccentric by some, and being withal a man independent in opinion, a most energetic supporter of all good things.

Henry Hill was born in 1790 in North Carolina. Coming to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1817, he changed his residence to Randolph county in 1818, entering eighty acres in Wayne township, Jericho settlement, and residing there till his death in 1874, fifty-six years. Mr. Hill was three times married—to Achsah Peacock in 1814, who was born in 1793 and died in 1830; to Achsah Thomas in 1831, who died in 1835, and the third time in 1837 to Avis Woodard, who died in 1877. Mr. Hill had ten children, all grown and all married.

Benoni Hill was born in North Carolina, came to Jericho, Wayne township, Randolph county, in 1818. Had ten children, seven of whom grew up, and died about 1870. His wife's maiden name was Polly Boswell, and she died about 1860. Mr. Hill was a Friend, an Abolitionist, an Anti-slavery Friend, a Republican, and altogether an excellent Christian man and citizen, having been one of the earliest pioneers of Wayne township.

Mathew Hill was the son of Benoni Hill (deceased), having been born in 1814 in North Carolina. He came with his father, at the age of four years, to Randolph county in 1818. In 1837 he married Fanny Diggs, and they had seven children. Mr. Hill entered eighty acres and was a thriving and successful farmer. He was an Anti-slavery Friend. Mr. Hill, like the great body of the society of which he has been a life-long member, an earnest, faithful, steadfast adherent of Christian principles, and a quiet, humble, unassuming but useful and esteemed member of the community.

William Kennon, born in Ireland, came to America when fourteen years old; lived for a time in Guernsey county, Ohio, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1830. He settled on the Downing place, south from the toll-gate south of Union City. He married Eleanor Smith, and had four children. He owned 210 acres of land, was a Democrat, was justice of the peace for four years, and was highly esteemed for integrity and intelligence. He died many years ago, as did also his wife, but the date of their death cannot now be exactly told.

William A. Macy was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, November 6, 1809, being a son of Obed and Mary (Armfield) Macy, who were both natives of North Carolina. His education was very limited, the "Old North State" being more famous for "pitch tar, turpentine and lumber" than for "school keeping" or "book larnin." He married Miss Jemima Rogers, July 4, 1833, and they had five children. Both his wives (see below) have been members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and his present wife and himself still remain such. He has owned 200 acres of land but now retains but ninety acres, having given 110 to his children. In 1852 he went on a visit to his native state, and upon his return therefrom brought with him his aged mother, who spent the remainder of her days in Randolph county. Mr. Macy emigrated to Randolph county, Indiana, the year of his marriage, 1833. He resided at Spartanburg three years, on the Rogers place, east of Spartanburg, five years, on a farm west of Granger Hall eleven years, and about twenty-eight years upon his farm north of Greenville creek, near Abraham Chenoweth's. His wife died May 24, 1879, and was laid to rest in Arba cemetery. In 1881 he married again to Mrs. Morgan, widow of Frank G. Morgan, late of Spartanburg. [1882.]

Dr. William K. Marquis was a son of William and Polly Marquis, and was born in Darke county, Ohio, on the 9th day of April, 1832. His parents were natives of Hardy county, Virginia, and the mother is yet living at the age of eighty-seven years. He was brought up on a farm, received his education in the common schools, and read medicine with Dr. Enos Williams, of Darke county, beginning the practice of his profession in 1868. In 1853 he married Miss Mary Bennett, by whom he had nine children. She died in October, 1875, and in March, 1877, he married Miss Fannie Coats, by whom he had two children. He was a minister of the German Baptist church.

Richard Mason (father of the "Mason's") was born in North Carolina in about 1795; came to Clinton county, Ohio, when a boy, perhaps in 1805, married Sarah Jackson in Ohio, moved thence to Wayne county, Indiana, and to Kosciusko county, Indiana, to the latter in 1834. He had ten children, and died in 1844 in the last named county, his wife dying in Randolph county, Indiana, in 1850. His children all grew up and were married. and eight still survive. They are as follows: Thomas, ten children, resides at Union City, Indiana; Elizabeth (Mason), seven children, is dead; Delila (Harper), four children, lives in Iowa; Louisa (Drake), seven children, is dead; William has seven children, resides in Union; Sarah (Gunter), one child, Kosciusko county; Salina (Frazier-Milnor), nine children, Iowa; Elihu, several children, resides in Ohio; Mary (Conkling), four children, Wayne township; Jemima (Duncan), three children, Iowa. Six of them have been residents of Randolph county, Thomas, William, Salina, Elihu, Mary and Jemima; and Thomas, William and Mary live here still.

Amos Peacock and Abram Peacock came together from Carolina in the fall of 1818. Four families were in company—Amos Peacock, Abram Peacock, Henry Hill and Benoni Hill. The three last named settled in Jericho in 1818. Amos Peacock raised one crop in Wayne county, and came on in the fall of 1819. Amos Peacock raised nine children—Aaron, Jonah, William, Elijah and Elisha (twins), Matilda, Abram, Anna and Abigail.

William Peacock was born in Wayne county, Indiana, October 10, 1818, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1819, and lived in Jericho. He married Mary Thomas, daughter of Benjamin Thomas, near Newport, Indiana, in 1840. They had three children. He was in early times an original Anti-slavery Friend, and a sincere and thorough Abolitionist; he was for a number of years a trustee of the Union Literary Institute, a manual labor institution established in 1845, by his father-in-law, Benjamin Thomas, and others, for the education of colored and other indigent youth; he was greatly esteemed for his thorough integrity, and his sincere, quiet, solid, unobtrusive piety. After the dissolution of the society of Anti-slavery Friends, he rejoined the "Body Friends," but afterward, with a few others, withdrew from them, forming a new "Meeting," claiming to adhere to the methods and usages of the early and original Friends. They are almost alone, the great mass of Friends having "progressed" greatly from the standards of action of fifty years ago. The "new method" Friends maintain, however, that they are in harmony not indeed with the measures of fifty years past, but with the principles and spirit of George Fox and William Penn, and the Quakers of "long, long ago."

Elijah H. Peacock is a twin-brother of Elisha Peacock, and they were born in Randolph county, Indiana, January 28, 1820. They are sons of Amos and Hannah Peacock. Elijah received an education under the auspices of the Friends church, and for several years followed the carpenter trade. On November 15, 1853 he married Miss Agnes Brown, a native of Cheltenham, England, and they have seven children. Mr. Peacock is now a farmer, living on his own farm of 118 acres in the southwest part of Wayne township, and is the last of the "Old Guard."

William Pickett, was born in Orange County, N. C., 1802. In 1818, he went to Chatham county in the same state (on Haw river), to take care of his grandfather. He died in 1821, and William Pickett, after staying until the fall of 1822, emigrated to Richmond, Ind. He was married in 1826, and moved to Randolph county, five miles east of Winchester, in 1828. His first wife's name was Sarah Ann White, born in 1805. Mr. Pickett bought eighty acres in the green woods, of Benjamin Cox (nephew of Jeremiah Cox, the famous miller). Benjamin Cox was a Quaker minister and cousin to Mr. Pickett, since Jeremiah Cox's wife was the sister of Mr. Pickett's father. Benjamin Cox was the son of John Cox, one of the earliest settlers on White river, east of Winchester, who fixed his residence two miles east of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Pickett were the parents of twelve children.

John Pickett was born in Orange county, N. C., August 4, 1808; he emigrated to Randolph county, Ind., with his father in 1829. Returning to North Carolina, he married Mary Pike, September 16, 1830, and, with his new-found wife, wended his cheerful way back to the Northwest, reaching his father's cabin December 24, 1830. Choosing a home for himself and wife in "Jericho Woods," he dwelt on the self-same spot for more than fifty years, rearing there a family of ten children.

Benjamin Pike was born in North Carolina in 1825; came with his father to Randolph county in 1831; married Rachel Cox and has three children. He has been a farmer and huckster. He is a Friend, Abolitionist and Republican. His health is poor, but he manages to be engaged in his occupation much of the time. Mr. Pike is a bluff and plain-spoken, but honest and upright citizen and is endeavoring quietly but earnestly to accomplish a comfortable subsistence for himself and those placed under his care. [1882.]

Other prominent citizens in Wayne township were: Jacob Conklin, William Conklin, Rev. David S. Davenport, Benjamin Dickson, Silas Dickson, Benjamin F. Graves, John V. Harlan, John Hartman, Christopher Hollinger, Peter Hoover, Andrew Hutton, Josiah Kaylor, John Kunkle, Thomas Mason, Andrew McConnell, Jonathan T. Mikesell, D. T. Morris, Nelson Murphy, Robert Murphy, Henry Ohler, John Pike, John Price, Ollen Sasser, John Sheets, William Shelly, William Shockney, Samuel H. Shockney, Peter M. Shultz, William Smith, George Thomas, Elihu Thompson, Thomas Welsh, Jacob Whitesell, James Woodbury, Edwin R. Woodbury, William Turner.

Stoney Creek Township.—Stoney Creek includes parts of townships 19 and 20, range 12 east, as also some sections in range 13, embracing in all twenty-nine and one-half sections; five miles north and south except section 7, near the southeast corner and five and one-half miles east and west, and containing about sixteen thousand nine hundred and sixty acres. It takes the lower course of Little White river, of Stoney creek and of Cabin creek and a part of the valley of White river. Totals as follows: 1821, three entries, 240 acres; 1822, nine entries, 841.63 acres; 1823, five entries, 399.46 acres; 1824, one entry, 80 acres; 1825, two entries, 160 acres; 1826, three entries, 240 acres; 1827, two entries, 160 acres; 1828, five entries, 400 acres; 1829, fourteen entries. 1,168.64 acres. Total, 44 entries, 3,769.63 acres.

Of these, thirty-nine entries were of 80 acres, two for 160 acres, one for 128.64 acres, one for 118.86 acres. one for 41.63 acres, one for 40.20 acres. Thus it will be seen that the entries were made mostly by men of only moderate means. The township lies chiefly on Stoney and Cabin creeks and White river, containing a fine body of land and being well settled with substantial improvements. The surface is level or rolling, heavily timbered at first, but now mostly cleared. The streams are permanent, affording abundant water and considerable power for machinery, especially upon Cabin and Stoney creeks. The mill upon Stoney creek near Windsor is thought to have been the fifth mill in the county.

The place and the time of the first settlement in the township cannot now be determined with absolute certainty. It has been claimed that John Thornburg, near Windsor, was the first settler and that the time was 1823. Both of these would seem to be errors. John Thornburg did not come before about 1825 and when he came he found a considerable number of settlers already in the county. His son, Armfield Thornburg, who was a lad several years old when his father came to the county, states as follows: When my father came to Randolph county and settled near Windsor in 1825, the following settlers were already on hand: John Castine and Solomon Hobaugh, his son-in-law and John Coons, all of whom came in 1822; David Vestal, who had been elected Squire, Joseph Rooks and Abraham Clevenger, all of whom came in 1823; John Conner in 1824, George W. Smithson in 1825.

Probably, either David Vestal or Isaac Branson was the first actual bona fide settler and Branson moved away soon, first to Nettle creek and not very long afterward to Delaware county and David Vestal sold out after several years to John Thornburg and moved away to White Lick, below Indianapolis, in 1831, and died there The Thornburgs, Job, Joab and John, all came in 1825, who are living yet where they settled. Others came soon after, among whom were Randolph Smullen and William Moore in 1826, and perhaps others.

Some of the persons named as early settlers were only "squatters," and moved on into the woods before the advancing wave of settlement. Lemuel Vestal came in 1825 and with him John Demory, a freeman of color from Carolina, of whom mention is made elsewhere; Vestal undertook to build a mill near Windsor as told in another place. Others may be mentioned as follows: John Hines and Paul Reagan in 1826; Wesley Terrell in 1827: Amos Smith and Benjamin Garretson in 1828; Solomon Wright in 1829, John Bond and Andrew G. Dye in 1831. Still others had already or did soon come, to-wit: John Holloway, William Holloway, Jonathan Finzer, John Clevenger, Jonathan Clevenger, John Diggs, Jacob McNees and Isaac Amburn.

Stoney Creek was settled largely at first by the Society of Friends and to this day a very strong body of that people remain within its limits. Cedar and Poplar Run meetings are both in Stoney Creek, and very many of the honored pioneers of that section worshiped in these sanctuaries and now lie awaiting the "Archangel's trump" in the humble inclosure of the dead which is near those sacred places of humble waiting upon the Spirit of the Lord

In life they spent their years in quiet industry and patient and sincere obedience to the guidance of the voice within; now for those earnest, steadfast souls, faith has been changed to sight and struggling prayer to triumphant praise The first school in the township was taught in 1826 by Moses Hodson, then a young man, his home being in Delaware county, four or five miles from Windsor. The schoolhouse stood between Joab and John Thornburg's. There were perhaps twenty pupils. Armfield Thornburg, that tells the story, was one of them.

Solomon Wright tells some queer tales "out of school" concerning the pupils and the teachers of "auld lang syne," one in particular, how the girls on the last day of school tore down the dirt back-wall of the stick chimney belonging to the cabin schoolhouse and scattered the clay all over the puncheon floor.

Like other new and pioneer regions, Stoney creek has its traditions of odd and queer things taking place amid the mighty shadow of the giant forest. Of one early settler it is related that he had a family of fourteen children and that another settler, a neighbor, going in early one morning found on the hearth a huge kettle of corn meal mush, and that while he sat there the youngsters crawled out from the straw upon the cabin floor one by one, and, taking each a pewter plate, went singly to the smoking mush for a bountiful share and partook joyfully of a hearty breakfast. But what difference does it make? These tales told of early times are, many of them, fabrications and more are greatly "stretched" from the original fact. But even if true as told, who cares? It is to be feared that, if their effeminate descendants were thrown into the same hard and rough condition, they would do even not so well as that; that they would have neither roof over their shiftless heads, straw to crawl out of nor a kettle of mush to eat from, pewter plate to handle it on, nor spoon with which to carry it to their mouths.

TOWNS.

There have been only two towns within the bounds of Stoney Creek township and one of these has long been extinct. The two are Windsor and Georgetown, the latter "winked out" long years ago.

Windsor.—Location, section 29, town 20, range 12, on Winchester & Muncie pike at the Delaware county line. The town was laid out by Joseph Thornburg in 1832, during what may aptly be termed the "era of town-platting," since many of the villages in Randolph were projected not far from that date Windsor seems to have been aspiring and to have had high prospects as well, for only five years after the record of the first survey of forty lots, twenty more (half the original number) were annexed to the growing town by Smith & Dye, thus affording fresh room to spread beyond the original limit. And it is undoubtedly true that, had the old order of business continued to prevail, Windsor might today have been an important and prosperous inland town. But the sad fact, sad for Windsor and its ambitious denizens can neither be ignored nor changed, so the fates declared and who can successfully rebel against fate? If there had been power in the beginning of railroad construction, to have drawn the Bee Line route south of the river instead of locating it on the north side through the unknown wilderness, then, indeed, might Windsor have come to be, not, indeed, like its illustrious namesake in a foreign island kingdom, a palatial residence for Her Majesty, the English Queen, but a wide-awake, bustling, prosperous commercial and manufacturing center, known and noted throughout the county and the region. But men cannot lose what they never had, so Windsor has not lost the greatness which she never possessed. And her people, instead of mourning over fancied unrealized possibilities, may be sincerely thankful that life, health and substantial comfort and the means of solid happiness they still possess equally with the people of the proudest metropolis on the footstool.

The first business in Windsor was a shoe shop by Isiah Templin and a small store by a man from Richmond, name forgotten. Soon was set up a smith shop by Andrew Knapp. The mill by John Thornburg was built in 1827. There was no other on White river but Judge Sample's and Cox's mill, east of Winchester. The first wagon shop was by William Ludworth. Windsor at one time had a large business, having three good stores and a grocery and other things to match. The activity of the place began some years before the town was recorded It proved its right to be by its actual being. Business is like beauty—it is its own excuse for being.

Present business: There is a goodly number of houses and business rooms, and were the place to fill up to its capacity of furnishing facilities for work, it would even now be an active, busy town. But the real business is now small enough. There are two smith shops, two dry goods stores, one wagon shop, one physician, two churches (Methodist and Christian), one schoolhouse, a lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Georgetown.—There were never more than six houses in Georgetown. The village is now wholly extinct. Several of the old lots are owned and built on separately, but there is no town. Dr. Keener resided there as a physician, as also Dr. Marine. How there should have been any town at all, or the hope or prospect of any, is a mystery, since Macksville was within a mile or even less than that. The record of the plat of the latter appears not to have been made until 1850, but the town itself was established many years before—as far back as about 1830.

When these towns—Macksville, Georgetown and Windsor—stood on the great thoroughfare between the east and the west, where scores, or even hundreds of travelers; where hundreds and sometimes thousands, of animals, in immense droves and herds passed daily; where thronging emigrants were constantly pressing eagerly westward, westward, always westward, there seemed a prospect that all three, especially the former and the latter, might find room and business for a substantial or even a vigorous growth; but when the rail track was laid and the steam whistle set up its roar and the engine began to roll, a woe was pronounced upon all towns, no matter how ambitious or aspiring, which lay away from the path of the "iron horse."

Neff is located on section 10, township 19, range 12, two miles west of Pleasant View and five miles north of Losantville. It has entirely disappeared.

BIOGRAPHY.

Isaac Amburn was the son of Samuel Amburn; he was born in Carolina in 1789, and he married Rebecca Hodgson, who was born in Virginia in 1795. They came to Ohio in 1816 and to Randolph county in 1829. They were the parents of ten children, all of whom have been married and had families. They are as given herewith: Mary, five children; Elizabeth, eleven children; Samuel, ten children; Catharine, ten children; Jacob eight children; Hester, one child; Hannah, nine children; Rebecca, seven children; Cynthia, six children; Rachel, six children. Isaac Amburn resided with his son Samuel till his death, September 23, 1881, he being ninety-two years old.

Samuel Amburn, Jr., was born in 1818, in Ohio; came to Randolph county in 1829; married Maria Smith in 1840; had ten children; was a prominent and successful man of business and an active and influential citizen. When he moved to the county, William Moore, John Holloway, William Holloway, Joab Thornburg, Amos Smith were already here. William Dixon and Jethro Hiatt came when Mr. Amburn's people came in 1829. He had to go three miles to school when he was a lad and thought it no hardship, often having to "wade the flats" knee deep. Wading the water in coon hunting, etc., through the woods was nothing but fun.

Joseph Bond, son of Samuel Bond, was born in North Carolina in 1779; married Rachel Herold, born in 1781, in 1802; came to Wayne county, Indiana in 1811 and to Randolph county, mouth of Cabin creek, in 1839. They had twelve children, eleven grown, ten married. He died in 1840 and his wife in 1842. They were farmers and Friends. He was a steady, mild-tempered, genial, christian man, beloved by all who knew him and his record is on high. His father, Samuel Bond, was born in North Carolina in 1753 and his mother, Elizabeth Beals Bond, in 1755.

Zimri Bond, brother of John H. Bond, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, moved to Randolph county and afterward to Kansas, the latter movement being made in 1872. He died in Kansas in 1877, having had five children. He had a fine farm on Cabin creek but he went to stock buying, etc., and failing in business, lost his farm and like hundreds of others, moved on farther west to the region of cheap lands. He was an Anti-slavery Friend, an Abolitionist, an underground railroad operator and a Republican. His family returned to Randolph county to the region of their former home.

John Diggs was the brother of Mark Diggs, who is also dead, and of William Diggs, who is still living. He was born in Carolina, August 8, 1802. He came from Carolina to Randolph county upon White river in 1821, and settled on Stoney creek in 1827. He had five children and died January 22, 1863, aged sixty years five months and fourteen days. His wife, Catharine Diggs, died October 29, 1867, aged sixty-three years six months and thirteen days. He was a prominent and respected member among the Friends, and was buried in Poplar Run cemetery, as is also his wife, who survived her husband more than four years. He was a Whig, an Abolitionist and a Republican, but he remained with the "body of Friends" at the "separation," not deeming the alleged reasons for dividing the "body" sufficient to justify the course pursued by the Anti-slavery Friends.

Joseph Hewitt, born of Irish parents, came to Ross county, Ohio, in 1808; married Sally Putnam in 1831; came to Randolph county in 1841, and had ten children, all grown and married.

Hosea Lamb was born in North Carolina, and came to Richmond before it was laid out as a town; cleared the ten acres on which Richmond was first built, and entered 160 acres in Nettle Creek, but settled in Stoney Creek. He had nine children; was a farmer and a Friend, and died in 1855. His wife died in 1877, being a very old woman, and having lived a widow twenty-two years.

Restore Lamb, son of Hosea Lamb, died in 1878, aged about sixty years. His brother, Isaac, was accidentally shot and killed while duck-hunting. A gun was handed to him, muzzle foremost. It was dropped and the gun went off. He was shot in the breast, causing his instant death.

Joab McNees was born in 1781; lived in Tennessee; came to Randolph county, settling in Stoney Creek, near Georgetown, in 1829, and married Sarah McCollom in 1803. They had sixteen children, twelve grown and ten married. He moved eleven to Randolph county. Mr. McNees died in 1833, aged fifty-two years. His wife was born in 1783, and died in 1870, aged eighty-seven years. She lived a widow thirty-seven years. A rather remarkable life—thirty years a wife, the mother of sixteen children, and thirty-seven years a widow!

Henry Moore was born in Wilmington, Delaware, in 1804. He came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1816; married Mary Wright in 1831 (who was born in 1808), and settled in Randolph county in 1838, buying 160 acres of land in Stoney Creek township. He was a farmer, a Friend, a Whig, an Abolitionist and a Republican. He was the father of five children, and died in 1879, leaving a widow to mourn his loss, as also several children.

George Moore was the brother of Henry Moore, being born in 1806, and he emigrated from Delaware, on the eastern seaboard, to Randolph county in 1839, marrying Mary Hiatt in the same year. They had five children.

Ira E. Smithson is a native of "Old Virginia," the proud "Old Dominion," the haughty "Mother of Presidents." He was born there in 1800. But he left his native soil and emigrated to Clinton county, Ohio, that old-time half-way house to weary emigrants, that stopping-place for thousands, whence again, a fresh start being taken, pushing their onward way toward the setting sun, a final halt would at length be called in the fruitful Hoosier land. And from Clinton county, once more resuming the impatient line of march, they stopped not, they stayed not, till they had found their old-time friends in the woods of Randolph. In 1839 this latter trip was accomplished, and this was the last march; for hither he had come to stay. And stay he did.

Joab Thornburg was born in 1795 in North Carolina; came to Ohio in 1811; married Elizabeth Holloway in North Carolina on Christmas Day, 1817; came to Stoney Creek, Randolph county, in 1825, entered eighty acres of land. They had nine children. He was a farmer and a Friend; was a Whig and an Abolitionist. There is something venerable in an ancient homestead, hallowed by the loves, the joys, the sorrows, the dear, the sad, the holy remembrances of almost sixty years of family life. Those who spend their lives in changing from place to place, having never a home, but only a temporary abode, occupying, in their whole lives upon earth, not a foot of land which they could call their own, know little of the real substance of home life. They live, indeed; their children grow up to full stature; but their residence is only half a home. He surely has abundant cause for rejoicing whose lot is cast where he can dwell from youth to old age, in a dear and blessed spot, to which sweet and precious memory clings with a close and perpetual tie. Let it be the ambition of every family to acquire that excellent earthly blessing, the ownership of a permanent home.

William Armfield Thornburg, Windsor, was born in North Carolina in 1816, and came to Randolph county in 1825; married Maria Clevinger in 1835, and had twelve children—ten grown and married. He was brought up a Friend, but belonged mostly to the Methodists or United Brethren. In political faith he was a Whig. His business was largely farming. He sold goods twelve years, and kept a hotel at Windsor and at Williamsburg; operated a mill south of Windsor.

David Vestal was born in North Carolina, coming to Randolph county perhaps in 1823; settled on Stoney creek, two and a half miles south of Windsor; was chosen justice of the peace very soon after; sold out to John Thornburg about 1830 or 1831, and left the county in the latter year, moving to White Lick, below Indianapolis, at which place he is understood to have died. They had five children at the time of removal. He was kind, genial and obliging, and his wife was an excellent woman. While he resided in the county he was a prominent citizen of that region.

William Terrill, farmer and minister, was born July 13, 1829, in Stoney Creek township, this county. He was married the first time to Rebecca Thornburg, November 22, 1849; two children blessed this union—Lucinda J. and John W. Mr. Terrill was united in marriage the second time to Mary A. Thornburg, March 27, 1856; she was born December 12, 1838. Mr. Terrill was educated in the old log school house of pioneer days, and for a number of years engaged in farming. He was a devoted minister of the Christian church for years and devoted much of his time to building up the denomination of his choice. Mr. Terrill is perhaps the oldest minister in Randolph county up to this time, 1914.

Job Thornburg. This venerable pioneer of Randolph county was the son of Isaac and Rebecca (Hodgen) Thornburg, and was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, September 29, 1801. He was the fifth of a family of twelve children; his father was born in Pennsylvania, July 4, 1773, and mother in the same state July 24, 1773. They moved from Pennsylvania to North Carolina, where they were married, and remained until the year 1811, when they moved to Clinton county, Ohio, where they remained until 1827, when they came to this county and remained until their deaths; his mother died July 24, 1832, and his father June 28, 1862. Job lived with his parents on the farm until he was twenty-five years of age, when he, with his brother, removed to Indiana, and settled in Randolph county. After living with his brother for about one year, he returned to Ohio, and was united in marriage with Lydia Smith, daughter of James and Atlantic Smith, April 17, 1826. He and his wife returned to Indiana the following October, when he entered eighty acres of the farm upon which he now resides. He has spent the best portion of his life in clearing a farm from the unbroken forest. No one but those who have had the experience fully realize the amount of toil and hardship connected with the development of this country. The subject of this sketch has accomplished more of this kind of work than most men of this age; he early learned the lesson which insures success to every young man—industry and frugality. These qualities being leading motives in his life, he rapidly accumulated property. He is the father of ten children, as follows: Atlantic, born January 18, 1826; Abijah, born February 8, 1828, deceased January 3, 1848; Jonathan J., born April 2, 1830; Thomas, born May 7, 1832, deceased October 28, 1846; James, born March 27, 1834; Ann, born September 19, 1836; Edward R., born December 4, 1838, deceased September 13, 1867; Tilnias, born November 27, 1840; Isaac D., born October 28, 1842; Rebecca, born September 3, 1845. He and his wife were raised members of the Society of Friends, and ever remained faithful to their adopted church. Mr. Thornburg served this county as juror more or less for thirty years.

Jonathan J. Thornburg, who is a native of this county and son of Job and Lydia Thornburg was born April 2, 1830. He is the third of a family of ten children, seven of whom are living.

Some of the other pioneers of Stoney Creek township were William Huitt, Francis M. Amburn, Philip K. Dick, John E. Heickes, Enos A. Leeka, Jacob Mills, John M. Moore, John Ozbun, Isaac J. Smith, Abraham Symons, Joshua Swingley, Jonathan J. Thornburg, Thomas Wallace, William Wright, John D. Wright, Samuel Huff and Isaac J. Smith.

Nettle Creek Township.—It embraces thirty-one and one-half sections, being seven miles long, north to south, and four and a half miles wide east to west. It lies wholly west of the twelve-mile boundary, and the land was surveyed about 1820 or 1821. Settlement began later, of course, there than it did east of the boundaries. The township lies chiefly in the valley of the Little White river, and covers a fine scope of country. Much of it is gently rolling, presenting pleasant landscapes. The soil is well adapted to all kinds of farming, and fine crops are produced. Being settled later, improvements are not so much advanced as they are farther east, yet there are many fine farms, with good buildings, etc.

The earliest settler of whom we have heard is William Shullabarger, who came in 1820, settling south of Losantville. He was killed by the falling of a tree. The next settler was John Burroughs, 1822, and also his brother, Thomas Burroughs, 1822. The following came soon afterward: Solomon Sparks, Mahlon Bronson, Isaac Branson, John Massey, Ichabod Tharpe, Phineas Macy, Mason Powell, Enoch Sayles, Jacob Tharpe, Henry Mossby and perhaps others.

Samuel Burroughs, son of John Burroughs, was the first child born in Nettle Creek township, May 20, 1823. The settlers in this region had peculiarly severe hardships in the early time. Some of them were very poor, and all of them were greatly "put to it" to make their way. One pioneer in this township, when he first moved to the county, had one old horse only, and the horse died in a few days, which left them in a bad condition. The man cut his knee with his frow while splitting clapboards for his cabin, and was laid helpless on the puncheon floor for six weeks. His wife and her brother improved the season by making several barrels of sugar, which stood them in good stead to give in exchange for corn during the summer.

In a scope of two miles square there were owned but two wagons. One day six horses were hitched to one of these wagons to go to mill. Twelve bushels were loaded in, and off the teams started. The horses would not pull together, got fast in a big mud-hole, and stopped. Six men unhitched each a horse, took each a sack of wheat and away to the mill, leaving the wagon to get out of the mud when it got a "good ready." Thus did the hardy pioneers of Nettle Creek bravely push their way, and some of them still survive to look back upon those rough and troublesome times and those awkward ways. Isaac Branson was in Nettle Creek in 1824, in the time of the "Falling Timber," since one settler relates that her sister at that time was at Isaac Branson's, and that Mr. Branson's horse was hemmed up in the stable, but not hurt.

Nettle Creek township is a fine rolling country, well adapted to all kinds of farming. There is but one town, Losantville, or, as it was called at first, Hunt's Cross Roads. Nettle Creek is Republican in politics by a moderate majority, when state and national lines are drawn. As to religion, Methodists, Disciples, Friends, Christians, United Brethren, Baptists, etc., are represented. The first sermon in the region was preached at Thomas Burroughs', by Rev. Bowen, a Methodist. The people generally went to West River. Thomas Burroughs died in 1825, and his funeral was preached in his cabin by Henry Mossburg. The Baptist meeting-house on the county line was built in 1825. A Methodist meeting-house was built not twenty rods away, in 1840. The first school house was built in 1833. School was taught in it in 1833-34 by Mr. Evans.

In early times, like many primitive communities, some roughness of manners and actions prevailed, but latterly the community has become fully the equal of the rest of the county in those things that tend to enlighten and elevate and refine the feelings and sentiments of the community. In religious things there is considerable variety of opinions and practice. In an early day, the Baptists established a large influence in that part of the county, and they have maintained to this day a larger following in that township than elsewhere in Randolph. In fact, the Baptist element, which holds in the country-at-large a strong, prominent and controlling position, has, for some reason, found in Randolph county but a meager support; and, outside of Nettle Creek, that branch of the Christian body has found but few adherents.

LAND ENTRIES.

S. W. 15, 18, 12, October 31, 1822, John Burroughs; S. W. S. W. 3, 18, 12, November 3, 1822, Jesse A. Jenny; S. W. N. W. 12, 19, 12, November 25, 1822, Robert Scott; S. W. 12, 19, 12, November 25, 1822, Tarlton Moorman; W. N. W. 13, 19, 12, November 25, 1822, Mark Diggs; E. N. E. 14, 19, 12, November 25, 1822, Mark Diggs; W. S. W. 13, 18, 12, November 26, 1822, Robert Kennedy; E. N. E. 15, 18, 12, February 24, 1823, Jesse Moore; W. N. W. 15, 18, 12, September 30, 1823, Jesse Routh; E. S. E. 15, 18, 12, December 15, 1823, James Massey; W. N. W. 15, 19, 12, February 2, 1824, Joseph Brooks; W. N. E. 15, 18, 12, March 26, 1826, Isaac Branson; E. S. E. 5, 18, 12, August 10, 1831, Jesse Sisk. Nettle Creek was entered between 1821 and 1838, inclusive.

It is seen by the statement just given that the settlement of the township was very sparse before 1830. In fact, the west part of the county in general had but few occupants before that date. A small number had made a beginning upon White river and Cabin creek, but not many were even there, and away from those streams the cabins and the clearings were truly "few and far between."

TOWNS.

Fallen Timber Post Office.—No town (perhaps) Section 35, two miles northeast of Losantville. The name has been given from the fact that years ago a terrible tornado prostrated miles and miles of timber, falling, as it did, in a dense, heaped-up, impenetrable mass, and lying for many years upon the surface of the earth, an utter barrier to passage or communication across or among its overthrown tree-trunks. That mass of prostrate tree-trunks, entangled for years with shrubs and new-grown saplings, has for two generations disappeared from sight, and a single name, as above, is its only existing memorial.

Flemingsburg.—Location, four miles north of Losantville; five miles northwest of Huntsville; one mile southwest of Pleasant View. This town seems to have been among the oldest in the county, but whether it ever existed except on paper, or whether any business was ever done there, we are unable to say. It is utterly extinct, and even the name seems to be wholly lost. It is to be presumed that at least a log cabin, store and a blacksmith shop were there, but we have obtained not the slightest outside information.

Losantville.—Location, sections 3, 4, 9 and 10, township 18, range 12 east; twenty-eight lots; Howard Hunt, proprietor; recorded February 22, 1851; streets, north and south, Cambridge; east and west, Main. Losantville (at first called Hunt's Cross Roads) was laid out in 1851 by Howard Hunt. Its "antiquities" are as follows: Mr. Denny had a log-cabin store; Bright Cisk resided there in 1834, and had a grocery in 1842, and perhaps sooner than that. Howard Hunt had a grocery and a hotel in 1850. An interesting story is told of the origin of the name of Losantville. Two of the Hunt brothers lived at Huntsville. One had originated Flemingsburg and the other Hunt's Cross Roads.

The latter was chided for naming his town such a common name, on which he changed the name to Losantville, it being the old name of the town of Cincinnati. Losantville is the only town of this name in the United States.

Pleasant View.—Location, in Nettle Creek and Stoney Creek townships. No plat recorded as far as known; laid out in 1854. Being situated in two townships and four sections, its location is more extensive than its business. There has been a small amount of business from the beginning of the town. Mr. Davidson had a saw-mill; William Kennedy had a store; Hiram Diggs also had a store; Mr. Carey had a smith shop in 1856; Solomon Hanscom started a furniture store, as also an undertaker's shop, in 1855. Nothing remains but a store and a residence. The merchants in Pleasant View have been Messrs. Kennedy, Diggs, Wright, East, McNees, Kelly, Moore, Bates, Lumpkin & Brother, Ross & Hanscom, Macy (whose store was blown up with powder), Jessup, Hanscom, Jessup & Carter, E. Carter & Son, G. Wright White.

The physician was Dr. Frank, in 1870. The smith shops have been run by Messrs. Johnson, Carey, Bowers, Snuth and Robison. Wagon shops, J. W. Paschal, Lamb & Williams. Sawmill, Mr. Davison and others. Cabinet and undertaker's shop, Mr. Hanscom.

BIOGRAPHY.

Jonathan Canady was born in North Carolina in 1821; came to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1826, and to Randolph county in 1840. He married Susan Moore and had fourteen children; twelve of them grown; eight have taught school, two are attorneys, and one is a justice of the peace. They are an active and intelligent family and are Republicans.

Martin L. Canady was born in Randolph county in 1848; married Sophronia E. Noll in 1869, and they have three children. He was a teacher, having taught school thirteen winters. He taught the first school that ever was held in Losantville (in 1878), for it seems that ambitious little town never till 1878 rose to the dignity of possessing a school. Mr. Canady was elected magistrate of Nettle Creek township in the spring of 1879, against a candidate who had held office for twenty-five years, and had never before been beaten. Mr. Canady was the census enumerator for 1880 in the census district in which he resides.

Walter Canady came from North Carolina to Randolph county in 1829, and lived and died there. He had a wife and five children. He was a farmer of Nettle Creek township, entering land there when he came to the county.

John Clevenger, father of William Clevenger, near Neff, was born in Virginia in 1780; came to Ohio in 1803; married Maria Stuthard in 1799 (born 1780); came to Randolph county in 1828; entered 120 acres. He had fourteen children; twelve lived to be grown and married and have large families, the whole twelve having 108 children, or an average of exactly nine each. He died in 1872, aged ninety-two years and nine months. His wife died in 1846, being sixty-six years old.

Jonathan Clevenger came the same fall. The two families had arranged to meet on the way, and come the rest of the distance together. The plan failed in some way, and the families did not meet, and each one found his way alone. Mr. Clevenger was a sturdy Democrat. He voted for Jackson in 1828. He was an active member of the Christian (New Light) church, and a worthy and exemplary citizen.

Jacob Crouse was born in North Carolina in 1799; married Hannah Johnson in 1824; emigrated to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1832, settling one mill west of Losantville. They had seven children. His wife was a Baptist. He was not himself a member of any religious body, and in politics lived and died a Democrat of the Jacksonian stamp and style. He entered eighty acres of land, and he resided on the tract till his death in 1873, forty-one years. His wife lived only till 1864.

Mark Diggs was born in North Carolina 1799, and was the son of William Diggs, the elder, whose son William came to White River in 1816. Mark Diggs came to White River, Randolph county, in 1821; married Susannah Way, daughter of Matthew Way, who was brother of Paul and Henry Way, and who died in Carolina in 1826. They had one child which died in infancy. Mark Diggs settled in 1827 on the farm where his widow now lives, near Pleasant View. He was a Friend, belonging to the body; in politics, a Whig and a Republican. He was an elder in the Friends Society, greatly respected and altogether a solid member. He owned at the time of his death, in 1878, 600 acres of land. At first he entered 240 acres.

William Hendricks came early to the county, and was justice of the peace twelve years. He married one hundred couples during his term of office. He was also township trustee ten years, and was never defeated as a candidate for office till 1879, at which time he ran for magistrate, and was beaten by M. L. Canady.

Miles Hunt was born in Kentucky September 10, 1808. He came early to this county in 1824, at the age of sixteen, and was a resident of Randolph county until his death. He was identified with the interests of the county for more than half a century, representing the county at one time in the state Legislature when comparatively a young man. Mr. Hunt raised a large family, now grown men and women, who are now among the useful and worthy citizens of their native commonwealth. He was a life-long Democrat, being one of the few who have clung to that political faith in the face of the overwhelming adverse majorities for many years in this Republican county. Since the time of the Murphy revival he was an active and enthusiastic temperance worker.

John Snodgrass was born in Virginia in 1763; moved to Tennessee in 1803, to Ohio in 1811, to Henry county, Indiana, in 1813, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1830. He had eight children. His wife was Rhoda Mays, and he was married in Virginia long before he began his wanderings to find a suitable home. He was an old man when he came to Randolph, sixty-seven years of age, but his stay was but short among his children and friends. He died in 1834, and his wife eleven years after her husband, in 1845. His residence was about a mile north of Losantville. He was a farmer and a Democrat. Think of the life of this sturdy pioneer. Forty years among the rugged mountains of Virginia, eight years amid the forests of Tennessee, two years in Ohio through the Indian war of 1811-13, seventeen years buried in the woods of Henry county, Indiana, and when within three years of his allotted threescore and ten plunging yet once more, and for the last time, into the heart of the deep, unbroken forests of Randolph county, and lying down at length after so many tedious and wearisome years, beneath the oaks and the beeches, to die and be forever at rest, while his friends and his comrades, gathering around his mortal remains, sadly but hopefully say, "Life's fitful fever over, he sleeps well."

Isaac R. Maulsby, farmer, post office Losantville, was born in this county November 6, 1840; his father, Thomas Maulsby, was born in Tennessee January 5, 1805; his mother, Mary (Key) Maulsby, was a native of Virginia. Mr. Maulsby was married September 27, 1865, to Miss Mannie Cory, who was born and raised in Henry county, Indiana. Their union was blessed with four children—Phila C., born May 14, 1867; Amy V., born December 29, 1869; Gilbert O., born August 30, 1873; Stephen C., born July 13, 1877. Mr. Maulsby owned a fine farm of 200 acres; was a licentiate minister in the Baptist church, and was ever willing and ready to aid in any enterprise that tended to elevate and enlighten his fellow-man.

Other pioneers of Nettle Creek township have been William Hewett, John C. Clevenger, Isaac Crouse, William Clevenger, Wilkerson Gray, Solomon Hanscom, Hamilton Snodgrass, Hicks K. Wright, William Burroughs, Charles H. Barrax, Jonathan J. Jones, William Oakerson, Burril Perkins, Isaac Routh, Charles H. Smothers, John T. Vardeman and Isaac Woods.

Jackson Township.—It includes the north of township 18 north, range 1 west, and the south half of township 19 north, range 1 west, both townships being fractional, in the northeastern corner of the county, in the valley of the Mississinewa. The waters of the township are the Mississinewa, Little Mississinewa and some smaller streams.

The old or Wayne's boundary divides the township into two parts somewhat cornerwise, entering near the northeast corner and passing out at the south side, crossing the township line about two and one-half miles west of the east line of the township, county and state. The P., C., C. & St. L. (Pan Handle) railroad crosses the southwest corner of the township. It was erected as a township in 1833. It contains about thirty sections, being six miles north and south and five miles from east to west. The Mississinewa flows from east to west, as also the Little Mississinewa northward to the Big Mississinewa. The land is rather level and somewhat low. It was at first considerably wet, much of the surface standing in the water a great part of the time. Clearing and ditching, however, have dried out the land pretty well, and the country is now good for farming, the low lands being the best. Originally the country was heavily timbered. Most of the farms are now well cleared, though some are still rather new.

The first entry was made by John Abercrombie in October, 1816, on the river south of Pittsburg. The actual settlement began hardly as early. It has been difficult to trace the history of things to the first beginning. The earliest settlers seem to have left no trace behind, and but a slender memory of them remains among the residents of the present day. The bona fide occupation of the township seems to have taken place about 1829, perhaps somewhat earlier. A few seem to have spent some time there before that date. Thomas Shalor, a roving fellow, occupied the James Porter place perhaps in 1826, leaving the neighborhood about 1829. He is the same one mentioned by McKew and Hawkins as living in Jay county, in the region of Camden. Philip Storms is thought by some to have been the earliest resident. One man states that Philip Storms was annoyed and injured by having men enter his selected location from under him, and that he became "fighting mad" on account of it, which is not much wonder, if the aggression were known and intended as such, since the act would be both a flagrant violation of "squatter" law, and a serious breach of natural justice and of the golden rule. Mr. Storms resided in the region for some time, as, several years later, he was appointed by the county commissioners to be road supervisor of his district.

Some men by the name of Brockus, wild, rough men, who had, however, estimable wives, were early settlers, their residence being across the Mississinewa, directly north of Handschey's first mill. They left before a very long time, but the clearing said to have been made by them was still to be seen many years afterward, and perhaps is there even to the present day.

An old man by the name of Ishmael Bunch lived on the land entered by John Jones, near Dolphus Warren's. Jesse Gray was a famous pioneer and hunter, noted through all this region, and for many years, though his precise location on the Mississinewa at his first coming (about 1820) is not pointed out. He entered land in 1833 on the Mississinewa, directly north of Allensville, though he must have lived somewhere in the region for ten or twelve years, and, about the time of the killing of Fleming, he moved from the county to the vicinity of Hill Grove, Darke county, Ohio, and still again in later years to Adams county, Indiana. A settler by the name of Jacobs settled very early (in 1828) directly north of Allensville, on the north side of the Mississinewa. He was an old man in 1848, and died some years later, about 1852.

The entries began quite early, the first two having been made in 1816, the next two in 1819 and the fifth in 1826. John Abercrombie, on both sides of the Mississinewa river, directly south of Pittsburg, 1816; John Laverty, 1816, on the creek, about a mile nearly north of New Middletown; John C. Dunham, 1819, two separate quarter sections lying on both sides of the Mississinewa, two and one-half miles southeast of New Pittsburg; Abraham Royer, one and a half miles southeast of New Lisbon, between the Little Mississinewa and the Ohio line. Whether these purchasers settled their land seems doubtful. Their names have not been heard among those of early pioneers of the region.

The fourth entry in the township was by Abram Royer, August 10, 1826, being land now owned by J. Noffsinger. He probably did not occupy it, as we have never heard his name mentioned as a settler. The fifth entry was by John Jones, August 27, 1830, southwest of Dolphus Warren's. The next entry was by James Simmons, a little west of the second entry. Simmons married and settled in 1834.

The first settlers were inclined rather to hunt than to clear, but some moved away and others came in, and solid and permanent improvement began. Many, perhaps most, of the first comers were poor, some without even money to purchase land. Mr. Porter (James) said that he entered 120 acres, forty acres at a time, walking mostly to Cincinnati and back, making each separate entry.

The first school in Mr. Porter's neighborhood was taught by George Porter's wife about 1836. The people used to go to meeting to the Prospect meeting-house neighborhood. The first meeting Mr. Porter's folks attended was at Riley Marshall's, near Prospect. Marshall's was the preaching place, and it was held on a week day. Mrs. Porter used to take her baby and walk to meeting—three miles. The first school near Allensville was taught by Mrs. Beach at home. There may have been seven or eight pupils—a mere handful.

The first sermon was preached at Mr. Beach's by a Baptist preacher. The first mill was a corn cracker. Jacob Johnson built one afterward, which he said cost him $1.50. The stones were common gray heads dressed down. It would grind five or six bushels in twenty-four hours by running day and night. Mr. Skinner afterward built a pretty good mill for wheat and corn. Mr. Hinchy also built one with a saw-mill.

The first organized religious society is supposed to have been the Disciples church, New Lisbon, in 1839, and the first church erected to have been by them near New Lisbon in 1841. Many of the early settlers were church-going people. Smith, Wiley, Reeves, Mangus, Wickersham, Debolt, etc., were Disciples. Beach, Chandler and others near Allensville were Baptists.

It would seem from the above that in Jackson township up to April 12, 1837, not quite four sections or about one thousand one hundred and forty acres of land had been entered, by about thirty-one persons, no entry being above 160 acres, and nearly all eighties or forties. The great rush of settlement came in 1837 and 1838. The entries in Jackson township were made by men of very moderate pecuniary ability. Economy and thrift have, however, become the means of furnishing to many in the township comfortable and even luxurious homes, and a considerable number have acquired wealth. The body of the population remain, however, even as of old, and, from the beginning, industrious, sturdy, simple-hearted, independent farmers of moderate means and frugal habits.

The Portland & Union railroad, projected many years ago, was graded through Jackson township, and New Pittsburg was laid out for a center of trade, but the railroad was not completed; the track was never made, and the road is simply a useless bank of earth, and Jackson township and New Pittsburg as well is out in the cold.

Jackson is the extreme northeast township of the county, and its boundaries are as follows: On the north by Jay county, on the east by Ohio, on the south by Wayne township, on the west by Ward township. Politically, Jackson township is overwhelmingly Democratic. Originally it is said to have been almost wholly so, insomuch that a story is told that at one time one Whig voted alone in Jackson township. This can hardly be true, yet the time has been when the non-Democratic voters in Jackson township were "mity skase" indeed.

Allensville.—Situated on the Union and North Salem pike, a little south of the Mississinewa river; recorded November 13, 1847. The town is extinct. Jonathan Lambert first built a log cabin and put in a store there in about 1844 or 1845. The town was platted shortly afterward, and Lambert's store remained till perhaps 1856, and a Mr. Bowen succeeded him. Some of the early settlers in the neighborhood were Trowbridge Allen, Ziba Davis, Cortlandt Lambert, Mr. Hoover, father of Isaac Hoover, Abraham and Jeremiah Lambert, etc.

Allensville was never much of a town. The "Quaker trace" passed through Jackson township, past Mount Holly, Castle postoffice, near Allensville, crossing Mississinewa at the old ford, about eighty rods east of the turnpike bridge. The Salem and Union pike passes through the town. Nothing has been there for many years except the old mill.

As to the towns of Jackson, not much can be said. Most of them are extinct or greatly dwindled. Allensville (Sockum) was never "any great shakes," and what life it had "winked out." New Lisbon had a brave start, and might have done well, but Union City "cut off its wind" and it had to succumb.

Almost all the towns in this region were originally christened as "New" something or other—New Lisbon, New Pittsburg, New Middletown. They were indeed new then, but they are new no longer, and the affix "new" is mostly omitted, and their memory is retained simply as Middletown, Lisbon and Pittsburg.

Mt. Holly seems to have been ahead, as to time, of all the towns in that region. Their dates are as follows: Mount Holly, 1840; Allensville, 1847; New Lisbon, 1848; New Middletown, 1851; New Pittsburg, 1856. Thus the town with the fragrant name had seven years the start of its earliest rival, and "Sockum" was so distant that she need have had no fear of her far-away neighbor. But old settlers insist upon it that Mount Holly never had anything but one blacksmith shop. If so, so be it. It was saved the slow, tedious process of dying by inches or perishing by dull, stupid decay. Its proprietor had more exalted ideas of future greatness for his new town, since he made three cross streets, while most of the embryo cities at their first laying out, were fully contented with one, and several had no "cross streets" at all. But all in vain; survey and record were alike for naught.

New Lisbon is three and a half miles north of Union City. It had a fine start, and but for the railroad would doubtless have made a creditable showing for business, but the fates decreed otherwise and New Lisbon has buildings still standing, enough to make quite a town, and the dwellings are all inhabited, but the only semblance of business is a smith shop and the crowds on the Sabbath attending at the meeting-house.

New Pittsburg is on the route of a railroad projected and graded some twenty-five years ago from Union City to Portland, and at the line of Randolph and Jay counties. The town is on section 6, near the northwest corner of Jackson township and about one mile north of the Mississinewa river. The railroad failed and New Pittsburg has dragged along trying to prosper, but not able to do so. It was set on foot in 1854 (recorded in 1856) by William McFarland. At one time, say about 1864, considerable life was shown. There were then two stores, two smith shops, a wagon shop and some other things. The business has mostly left the place and the town is greatly decayed.

Ezekiel Clough, farmer, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, emigrated to Mill Creek, Ohio, not far from Cincinnati, in 1818. His father died soon afterward, leaving the care of the family to Ezekiel, then about eighteen years old. They "rented" for several years and then engaged in making brick in Cincinnati, by which he got his start. He married Anna Huddart and in 1836 the couple moved to the "wilds of Jay," entering six hundred and forty acres of land. In 1862, he changed his residence from Jay to Randolph. Mr. Clough had nine children—William, Nancy, Ezekiel, Hannah, George, Jane, John (and two more). William was killed in the army at Port Gibson, Mississippi, May, 1863. In those early days, accommodations were poor and times were hard. The people used even to grate corn-meal for mush and hoe-cake and buckwheat meal for batter cakes; and if the settlers wished to have grain ground at the mill, they had to send it to Covington, six miles beyond Greenville, or even to Dayton sometimes; often half of the grist was given to pay for grinding and for hauling it to mill and back. Mr. Clough was better off from the start than many of his brother settlers, and hence was spared some of the trials of poor pioneer life. He was from the first an exemplary member of the Free-Will Baptist church, and spent much time and means in building up the interests of education and religion. He was one of the chief founders of Ridgeville College, being understood to have given to it at the beginning ten thousand dollars and also much more since that time.

Jacob Corl was born in Pennsylvania in 1805, married Elizabeth Stufft in 1825, came to Richland county, Ohio, in 1835, and to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1838, settling in Jackson township, south of New Pittsburg. He had three children. He bought eighty acres at first and afterward one hundred and sixty acres. He formerly belonged to the Episcopal Methodists and later to the German Reformed church.

Andrew Debolt, blacksmith, came to Jackson township early in 1831. He died, seventy-eight years old.

Henry Debolt was born in 1817 in Butler county, Ohio; married Ann Mikesell in 1844; had eleven children, seven living, four married; came to Randolph county in 1844. Mr. Debolt was a farmer; was justice of the peace seventeen years; township trustee four years; a Disciple and a Democrat and a highly respected and trustworthy citizen.

George Debolt (father of the above), Jackson township, was born in 1794 in Hamilton county, Ohio; resided in Butler and Preble counties, Ohio; came to Randolph county, Jackson township, in 1844; married Rachel Clawson; had eight children, six living. He died in 1853, his wife in 1861. Mr.

Debolt was colonel in Butler county, Ohio; was justice of the peace in Jackson township four years and probate judge one term. He owned two hundred and twenty acres of land, having entered one hundred and forty acres. He was a Democrat and an active, intelligent and trustworthy citizen.

A few families were near that place, a few near New Lisbon and Mt. Holly and a Mr. Porter lived south of Pittsburg. The first school in the township was taught by Mrs. Beach in her own house. The first sermon was at the same place. For other items see account of Jackson township.

The following is an account of the ancestry of Jacob Gittinger, late of Jackson township, Randolph county, Indiana:

Jacob Gittinger, grandfather of the one mentioned above, was born in Switzerland about 1760, or sooner; was married in that country and soon afterward emigrated to America, settling in Baltimore county, Maryland. He was a soldier for a time in the Revolutionary war. In politics, he was a Jeffersonian Republican and afterward a Jacksonian Democrat and in religious connection a Lutheran. He had four sons and six daughters, all but one of whom grew up and were married. They all settled in Maryland, but their descendants are now widely scattered. As to occupation, Mr. Gittinger was a blacksmith and a farmer and also a hotel-keeper on the pike between Hanover and Baltimore. He died about 1846 in Baltimore county, Maryland, at the age of eighty-six years or more.

Jacob Gittinger (son of the above and father of the present Jacob Gittinger) was born in Maryland in 1786. He married, in Maryland, Mary Deal, in 1807 or 1808, and they were the parents of twelve children, nine sons and three daughters. All of them became grown except the youngest son who died at seven years old. Mr. Gittinger was a wagon-maker and a blacksmith and farmer. He was a Democrat in politics and belonged to the Mehodists for many years, continuing in that connection to the close of his life. He moved to Ohio in 1835, tarrying awhile in Darke county and settling in Randolph county in 1838, in Jackson township, not far from the Ohio line. He died about 1870, eighty-four years old, and his wife in 1860, aged seventy-two years. The whole family removed to Randolph county except one son, though not many are left in the region at the present time. The aged couple lie side by side in the burying ground at Raper chapel in Darke county, Ohio. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, being an ensign in the Lighthorse Guards.

Jacob Gittinger (the third), was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, in 1817. He came with his father to Ohio in 1835 and to Randolph county in 1838, the latter removal being when he was twenty-one years of age.

The Harshmans (four brothers), Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Reuben Harshman, were born in Rockingham county, Virginia, and were brought by their father, James Harshman, to Preble county, Ohio, in 1807. Abraham and Jacob Harshman emigrated to Randolph county in 1832. Reuben came in 1834 and Isaac about 1837 or 1838. They settled near and north of Saratoga and Middletown. Abraham Harshman was twice married and had ten children.

John Skinner, son of James Skinner and uncle of Dr. Reeves, built the first mill in the region. It stood on the Little Mississinewa, a little north of New Lisbon, being a log-cabin structure, and it was at first simply a corn-cracker, but was afterward changed to a wheat-mill, a hand-bolt being added. The mill answered well its purpose, standing and running for twenty or twenty-five years.

Three brothers of James Skinner were with Jackson at New Orleans during the war of 1812, and two of those brothers were buried in that distant Southern clime. James himself volunteered also, but for some reason, not now known, he was sent home again.

James Simmons, in 1831, entered a tract occupied by George Vance and lived with Mr. Vance in the cabin built by Mr. Vance till Mr. Simmons got married in 1834, to Avaline Hawkins, daughter of Mr. Hawkins, pioneer of Jay county, Indiana. Mr. Simmons was an active, intelligent, enterprising, genial man, an ardent Whig and a straight-out Republican and was highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens.

Eli Byrum was born in North Carolina in 1816 and died in Randolph county, Indiana, in February, 1877. His father, William Byrum, was a farmer and blacksmith and a man of fine intellect. He was a prominent and leading citizen of his county and was three times elected as its representative in the Legislature of North Carolina. In 1838 or 1839 he came North, locating in Preble county, Ohio, and about a year later came to Randolph county, Indiana. Eli, the subject of this sketch, accompanied his father in his removals, and, at the time of the removal to Randolph county, purchased eighty acres adjoining his father's farm in partnership with his brother Robert. At the age of twenty-nine years, in 1845, he was united in marriage with Rachel Newton, daughter of Henry and Mary Newton, who resided at that time near Richmond, Indiana. In November, 1846, his wife died, leaving a daughter, who died a few months later. On the 25th of July, 1848, he married Miss Lucinda Fields, daughter of Lansford and Nancy Fields, who came from Tennessee to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1832. By this second union Mr. Byrum and wife were the parents of thirteen children.

THE JACKSON, JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Stephen Hindsley was born in North Carolina August 20, 1818. Mr. Hindsley after making several changes, finally selected Jackson township as a desirable place to locate and made his final settlement February 10, 1848. He married Miss Ann M. McConnell, March 7, 1841, a native of Piqua, Ohio, born June 10, 1820. Ten children blessed this union. Mr. Hindsley and his daughters are worthy members of the Disciples church. Mr. Hindsley is a social gentleman and a Democrat of the old school. His father, John Hindsley, was a native of Maryland, born January 17, 1767. He united in matrimony with Miss Hannah Stone March 8, 1807; she was born March 8, 1788, in North Carolina. In the year 1823, Mr. John Hindsley and family settled in Granger county, Tennessee; thence in Darke county, Ohio. He deceased August 16, 1847, and his estimable wife September 6, 1866.

Squire Hinkle was born July 10, 1853, in Jackson township, Randolph county. He was educated in the common schools of this county; he is the owner of a fine farm and a pleasant home; he is a great lover of music, and is naturally a musician. He was married April 11, 1875, to Henrietta Simmons, also a native of Randolph county, born December 25, 1853. They have three children.

Other pioneers of Jackson township are Reuben Harshman, Henry Handschy, Henry Hinkle, Leander Harshman, Minus Berkheim, Jacob Howard, John B. Lyons, John Mangas, Absolom Mangas, Henry Rickert, George Rickert, Noah S. Smith, Ephraim Spittler, D. Warren, John M. Wimer.

Green township is in the northwestern corner of the county, being the westernmost of the northern tier of townships—Jackson, Ward, Franklin and Green. It lies, like the others mentioned, in the valley of the Mississinewa river and on both sides of that stream, the larger half of the township being on the south side.

Two principal creeks flow northward, Elkhorn and Mud creeks, and one southwestward, Dinner creek from Jay county. The township is narrower than the other three northern townships by a mile and a half, that width being taken to form a part of Monroe, located directly south of Green and north of Stoney creek. The region, though lying away from the prior settlements established in the county and neglected almost till the last, has proved to be good and fertile and the citizens of that part of the county are proud of their location, thinking it in natural advantages not a whit behind the other townships of old Randolph.

The surface of the region is for the most part moderately rolling, though some portions are tolerably level. The country was originally burdened with a heavy growth of timber, a large amount of which still remains. The settlement of Green township, as already stated, was not till long after the first occupation of the region. One might have supposed that, since the upper portions of the valley were taken up between 1816 and 1820, that pioneers would have passed down the river and planted their stakes along its lower course. No so. The first entry in the bounds of Green township was made August 18, 1832, sixteen years after the first entry in the upper valley, and by the close of 1835 only fifteen quarter sections had been purchased of the United States, or about one-eighth of the whole. But, during the years 1836, 1837 and 1838, the rush for entries was great and by the close of the latter year all the land in the county except the school sections and scattering pieces here and there that had escaped the notice of the general public, had passed into the hands of private owners, though not very much was yet occupied by bona fide settlers.

By examination it appears that every one of the forty-two entries prior to 1836, except one, was upon Mississinewa river or near that stream or upon Elkhorn. Nearly the whole of the river across the entire township had been entered and most of Elkhorn for two miles up that stream. The solitary outside entry had been made in section 20, 21, 12, near Delaware line, some three miles south of the river.

A large part of these entries had been made in advance of settlement in Monroe township. Only eight entries of four hundred and forty acres had been made as stated in the history of Monroe township up to June, 1835, while forty-four entries to two thousand five hundred and sixty acres had been effected in Green township. It is true, indeed, that the whole northern tier of townships and Wayne as well had remained mostly unoccupied up to 1834, or thirty years after the first emigration to the county. But the time had then come for the rush of entry and emigration and in three years from 1835 nearly every acre of available land had been purchased. How much had been settled up to the close of 1838 we are not able to state.

SETTLEMENT.

The first actual settlers in Green township are supposed to have been Alexander Garringer and Martin Boots, opposite Fairview. They entered their land in August and October, 1832, and were living there in March, 1833, and probably in 1832.. When the Greens and Browns came from Tennessee in March, 1833, Garringer and Boots were the only families in the township. In the spring of 1833 a company from Tennessee settled not far from Steubenville on both sides of the river, which colony made a brave beginning for that township of at least nine and perhaps more families in one group.

Philip Berger, who came in 1838, said: "In 1880, the country was all woods. A few settlers were scattered here and there but they had only cabins with small clearings like deep caves sunk far below the tops of the thick, almost unbroken forest. These little clearings made hardly a perceptible break in the vast, untrodden wilderness." When he came he says the residents were as follows: Alexander Garringer and Martin Boots, across the river from Fairview; Mr. Porter on the present site of Fairview; Naselrod had been on Thomas Hubbard's place; Alexander Stevens had settled in the east part about 1830, perhaps the first in the township; John Bone lived below Fairview. Anthony Wayne McKinney came in 1837 and his son, John B. McKinney, lives now opposite Fairview in a splendid and costly mansion, being the owner of fourteen or fifteen hundred acres of land and of great herds of cattle and stock; Nathan Godwin came in 1837 and his son, Thomas Godwin, resides in Fairview; John Garringer came in 1836 and resided where Baldwin now lives; Martin Smith bought out Garringer in the fall of 1836.

The first mail route was from Deerfield to Granville, Delaware county, once in two weeks, out and back on horseback in 1843. The first mill was built by Anthony McKinney on the river below Fairview where Woolverton's mill now is. He had first a saw-mill, then a corn cracker, afterward a grist mill. He built the dam in 1838. The saw mill began work in 1839, the corn mill in the fall and the wheat mill in 1841 or 1842. The first school was in the winter of 1837 in a little round log cabin near Fairview on the river bank. The first meeting was held in that same log cabin. The first church was built of logs for the Methodists about 1839 in Fairview. About 1844, a quarterly meeting was held at Thomas Hubbard's. Their house had just been built and had no floor and the sleepers served very well for seats. Methodist meetings used to be held at Nathan Godwin's. Christian (New Light) meetings were held at Martin Smith's. The schoolhouse now standing is the third; the first was log, the second frame, the third brick. The first brick house was either Samuel Caylor's or William Ore's. The first brick kiln was a small one of thirty or forty thousand for chimneys, burnt by Thomas Hubbard. Samuel Caylor burnt his own brick. The first reapers in the township were J. B. McKinney's and Philip Berger's. Mr. Berger's started first. They were the Kirby reapers and the time was 1855 or 1856.

The first threshing machine was run by Philip Stover of Delaware county. It was a falling beater and chaff-piler. He threshed first for old Elijah Harbour and then for Philip Berger.

The first justice was John Garringer in 1838. People say that he kept his docket on slips of paper and stuck them in cracks in the logs of his cabin and that nobody but himself could read them. The first burial in Fairview graveyard was that of an old lady, Mrs. Shirley, mother-in-law of Reuben Eppart. Mr. Godwin laid off the graveyard. Thomas Powell was buried in what is now J. B. McKinney's pasture before 1838. The spot is unknown. The first wheat in the settlement was raised by Thomas Hubbard, three acres, producing sixty bushels. Flat-boats and pirogues used to float down the river with apples, pork, flour and what not. One spring five boats came down loaded with charcoal. They were stove in and the coal was lost. One broke in pieces going over McKinney's dam. Mr. Hubbard set out an orchard in 1840, getting the trees of Joab Ward, at Ridgeville. There were one hundred and twenty trees and he gave nine dollars a hundred, bringing them down the river in a canoe. The brick kiln of Thomas Hubbard was the first. William Ore, Samuel Caylor and J. B. McKinney each burned his own bricks for his house. There are no brick factories in the township, neither are there any tile factories, though much ditching has been done. However, there are no long company ditches made under authority of law. No pikes had been made in Green township, strange as the fact may seem, till the summer of 1880. The people there made a beginning upon the east and west road leading from Ridgeville to Fairview, an old thoroughfare laid out some fifty or more years ago.

There are no railroads through the township. Three roads run near, but none touch its soil. Fairview, the chief town, is but a short distance from several railroad points, but is itself cut off from all. Several bridges have been erected in Green township, one iron bridge at Fairview, one bridge north of Steubenville, one south of Emmettsville and perhaps others, all across the Mississinewa river. Although the settlement of this region was so late that much of the forest still remains standing, yet many of the residents have acquired comfortable fortunes and substantial and even elegant homes. In Green township may be found, in fact, perhaps the most costly dwelling in Randolph county, that of John B. McKinney, Esq., opposite Fairview, of a peculiar style, unique but elegant and very expensive, said to contain forty rooms. The people of Green township are mostly moral, upright, industrious, frugal and thriving in their dispositions, character and habits."

Other pioneers of Green township were John Bone, Silas S. Clark, Ezra Conn, Jacob Daugherty, Aaron Harris, Amos Ludwick, Clark Reed, George Sites, Asaph B. Webb.

TOWNS.

Berlin.—Location, on south side of Mississinewa river, section 4, town 21, range 12, opposite Fairview. B. Mann, proprietor; Moorman Way, surveyor; recorded December 13, 1833. Town extinct. "Died borning." It seems that the proprietors of Fairview and Berlin played at "cross purposes," and Fairview won for the time. Berlin had, in truth, two years the start and still she "lost."

Emmettsville.—Was laid out some years ago but no record has been made of the plat. It is located a little north of Mississinewa river upon the Deerfield and Fairview state road leading from Greenville, Ohio, northwestward. The town is now extinct. The German Evangelical church alone remains.

Fairview.—The town was laid out in 1838 by Thomas Hubbard, Samuel Boots, Nathan Godwin and Daniel Culver. It is located on section 4, town 21, range 12, near the northwest corner of the township and of Randolph county as well, on the Deerfield & Ridgeville road, which extends northwest past Emmettsville and Fairview into Delaware county. The ground on which it is built is finely rolling, unusually so for Randolph county. The business of the town began about as follows: Alex Garringer had a little store at his cabin south of the river and he moved the goods over to the site of the town and "set up" in 1839. Mr. Garringer also started a smith shop. He had had a shop over at his farm but he changed locations. He was not a smith himself but maintained a shop, hiring his workmen. Mr. Harris was the first physician in 1842. He was also the first postmaster. Mail was carried once in two weeks on horseback from Deerfield to Greenville, Delaware county. A little cabin was used for a schoolhouse in 1837-38, standing near the river bridge on the north bank. A log church was built about 1839. The town grew gradually and not very slowly and it came to be quite a stirring place. There were at one time (1845 to 1850) three or four thriving stores, two smith shops, three hotels and considerable other business of various kinds. The years during the war witnessed the greatest activity in goods. There were heavy stock trading and much other business. Fitzpatrick & Wilson drove and fed stock largely. Bridges: There are three large bridges near Fairview, all of them over the Mississinewa. One is directly at Fairview, crossing over the river to the residence of J. B. McKinney, Esq., and constructed of iron. One wooden bridge near Samuel Caylor's. One wooden bridge near Evans'.

Rockingham.—The village was laid out in 1833 by William R. Merine and recorded in 1836. The town had so slight a growth and so early a death, few have ever so much as heard of it or had the least idea of its location. John Ford, however, who moved to the county in 1839, residing on Elkhorn in Green township, said that a good store was kept. So that Rockingham lived its brief life not in vain and spent all its days in accomplishing good to the surrounding region.

Steubenville.—Israel Wirt, Jonathan Green, proprietors. It was laid out by Israel Wirt and Jonathan Green in 1840. It stands upon sections 13 and 14, on the south side of the Mississinewa river, though not very near to that stream. There were once a tanyard, a store, kept by Israel Wirt, a smith shop by Julian and four or five houses. A cemetery lies near the place which is still in use and in resaonable repair. The town never did much business, nor was it ever prosperous and it has been entirely dead for years. The Green consolidated school stands upon the site of Steubenville.

Philip Barger was born in Fayette county, Ohio in 1815, His parents were Virginians who left that state on account of slavery. His father died when Philip was young. Mr. Barger came to look at the country in 1846, and entered land in the fall of that year (one hundred and forty-five acres). He married Elizabeth Strong October 4, 1838, in Delaware county, Indiana, came to Randolph county, Indiana, to live and settle October 24, 1838. They have had seven children. His wife died August 7, 1877. He was by occupation a farmer and has also held several public trusts. He was township assessor, justice of the peace four years, county commissioner two terms. He was one of the board that built the new court-house and satisfied that it did right.

Monroe Township.—For years the settlements seemed to find White river an impassable barrier. For half a generation after settlers had begun to pour into the southern half of the White river valley, scarce a solitary pioneer had ventured across the stream into that uncouth wilderness. In fact the first entry within the bounds of Monroe township was not made until seventeen years had passed away after the first entry in the valley of White river. The entries, even at that time, throughout that region, were few and scant enough as given below: Monroe was mostly taken between 1835 and 1838 inclusive, chiefly during the years 1836 and 1837. Two entries, forty acres each (as above), were made in 1833, three in 1834 and three in 1835 to June 17. Eight entries, embracing four hundred and forty acres—five forties and three eighties—comprise all the entries up to June 17, 1835, throughout the entire extent of Monroe township. It may be interesting to know where these eight pioneer entries were: John Rody, one mile south of Morristown, forty acres; Jeremiah B. Reed, on West Branch of Elkhorn, five miles northwest of Farmland, forty acres; Philip Baughn, on same branch of Elkhorn, one and a half miles below Reed's, eighty acres; Morgan Mills, one-half mile north of Morristown, forty acres; Bernard Kerr, on Elkhorn, right below Reed's, eighty acres; Joseph Smith, at the Methodist Episcopal church, on West Branch of Elkhorn, above Reed's, forty acres; Henry Rash, just south of Morristown, forty acres; Abraham Garst, one mile southwest of Farmland, and one and a half miles northeast of the mouth of Cabin creek, eighty acres. Three of them were near Morristown —one north and two south of it. Four were above the West Branch of Elkhorn to its junction with the East Branch. One was southwest of Farmland. About that time it would seem that several had come in, perhaps selecting their claims and settling previous to making entries of their land. From one who came in in 1835, we obtain the following statement of settlers living in the region in 1835; Jeremiah B. Reed, near Rehobeth meeting-house; James Harvey, north of Rehobeth; Mr. Carr, north of Rehobeth, on the Isaac Thornburg place; Samuel Smith, on the Adams farm, north of Rehobeth; Philip Booker, across from Abram Hammer's; Isaac Garringer, on the State road, north and south; Jonathan Flood, in 1836, near Hopewell church, a Protestant Methodist minister; John F. Wood, William Wood, in northwest corner of township; Moses Marks, north of Parker; John Baughn, in the edge of Delaware county, who was married twice, and has had twenty-six children—seventeen by his first wife and nine by the second; John B. Mills, north of Shiloh; Andrew Cortner, west of Shiloh. Other settlers on Elkhorn, northwest of Farmland, were: Messrs. Hammer, Booker, Adams, Garringer, McCarney, Peter Hester, etc., etc. Eli Hiatt came in and settled one-half mile south of Farmland in 1836. Isaac Garringer "planted his stakes" on Elkhorn, three miles northwest of Farmland, about the same time. Peter Hester came on Bush creek in 1830, perhaps the first on Bush creek. Mr. Bowers bought out Mr. Hester soon after. In fact, Green township was settled before Monroe, 640 acres being settled in 1832, in six entries; thirteen entries made in 1833 comprising 920 acres; seven entries made in 1834, including 600 acres; and eight entries in 1835, covering some 400 acres—or thirty-four entries in all with about 2,560 acres; or, in both townships, forty-two entries with 3,000 acres. And of the whole number, only five contained 160 acres and they were all in Green township; twenty-two were forty acres each and fifteen were eighty acres each.

The township, like much of the county, is level, or moderately rolling, comprising a fine body of land, which, though late in settlement from difficulty of access, has richly rewarded its hardy and enterprising settlers. The surface was originally covered with a heavy growth of timber of the kinds common in the region, much of which still remains, to furnish in these latter days of increased demand and improved market facilities, a rich source of wealth to the present owners of the farms located in the township.

The first school in the southwest part of Monroe is mentioned in the account of Thomas Wallace. In the northwest part of the township, on Campbell creek, Jacob Jones came in 1838, three miles north of Parker. At that time James and William Wood and George Burkett had already settled in the same region, coming in 1836. The first school in that region was in Delaware county, in 1839, one and a half miles west of Mr. Jones'. The first school in that neighborhood in Randolph was taught by old Mr. Flood, a brother to Rev. Jonathan Flood.

The first meeting-house in the neighborhood was in Delaware county, built in 1841; but there was a log house used for meetings before that and the first Sabbath school was held in the log house, Jacob Jones being superintendent then and also after the new house was built.

MORRISTOWN, PARKER POSTOFFICE.

Location, sections 16 and 17, 20, 12, in the western part of Monroe township, near Delaware county line, on the Bee Line railroad. William E. Harris, Joseph Lewis, Allen W. Lewis, proprietors. T. C. Puckett, surveyor. Recorded November 15, 1851. Eighty lots. Morristown (John Jones' Addition)—John Jones, proprietor. Eight lots. Recorded April 2, 1857. Location, upon the Bee-Line railroad, west of Farmland. Morristown seems to have been laid out some months before Farmland was, November 15, 1851, and Farmland July 28, 1852.

The first store in Morristown was owned by Andrew Devoss and Milton Harris. The first smith shop was by Joseph Thornburg. The first shoemaker was Peter Deal, in 1854. The first cabinet shop was opened by William Fleming in 1854. The first saw-mill was by W. W. Jones in 1853 or 1854. The merchants have been Devoss & Harris, Thomas Aker & Harvey Harris, Thomas Lewis, Brown & Meeks, James Russell, Lake Andrews, Joshua Rector, Thomas Johnson, Thornburg & Gunkel, Dotson, Devoss. Dotson & Devoss, Daugherty, Daugherty & Scott, Scott, Brown, Dotson, N. C. Simmons, J. H. Byrd, Davis, Cline. Drug stores—Edward Reece and Noah Basley, during the war. The first physician was Martin Connor, in 1854

Three Parker City Snapshots.

Parker is a small but somewhat energetic place, injured somewhat by being so close to Farmland on the east and Selma on the west. However, it holds a share of the business. There are three religious societies—Methodist, Christian and Friends. Parker is a live, progressive town, being supported mainly by agricultural interests. Parker has all kinds of business well represented, good homes, churches and schools.

Farmland.—Location, sections 13, 20, 12, and sections 18, 20, 13, on Bee Line railroad, west of Winchester, one mile north of White river, in Monroe township. Recorded July 28, 1852. Henry D. Huffman, William Macy, proprietors. One hundred and fifty-two lots. Streets—Mulberry, Main, Plum, north and south; William, Railroad, Henry, east and west. Peter S. Miller's Addition—Ten lots. Peter S. Miller, proprietor. Recorded October 29, 1870. Macy & Groom's Addition—David Macy, Robert H. Grooms, proprietors. Grooms, five lots, south; Macy, eight lots, east. Location, south and east of Farmland. Recorded January 24, 1862. The first store was owned by Jonathan and Aaron Macy, standing where Stanley's store now is. Wesley Keener built a house and sold it to Miller & Ford, who kept a store in it for many years. J. Macy & Sons had a tin shop in 1855. Another tin shop was started in 1851 by Ludwick. Jonathan Macy started also a smith shop, hiring hands to run it. The first hotel was in 1858, by Price Thomas, but it soon ran through. Jonathan Macy sold his dwelling house for a hotel. Macy sold his store to Joel Thornburg, who, for a time, carried on a large business. Stanley & Robbins took the place next. Stanley bought out Robbins. The first grain-buyers were Miller & Ford and Macy & Sons. The latter quit, but Miller & Ford kept on. Stanley Robbins also undertook the business. Before the war, Thornburg & Burris bought grain for three or four years and quit. James S. Davis began in about 1871. Jonathan Macy began a hardware store in 1867, continuing four years. Mr. Barker set up a harness shop about 1870. George Watson has owned a grocery in Farmland for fifty years. The first physician was Doctor Keener in 1850.

Farmland was organized as a town in 1867, with five wards. Farmland is one of the most progressive towns in the county. It has three churches and splendid schools. It is a splendid business point and is thoroughly up-to-date in every respect.

Until the commencement of the Bee Line railroad little improvement had been made north of White river excepting in the immediate vicinity of the Mississinewa river and the route of travel had been south of White river on the state road and but little improvement had been made north of it; the railroad opened up the south part of Monroe township.

Three towns were established on this road, two of which, Morristown and Farmland, have already been discussed. The third one was Royston.

Royston existed only as a matter of record, no lots were ever sold or houses built. The success of Farmand, one mile west, was the doom of Royston. Just why this is true is difficult to understand as Royston was surveyed and established one year before Farmland, and seemingly, on a better site for a town.

BIOGRAPHY.

William Broderick was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, in 1809, came to Randolph county in 1853, married Mary Dugan in 1836 and resided two miles north of Farmland.

Elias F. Halliday was born in 1824. He came to Wayne county, Indiana in 1832 and to Randolph county in 1851, residing near Farmland. He was a merchant from 1851 to 1861; county treasurer from 1861-1865 and county commissioner from 1876-1882. Mr. Halliday was identified with most of the business enterprises of Farmland and Monroe township.

Abram Hammer was born in Pennsylvania in 1817, moved to Licking county, Ohio, in 1828 and to Randolph county in 1838; married Nancy Harbour, daughter of Rev. Elijah Harbour, a pioneer of Greensfork township, in 1839.

Eli Hiatt was born near Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1801 and moved near Cherry Grove, Randolph county, in 1825; he moved south of Farmland in 1837, afterward removing to Franklin township. Mr. Harbour died in the fall of 1880, age seventy-nine years.

William Macy, born in North Carolina in 1802, married Lucy Diggs in 1829, at which time he moved to Randolph county. Mr. Macy was the father of Capt. William W. Macy, one time sheriff of Randolph county. Joseph Macy, born in North Carolina, in 1808, and came to Randolph county in 1820 and married Sarah Hobson. David Macy, born on Lost creek, Tennessee, in 1816, married Priscilla Leullen in 1836 and moved to Farmland in 1860. (See biography of J. W. Macy.) Aaron Macy, born in Henry county, 1829, and moved to Farmland in 1852. Jethro Macy, born in Henry county 1825, moved to Randolph county in 1854.

Mathew W. Diggs, born June 20, 1840, was the son of Armsbee Diggs, who settled in this county in 1817. Mr. Diggs moved to Farmland in 1865 and engaged in the harness and saddlery business. Mr. Diggs is one of the most respected citizens of Farmland and one of its oldest.

Judge Peter S. Miller, born in Farmersburg, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1808, and located in Randolph county in 1839. Mr. Miller is a miller by trade and at one time owned and operated the "Bond Mill." Mr. Miller was elected justice of the peace, at the expiration of his term of office he was elected judge of the Probate Court, which position he held four years. He then engaged in the mercantile business in Farmland and served as postmaster and agent of the "Bee Line" railroad. He afterward purchased a half interest in a drug store and later took into partnership Mr. L. A. Gable, a son-in-law. Mr. Miller was a live, wide-awake, enthusiastic citizen, very much in favor of public improvements and was instrumental in establishing the "Indianapolis & Bellefontaine railroad."

John A. Moorman, born August 19, 1820, Richmond county, North Carolina. He was brought to Randolph county in April, 1822. Mr. Moorman was a man of unusual ability and enjoyed the confidence of all who knew him. He was elected representative to the State Legislature in 1860 and proved to be of splendid assistance to Governor Morton. He served in the Civil war as First Lieutenant and Quartermaster of the One Hundred and Seventeenth Indiana. He was again elected to the Legislature in 1876 and was one of those who voted favorably for the bill to erect the present State House.

Joseph Meeks, born December 29, 1834, in Virginia, and moved to Randolph county in 1837. Mr. Meeks was a stock buyer and no doubt bought and shipped more stock than any other man in Randolph county.

Reuben C. Shaw was born March 14, 1826, in Boston. Mr. Shaw moved to Randolph county in 1855, after having crossed the plains to California in 1849. Mr. Shaw has written a splendid description of those times and an interesting story of his life. Mr. Shaw was a very successful man, being what we sometimes call a "long headed Yankee."

Charles H. Stanley, born in Wayne county, June 22, 1826, was engaged in milling, grain and mercantile business in Farmland for many years.

William H. Sumwalt, born October 4, 1817, in Baltimore, moved to Randolph county in 1825.

Isaac Thornburg, born in Ohio, came to this county in 1833.

Samuel Wright, born September 29, 1832. Mr. Wright began work as a carpenter when nineteen years of age and continued to work at that during his life, except when engaged in the Civil war. Mr. Wright has the distinction of being one of the most successful carpenters and builders of his time.

James E. Wood was born in Virginia and moved to Randolph county in 1836, and settled three miles north of Parker.

Adam Slonaker was born in Virginia in 1824; moved first to Ohio, then to Randolph county in 1855. Mr. Slonaker served this township as trustee and county commissioner, both with equal credit.

Other pioneers of Monroe township were Capt. Wm. Burres, Robert Cougill, John L. Flood, Isaac Garringer, Adam Keever, George Keever, Thomas McGuire, James Pursley, Barclay Smith, Robert L. Sommersville, William Reed, Moses Marks, Joseph W. Branson, Samuel Botkin, Columbus W. Lewis, John H. Jones, Henderson Hinchman, Moses Marks, Cyrus Moore and John R. Scott and many others.

UNION CITY.

In the spring of 1849 the ground on which this enterprising town has since been built was owned by a settler by the name of Augustus Loveland. There was on the tract scarcely a sign of alteration or improvement by human hands. Mr. Loveland, its owner, had a little opening and a cabin house and a log stable.

The Messrs. Smith (Jeremiah and Oliver H.), having succeeded in establishing the Bellefontaine railroad upon its present route, conceived the idea of building up a town at the state line. Accordingly, the Loveland tract was purchased by Jeremiah Smith in May, 1849, and steps were immediately taken for the survey and platting of a town site. The growth of the place was rendered more certain by the fact that the railroad from Bellefontaine to Indianapolis was built by two companies, and in those days goods had always to be trans-shipped at the termination of each road. About the same time, moreover, measures were taken which were effectual to change the route of the road which had been projected, and upon which much work had already been done from Greenville to Winchester, so that the junction with the Bellefontaine route should be at the state line, thus securing at once three important outlets to the embryo town—east, west and south—even before the new city had begun to be, except in the brain of those who had so shrewdly planned and managed the whole affair. And besides, a road was planned and built from Columbus to Union City, thus making four roads to start the town with, which, in those times, was an immense advantage.

The town was surveyed and platted some time between May and December, 1849, as the land was purchased in May and the plat was recorded in December of that year. The lots were offered some time in the winter or spring of 1850, and, among other purchasers, David Teeter became the owner of a lot in the projected town. At the time of that purchase (February, 1850), no buildings were on the original site of Union City but the cabin and the stable of Augustus Loveland, as above described.

There was a house north of Division street, between Howard and Columbia, not far from where old Mr. Carter used to live. It was occupied by a Mr. Ricard. The eighty-acre tract was owned by a Mr. Crumrine, and Ricard rented it. Samuel Carter bought the land afterward of Mr. Crumrine. On the lot purchased by him, David Teeter proceeded, shortly afterward (say March or April, 1850), to erect a dwelling. That edifice was at the southeast corner of Oak and Howard, and has long been known as the Star House. It was the first building erected in Union City. Mr. Teeter did not live to finish it. He had been feeble in health for some time, and he grew worse, and died in May, 1850. The house was sold to Benjamin Hawkins and he finished it. Mr. Montgar lived in it a while. No other house was built in 1850. The second house was put up for Henry Debolt. It was a frame, and was built by John Teeter in the spring of 1851, and it stood near the present site of the opera house.

The third was a one-story frame building. Daniel Weimar took the contract, and John Teeter and Hezekiah Fowler built it for John Frazier and Jack Downing, intending it for a saloon. They used it for a year, perhaps, and quit. Those two houses were the only ones built in 1851; but in the spring of 1852, things began to open out pretty lively. Four railroad tracks weer rapidly concentrating upon that point in the woods on the Ohio line, all of which were soon completed to Union City, but the western end of the fourth (Union City to Logansport) had to wait for several years.

The people, in the spring of 1852, seemed to begin to realize the situation, and many appeared determined to become masters of it, if possible. And so, early in 1852, settlers began to arrive. As already stated, there were just three dwelling-houses—the original Lopeland log mansion, the Star House (unfinished), and the house built for Henry Debolt. But by July, 1852, several houses had been erected and several residents were on the ground.

Alfred Lenox, one of the earliest residents, said that when he came, July 2, 1852, the residents on both sides of the line, but mostly in Ohio, were Messrs. J. D. Carter, Montgar, Dr. John Diehl, W. A. C. Dixon, Jacob Livengood, John Hayes, Schultz Hayes, Henry Debolt, ———— Miller, John Teeter, Seth Hoke, John Koons. J. J. Turpen came the same day—July 2, 1852.

The first saloon was kept in the building on Pearl street.

The demon of liquor proved itself worthy of its ancient name on its first introduction into the town, created a great row, and caused the discharge of seventeen railroad hands soon after that grog shop was opened. That saloon and another, by means of some pretty energetic measures, were obliged to "dry up."

Abram Hoke, R. B. McKee, Dr. J. N. Converse, Benjamin Hawkins, Mr. Searl, Enos Turpen, Simeon Branham, William Anderson, Samuel L. Carter, R. A. Willson and doubtless many others, came in 1852 or early in 1853.

Business first began near the point where the Deerfield and Greenville wagon road crosses the Dayton and Union railroad. J. J. Turpen was weatherboarding there a building for a store in July, 1852. He set up the store, of which he had charge, the goods belonging to Mr. Ward, contractor on the Piqua road, in August, 1852, the first on this ground. John D. Carter had built a saw-mill and cut the first log about April 1, 1852. Alfred Lenox had the first grocery, October to December, 1852, near the Deerfield Crossing. He had a fine run of business, but his partner left, and, having no spare time himself (Lenox was working hands on the Dayton and Union railroad), he sold the goods to a Greenville firm in December, 1852.

At this date, Messrs. Turpen, Lenox, Hayes, Livengood, Johnson, Wintermote and some others had dwellings near the Deerfield Crossing.

Mr. Livengood had built a boarding house, perhaps the first on that ground, just opposite the store building above mentioned and east of the Deerfield road, and was boarding scores of hands who were working on the railroads.

Quite a village had grown up between the months of September and December, 1852, near the Deerfield Crossing, as though business might perhaps take hold at that place. But it did not do so. That point proved to be away from trade, and business left that spot and wandered westward. A strong effort was made to establish things in Ohio, near the mill, brewery and foundry. Mr. Carter had built a saw-mill. David Fruits put up an immense four-story frame, intended for an opera house, hotel and what not, but he soon "got through his pile," and his great frame stood there for a time, projecting far into the upper air, and nicknamed the "deadening" by the neighbors, until at length somebody bought it, took one story from the top and finished the rest for use [Orr House]. Before long a grist-mill, a brewery, a foundry, etc., were erected, a store or two was started, and heroic efforts were made to hold the town in the Buckeye state. But all would not do. General business could not be made to "stick" over there, but it insisted on fleeing across the line and building its cozy nest in the balmy Hoosier state.

In fact, the original intention of the projectors was that the town should be in Hoosierdom, and their plans could not be readily thwarted. Besides, to make assurance doubly sure, Mr. Smith purchased forty acres of land directly on the state line, on the Ohio side, and held it vacant, refusing to sell to anybody any of that tract, thus utterly preventing the Ohio side from building up to the business of the Indiana side. And that gap between the two corporations continued for about twenty years, until the supremacy of Union City, Indiana, was supposed to be so firmly established as to need to fear no rivalship.

About January, 1853, Courtney Hayes started a grocery across the track from the old Orr Building (Ohio). There were several residences in Indiana, and a hotel or two had been started but no other business had yet begun there. In February, 1853, Benjamin Hawkins built a frame house on the Indiana side and put in a stock of dry goods, and Jesse Paxson became his clerk.

The plat was corrected and enlarged, the plan being radically changed, the angle of the streets being made different, the lots smaller and more numerous, etc. The new plan and plat were recorded February 6, 1854, more than four years after the first was made. In the new plat there were 483 lots. The streets are mostly not "square with the world," but run at a considerable angle, the northward streets veering toward the west. The north and south streets (beginning with state line) were as follows: State Line, Union, Columbia, Howard, Plum, Walnut, High (and Broadway, east of the Branham House, from Pearl to Chestnut, across the depot). The east and west streets, beginning at the north, were Division (directly east and west), Hickory, Oak, Pearl, Smith, Chestnut. Smith street is on the railroad, and Chestnut is south of the railroad. The streets are eighty feet wide, except Smith and Broadway, which are 100 feet and Division and State Line, which are much narrower than eighty feet. The alleys in the original plat are thirty feet wide. Large additions have been made from time to time (about eighteen or more, in all) in Indiana, till the entire town in that state covers nearly a mile square—perhaps rather more than that.

About 1853 Mr. Searl built a building east of the Branham House for a grain warehouse. The grain business rose, almost at a bound, to immense proportions. Hundreds of wagon loads have been in waiting at once, and the grain men had to work day and night to keep up with the business. Grain was hauled from Recovery, from New Corydon, and from within six miles of Richmond. The second warehouse was built by James White, but it was burned in 1857, before it had stood a year.

In 1855, three years after Union City began, there were six dry goods stores—Messrs. Lenox, Turpen, McFarlan, White, Hawkins and one other.

John D. Carter and Montgar, in 1854, had a store on the Ohio side, and a large trade.

There were in early times some saloons in Union City (Indiana side), but Alfred Lenox routed one, and Simeon Branham another, probably in 1855. This (Indiana) side of the town has never taken kindly to saloons, and, for the most part, has kept them out. Union City, Ohio, however, is sufficiently infested with the nuisance.

FIRST THINGS.

The first house erected was the Star House, by Mr. Teeter, in 1850. The first hotel was the Forest House, built July 2, 1852. The first store was that of J. J. Turpen (Ohio side, Deerfield Crossing), August, 1852. The first grocery was by Alfred Lenox (Deerfield Crossing), October to December, 1852. The first store, Indiana side, was by B. Hawkins, February, 1853. The first grain house was by Hawkins & Searl, February, 1853. The first railroad agent was R. A. Willson, opening the first set of railroad books in Union City. He managed all three of the roads for some time. The Bee Line was two roads for awhile. The first cars from this place were loaded with grain by Hawkins & Searl, on both roads. J. E. Paxson set up the first boot and shoe store in 1856. William Anderson set up the first blacksmith shop in August, 1852, and his shop is running yet (1881). The first hardware store was by Dukemineer & Maloy. The first stove store man was a Mr. Smith (or Evans). The first millinery establishment was by Mrs. Bennett. The first drug store belonged to Simmons & Hill, 1854 or 1855. The first livery stable was by Alfred Lenox, in 1855. The first book store was set up by Espy & Steele. The first bank was the First National Bank, Edward Starbuck, president, 1865. Kuntz & Willson began their lumber yard in 1867. Kirschbaum & Company began their store in 1865. W. K. Smith began the shoe business in 1859. J. D. Smith set up his jewelry store in 1865. The first public school was taught in the winter of 1853-54, by George W. Brainard. The first church organization was the Methodist Episcopal, in 1852. There were four members, two on probation. The first preaching place was Henry Debolt's house. The first Sunday school was in 1853; superintendent, Rev. J. T. Farson; attendance, twenty-five; place, old Bee Line boarding car. The two first brick edifices are thought to have been Branham's Hotel, 1855, and the building on the southwest corner of Columbia and Pearl—erected by I. P. Gray. The first sawmill was built by John D. Carter in 1852. The first grist-mill belonged to Hobbs (Ohio side), began in 1857. McMillan built a warehouse (Ohio side), and then it was changed into a mill by Hobbs about 1857. The first public school house was built in 1858. The first church was the Disciples church built in 1853-58. The first child born was Henry Debolt's, dead. The first magistrate was Esquire Evans. The first attorney was William P. Debolt. The first physician was Dr. Diehl, or perhaps, Dr. Twiford, 1852.

OFFICIAL HISTORY.

Union City, Indiana, was organized as a town, but no record can be found before 1863. The minutes for 1863 speak of ordinances passed in April, 1855. From that time to the city charter the officers were as follows: Presidents of the board of trustees, Messrs. Weddington, Lambert, Maloy, White, Hill, Cowdery, Swain, Cranor, Jaqua and Harris. The trustees have been Messrs. Maloy, Grahs, Simmons, William Branham, Weddington, Hake, Lambert, Koons, Gregory, Hill, White, Coats, Wiggs, Heitzman, Cowdery, Humphrey, W. K. Smith, Willson, Frey, Cranor, Gist, J. Dye Smith, Mathes, Jaqua, Knapp, Johnson, Ewen, Kerr, Ladd, Harris and Frank. Clerks of the board, Messrs. Reeder, Swain, Gregory, Beall, Smith, Lambert, Wiley, Johnson and Converse. Treasurers, Messrs. Cadwallader, Polly, Coats, Anderson and Johnson. Marshals, Messrs. Sutton, Harkrader, Murphy, Nickey, Mason and Headington.

Union City maintained its organization as a town until 1875, when it was chartered as a city, being one of the first in eastern Indiana to take advantage of the state law granting city charters to towns of its size.

Mayors of Union City, Indiana (it is impopssible to give dates because of the variations in the terms of the mayors): Lorenzo D. Lambert, elected in 1875; James B. Ross, Theodore Shockney, I. G. Stall, Charles H. Cadwallader, Frank H. Bowen, Samuel R. Bell, Wilfield S. Murray, Thomas Jones, Samuel R. Bell, Clarence S. Pierce, G. A. Rosenbush, Charles S. Hardy, Charles I. Williamson, William Harris and Charles D. Reitenour.

Councilmen, since the city corporation was created, have been Messrs. Coddington, Pierce, Koons, Stall, Harris, Frank, Doty, Wetz, Reeder, Bowersox, Castle, Rubey, Witham, John D. Smith, Jones, Vestal, Ladd, Nivison, Masslich, Frey. The following form the present council: Milo F. Oliver, George Hueber, William Keagy, Henry G. Rosenbush and Fred Schmidt.

Union City is today a thorough progressive city and all lines of business are well represented, and it is noted for its fine homes, churches, schoolhouses and public buildings. The city and vicinity support three substantial banks that would be a credit to a much larger city than Union City, and the same can be said of the general stores, for it is very uncommon for people that do shopping to any extent to leave Union City to do same. The city has an excellent equipment of stores, such as grocery, drug, harness, dry goods, clothing, millinery, boot, shoe, etc., and said business is conducted by a live and energetic class of business men.

Union City has been noted for years for its manufacturing interests, principally in the "Go" line. This branch of the industry is represented, first, by the Ross Carriage Manufacturing Company. This company was established in 1866 by George W. Ross, and was operated by Ross & Horney. They were succeeded by Ross & Hardy, who, in turn, were succeeded by Ross & Anderson. The company was incorporated as a stock company, with a capital stock of $24,000.00, in 1899, and employs at this time an average of twenty-five men per day. It has a yearly output of fifteen hundred vehicles, not including a great amount of repairing, repainting; in fact, all kinds of repair work. This has been a very valuable industry for Union City, and has been one of the institutions that has given the city a standing as a manufacturing city.

The Union City Carriage Manufacturing Company was organized in 1881, with a capital stock of $100,000.00. It is a mammoth concern, employing one hundred and twenty-five men, and has a yearly output of five thousand buggies and carriages. They have a broad territory for their output and the excellence of their product makes them a leading factor in the buggy trade of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois.

The latest organization of Union City is the Union City Body Company, which has recently been organized, with a capital stock of $75,000.00. This concern employs eighty-five men and has a yearly output of 2,500 bodies. They manufacture, principally, auto bodies, with metal panels. The tremendous demand for automobiles has made this one of the most valuable companies in eastern Indiana, and its capital stock rates very high in the market. They sell to manufacture only and cover the middle west as their territory.

UNION CITY WATER WORKS.

Union City was one of the first cities of the state to own and operate its own water system. The excellence of the system and the financial benefit that it has been to the city certainly speak well for the policy and management of the people who have had it in control. The first well for this company was sunk in the south part of the city to a depth of something like twenty-three feet. The bottom of the well is at a vein of gravel something like fifteen feet deep, below which is a stratum of a hard pan from six to eight feet deep. From that there alternates layers of clay and quicksand to an unknown depth. The capacity of this well was about 180,000 gallons per day, which amount was at various times taken from it. The second well was a surface well thirty-nine feet deep and thirty feet in diameter, built in 1883. The third well was drilled as a gas well, but no gas being obtained the well was plugged and used as a water well, coming from a depth of 235 feet, and is eight inches in diameter. Date unknown. The fourth and fifth wells were drilled by Charles Guthiel, of Winchester, in 1900, and are three hundred feet deep, diameter ten inches. Sixth well, drilled in July, 1914, is 221 feet deep, and ten inches in diameter. The water from these wells is analyzed every six months by the state board of health. The following is the analysis made May 23, 1914: Odor, none; color, 16; turbidity, slight; sediment, much; free ammonia, .0020; albuminoid ammonia, .0020; nitrates, .0030; nitrites, .0001; chlorine, .6; hardness, 34.8; iron, .01; colon bacilli, none. After giving the above anaylsis, State Chemist Barnard added the following sentence, "This is good water."

Mains.—The first mains, laid in 1873, were of pine logs, with iron and coated with pitch. Sizes, ten inches, eight inches, six inches and four inches. Of this kind there were four and three-fourths miles laid. Some of this main is still in use. The plant has been extended so that at present there is about nineteen miles of mains.

Service.—There are one hundred and seven fire hydrants. Consumer service is partly by meter and partly by "flat rate." There are 900 meters in use and about 400 use the water by "flat rate." Total services, 1,300.

Equipment.—The first building was forty feet square, and a Dean pump of Indianapolis was installed. Its capacity was 900 gallons per minute. The city, as well as the installers, became embroiled in a law suit over the use of a patent governor. The city lost its suit and a judgment for $5,000.00 was returned by the courts against it. This plant had two water tube boilers which furnished the power. These were in use about twenty years. In 1893 the boilers were replaced by two new return tubular boilers, and the pumping force was increased by the addition of a Duplex Pattern pump, whose capacity was 1,500 gallons per minute. It was so arranged that the old Dean and the new pump were used in duplicate. In 1898, because of not being able to get the water from the wells in sufficient quantity, an air system was installed.

In 1913 the old building was torn down and the plant rebuilt. Two new return tubular boilers of 100 horse power each, a new Cross compound condensing pump, with a capacity of 900 gallons per minute, were installed. The old Dean was discarded and the Duplex pump was rebuilt and is used in duplicate. At this time an air compressor of the Cross compound type was also installed. The capacity of the plant at this time is 2,400 gallons per minute. The total cost of rebuilding was $15,000.00.

It might be said further that the new plant has been inspected by experts and pronounced a model. The total equipment was appraised or inventoried, the plant at a total of $115,000.00, which does not include the Ohio side mains. There is included in the plant a reservoir for fire reserve. It was built in 1908, is 60x80 feet, and has a capacity of 360,000 gallons. It is entirely covered and is thoroughly sanitary.

Financial Statement.—When the plant was first operated and for some few years, it was necessary for the council to vote money from the general fund to the water works fund. Then, upon the extension of the plant, it furnishes a very substantial revenue to the city. At the present time the surplus is being used to extend the plant. Last year the revenue reached almost $10,000.00, and the operating expenses were about $5,000.00. When it is remembered that the city pays no charges for fire hydrants or anything of the kind, this is a splendid showing.

E. S. Pettus, the first superintendent, did much to make the plant a success, and the work he began is being carried forward successfully by the present superintendent, Charles F. Smith.

Nathan Cadwallader was born in Warren county, Ohio, in 1826. His father moved to Greensfork, Randolph county, Indiana, in 1833. He was an active, thriving man, but he died in 1840. Nathan was the only boy, and but fourteen years old. He "gouged along" after a "fashion," borrowed a horse sometimes, etc. He did most of the work that was done, though his sisters helped what they could in loading, cleaning grain, etc. They cleared grain by "flapping" it on a sheet, and had to haul everything on a sled. A wagon was a luxury not to be thought of. Two brothers, Thomas and Abner (his father), came together, and settled west of Arba. Mr. Cadwallader attended school at Winchester Seminary, under Professor Cole, twelve weeks. To show the primitive simplicity of those times, it may not be amiss to state that when Professor Cole advised his aspiring country lads to invest in a box of blacking and a brush and to try their qualities, Nathan obediently procured the articles, but was utterly at a non plus, because he had no knowledge of the modus operandi, never having seen an application of the stuff. He taught school four terms; was clerk for Needham, Mauzy & Company; bought out Mauzy and sold goods at Spartanburg; bought out Needham and sold at Newport three or four years; was partner with Raiford Wiggs at Union City; went to Cincinnati, in the firm of Gray, Cadwallader & Wiggs, as wholesale grocers; returned to Union City, and, with Col. I. P. Gray, established the Citizens Bank in 1865. This was reorganized (same name), under Indiana law, in 1873, and he was made president. Mr. Cadwallader was state senator in 1876 and 1880. He has been twice married, first to Elizabeth Celinda Mauzy, then to Sarah Griffis (1854). He has three children. Mr. Cadwallader is now a resident of Winchester and a highly respected citizen.

Rev. Thomas Colclazer was born in Washington City in 1811, and came to Coshocton county, Ohio, in 1827. In 1838 he married Hannah Johnson. From his early boyhood till he threw down his hammer and took up the Gospel trumpet, he was a blacksmith. He was converted to Christ at a camp-meeting on Dowdy's fork, in the north part of Coshocton county, Ohio, in 1829, under the preaching of the sainted Bigelow. Shortly afterward, in 1830, he was licensed as an exhorter; in 1840, as a preacher, and in 1851 he began to "ride circuit," his first work of this kind being at Deerfield and vicinity in 1851 and 1852. It thus came to pass that he was the earliest preacher at Union City, when it first began to be. His fields of labor in later years were Middletown, Henry county; Perkinsville, below Anderson; Bethlehem, sixteen miles east of Indianapolis; Alexandria, Philadelphia (west of Greenfield) and elsewhere. He died suddenly, in 1865, at Union City.

John Fisher was born in North Carolina in 1792, near the old "Guilford Battle Ground." He left that state in 1816 on horseback, and rode alone (except two days' journey) all the way to Lebanon, Ohio; and (after five or six days spent in visiting friends there) to Wayne county, Indiana, having been fifteen days on the road—a pretty quick trip compared with the speed often made by families and groups coming through on a "moving" expedition. He entered 160 acres in the winter of 1816-17, worked about, put up a cabin, was married to Jane Starbuck September 16, 1819, by Adam Boyd, the only justice of the peace in Wayne county at that time. There were no justices in New Garden township till 1822 or 1823. Mr. Fisher and his wife began to keep "cabin" October 7, 1819; and they lived on that farm till January, 1866, more than forty-six years. They came to Union City in 1866. John Fisher was an orphan boy at six years old. His father died in December, and his mother in September, 1798. He was raised by an elder brother. His father had ten children, who all lived to be grown and have families. Jane Starbuck (his wife) was born in 1803 in Guilford county, North Carolina. She came with her father, Edward Starbuck, to Wayne county in 1817. John Fisher died at the residence of his son-in-law, Charles W. Pierce, in Union City, Indiana, February 8, 1881, in his eighty-ninth year.

E. J. Harshman, Union City, Ohio, is a native of Randolph county, Indiana; he was born in Jackson township, in 1842, the son of Reuben Harsh-man, an early settler, and one of nine children. He grew up a farmer's son, attending only the schools of the neighborhood. In 1862 he joined the Fifty-fourth Indiana Regiment at Indianapolis, and after the end of his term of service he was mustered out December, 1863. He married Sally French in 1871, and they had three children.

Other citizens, who are not mentioned, and who were factors in the making of Union City were Edmund L. Anderson, Charles W. Pierce, William Anderson, blacksmith; William H. Anderson, lumber; Adolphus Barnes, merchant; A. J. S. Bowers, merchant; John Butcher, grocer; Robert J. Clark, banker; Jefferson Gist, blacksmith; George Grahs, tailor; William Harris, manufacturer; Abram Hoke, carpenter; Seth Hoke, jeweler; Stephen H. Ladd, grocer; Robert B. McKee, merchant; Jesse Paxon, merchant; Enos H. Turpen, grocer; William A. Wiley, miller; William T. Worthington.

It would be impossible, in a book of this kind, to give anything like an accurate description of the many numerous business enterprises carried on in the hustling city of Union City.

The Witham Bowen Lumber Company, Peter Koontz Lumber Company, Frank E. Rohr Lumber Company, Knapp Supply Company, Pierce Elevators, Kirschbaum Clothing Company, and many other enterprises would deserve more mention than space would allow here.

Union City has maintained a constant growth and a wholesome business atmosphere, and will no doubt continue to hold a position of first importance with the business cities of the state.

COUNTY-SEAT, WINCHESTER.

The legislative enactment creating Randolph county was approved by Governor Jennings January 10, 1818. This, among other things, provided for five commissioners to "establish the seat of justice" in Randolph county and this further provided that these commissioners might receive donations of land, the proceeds of which were to be used for public affairs. These locating commissioners met in August, 1818, and fixed the county-seat at Winchester.

They received as donations to the county land as follows: Charles Conway, sixty acres; John Wright, fifty acres; David Wright, ten acres; David Stout, eighteen acres; Daniel Petty, twenty acres; making one hundred fifty-eight acres from five men. This land was all located in sections 20 and 21, township 20 north, range 14 east, being the present site of the city of Winchester. Winchester was the first town established in the county.

The commissioners held their first two meetings in the cabin of Benjamin Cox, east of where the Friends church at White River now stands. Their third meeting, held December 6, 1818, was "a special meeting of the board of commissioners in the town of Winchester for the purpose of the letting to the lowest bidder the building of a court house, jail and stray pen in said town." From this it is evident that Winchester assumed the name almost as soon as the county was organized.

[Much of the following account of Winchester has been taken substantially from "Manuscripts" by Honorable Jere Smith, who came to Randolph county in August, 1817, and resided therein for more than fifty years until his death].

Lots were laid out in the fall and winter of 1818. The first sale of lots took place February, 1819. The whole plat was an unbroken forest, a primitive wilderness, heavily timbered, with a thick undergrowth. It was necessary to put the court house on blocks eighteen inches high to keep the building above water. A large oak, three feet through, stood for years on inlot No. 9, east front. It was cut down in 1825 or 1826, and the stump was standng there in state when Judge Smith built the Franklin House in 1839. The commissioners, Messrs. Cox, Overman and James, and Paul W. Way, agent, had agreed upon the plan of the town. Overman and Way were both surveyors, backwoods fashion. Charles Connor, who was also a "half surveyor," had a little stiff-armed compass, four-inch face, and an old two-pole chain, tied with leather and tow strings. Paul Way did the surveying. As the commissioners were looking over the ground to locate the public square, Charles Conway told Judge Smith that Old Eli Overman stuck down the Jacob-staff, saying, "Here shall be the northeast corner of the public square," and there it was, and there it is, and is to be, unless, indeed, as seems not very unlikely in these latter days, some city "engineer" shall take it into his overgrown head to plant new corners and turn town, streets and all "awry."

The first house built was a round log cabin, one-story high, "scutched down" after it was raised, and before the rafters were put up. It had a clapboard roof and a clay and stick chimney. Mr. Smith says, "I do not know who built the house, but Martin Comer owned it and lived in it a long time. It stood on inlot No. 9, north front, and was built in the early spring of 1819. The second house was put up by Thomas Wright, father-in-law of John Coats, in the spring and summer of 1819. In the summer and fall of 1819, James McCool, a blind man, put up upon inlot No. 1, west front, a good, two-story hewed-log house. When I first came to Winchester (1819), it was the hotel of the town, kept by the blind man, McCool. When next I came, James Oldham, hatter, kept tavern in it, and a hatter's shop back of it. Old Esquire Odle owned it afterward and built a little frame store at the north end and a frame shed back for bedrooms and he ran it as a hotel, store and residence for some years.

In the winter of 1819-20, James Oldham, the hatter, built a good hewed-log house, story and a half, on inlot No. 11, southeast square; and in the spring of 1820, Alvin C. Graves built a round-log cabin on lot No. 14, in the southeast square.

The hewed-log court-house and the Banta jail were built in 1819-20. In that year (1820), Judge John Sample built the first frame house, a small one-story building, on lot No. 3, east front. He set it on the west line of the lot, some distance south of the northwest corner of the lot. It would seem from this account that there were (1820) seven buildings in Winchester (if the Judge has mentioned them all).

Mr. Smith goes on, "The next frame house was in 1824-25, by David Haworth. It was on inlot No. 10, northeast square, where Jacob Elzroth lived so long and where he died.

Andrew Aker, in 1826 or 1827, built a frame house on inlot No. 8, north front, two stories, with a one-story store-room at the west end.

In 1826-27, Abner Overman built a frame house on the northeast corner of lot No. 2, east front. He sold it to John Way in the fall of 1829, who moved into it and started a blacksmith shop and lived there the rest of his days. In 1823, Mrs. Mary Reeder bought inlot No. 2, west front, built a cabin and lived there some years. She then traded it off to Nathaniel Coffin for inlot No. 12, southeast square. She (Mrs. Mary Reeder) was the "oldest inhabitant" of Winchester, in 1881, being at that time fifty-nine years old. She was in the town seven years before I was, and ten years before Jesse Way. There were, I presume, other cabins and shanties put up in the town during this decade but I cannot now call them to mind.

Winchester would seem to have had an exceedingly slow growth, remarkaby so, considering it was the seat of justice of a county containing at the start 200 voters and increasing its population with considerable rapidity; considering, moreover, that for ten years not another town was even attempted within its limits.

Judge Smith appears to think that the dozen or so houses which he describes were nearly or quite all that had been built up to 1830. And information from several sources indicates that not more than a dozen families were residents of the town at the lapse of twelve years after the town had been platted. One jail and two court-houses had been built. Court after court had been held; jurors had heard cases in the court-house and determined their verdicts seated upon the stumps and logs outside; lawyers and judges and clients had threaded and waded and swam their way through the primal woods to that frontier town; but almost no town was there. But in those halcyon days small need was there of towns, people lived at home and made well-nigh everything they used, and had little occasion to buy anything which they could not make. The larger portion of the settlers had come from the Carolinas, where towns were "few and far between," and what more need was here of such things?

It will be seen that up to 1830, Winchester as a town was not much of a success. The business of the place was small, the buildings were few and poor, the roads leading to it were new and bad, the people needed but little trade, and all went thoroughly on the slow order. The court sat and did whatever there was for them; Charles Conway, as clerk and recorder, had all the county writing to do, which was not as much for the whole eleven years as has been since recorded in a single year. County offices were at a discount then. The sheriff could not have done much, though he was collector and sheriff both, as the county tax for 1829 amounted to a sum less than $900. Jurymen came and returned without any bills to find or cases to try, and were paid the magnificent sum of fifty cents per day; and the associate judges maintained their dignity and satisfied their desires for food and lodging to the tune of two dollars per day.

Winchester was a town in the woods but for a long time there was decidedly more woods than town.

FIRST THINGS IN WINCHESTER.

The first hatter's shop in Winchester (and probably in the county) was by James Oldham, in the building erected by James McCool for a hotel. Mr. Oldham kept a hatter's shop and hotel. The first hotel was in the same building, by James McCool, in 1819, where the Peoples Loan and Trust building now stands. The first store was owned by Esquire Odle. It was not much of a store. The old house was burned in 1879. The first frame house (and probably first in the county) was built by John Sample, in 1820, upon Lot No. 3, East Front. There are doubtless more costly and splendid frame dwellings in Randolph county in 1914 than that was, but not one today which gave more solid comfort to the occupant than that same frame house, the first in Randolph county. John Way set up his smith shop in 1829. There had probably been some other, but the fact is now beyond recall. Jesse Way began his store in 1832 or 1833. Mary Reeder came to Winchester in 1823, residing upon Lot No. 2, West Front, and removing afterward to Inlot No. 12, southeast square. The court-house and jail were built in 1819 and 1826, the one by Abner Overman, and the other by Albert Banta. The public square was cleared of the forest trees by the laborious process of chopping and burning. The work was performed in 1819 or 1820 by David Lesley, then a young man, just come to the county, father of Daniel Lesley, former school superintendent of Randolph county. The second court house (brick) was contracted in 1826 and ready for occupancy in 1828. The first schoolhouse was built of logs, with the ends projecting at the corners. It stood on ground occupied by the office of Dr. B. S. Hunt. Moorman Way had the first cabinet shop soon after the establishment of the town. Moorman Way had a carding machine very early, run by horse-power (sometimes by ox-power). Daniel Petty also had a carding machine, east of town on Salt creek. It was driven by horse-power, too. The first grist-mill in the county is thought by some to have been built by William Wright, at the mouth of Salt creek, near Winchester. He had "gray-heads" for mill stones, and his wheat-bolt was operated by hand, each customer bolting his own grist. The first justice of the peace may have been Esquire Odle, or John Wright—perhaps both at once in the township. Thomas Hanna began selling goods, perhaps in 1824. His store was in a house at the west end of Thomas Ward's building. He continued in business four years, and was bought out by Andrew Aker in 1828. The first steam grist-mill (and the first in the county) was erected about 1835, by Elias Kizer and Daniel Haworth. That engine of theirs was the first steam-power in the county, and in those days it was a sight to behold. Probably the first wagon shop in Winchester, and in the county, was carried on by Thomas Butterworth, beginning, perhaps, in 1836. Mr. Butterworth had also a saw-mill, a carding machine and a grist-mill. The first religious denomination in Winchester was perhaps the Methodists. The first drug store was conducted by Dr. Woody, and was followed by Rush & Kizer, in 1849. The first hardware store was kept by Mr. Brumer. Among the early attorneys may be named Zachariah Puckett, Jeremiah Smith, Moorman Way and Silas Colgrove. The county seminary was opened for school March, 1842, under the instruction of Professor Ferris, then a young but active and enthusiastic teacher, famous for his success in that line, but now sleeping low beneath the "clods of the valley." Winchester was incorporated as a town in 1838, thirty-eight voters favoring the measures, and none opposing it.

The citizens of Winchester were for the most part genial, reliable men, but slow to make investments for the betterment of the town. The growth of Winchester was exceedingly slow until about 1845, when the prospects of railroads began to enthuse the people and attracted prospective purchasers of property. Business began to improve and new houses were built, streets were made better and the entire attitude of its citizenship became more progressive. In 1853 the "Bee Line" railroad was built, which gave new interest and life.

The town gradually grew in size and importance, and has at all times been the leading town and city of the county. Having, in 1910, a population of 4,266. It was incorporated as a town in 1838 by popular vote, thirty-eight votes being cast in favor and none against. It was divided into five wards, viz.: First ward, northeast square, Elias Kizer, trustee; second ward, north front and northwest square, Nathan Garrett; third ward, west front and southwest square, Jeremiah Smith; fourth ward, south front and southeast square, John D. Stewart; fifth ward, east front, Jesse Way.

In 1848 a special bill was passed by the Legislature authorizing and providing for a new organization in the town of Winchester. The local records, however, are not obtainable. September 5, 1875, Thomas Ward, William D. Frazee and Thomas M. Browne, "the inspectors elected by the citizens of Winchester," appeared before the board of county commissioners and filed their certificate of an election held in the town of Winchester. The commissioners made the following entry: "From which return and papers it appears to the satisfaction of the board that there were sixty-five votes cast at said election and that sixty-one of said ballots had 'yes' thereon and three of said ballots had 'no' thereon and that one of said ballots was blank, and the board being satisfied of the legality of said election, order and declare that the said town has been incorporated by the name of Winchester." The first record in the city clerk's office is under the date of October 6, 1855. The trustees elected were Silas Colgrove, James Browne, William W. Smith, Simeon H. Lucas, Martin A. Reeder; John Neff, clerk and treasurer; Benjamin Ramsey, assessor and marshal; James Browne, president of the board.

March 27, 1893, an election was held for the purpose of determining whether the town of Winchester should be incorporated as a city, under the general laws of the state of Indiana, and a majority of the ballots were in favor of incorporating.

On April 1st the town council divided the new city of Winchester into three wards and ordered an election to be held in each, whereupon the following were elected: W. S. Diggs, mayor; William P. Needham, city clerk; John Coffin, city marshal; Union B. Hunt, William Y. Puckett, councilmen of the first ward; Levi Slagle and Marshall F. Bailey, councilmen of the second ward; Omar R. Tripp and Stephen Clevenger, councilmen of the third ward; S. D. Coats, treasurer. Councilmen met and organized and elected: J. E. Hinshaw, street commissioner; Charles C. Yunker, civil engineer; Dr. F. A. Chenoweth, member of the board of health; Jesse Canada, city attorney.

Mr. Diggs served as mayor until September 10, 1898, when he was succeeded by T. W. Hutchens. Mr. Hutchens was succeeded by Fermen C. Focht, in September, 1904, and he by Walter S. Parry, September, 1906, followed by Carl Thompson, the first Monday in Januay, 1910, who was followed by the present incumbent, H. E. McNees, January 1, 1914.

Mr. Needham served as clerk until September 10, 1898, when he was succeeded by Samuel D. Fox, who still holds the office. Mr. Coats continued as treasurer until the office was transferred by law to the county treasurer.

The city has been districted into wards in different manners during its history, at some times having six councilmen, two from each ward, and others having five, one from each ward and two at-large.

The councilmen from the first ward have been: William D. Chapman, William Y. Puckett, Perry Leavell, Harvey E. McNees, Jacob E. Hinshaw, Link Reinheimer, James M. Browne, Clyde G. Hiatt and Bella N. Botkin. Those having lived in the second ward are: Marshall F. Bailey, Levi Slagle, Samuel T. Remmel, Louis Payne, Charles E. Magee, Robert B. Puckett, James M. Seagraves, Zachariah T. Romizer, Albert Norton, Austin Burk, deceased April 16, 1913, Edgar Bailey and Henry Abel. Those having lived in the third ward are: Omar Tripp, Stephen Clevenger, William Lenkensdorfer, Hiram D. Moorman, J. H. Kinkead, Bader S. Hunt, Orin H. Barnhill, William Horn, W. U. Davis, Russel Coats.

Report of treasurer shows a balance of $29,519.02, August 5, 1914.

PRESENT BUSINESS.

Winchester at the present time has an excellent equipment of stores, such as groceries, drugs, harness, mercantile, millinery, tailoring, boots and shoes, etc., but a few that have begun in a small way and attained large proportions deserve special mention. C. W. Moore & Son, merchants, M. L. Mills & Company, merchants, W. E. Miller Company, merchants, comprise three of the best equipped general stores to be found in eastern Indiana. The last two firms occupy their own building and have grown from small establishments to mammoth ones. The W. E. Miller Company was at first W. E. Miller, proprietor, who came from Ridgeville in 1880 and by strict application to business and catering to the tastes of the best class of customers became one of the leading stores in eastern Indiana. Mr. Miller organized the W. E. Miller Company, and has in a large measure retired from the active management of the affairs of the store.

The C. V. Graft Milling Company, successors to Gordon Smith, has improved machinery and equipment of its mill until it is the largest to be found in this part of the state.

The Goodrich Brothers Hay & Grain Company, with a capital stock of $100,000, was incorporated in 1898 and at this time owns eleven elevators and hay barns in Indiana, located at Winchester, Gaston, Farmland, Durbin, Snow Hill, Westfield, Jolietville, Gadsden, Chesterfield, Malden and Boone Grove. This represents a valuation of $225,000.00. The plant at Winchester has a purifying plant capable of purifying 1,500 bushels per hour and a dryer with a capacity of 500 bushels per hour. The cost of this plant alone was $100,000.00. In 1913 this firm shipped 968,802 bushels of grain, which with their other business represented a value of $1,000,000.00. They expect in 1914 to handle 1,250,000 bushels of grain. Their plant has a storage capacity of 225,000 bushels. In 1913 they shipped 800 cars at a cost of over $25,000.00. This company is composed of J. B. Goodrich, president; W. W. Goodrich, vice-president, P E. Goodrich, secretary-treasurer, J. P Goodrich and E. S. Goodrich. This company is the third largest to be found in the state of Indiana.

Another institution worthy of special mention is the Woodbury Glass Company. It is one of the largest institutions of its kind in eastern Indiana and the only Company of this kind doing business in Randolph county. This company was incorporated in 1893 as "The Woodbury Glass Company," located at Parker. The capital stock at that time was $10,000.00. The directors were: President, J. T. Wilcox; secretary, George Gadbury; superintendent, John D. Carter. This company was only fairly successful and not being able to meet its obligations promptly, stock was sold to Charles Dotson, J. W. Thompson and Albert Canfield, of Winchester. The new firm interested George E. Leggett, who was induced to take stock. Mr. Leggett was made secretary of the company in October, 1893, and in January, 1894, was elected president, which position he has continued to hold until the present time. Mr. Leggett also served as treasurer for a number of years, but the duties of the president became too heavy and he was relieved from the duties of treasurer. This company purchased the Davis glass plant in Winchester in the spring of 1904. The factory at Parker was moved to Winchester and the company reorganized with a capital stock of $275,000.00; $200,000.00 common stock and $75,000.00 preferred stock. The changes in the bottle business made it necessary for this company to add to its bottle factory a factory for the manufacturing of skeleton cases and special packages. At this time they have one of the best equipped factories to be found in the country. This factory has a capacity of 6,000 boxes daily. These two enterprises jointly give employment to 600 men. This factory has been the greatest factor in the business life of Winchester. One can readily see the importance of this when it is known that this company expends for labor over $300,000.00 per year. During the past year their output was 230,000 gross of bottles, representing a value of approximately $520,000.00. During 1913, 591 full cars of ware and 2,873 local orders, or lots less than a car load, were shipped. This factory, together with the Goodrich Brothers Hay & Grain Association, and other enterprises have made the Winchester freight office on the Big Four railway, the best paying office between Bellefontaine and Indianapolis. The officers of this company at present are: George E. Leggett, president; W. E. Miller, vice-president; L. M. Kimmel, secretary; J. C. Leggett, treasurer; M. L. Somers, superintendent.

Some of the important factories that have existed in Winchester and are now removed are: Winchester Wagon Works, Gardiner & Horan Carriage Works, Knecht & Thomas Pump Works, A. G. Canfield Mills, Charles Guthiel Tannery; Winchester Manufacturing Company, organized October 31, 1881, capital stock, $25,000.00; John D. Carter Woolen Mills; W. V. R. Tooker Windmill Factory and Winchester Handle Factory.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Winchester fire department is a "volunteer" department, more properly speaking, is part public and part volunteer. This company is housed in the City Building which was built in 1902, on the south side of Franklin street between Meridian and West streets. The company was organized upon the completion of this building with David Martin chief and Will Kizer assistant. Mr. Martin served for more than one year as chief and was a very efficient officer. He was succeeded by Guy Way, whose work has been so satisfactory he has been kept in constant service to the present time. Mr. Kizer served as assistant until 1907 when he was succeeded by E. P. Fulghum who still occupies that position. The employed fireman at present is Will Draher. The city keeps these three men employed. In addition to the services of these three on duty there are ten volunteer firemen whose duty it is to attend all fires when notified. A fire bell is the only necessary notification as they "drop everything and go." The volunteer men at present are: John W. Guenther, C. L. Summers, Walter Baker, C. O. Summers, C. H. Lennon, Kora Davis, Orville Ashton; Max Romizer, W. S. Daly and Troy Lasley.

The equipment of the service is first-class in every particular, and consists of hose wagon, one reel, 2,200 feet of hose and six nozzles, one one-horse ladder wagon, four chemical cans and one Pyrene filler, a special apparatus to be used in case of gasoline explosion. The department has three well-trained horses in addition to the above. The average time required to leave the department after a call has been sent in is thirty-one seconds, which certainly speaks well for the efficiency of the fire chief and his helpers. The city is equipped with sixty-seven fire plugs situated in various parts of the city. During the year 1913 twenty-nine calls were answered.

Winchester has no enterprise of greater value to it than its fire department. The members of this company belong to the Eastern Indiana Volunteer Association. Messrs. C. O. Summers and John W. Guenther, of the Winchester company have served as president of this association. The companies of the county belonging to this association are, Winchester, Woodbury, Union City, Farmland, and Parker. Winchester entertained this association in their annual meeting of 1911.

CITIZENS WATER & LIGHT COMPANY, WINCHESTER.

This company was organized in 1899 with a capital stock of $50,000.00, for the purpose of furnishing water and light to Winchester and the citizens of Winchester. This company was maintained as such until September, 1912, when it was reorganized with a capital stock of $400,000.00, under the name of the Citizens Heat, Light & Power Company. The purpose of this company is to furnish water and light to Winchester and its citizens, but has, since its organization, constructed lines to furnish light to Farmland, Lynn, Ridgeville and Saratoga. Since the reorganization of the company the plant has been completely renewed. The gas and steam engines have been displaced by two Diessel oil engines known as the Internal Combustion Oil Engine. These are of 225 horse power each, sufficient to furnish any strain that might be put upon them with a plant of this size. The water pressure is maintained at forty-five pounds except in case of fire when a pressure of seventy-five pounds is maintained. The water is furnished from deep wells drilled into limestone or gravel. This water is analyzed by the state department at various times of the year and has always been found to be chemically pure. The directors of this company at the present time are: J. T. Moorman, president; C. W. Moorman, vice-president; E. S. Goodrich, secretary-treasurer; George E. Leggett, W. E. Miller and E. F. Kitselman.

Gen. Browne Winchester, member of Congress from the Sixth District, was born at New Paris, Preble county, Ohio, April 19, 1829. His father, John A. Browne, was a native of Bucks county, Pennsylvania; his mother, Hannah (Mauzy) Browne, of Bourbon county, Kentucky. His mother died in 1843, which calamity broke up the family circle. His father apprenticed young Thomas M. to Mr. Ralph M. Pomeroy, a merchant of Spartanburg, Randolph county, Indiana, soon after which he removed to Grant county, Kentucky, where he died in 1865. Influenced by the excellent character of his employer, Thomas M. rapidly gained a knowledge of business and formed correct habits. His opportunities for gaining a liberal education were very meager, being confined to a few weeks each year in the common schools of Spartanburg and one term in the county seminary at Winchester. In 1848, he began the study of law with Hon. William A. Peelle, of Winchester, and in 1849 passed an examination in open court and was admitted to practice in the inferior courts of the state; two years later he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of Indiana. On March 18, 1849, he married Miss Mary J. Austin, of New Paris, Ohio. In 1850, when but twenty years of age, he was elected prosecuting attorney for Randolph county and after the adoption of the present constitution, he was three times elected prosecuting attorney for the 13th Judicial District, discharging the duties of that office with marked ability and success until 1861. In August of that year, he made one of the most powerful speeches of his life on the "Crisis of the Country," in which many of his enthusiastic declarations seem now to have been prophetic. He was elected Chief Clerk of the State Senate at its session in 1861, and in the spring of 1862 he entered the United States service as aide-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Thomas J. Wood, and served with that officer until after the battle of Shiloh. During the siege of Corinth, he was stricken with disease and returned home and only recovered after several months of great suffering. In October, 1862, he was elected senator for Randolph county and took a leading part in the debates of the stormy session of 1863, ranking as an able Republican leader. At the close of the session, he resigned the senatorship and assisted in recruiting the Seventh Indiana Cavalry (119th Regiment Volunteers), and was commissioned captain of Company B, but before leaving the state for active service was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. He was soon promoted to the colonelcy of his regiment, and received the rank of brigadier-general by brevet "for gallant and meritorious conduct" from the hand of President Lincoln. In October, 1864, on account of his well-known legal attainments, he was chosen president of a military commission to convene at Memphis, for the trial of such causes as might arise in that department. The most important case that came before this tribunal was the trial of the famous guerrilla, Dick Davis. This trial lasted thirty-five days and ended in the conviction and execution of the culprit. In January, 1865, General Browne again took the field, and remained in active service until the final close of the war and the mustering out of his regiment. During the winter of 1865-66, he was in command of the troops at Sherman, in the department of Northern Texas, where his wise yet firm administration won golden opinions from men of all parties and he left behind him upon his return home many warm friends in that part of the "Lone Star State."

After he was mustered out of service, he resumed the practice of his profession at Winchester, Indiana, but was shortly after appointed by the President, United States District Attorney for the District of Indiana, the duties of which office he discharged with distinguished ability and success until his resignation in 1872. In 1872, the Republican party nominated General Browne for governor of Indiana. His popularity with his party being demonstrated by his distancing such distinguished competitors as Godlove S. Orth and Gen. Benjamin Harrison. It was indeed a proud triumph for the lonely orphan who had been left among strangers without money or friends at the age of thirteen, when that great convention called him to the front and placed in his hands the battle-scarred banner of union and liberty.

He made a most gallant campaign, but was defeated by Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, who carried the state by a very small majority. After the campaign of 1872, he formed a co-partnership with Hon. Jonathan W. Gordon and Judge Robert N. Lamb, of Indianapolis, under the style of Gordon, Browne & Lamb. They commanded an immense business continuing until 1876, when General Browne was elected to Congress by a majority of over fifteen hundred, in the then Fifth Indiana District, defeating that veteran Democrat, Hon. William S. Holman, who had served six terms, and carried his district at the preceding election by more than twenty-five hundred majority. General Browne was re-elected in 1878, maintaining his majority over the same gentleman and was again re-elected in 1880, carrying the Sixth District by about ten thousand majority. Upon entering Congress, he at once took rank as an able and discreet member.

John H. Cottom was born June 4, 1788, at Snow Hill, Maryland. His father moved to Kentucky when he was a lad of eight or ten years. John H. Cottom married in Kentucky, and moved to New Paris, Ohio, in 1812. They had four children, viz.: David J., Thomas F., John W., and James Samuel. John H. Cottom came to Winchester in 1843. He moved to Illinois with his son David, in 1856. He returned to Ohio and died near Cincinnati, at the home of his son, John Wesley, in 1875, aged eighty-seven years. David and John W., sons of John H. Cottom, came to Winchester in 1843, and entered into partnership as merchants. From 1843 to 1856 they did an immense amount of business—more than ever had been done before that time, and some think their business was greater than that of any mercantile firm even since that time. They were enterprising men, enthsiastic in business and wide-awake in whatever they undertook and were respected and useful members of society.

John D. Carter was born March 17, 1829, in Delaware county, Indiana. His father, Edmund D. Carter, emigrated from Maryland to Indiana at a very early date. He removed with his family to Ohio in 1829, soon after the birth of his son and in 1832, removed to Madison county, Indiana. In 1835 he again located in Delaware county, returning to Madison county a few years later. In 1838, he came to Randolph county, locating in Stoney creek township, and removed to Winchester in 1840.

Armsbee Diggs was among the earliest pioneers of Randolph county, and for many years one of its most active and reliable citizens. He came here in the prime of a vigorous manhood and for more than a half century was identified with the development of the county, bearing his full share in pioneer hardships and contributing liberally to the encouragement of public improvement inaugurated in later years. He was born in 1795, in Anson county, North Carolina. About the year 1816, he married Mary Way, and in the winter of 1816-17, started with his young wife for the wilds of Indiana, reaching Randoph county in February, 1817, and locating on the banks of White River. Here he addressed himself to the task of clearing and improving a farm, and although he was a successful and energetic farmer, he was an enthusiastic hunter and fond of the chase. In December, 1817, his eldest son, Henry, was born. The latter was one of the first white children born on White river in this county, his only seniors being Fanny, daughter of William Diggs, and Lydia Wright. In the years that ensued, eleven other children were added to the family of Mr. Diggs. Mr. Diggs entered a tract of one hundred and seventy-nine acres from which he developed his farm. For the purpose of purchasing this tract he went on horseback to the land office at Cincinnati, with just enough money to pay for a quarter section; but upon his arrival he learned that the tract "overran," and it would be necessary for him to purchase the entire amount. He did not possess the requisite amount of money and had it not been for the kindness of a young man in the land office, he would have been compelled to return without a title to the land on which he had erected his cabin and where his family then resided. About the year 1850, he erected a saw mill and grist mill on White river, and for ten years or more was engaged in this enterprise, from which he derived a fair profit. He died in March, 1872, having lived to see the pioneer settlement develop into a populous and wealthy county. His wife did not long survive the husband with whom she came to these wilds, as she died in October of the same year.

Henry H. Neff was a prominent citizen and active business man of Winchester and one of the most energetic workers in its public enterprises. He was born June 5, 1815, near Eaton, Preble county, Ohio. His father, John Neff, Sr., was a native of Pennsylvania, and the descendant of German ancestors. His mother, whose maiden name was Susanna Gray, was a native of Virginia. Henry remained at home until seventeen years of age, acquiring at the common schools a good English education. In the fall of 1832, he went to Eaton, in company with his brother John, to learn the printer's trade, under the instruction of Dr. F. A. Cunningham and John Vanausdal, Esq., remaining until the spring of 1834. He was subsequently employed in the office of the Herald at Liberty, Union county, Indiana. While at the latter place, his health failed and he was taken home by his father to Winchester, Indiana. He remained at home until his health was restored and in July, 1836, accepted an engagement with Thomas Tigar, editor of the Fort Wayne (Indiana) Sentinel, remaining in his employ for eighteen months. In 1838, he returned to Winchester, Indiana, and engaged in the retail grocery trade. In the following year, he embarked in the drug trade with Dr. Robert Woody, at Winchester, and continued in this business for four years. On October 22, 1843, he issued the first number of the Winchester Patriot, the first newspaper ever published in Randolph county. He was elected representative from this county in the State Legislature in 1847. At the expiration of his official term, however, he purchased the paper from its new proprietors and resumed its management. In 1850, he received the appointment of deputy United States marshal, to take the census of Randolph county. In 1852, he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court for Randolph county, and at that time made a final sale of the Patriot office. In 1856, by the unanimous voice of the convention, he was again the candidate for this office and was elected by a majority of nine hundred. He was urged by Governor Morton to assist in raising a regiment for the United States service for the suppression of the rebellion. He entered enthusiastically into this work and was commissioned Captain of Company G, of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Regiment. The organization of the regiment was completed at Indianapolis and Captain Neff was promoted to the office of major. The regiment was assigned to the Twenty-third Army Corps, under General Schofield, leaving Indianapolis in March, 1864, and proceeding to Nashville. They were engaged in the battle of Wise's Fork, near Kingston, North Carolina, from the 8th to the 10th of March, 1865. At this battle, Colonel Neff was bereaved of his son, Captain

J. L. Neff, who fell in the conflict, pierced by an enemy's bullet. He was conveyed to his home by his father and interred in the cemetery at Winchester, amid the tears and sympathy of the community among whom he had been reared and who knew him as a noble young man. His father had been commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel and after the funeral of the son, returned to perform his duty as a soldier. Mr. Neff engaged in the lumber business and was later chosen president of the Winchester Wagon Works Company. Winchester has had but few men of such great public spirit.

Martin A. Reeder was born in 1819, in Warren county, Ohio, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1822, with his grandfather, John Martin. He was associated with the county in its pioneer period and kept pace with its progress, at the same time rising to prominence as a citizen. He was called upon to fill various local offices in early times, as well as in recent years, and in all capacities proved himself capable, efficient and trustworthy. He served as county assessor two terms, as county appraiser two terms, as township assessor two terms and three terms as township trustee. In 1875, he was elected by the Republicans as the representative from this county in the State Legislature, and in this capacity rendered valuable service. Among the bills introduced by him were the charter under which Union City now exists; the act prohibiting the sale of ammunition to minors; the exemption of the property of widows; the bill for the suppression of the liquor traffic, and the punishment of intoxication; and a bill providing for local option. In his early life he formed ideas antagonistic to the institution of slavery, and in his maturer years became one of the prominent Abolitionists of this community, co-operating with Daniel Worth, Dr. Hiram P. Bennett, Paul W Way, and others in this region who engineered and operated the "Underground Railroad," and other agencies of a similar character and spent both time and money in the furtherance of these and other benevolent enterprises. He was married, in 1843, to Miss Elizabeth Favorite, daughter of Henry Favorite, of Maryland.

Asahel, son of Ezra Stone, was born June 29, 1817, near Marietta, Washington county, Ohio, removing with his parents to Aurora, Indiana, in 1818, and to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1822. On the 23d of September, 1837, he was united in marriage with Miss Lydia B. Preston, at Finneytown, near Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1839, however, he came to Winchester and until the outbreak of the late rebellion, was engaged at the carpenter trade. On the 29th of May, 1861, he was appointed by Governor Morton as commissary general for the State of Indiana, and, on the 15th of October, 1862, was appointed quartermaster-general. In his official capacity he proved himself a superior man.

In the work of looking after the interests of the soldiers, securing and forwarding supplies, providing sanitary stores, nurses and medical attention for the sick and wounded, and in the discharge of all the varied and arduous duties of his position, he was zealous, patriotic and self-sacrificing. He rendered valuable service to the cause and great reliance was placed in his judgment and discretion by Governor Morton, who frequently commended him in his annual messages to the Legislature. His field of labor was varied and extensive, requiring executive ability of a high order which he developed in a marked degree. In his message of January 6, 1865, Governor Morton said: "The report of the quartermaster and commissary general is herewith laid before you, and your attention is especially called to its contents. The administration of this department by General Stone has been highly successful and satisfactory." After the close of the war, he returned to the farm in Randolph county, and for a while was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1865, however, he became identified with the banking interests of Winchester, an account of which is given elsewhere. In 1847, when only thirty years old, he was nominated by the Whig party of this county for the Indiana House of Representatives and elected in the fall of that year. In 1848, he was nominated as a member of the Constitutional Convention and was only defeated by four votes. In 1860 he was elected to the Indiana Senate. The war and his connection with it here interrupted his public life, but after the restoration of peace he again became the standard-bearer of his party at the earnest solicitation of friends, and, in 1867, was again elected as the representative from this county in the General Assembly of Indiana. In November, 1881, he was elected secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Winchester Wagon Works. In the spring of 1880, he purchased and donated to the town of Winchester forty acres of land for a public cemetery. He purchased the ground at a cost of $4,000, and had it surveyed and platted at an additional expense of $300, and on the 1st day of March, 1880, secured it to its purpose by a deed, signed by himself and his worthy wife, conveying the premises in trust forever to a Board of Control, to be used for the purpose designated. On the 3d day of July, 1880, a public dedication was held, at which very appropriate ceremonies were held, and addresses delivered by prominent citizens of Winchester and others from abroad, and the park named "Fountain Park Cemetery."

Mr. Thomas Ward was reared in a pioneer settlement and his early life was passed like that of all boys who have been similarly situated. His advantages were limited, but his father's house was the resort of travelers, many of whom were very intelligent men and took pleasure in imparting a portion of their knowledge to the boy, who always evinced an inquiring disposition and learned readily. At an early age, he began trading with his neighbors and nearly all his transactions redounded to his success, so that, when twenty-one years of age, he had accumulated six hundred acres of land. His first earnings were made by "deadening" timber for new purchasers. He would take the contract for "deadening" the timber on these lands and after sub-letting it, usually had a profit left for himself. He never retrograded in his financial standing; the property which he had accumulated during the years of his minority stimulated him to greater achievements, and in the years which followed he found his prospects brightening and his prosperity increasing. In 1840, he was married, and in 1841 removed to a tract of land near Ridgeville, from which he developed a good farm. This farm was cleared and improved by himself, and after cultivating it for four years, he removed to Winchester and embarked in mercantile pursuits at this point. He was thus engaged until 1870, carrying a general stock for a part of the time, and later in the hardware trade exclusively, while at another time he was the proprietor of a harness shop. He was one of the first friends of the Cincinnati, Richmond & Fort Wayne railroad, and was one of the Board of Directors. He had invested $35,000 in stock, but it was found that the company would be unable to complete the road to Fort Wayne. Upon this discovery, the directors sold the road to another company and by the change he lost all he had invested, except about $3,100. In 1865, he became one of the company who organized the First National Bank of Winchester, and served as its president until 1868. In 1864, he was elected to the Indiana Senate and at once arose to a position of prominence and honor, serving on important committees. He voted for the ratification of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and introduced a bill to admit the testimony of colored witnesses in cases where white litigants were involved. He also introduced a bill to make the sale of liquor a penal offense and served as chairman of the Committee on Corporations. The bill to compel railroad corporations to furnish transportation and equalize freights was also introduced by him. He served his constituency well and retired from his official position with the good will of all good people. By his industry and good management, Mr. Ward accumulated a fortune and was regarded as one of the wealthiest citizens of Winchester. Yet his ample fortune did not change his kindly nature and among those who knew him best he was esteemed as a kind and amiable friend.

He was married four times: first, in 1840, to Sarah Ellen Tharp, who died in 1852. He was married to Jane Swayne, of Richmond, Indiana, in 1854. She died in 1865, leaving three children. His third wife was Susan Lykins, who died in 1873, leaving two children. In April, 1876, he was united in marriage with Laurinda, daughter of Isaiah Osborn, Esq. By this union, they were the parents of one child.

Other citizens who were factors in the making of Winchester and who are not mentioned in sketches of this book are: Jesse J. Bates, miller; Edward Bates, miller; James S. Cottom, business; Levi D. Carter, woolen factory; A. G. Campfield, contractor; Patrick H. Dean, photographer; Wm. Fitzmaurice, machinist; David Fudge, furniture dealer; Charles Gutheil, tanner; Michael Gaffy, John H. Gill, manufacturers; Jonathan S. Hiatt, hotel keeper; Calvin Irvin, jeweler; Thomas Klinck, Jr., wagon maker; John K. Martin, brick and tile manufacturer; Elisha Martin, brick manufacturer; John Neff, grocer; Phineas Pomeroy, surveyor; Alfred Rossman, saddler; Washington B. Snedaker, photographer; John L. Stakebake, manufacturer; Ira Tripp, merchant; Richmond Thornburg, tailor; Charles W. Woolverton, boot and shoe dealer; John Dye Smith, merchant.

BIOGRAPHICAL

WILLIAM D. KIZER.

One of the most conspicuous figures in the recent history of Randolph county is William D. Kizer, who has long been actively identified with the business and industrial interests of Winchester and vicinity, widely known as one of the leading bankers and financiers of this section of Indiana. Equally noted as a citizen whose useful career has conferred credit upon the community and whose marked abilities and stirring qualities have won for him much more than local repute, he holds today distinctive precedence as one of the most progressive and successful men that ever inaugurated and carried to satisfactory termination large and important undertakings in this locality. Strong mental powers, keen discernment, invincible courage and a determined purpose that hesitate at no opposition have entered into his composition so as to render him a dominant factor in the business world and a leader of men in notable enterprises. He is essentially a man of affairs—sound of judgment and far-seeing in what he undertakes, and every enterprise to which he has addressed himself has resulted in liberal financial returns.

Mr. Kizer was born March 7, 1847, on a farm one mile north of Winchester, Indiana. He is a son of Thomas W. and Susanna (Way) Kizer. The father was born in Ward township, Randolph county, and the mother was a native of Winchester. Elias Kizer, the paternal grandfather, came from Botetourt county, Virginia, in the year 1821, reaching his destination in Ward township on May 6th, traveling the entire distance by wagon. He was thus among the very earliest settlers in Randolph county, when it was still the home of Indians and wild beasts. He settled in the dense woods, built a log cabin and began clearing the land, of which he made an excellent farm in due course of time, and he became prominent in the affairs of the community in its early history. He remained on his farm, which is now the site of Stone Station, until 1832, when he moved to White River township, locating just north of Winchester, and on this farm he spent most of his long and useful life, dying at his home, located at the north edge of town, now included in the city limits, in March, 1867. He died at the age of sixty-seven years, having been born in the year 1800. His wife, who was known in her maidenhood as Margery Ward, survived two years, dying in 1869. Elias Kizer, besides having engaged in farming, also operated a mill, kept a hotel, and for five years was superintendent of the poor asylum. He was a Republican in politics and his wife was a member of the Society of Friends, but subsequently became a member of the Methodist church.

Thomas W. Kizer devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising in his native county and was a highly respected citizen. About 1848 he moved from his farm into Winchester, where he established the family home, but continued to operate his farm. His death occurred November 28, 1901, at an advanced age. His wife preceded him to the grave over a quarter of a century, dying January 15, 1874. Their graves are in Fountain Park cemetery, Winchester. To Thomas W. Kizer credit should be given for the making of Fountain Park cemetery, one of the most beautiful burial grounds in the state. When he began his work it was a barren field, but through his untiring efforts was transformed into a cemetery, that for beauty of landscape architecture, is not surpassed.

William D. Kizer was about a year old when his parents removed from the farm to Winchester, and here he was reared to manhood and educated in the common schools. He assisted his father with the work on the farm during the summer months when he became of proper age. He started in life for himself when nineteen years old and he worked at various jobs about Winchester. In 1866 he invested as a partner in a house moving outfit in which he made a little money, and in the spring of 1868 he engaged with Sol Yunker to sell nursery stock from Rochester, New York, nurseries, in southwestern Missouri. He followed this to the entire satisfaction of his employer for three and one-half years. In the fall of 1870 he rented the old home farm from his father and sowed a crop of wheat that fall. At the urgent request of Mr. Yunker he went to Missouri and helped with the spring sale and delivery of his nursery stock. Upon his return to Winchester, Mr. Kizer was offered a clerkship in the county treasurer's office which he accepted, but a little later he went into the county auditor's office as a deputy, and his farming enterprise was given up and his growing crop relinquished to his father. He served as deputy auditor three and one-half years. He was elected county auditor in the fall of 1874, in the last October election held in the state. He took office November 1st, of that year, serving four years with much credit and satisfaction to all concerned. He then engaged in the sequestered tax investigation business for two years. In 1882 he purchased the business of C. W Diggs for the collection of officers' foreign fees, and he followed this with gratifying results until 1906, in the meantime frequently traveling over every county in Indiana. Upon the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Winchester in 1898 he was elected president which position he has held continuously to the present time, the pronounced success of this safe, sound and popular institution being due for the most part to his able management and wise foresight and his personal popularity throughout the county. Upon the death of Frank E. Vestal, September 30, 1909, who was cashier of this bank, our subject became actively connected with the every-day business of the bank. He is regarded as one of the most capable and successful bankers of the county, enjoying the entire confidence of the public. He is a deep student of financial questions and modern banking methods and keeps fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to his business. Since 1908 he has been interested in farming lands and general agricultural pursuits in Randolph county. In 1904 he built the Kizer business block on Main street, Winchester, which is one of the most substantial, attractive and important blocks in the business portion of the city, a part of which is occupied by the post office. He was one of the promoters and organizers of the Peoples Loan & Trust Company, of Winchester. He is also a stockholder in the Randolph County Bank, the First National Bank of Farmland, and the National City Bank of Indianapolis, formerly the Columbia National Bank. He was one of the organizers and stockholders in the Continental National Bank of Indianapolis, and was one of the promoters and organizers of the Citizens Water and Light Company, of which he was one of the first directors and continued a director until he sold his stock. He has become one of the financially strong citizens of the county and is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished through his own individual efforts, often in the face of obstacles. He has a beautiful and modernly appointed home on North Main street, Winchester, the presiding spirit of which was a lady of culture and refinement, known in her maidenhood as Louisa C. Dana, whom Mr. Kizer led to the hymeneal altar on October 24, 1872, and who proved to be a most efficient helpmeet, whose sympathy and encouragement was in no small degree a potent factor in her husband's large success in the business world. She was a daughter of Dr. Marcus Dana, a prominent physician of Fostoria, Ohio. She was called to her eternal rest on February 17, 1910. Two children who died in infancy were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kizer.

Politically, Mr. Kizer is a Republican and has long been more or less active in party affairs, in fact, a local leader in public matters. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Encampment. He is a straightforward, broad-minded, genteel gentleman whom it is a pleasure to know and he has no trouble in winning and retaining friends.

JUDGE JOHN WINCHESTER MACY.

In the death of the late Judge John Winchester Macy, Randolph county lost one of its most remarkable men, a man who, although denied educational advantages in youth, yet by close application, studious habits and industry became more than a local leader in public affairs and a writer of fluency and perfect language; exhibiting a mind that for retentiveness, accuracy and volume was but little less than marvelous. Beginning life as a laborer, and amid humble conditions, his successful public career is an inspiration, tending as it does to prove the opportunities that await those who persevere. Many of the high public positions he filled were unsought by him, coming as they did as a recognition of his integrity, ability, untiring industry and loyalty to friends. Not only did he leave an honored public and professional career as a legacy to his family, but his record as a soldier during the Civil war, is a precious heritage. The love for him of his comrades in arms proves that he had the mettle of which true warriors are made—warriors who fight for right and principle, not gain or glory. No less than his public and military record is his private and domestic life, for he was devoted to his family and friends, and in this respect leaves a memory that will not be forgotten.

Judge Macy was born in Henry county, Indiana, June 12, 1843. He was a son of David and Priscilla (Lewellen) Macy, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Virginia. During the early boyhood of Judge Macy the family resided for a time in Howard county, Indiana, and unto his latest years he carried in his memory a vivid picture of the primitive conditions and hardships of social and industrial life in central Indiana at that early period. In 1854, with his parents, he removed to Randolph county, locating in the vicinity of Farmland. Here he grew to manhood, and nothing which concerned the prosperity of that neighborhood or the welfare of its people ever ceased to be of interest to him. Although a man of marked characteristics and strongly marked individuality, he had perhaps no trait of character more marked than his undying love for the friends and scenes of his youth and early manhood.

On August 2, 1862, Mr. Macy proved his courage and patriotism by enlisting in Company A, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served faithfully and gallantly until the close of the war, and was adjutant and acting lieutenant during a portion of his service. These years as a soldier may be said to have been the beginning of his active life and for almost fifty years that life was one of aggressive, cheerful, unremitting industry. For awhile he worked as a wagon maker and afterward engaged in business at Farmland as a tinner. He became deputy clerk in 1867, and served in that capacity under John B. Goodrich and also under Taylor Semans. In 1876 Mr. Macy was elected clerk of the Randolph Circuit Court and served in that capacity for four years. In 1884, he was elected joint senator for the senatorial district then consisting of Randolph, Delaware and Henry counties and served with usefulness and distinction in the turbulent sessions of 1885 and 1887. At the close of his term as clerk of the Circuit Court, Mr. Macy engaged actively in business, and in the practice of law. Early in the year 1902 he was appointed by Governor Durbin judge of the Randolph Circuit Court, vice-Judge Albert O. Marsh, who resigned that position to become United States pension agent for Indiana. Our subject was elected judge at the regular election in November, 1902, and served continually in that capacity for almost seven years in a manner that reflected much credit upon his ability, his profound knowledge of jurisprudence and his fidelity to public duty. He held his first session on January 15, 1902, and closed his term as regular judge on November 16, 1908. At the close of this service he entered with unabated interest into the practice of his profession, and continued with his usual large success and popularity until failing health compelled him to desist, though death alone ended his interest in the affairs of those who had been associates and friends for years.

In December, 1871, Judge Macy was married to Sarah Edger, a woman of fine mind and rare gentleness and christian character. This union was blessed by the birth of six children, namely: Ralph, James and Edward who preceded their father to the Silent Land; Shields S., who lives in Oklahoma; Kate, who is the wife of John D. Miller of Winchester, and John W., Jr., an attorney of Winchester, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Macy also survives.

For four or five years immediately following their marriage Judge Macy and wife lived in Kentucky, where the Judge was engaged in lumbering and merchandising, but from that time until his death, which occurred on August 26, 1912, when nearly seventy years of age, he had lived in Winchester, Indiana.

Judge Macy lived a life of unusual service. He possessed marked talents and extraordinary force of character. His ability as a business man and lawyer, his success as a jurist and his popularity as a trial judge are well known to the readers of this book. He was a most gifted and charming conversationalist, and was personally acquainted with almost everyone in Randolph county and had besides a wide range of acquaintances everywhere. No estimate of the man which fails to note his capacity to make and keep friends can do him justice. Open-handed, open-minded, delighting always, in being of service to others, he had almost unerring intuitions in immediately grasping the wants, needs and capabilities of those with whom his active life brought him in contact. He was a man of great natural strength of affection. and his love for the living, like his grief for the dead, was not demonstrative or selfish, but warm, constant and undying. He will long be missed in many spheres of action and by many friends everywhere, but no where so much as by those who knew and loved him best.

A monument in Fountain Park cemetery, erected to the memory of Judge Macy, bears this inscription:

"Soldier of the Civil War, Able Jurist, Friend of Man."

JOHN W. MACY, JR.

John W. Macy, Jr., is the youngest living son of Judge John W. Macy and Sarah Edger Macy. He was born in Winchester on the twenty-fifth day of July, 1886, and with the exception of five years spent in college, has resided all of his life in the city of his birth. He attended the public schools of Winchester, completing the high school course in 1904. He then entered Wabash College at Crawfordsville, and graduated there in 1908 with the Degree of Bachelor of Arts. He there became a member of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity and was elected, in his senior year, to membership in Phi Beta Kappa, an honorary fraternity, the requirements of which are based upon scholarship. In the following year he entered the law department of Columbia University, at New York City, but was unable to return after his first year, on account of the failing health of his father. He worked for the law firm of Macy, Nichols & Bales, for a time, and was admitted to the practice of law in 1909. In 1910, he became a member of this firm in place of his father, whose continued illness forced his retirement from the active practice of his profession with this partnership.

He has been successful from the first and has endeavored to fulfil, by close application and studious habits, the expectations entertained of him by his friends and clients. Whatever measure of success has been his, he attributes to the inspiration of his father's career, which he has constantly kept before him.

Mr. Macy was married on July 3, 1912, at Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Miss Helen Kelly, daughter of William H. and Beatrice (Deitcher) Kelly. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Macy is a member of the Masonic fraternity and Sons of Veterans. His home is at 408 South Meridian street.

SAMUEL S. BANTA.

Samuel S. Banta, A. B., D. C., graduated with honors from York College, York, Nebraska, June 9, 1909, and from the Universal Chiropractic College at Davenport, Iowa, June 30, 1911, and is conducting a successful practice in Winchester, making a specialty of disease of the spine. In this special line of work he ranks with the finest and most noted experts of the west. His treatment of cases, considered hopeless or incurable, approaches the miraculous.

Dr. Banta was born at Oquawka, Illinois, and is the son of John C. and Elizabeth (Anderson) Banta. He is one of three children, Norman Banta, a brother died several years ago and left a widow and one child. He lived at Great Falls, Montana, and was a road master for the Great Northern. Bertha married Charles Sebur, a farmer of Oquawka, Illinois, and has two children.

The ancestors of Dr. Banta came from Holland to this country in 1858 and settled in New Amsterdam. These were on his father's side. His mother is of Irish descent, her father being a Missourian. She, however, was born in Pennsylvania and went to Missouri when a child. She still survives. Dr. Banta's father died in York, Nebraska, March 11, 1901. The doctor is a member of the Odd Fellows and of the United Brethren church, and in both lodge and church work is an earnest participant. Not only as a physician does he take high rank, but as a citizen, all things pertaining to the advancement of Winchester and Randolph county receiving his heartiest indorsement and support. He is one of those well-balanced and progressive men who believe in the development of whatever enterprise they are associated with.

JAMES S. ENGLE.

For a long lapse of years James S. Engle, of Winchester has stood in the front rank of the Randolph county bar, and for the past five years has been a judge of the 25th judicial circuit court, being still incumbent of the office, and as judge he has more than met the expectations of his friends and the public, and has so discharged the duties of the office as to receive the hearty approval and warm commendation of the bar, without regard to party. He brought to the bench a dignity becoming the high position, and in the line of duty, is industrious, careful and singularly painstaking, which combined with his sterling honesty and fearlessness of purpose, makes him one of the most popular and efficient men ever called to preside over the courts of this district. It is but just to say and greatly to his credit, that no political prejudice, bias or zeal is ever allowed to deflect his mind from its honest convictions, and while discharging his official functions, personal ties and friendships, as well as his own interests and opinions are lost sight of in his conscientious efforts to render equal and exact justice to those whose affairs are adjudicated in his court. His opinions and decisions attest his eminent fitness for judicial positions, being always lucid, unstrained and vigorous, his statements full and comprehensive, and his analysis and interpretations of the law, conspicuous and complete.

Judge Engle was born in Washington township, Randolph county, Indiana, September 13, 1846. He is a son of William and Letitia (Cabe) Engle. The father came from New Jersey in 1825, and located in Warren county, Ohio, where he was engaged in farming until 1840, when he came to Randolph county, Indiana, and purchased two hundred and forty acres of wild land in Washington township, which he cleared, developed and added to until he became owner of four hundred acres and was one of the leading agriculturists of that township at the time of his death, December 1, 1884. He was a man of sterling attributes of head and heart and influential in his community, highly esteemed for his industry and honesty. His family consisted of twelve children, named as follows: Isaac, who established his home in Wells county, Indiana; Wesley H. remained in Randolph county; as did Robert; Elias C. moved to Jefferson county, Kansas; William, who was a soldier in Company F, Thirty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, died from a gun shot wound, at Pittsburg Landing; Samuel is deceased; Calvin S. remained on the homestead; James S., of this review; Daniel H. remained in Randolph county; Albert H., also stayed on the home farm; Price removed to what is now eastern Oklahoma in an early day; Josiah B. was the youngest. This remarkable family of sons were given every advantage of education and early training possible by their pioneer parents. The death of the mother occurred, on the homestead, April 6, 1900, many years after her husband had passed to the Silent Land. He had perhaps the finest farm, and was the first to do any ditching in the county. He was a loyal Republican and was township trustee, when, by law, there were three on the board, and also held the same office, when the board was constituted of only one. He was a worthy member of the United Brethern church, and a true Christian gentleman.

Judge Engle grew to manhood on the home farm where he assisted with the general work during the crop seasons when he became of proper age, and in the winter time he attended the district schools, of which was supplemented by attending the schools of his nearest town, then he attended Hartsville University for nearly three years. In the meantime he taught school and sold books to keep himself supplied with funds, and in 1871 he began the study of law with Cheney & Watson, reading with them until the firm dissolved, early in 1872 he then studied with Watson & Monks until the latter part of 1872 when he was admitted to the bar. He at once formed a partnership for practice with J. E. Neff, now deceased, which partnership continued until Mr. Neff was elected secretary of state, when he formed a partnership with Levi W. Study, also now deceased, which lasted until 1880, and then joined his old preceptor, E. L. Watson, who died a number of years ago. He remained with Mr. Watson until 1885, when their partnership was dissolved and Mr. Engle engaged in practice alone. In all these years he met with a large measure of success, building up an extensive and lucrative clientage, being one of the best known and most popular lawyers in the county.

Politically, Judge Engle has been an active Republican since reaching his majority. He was elected justice of the peace in 1874, filling the office acceptably for four years. In 1885 he was elected to the state legislature, where he made his presence felt for the good of both his county and the state. For a time he utterly ignored public office, his extensive practice requiring his entire attention. In 1891 he formed a law partnership with W. G. Parry, as Engle & Parry, which continued for some time, and was succeeded by Engle, Caldwell & Parry; F S. Caldwell becoming a member of the firm. This continued until November 16, 1908 when our subject became a judge of the circuit court. He came to the bench well qualified for its exacting duties and responsibilities and from the beginning his judicial career was characterized by such a profound knowlege of the law and an earnest and conscientious desire to apply it impartially that he was not long in gaining the respect and confidence of the attorneys and litigants and earning for himself an honorable reputation among the leading jurists of northern Indiana. From the first his labors were very ardous and many important cases were tried in his court, large interests being involved. So far as known his rulings in all cases have been satisfactory to all concerned, fair and impartial, and his decisions so in accord with the principles of law and practice that everybody interested has been throughly satisfied with his course.

The Judge is one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, having enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving the time of his enlistment, one hundred days, with credit and fidelity to the Union, and was honorably discharged. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment, also the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men.

Judge Engle was married September 23, 1875, in Winchester to Alice Monks, who was born in Randolph county, August 27, 1856 and here she grew to womanhood and received a good education. She is a lady of talent and culture, long a favorite with a wide circle of friends from the best families of the city and county. She is a daughter of John W. and Mary (Hobbick) Monks, both natives of Randolph county, each representing sterling pioneer families, and are both now deceased. Mrs. Engle is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in which the Judge is an active worker and liberal supporter. He has long been a member of this denomination, and is on the official board of the church in Winchester, having filled this position for over twenty-five years. He has also been a Sunday school teacher for many years.

Judge Engle is the owner of a fine farm, well improved, highly cultivated and very productive, which lies in Wayne township, this county, and he has a commodious and modernly appointed home on South Main street in the best residence section of the city, and this cozy home is known to the many friends of himself and wife as a place of old-time hospitality and good cheer.

CHARLES F. PIERCE.

Perhaps no man in Randolph county has the artistic temperament to a more marked degree than Charles F. Pierce, a photographer of Winchester whose fame has gone throughout the country. Although Nature, of course, implanted the esthetic attribute in him, yet it had to be cultivated, developed, and Mr. Pierce has worked most assiduously and ardently in order to advance himself along his chosen field of endeavor, and, judging from his past praiseworthy attainments it is proper to predict for him still greater things in the future.

Mr. Pierce was born March 14, 1863, on a farm three miles east of Winchester. He is a son of Joab W. and Elizabeth (Summers) Pierce, one of our excellent pioneer families, a complete sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Suffice it to add here that the Pierces have always been known as public-spirited, high-minded and exemplary citizens.

Charles F. Pierce was reared on the farm and there did the usual chores assigned to farm boys, until he was about seventeen years of age. He received his primary education in the country district schools. In the year 1881 he went with his parents to Florida where he remained four and one-half years, returning to Winchester, Indiana, in 1886, and worked on a farm and at various occupations. In the fall of 1886 he began the study of photography with E. R. Hiatt, of Winchester, and, having a natural aptitude in this line, he made rapid progress, and was prepared to open a studio of his own, which he did at Saratoga, this county, and met with success from the first.

On December 3, 1887 Mr. Pierce married Mrs. Dora Almonrode, a daughter of Josiah and Margaret (Cox) Almonrode, of Saratoga, where her family was highly respected and where Mrs. Pierce grew to womanhood and was educated. The union of our subject and wife resulted in the birth of two children; Benjamin Harrison, of Winchester, and Goldie, now the wife of Chauncey Waters, of Farmland.

In January, 1888, Mr. Pierce, seeking a wider field for the exercise of his talents, removed to Winchester and opened a studio. His reputation as a fine photographer had preceded him and he soon built up a large and ever-growing business, and here he has remained to the present time, with the exception of several winters spent in Florida, where he did special photographic work. He has one of the neatest and most up-to-date studios in the state and is a very busy man. He has kept fully abreast of modern photographic art and is quick to adopt new designs in his work. He is regarded by all who are familiar with his work as an artist of very pronounced ability and has a wide reputation. He has done special work for "Collier's Weekly" and other leading magazines of the East.

Politically, Mr. Pierce was formerly a Republican, but since the organization of the Progressive party has allied himself with it. He is a member of the State Photographers Association and the National Photographers Association. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Owls.

Mr. Pierce keeps a supply of cameras and art supplies of all kinds and also maintains a picture framing department. His studio is located at 209 South Main street. Here his many customers, some of whom come from remote towns, always receive prompt and courteous treatment.

WILLIAM L. HAWKINS.

Inheriting the thrifty and frugal habits of a sturdy pioneer father who, before the days of railroads left his native hills in the old Tar state under Southern skies and threaded the wilderness to the land of the Hoosiers to seek his fortune in the new country, it is little wonder that William L. Hawkins, erstwhile farmer and merchant, but for a score of years past successful real estate dealer in Winchester has won a definite goal in life, and won his spurs on the field of the industrial strife. The people of Randolph county have known him for many years, and they extend to him every good wish, for his dealings with his fellow men have ever been honorable and they repose in him the most implicit confidence.

Mr. Hawkins was born in Randolph county, Indiana, July 29, 1854. He is a son of William and Agatha (Teagle) Hawkins, whose family consisted of ten children, seven daughters and three sons.

William Hawkins, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in North Carolina in 1808 and his death occurred in 1879. He spent his boyhood in his native state, and when twenty-two years old, in 1830, he made the long overland journey from his native state to Wayne county, Indiana, on horseback, carrying an old flint-lock rifle which is now in the possession of the subject of this sketch. William Hawkin's mother died when he was six weeks old, and his father, John Hawkins, bound him out to a distiller of peach brandy and apple-jack, and he remained with the distiller until reaching his majority, then received for his services five dollars, a jeans suit of clothes, horse, bridle and saddle. He then worked a year for fifty dollars. He married after coming to Wayne county, where he lived about a year, and then removed to Randolph county becoming well situated through his industry and close application. His father and brothers all remained in North Carolina and he lost track of them upon the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion. His wife, our subject's mother, was born in 1809, in Virginia, and she died in 1897, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years.

William L. Hawkins, of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm in Randolph county and he received his early education in an old log school house in his neighborhood, in fact was located on the farm he now owns. Two of his neighbors and his own family, contributed thirty-one children to the school. He remained on the home place until he was twenty-one years of age. For the past twenty years he has been engaged in the real estate business in Winchester, and he has built up a large and lucrative business. Perhaps no man in Randolph county is a better judge of real estate values, both city and farm, than he. He has dealt promptly, courteously and honestly with his fellow men and he therefore has the good will and respect of all. He has been very successful in a business way.

Politically, Mr. Hawkins is a Republican. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment. He attends the Friends church.

Mr. Hawkins was married May 4, 1883 to Etta Moore, a daughter of James Moore, a farmer of Randolph county. She is one of two children, having a sister, Minnie E.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, named as follows: Minnie, born in 1885, married Harry Iliff, who is in the employ of the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, and they have one child, Henrietta; Winnie died in infancy; Lionel M., born May 2, 1888, is secretary and treasurer of the East Arkansas Lumber Company; he lives at Paragould, Arkansas, and married Willie Walters, of Springville, Tennessee; they have one child, William Moore. Charles J., the youngest child of our subject, was born November 3, 1891, and is now working in Chicago for Carson, Pine, Scott & Company.

WILLIAM H. BALES.

Since coming to Randolph county three-quarters of a century ago the Bales family has witnessed wide-sweeping and very important changes in this locality, in many of which they have taken a conspicuous part. But change is constant and general, generations rise and pass unmarked away, and it is the duty of posterity as well as a present gratification to place upon the printed page a true record of the lives of those who have preceded us on the stage of action and left to their descendants the memory of their struggles and achievements. The history of this honored family is a part of an indissoluble chain. which links the annals of the past to those of the latter-day progress and prosperity and the history of Randolph county would be incomplete without due reference to them, the various members of the family having lived useful and successful lives, among the best known of the present generation being William H. Bales, long a leading business man of Winchester. Like his father before him, generous and big-hearted, kindly in disposition, he has never lacked for friends, and many of them will pursue his life record, as written here, with deep interest although brief and fragmentary.

William H. Bales was born in Randolph county, September 11, 1857. He is a son of Isaac N. and Martha J. (Platt) Bales, and is one of a family of three children, the eldest, Mary E., dying in infancy; and the youngest, Magnolia M. married W O. Bales, a farmer living south of Winchester, and they have two children, Stella M. and Burley N.

Isaac N. Bales was born also in this county, and here he grew to manhood, received his education in the old-time schools and devoted his life to general farming. He lived on a farm adjoining the land which our subject's paternal grandfather took up from the government, cleared and developed. Isaac N. Bales was a soldier in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry for three years, seeing much hard service and proving to be a gallant soldier for the Union. He was in the last charge of the war, which took place at Mobile, Alabama. He was in the battles at Richmond, Kentucky, in the siege of Vicksburg and was with General Banks on the Red River Expedition, and other general actions. He enlisted August 5, 1862, and was honorably discharged in July 1865. He was never wounded but bullets pierced his hat and clothing.

William H. Bales grew to manhood on the home farm and there worked hard when a boy. He received a common school education. At the age of thirty-seven he moved to Winchester where he has conducted a paint and wall paper store during the past ten years, building up a large and rapidly growing business and carrying at all times a large and carefully selected stock of modern paints and wall paper. His store is one of the best of its kind in this section of the state and would do credit to a city much larger than Winchester. His prices are always right, and, dealing uniformly with his hundreds of customers in an honest and courteous manner, he has become one of our most popular and substantial business men.

Mr. Bales was first married on February 9, 1878, to Mary A. Fisher, whose death occurred March 5, 1905. To this union three children were born, namely: Newton A., who died in early life; Charles E. C., a farmer, lives at Muncie; he married Pearl Powell and they have two children; Russell H. is bookeeper for the Western Drop Forge Company of Marion; he has remained single. William H. Bales was married again, espousing on October 29, 1908, Minnie Burnside, of Albany, Indiana, a daughter of James F. Burnside, and she is one of a family of eight children, an equal number of sons and daughters. To this second union one child has been born, Esther, the date of whose birth was October 3, 1910.

Politically Mr. Bales is a Progressive. He has been a member of the Christian church for a period of thirty-eight years, and is faithful in his support of the same. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of the Golden Eagle, and is a member of the Sons of Veterans.

HOSEA F. HOBBICK.

One of the enterprising and successful business men of Winchester, Randolph county, is Hosea F. Hobbick, who conducts one of the largest and best equipped hardware and tinware stores in the county, his large and successful business having been built up through his own thrift, perseverance and honest dealings, for he began life in a business way at the bottom of the ladder and worked up gradually, often in the face of obstacles which he has removed one by one, obstacles which would have discouraged others of less sterling mettle, so he is eminently deserving of the position he has won in the industrial world and of the high esteem in which he is universally held.

Mr. Hobbick was born in Winchester, Indiana, May 21, 1859, and here he has been content to spend his life, being reared and educated here. He is a son of David and Sarah (Shaw) Hobbick, the mother having come to this county from Caddington, Ohio, being a daughter of Aaron Shaw, a merchant of that place. Our subject is one of three children, he being the eldest; the others are Emma, who married Edward Ginn, a carriage painter, of Winchester, has one child, Hubert; Grant died when eighteen years of age.

David Hobbick, the father, was born in Randolph county, and here he grew to manhood and received his education in the old-time schools of his community. When a young man he learned the trade of a machinist, in which he became quite expert. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Germany, where he spent his early life and was married. Soon after this event he emigrated to the United States.

Hosea F. Hobbick was apprenticed to the tinner's trade when a boy, which he mastered in due course of time, learning its every phase, and becoming one of the most skilful in this vocation in this section of the state. As he prospered he saved his money and finally opened a hardware store in his native city on a small scale. This has continued to grow with advancing years, until now, after twenty years, our subject's store is one of the largest, most modern and best managed in Winchester, and he enjoys an extensive and rapidly growing trade which extends over a wide territory. He handles all kinds of hardware and tinware, always carrying a large, up-to-date and well-selected stock, and, according to his many customers, his prices are always right, and he has dealt with his thousands of customers in a uniformly honest and courteous manner, so that he has won and retained their good will and esteeem. He is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished in a business way.

Mr. Hobbick was married June 22, 1887, to Mary McIntire, of Winchester, where she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of John McIntire, a well-known carpenter and contractor, whose family consists of four children, namely: Mary, wife of our subject; Albert, who is employed at the National Cash Register Company in Dayton, Ohio; James is employed at Kechman's Wire Works in Muncie; and Ulysses. To Mr. and Mrs. Hobbick five children have been born, namely: Chester, born in 1888, is with his father in the store; he married Gertrude Wilcox, and they have one child, Mary Virginia; Eola died when six years old; Helen died in infancy; Robert died when seven years years old; Clifford was born August 5, 1900. Mrs. Hobbick is a Quaker in her religious belief. Fraternally, our subject is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and politically he is a Progressive.

David Hobbick, father of our subject, was a gallant soldier for the Union during the Civil war, having enlisted in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served most faithfully for a period of three years, during which he was in many of the great battles. His death occurred in January, 1883. His widow survives at this writing, being now seventy-four years old.

DENNIS KELLEY.

Ceaselessly to and fro flies the deft shuttle which weaves the web of human destiny, and into the vast mosaic fabric enter the individuality, the effort, the accomplishment of each man, be his station that most lowly or one of majesty, pomp and power. Within the textile folds may be traced the line of each individuality, be it the one that lends the beautiful sheen of honest worth and honest endeavor, or one that, dark and zigzag, finds its way through warp and woof, marring the composite beauty by its blackened threads, ever in evidence of the shadowed and unprolific life. Into the great aggregate each individuality is merged, and yet the essence of each is never lost, be the angle of its influence wide-spreading and grateful, or narrow and baneful. In his efforts he who essays biographical memoirs finds much of profit and much of alluring fascination when he would follow out, in even a cursory way, the tracings of a life history, seeking to find the keynote of each respective personality. These efforts and their resulting transmission cannot fail of value in an objective way, for in each case may the lesson of life he conned, line after line. precept after precept. One could not contemplate the life record of the late Dennis Kelley, for many years one of the leading business men and public-spirited citizens of Winchester, Randolph county, without gaining therefrom many helpful hints and forming at the same time a very high opinion of the man, for his benevolent and charitable work, extending over a period of many years, resulting in much good and stamping him as a whole-souled and genuine lover of his kind, would alone excite the admiration and reverence of all, especially of the contemplative turn of mind, for his gifts and his deeds for the general betterment of his fellow-men came not from a desire to win the plaudits of the public or for any ulterior motive, but merely out of an altruistic nature and a spirit of profound human sympathy.

Mr. Kelley was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, October 9, 1844, and with his parents he moved to Montezuma, Ohio, in 1860, being then sixteen years of age. He received a somewhat meager common school education, which was greatly supplemented in after years by much home reading and by actual contact with the business world. Although but a boy when the Civil war came on he proved his courage by enlisting in August, 1862, in Company C, One Hundred and Eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in which he served most faithfully and gallantly until the close of the war, participating in all of the battles of the famous Atlanta campaign, a series of the most strenuous hand-to-hand battles recorded in history. He was seriously wounded at the battle of Resaca, Georgia, May 14, 1864. After being honorably discharged he returned home and engaged in the mercantile business with his father, Dennis Kelley, Sr., and soon mastered the ins and outs of the business.

In the year 1867 Mr. Kelley was united in marriage with Margaret Houser. In February, 1872 they removed to Winchester, Indiana, where they established the permanent home of the family, and embarked in the mercantile business. On January 1, 1881 he disposed of his mercantile interests and accepted the cashiership of the Randolph County Bank, which position he filled with eminent satisfaction to both the stockholders and patrons for a period of five years when he again engaged in business for himself. In 1886 he built the Kelley block, one of Winchester's most substantial and attractive mercantile structures, on the northwest corner of the public square, and here he conducted a prosperous business until 1905 when he was compelled to retire on account of declining health.

As a merchant he became one of the leading citizens of Randolph county, but his talents and energy were not all devoted to money-making; he found time to improve society by mingling with his fellow men in religious and fraternal circles; his devotion thereto was noted and in a financial way none were more generous than he. As a member and official of the Methodist Episcopal church he was punctual in attendance and participated in all its efforts to better mankind. His love for his comrades was exemplified by his becoming a charter member of the Grand Army of the Republic; not only was he a paying member thereof, but by his presence at all its public appearances gave proof of his loyalty to its teachings. He was an active member of Winchester Lodge, No. 56, Free and Accepted Masons. His high regard for that organization led him to become a member of its higher branches, the Council, Chapter, Knights Templar and thirty-second degree. In these he was honored by selection to many of the exacting offices, all of which he filled with his usual fidelity.

As a member for several years of the board of control of the Fountain Park cemetery he exhibited a devotion to civic duty that is worthy of emulation.

However with all the praise he merits for his loyalty to his country during the great war of the states, his honorable career as a merchant, his fidelity to duty in all the positions creditably filled by him in civic, church and fraternal societies, his dominant trait and the one for which his memory should long be revered, was his devotion to his family. He was a husband and father in the most complete sense of those words. His devotion to and his pride in his family and home was a marked characteristic. His home was his castle and there the guest was always welcome, like the way-worn traveler to the tent of the Arab. His happiness consisted of making others happy. He was passionately fond of music, and took pride in giving his children every opportunity to perfect themselves in that art, with a result that they are among our most accomplished musicians. Nor was this filial devotion selfish, as he was advisor and benefactor to many whom the grim Reaper and misfortune had deprived of various kindred that comprise the home. His family consisted of Charles A. Kelley, of Searcy, Arkansas; Dennis H., of Whitefish, Montana; Asahel Stone, Grace M., Frances E., and Ruth M., of Winchester, Indiana. They all survive together with the mother.

Dennis Kelley was summoned to his eternal rest on April 9, 1911, after a short illness, at the attractive family residence on South Meridian street, Winchester.

We quote these paragraphs from a lengthy article which appeared in Winchester's leading newspaper, at the time of his death:

"Mr. Kelley was one of the leading and most highly respected citizens of this city, and as a merchant he had more than a county-wide acquaintance, all of whom will sincerely mourn his death and sympathize with his family in their affliction.

His life was spent in a period that tested the man, and in no detail did he shirk or prove that he was not a manly man. It was given to him to participate in the struggle that saved this country; as a business man, to transform crude methods into a system; to elevate society from uncouthness to culture. In the period in which these transformations were made, he was a leader, a leader that will be missed and mourned by the community."

ALBERT F. SALA.

One of Winchester's enterprising business men is Albert F. Sala, a well-known and successful druggist, who won a wide circle of friends in Randolph county since taking up his residence here as a result of his industry, public spirit and genial manners, and he has the good will of all who know him. He has succeeded because he has worked persistently along legitimate lines of endeavor, never letting the grass grow under his feet and never waiting for some freak of Fate to cast fortune in his way; for he knew at the outset that he who would win in this world of fierce competition must be a man of indomitable energy, courage and self-reliance. Many of these attributes which have won for him a place in the world's affairs have descended from his sterling ancestors, whose records show them to have been people worth while.

Mr. Sala was born at Liberty Mills, Wabash county, Indiana, January 9, 1863. He is a son of Daniel and Ruanna (Hay) Sala, the mother having been a daughter of Jacob and Sarah Hay, both long since deceased.

The Sala family is of Italian origin and very old. They were exiled from Italy when Pope Clement III was in power. From that country they went to Germany and took up their abode. Daniel Sala, father of our subject, was a cooper by trade and he was born in Ohio, from which state he came to Indiana, locating in Wabash county, where he established a good home through his industry.

The origin of the Sala family in America is traced back to the sixteenth century, when three brothers emigrated to the United States, one locating in Pennsylvania, one in Massachusetts and one in North Carolina, and from them the present members of the family are descended. The record shows that from that remote day to this the family have made good, honorable, thrifty citizens, many of them prominent in their respective communities. The Salas of the fourth generation were close to the branch in which we find the kinship of the great George Augustus Sala, of England.

The mother of the subject of this sketch was of German ancestry and her family lived in Maryland before coming to the Middle West. Mrs. Ruanna Sala's mother died when the former was only sixteen years old, leaving eleven children for her to rear, but she did remarkably well.

Five children were born to Daniel Sala and wife, namely: The first died in infancy, as did also the second; David died in youth; Albert F., of this sketch; Charles A., who is employed by the Rumely Engine Company, lives in Chicago and is single.

Albert F. Sala received a good education in the public schools of North Manchester, from which he was graduated. When a boy he turned his attention to the drug business, which he has made his life work, having thus been engaged since 1883 with the exception of five years, when he taught in the high school at North Manchester, Wabash county. He taught for the purpose of obtaining funds to finish his education. He worked in a drug store for a number of years in North Manchester, where he acquired a knowledge of the drug business. He came to Winchester some ten years ago, where he has owned and conducted one of the most modern, extensive and popular drug stores in the county, enjoying a large and ever-growing trade. He carries an extensive and well-selected stock of standard drugs, patent medicines, drug sundries; in fact, everything to be found in an up-to-date drug store in a progressive, modern city, and by his honest and courteous dealings with his many customers he has won the confidence and good will of all who know him.

Mr. Sala was married March 20, 1883, to Clara W. McFann, a daughter of Asa B. McFann, whose family consisted of twelve children. They lived in North Manchester, Indiana, where Mrs. Sala grew to womanhood and received her education.

Two children were born to our subject and wife, namely: Irma died when three years old; Douglas A. died when eight years old.

Politically, Mr. Sala is a Republican. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Presbyterian church. He is one of the most widely known druggists in northern Indiana and ranks high among his professional brethren in the state. In March, 1902, he was appointed a member of the Indiana Board of Pharmacy, which position he held until May 1, 1911, discharging his duties in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. In August, 1907, he was elected secretary and treasurer of the National Board of Pharmacy, which high position he is holding with his usual fidelity, ability and general satisfaction. Personally, he is an obliging, broad-minded, intelligent and courteous gentleman whom it is a pleasure to meet.

JOHN WILLIAM CARTER.

Each man who strives to fulfill his part in connection with human life and human activities is deserving of recognition, whatever may be his field of endeavor, and it is the function of works of this nature to prepare for future generations an authentic record concerning those represented in its pages, and the value of such publications is certain to be cumulative for all time to come, showing forth the individual and specific accomplishments of which generic history is ever engendered. The record of John William Carter, one of the enterprising citizens of Lynn, Randolph county is worthy of perpetuation on the pages of history as we will readily discern by a study of the same in the following paragraphs.

Mr. Carter was born in Clinton county, Ohio, March 17, 1857. He is a son of Elihu and Esther B. (Mendenhall) Carter. The father was born in Clinton county, Ohio, March 9, 1833. He was a son of John and Hannah (Milliken) Carter. John Carter was also born in Clinton county, Ohio, early in the nineteenth century, and he devoted his entire life to farming, and his death occurred in 1878. He was a Quaker. Elihu Carter grew to manhood in his native county and he had good educational advantages for that early period. He worked on a farm in his boyhood days. In 1867 he moved to Miami county, Indiana, where he engaged in farming until 1873 when he moved to Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, Indiana, where he engaged in farming. He was a local minister in the Friends church, preaching either at home or at a neighboring church. He remained in that neighborhood until 1883 when he moved to Henry county Indiana, where he continued farming and preaching until his death, March 8, 1908. He was a successful farmer and a good and useful man, a minister of the gospel of no mean ability and did a great amount of good in this manner. He and Esther B. Mendenhall were married either in 1855 or 1856. She was born in Wayne county, Indiana, about 1835 and died in 1863. Their children numbered four, and were named as follows: John William, subject of this sketch; Suda is the wife of J. L. Hewitt, of Stoney Creek township, this county; Hannah B. is the wife of Albert Oren, of Parker, Indiana; Rufus M. is deceased.

John W. Carter grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked when a boy and he received a common school education. He began farming for himself when a young man and continued in this line of endeavor until 1903, getting a good start in life. He then moved to the town of Lynn, and was appointed rural mail carrier of route No. 30. This position he held for a period of seven years to the eminent satisfaction of the people and the department, retiring in 1910. He now devotes his attention to the management of his finely improved and productive farm southwest of Lynn. However, he maintains an office in Lynn, being engaged in the real estate and automobile business in partnership with Frank E. Wright, under the firm name of Wright & Carter. They have built up a large and lucrative business which is rapidly growing.

Politically, Mr. Carter is a Republican, and religiously, he is a member of the Friends church.

Mr. Carter was married September 21, 1877, to Caroline E. Mills, a daughter of Joel and Cynthia (Beard) Mills. She was born October 27, 1856, in Randolph county, Indiana, and here she grew to womanhood and received a common school education. She was the oldest of a family of six children, three sons and three daughters.

To Mr. and Mrs. Carter three children were born, namely: Rev. Fred E., born August 22, 1878, now has charge of the Jonesboro Friends church; Luther E., born October 1, 1882, is proprietor of a general store in Geneva, Indiana; Maude, born February 16, 1885, married Wayne Smock, who is farming in Washington township, this county. These children grew to maturity in Randolph county and were given excellent educational advantages.

On May 9, 1913, the wife and mother was called to her eternal rest. She was a woman of beautiful Christian character and fortitude, and her life of fifty-six years, six months and twelve days was fraught with much good to those who came in contact with her. Besides her husband and three children there survive five grandchildren, a mother, three brothers and two sisters.

BENJAMIN F. DENLINGER.

In looking over the life records of the citizens of Randolph county one is struck by the immense number who have come from Darke county, Ohio, and have cast their lots among the Hoosiers. That county has, beyond question, furnished more settlers to Randolph than any other in the Union. These people have, in nearly every instance, proven to be industrious, public spirited and of honorable impulses and therefore we owe much to this sterling band of Buckeyes, of which Benjamin F. Denlinger, proprietor of the Union City Hardware Company, of Union City, is one deserving of special mention in the pages of this history.

Mr. Denlinger was born in Darke county, Ohio, August 15, 1865. He is a son of Jacob and Mary (Barr) Denlinger, who spent their lives on a farm in Darke county, Ohio, the father's death occurring in 1904, and the mother died in 1902. They were the parents of the following children: Mary Lovina, who married W. W. Parent, lives in Paulding county, Ohio; Anna married Robert Rich, and they reside in Union City, on the Ohio side; John B. lives in Jackson township; and Benjamin F., of this sketch. Benjamin Barr, the maternal grandfather, was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and his death occurred there many years ago. Jacob Denlinger was a native of the above named county also and there he resided until about 1850, when he removed to Darke county, Ohio, and bought timbered land, which he cleared and made into a farm. He was one of the pioneers of Darke county. He was a scion of an old Pennsylvania German family.

Benjamin F. Denlinger was educated at Hill Grove, Ohio, but he is what might properly be called a self-made man, for he left school when only sixteen years of age and began life for himself. For many years he followed farming and threshing grain. He is still owner of a valuable and well-improved farm of ninety-four acres in Darke county, Ohio, where he carried on general farming and stock raising until 1908, when he moved to Union City, Indiana, and bought the business of the Union City Hardware Company, which he has since conducted most successfully, enjoying a large and rapidly growing business which extends over a wide territory. He keeps a large and carefully selected stock of general hardware and farming implements, and his store would be a credit to a town much larger than Union City. By his uniform courtesy and honest dealings with his hundreds of customers they invariably remain his friends. In five years he has succeeded in building up a mercantile business second to none in Randolph county and adjoining country. He is a man of great energy, wise foresight and progressive ideas.

Politically, Mr. Denlinger is a Republican. He was township trustee of Washington township, Darke county, Ohio, for one term. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Camp Eagle, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Union Council, No. 30.

Mr. Denlinger was married December 18, 1887, to Ella L. Anspaugh, who was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, January 5, 1862. She is a daughter of Daniel Anspaugh, who is deceased, as is also his wife.

To Mr. and Mrs. Denlinger have been born the following children: Earl F., born April 18, 1889, married Louise Sutton, a daughter of Thomas H. Sutton, on Easter Sunday, 1910, and to this union one child has been born, Erma Louise, whose birth occurred October 28, 1912; Mary Margaret, born May 2, 1898, is now attending school and making an excellent record; she is a talented musician and every advantage will be given her along this line. The son was also given excellent educational advantages, and is a young business man of much promise.

JOSEPH C. HIRSH.

In the death of the late Joseph C. Hirsh the city of Winchester lost one of its most energetic men of affairs, who, through a long lapse of years, was prominent in the various circles in which he moved and whose potent influence for good will continue to pervade the lives of those with whom he came in contact for many years to come. He was one of the sterling, thrifty citizens of Randolph county who came from the great German empire and did so much for the general upbuilding of this locality. He began life at the bottom of the ladder and gradually ascended the same to the topmost rung unaided and without anyone having paved the way for him, but he was ambitious, honest and possessed untiring energy so he became a leading business man and citizen in the county-seat and when he passed to his eternal rest his loss was keenly felt by the entire community.

Mr. Hirsh was born in Germany in the year 1836, and he emigrated from the Fatherland when a lad with his parents, who settled in Syracuse, New York, subsequently removing to Dayton, Ohio, where young Hirsh learned to be a pharmacist after having received a good common school education. From there the family moved to Cincinnati, and finally our subject came to Winchester, Indiana, where he spent the rest of his life, conducting one of the largest and most up-to-date drug stores in this section of the state. He was in this line of business for a period of forty years, and was regarded as an excellent business man. His courtesy, honesty and obliging disposition won him thousands of customers and friends wherever he was known. He remained in the drug business up to his death, February 17, 1909.

Mr. Hirsh was twice married, first, in Dayton, where his wife died without issue. His second wife was Anna D. Thomas, who had been previously married to John Durst. The date of our subject's last marriage was March 10, 1897. Mrs. Hirsh is a daughter of John C. Thomas and wife, of Darke county, Ohio, and is one of five children, namely: Catherine, a widow, lives in Darke county and has two children; Charles, who is farming in Darke county, has been married twice and has six children; Sophia is deceased; Anna Dorothy, widow of Mr. Hirsh, and Mary M.

Mrs. Anna D. Hirsh was educated in the common schools of New York and Dayton. She conducted an extensive dressmaking establishment in Dayton for some time, enjoying a large patronage among the best class of people. She is a lady of many commendable attributes and her modernly appointed and beautiful home in the heart of the city of Winchester is often the gathering place for her many friends who find here true hospitality of an old-time flavor and never-failing good cheer.

Mr. Hirsh was noted for his probity of character, his word being regarded as good, if not better than the bond of most men, and his rare foresight and sound judgment was admired by all who knew him, as well as his exemplary character.

EDWIN S. JAQUA.

Prominently connected with the business and legal history of Randolph county, the career of Edwin S. Jaqua, of Winchester, is eminently worthy of permanent record. Great fortunes have been accumulated by others through various methods, but few lives in this section of Indiana furnish a better example of the wise application of sound business principles and safe conservatism as does his. The story of his success is not long nor does it contain any exciting chapters, but in it lies a valuable secret of the prosperity which it records. His business, public and private life are replete with interest and incentive, no matter how lacking in dramatic incident; the record of an industrious life whose every action has been actuated by a laudable ambition and controlled by proper ideas, consistent with itself and its possibilities in every particular. In fact, it would be hard to find a better example of what may be accomplished by duty fully performed or what obstacles may be surmounted through energy and tact than that afforded by the life history of this progressive man of affairs.

Mr. Jaqua was born at New Madison, Darke county, Ohio, May 8, 1853. He is a son of Charles and Mary (Putman) Jaqua. The father was born, reared and educated in Darke county, Ohio, studied medicine and was a practicing physician in his earlier life in his native state, but he subsequently removed to Indiana, located in Randolph county and thereupon gave up his profession and established himself as a land surveyor. His death occurred in 1903. The mother of our subject died many years ago. Judson Jaqua, the paternal grandfather, was one of the pioneer settlers of Darke county, Ohio. He was a native of Connecticut, from which state he removed to Pennsylvania when a boy, making the long journey by wagon and on flat boats on the rivers. He devoted his life to farming, and died in the early nineties at an advanced age. The father and grandfather of our subject were Republicans in politics.

Edwin S. Jaqua was a child when he removed with his parents from Ohio to Winchester, Indiana, and here he grew to manhood and received his education in the public schools, which has been greatly supplemented in later years by profound home study and wide miscellaneous reading and by contact with the business world. He commenced learning telegraphy when a boy of thirteen, and worked at the same for three years, then went to Iowa and secured employment as book-keeper in a bank, which marked the beginning of his successful banking career. This was in the city of Burlington, and he remained in the same position there about five years, then engaged in the mercantile business for about four years in that state. By this time he had a good start in business and he returned to Winchester, Indiana, and began reading law with Thompson & Marsh, the latter an ex-judge, and in the year 1890 he entered into partnership with B. F. Marsh and they continued together until 1910, enjoying a large and lucrative practice and becoming widely known as leading attorneys of Randolph county, figuring conspicuously in the important trials in the local courts. As a result of the death of John W. Clayton, father of Mrs. Jaqua, our subject was obliged to devote the major portion of his time to looking after the property interests of his own and those left by Mr. Clayton, which consisted of about eight hundred acres of farming land and the Farmland State Bank. Mr. Jaqua became vice-president of this institution, which position he still holds; in fact, he had assisted in the organization of the same in 1887. He was a stockholder in this bank from the first and for many years was a director, and has been its attorney since its organization; in fact, its large and ever-increasing success has been due very largely to his wise counsel and able management. Mr. Jaqua also assisted in organizing the Saratoga State Bank, at Saratoga, Randolph county, in 1907, has been its attorney ever since, also a stockholder and director. He and his wife are heavy stockholders in the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Winchester. He is also owner of many other valuable properties of different kinds, all of which have been obtained by good management, wise foresight and honest dealings. He is thus deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished alone and in the face of obstacles that would have discouraged many a man of less courage and fortitude. He has a commodious, attractive and modernly appointed brick home in Winchester, which is the frequent gathering place for the many friends of the family. He erected this fine residence in 1907.

Mr. Jaqua was married in May, 1891, to Lulu B. Clayton, who was born in Randolph county in 1870. She received a good education and is a lady of culture and refinement. She is a daughter of John W. Clayton, mentioned above, whose death occurred in 1910. He was one of the leading citizens and most influential financiers in the county for many years. He was one of the founders of the Farmland State Bank and was its first president, continuing in that position for a period of twenty-one years in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons of this sound and popular institution. He resigned from the presidency two years prior to his death on account of the infirmities of old age. He was also a stockholder in other banks. He was one of the substantial men of this section of the state. He accumulated a handsome competency during the Civil war buying and shipping cattle, hogs and sheep. He was the owner of large landed interests. The death of his wife occurred in 1909. Mrs. Jaqua was their only child.

The union of Edwin S. Jaqua and wife has been blessed by the birth of the following children: John C., born June 9, 1892, was graduated from the Winchester high school in 1911, and is now a student in Cornell University; George W., born February 22, 1896, was graduated from the Winchester high school with the class of 1913; Mary was born in 1903; and Ruth was born November 26, 1911.

Politically, Mr. Jaqua is a Republican. Personally he is a man whose word is regarded as good as a bond, and he is public spirited, obliging, a courteous, high-minded gentleman in all the relations of life, yet plain and unassuming.

GEORGE McDOWELL BASCOM.

Among those who know George McDowell Bascom best he bears a reputation of a man who exercises sound judgment and who has pronounced views and has always kept himself well informed upon all matters pertaining to the public weal or woe and always exercises the duties of citizenship in a conscientious manner. He formerly engaged in farming in Randolph county and has held several offices of trust in the same, including that of deputy sheriff and postmaster at Lynn, but is now living retired, spending his autumn years in quiet. He is one of our honored veterans of the great Civil War and is a descendant of a sterling old family.

Mr. Bascom was born at Richmond, Indiana, December 3, 1846. He is a son of Erastus K. and Sarah J. (Stettler) Bascom. The father of our subject was born August 13, 1825, in Darke county, Ohio. He was the son of Linus and Mrs. Jane (Gray) Bascom. He was a lawyer at Bluffton, Indiana. In 1850 he was elected delegate, from Wells and Adams counties, to assist in revising the state constitution. During one session of the legislature he was assistant clerk, later was prosecuting attorney of Wells county. He married Jane Stettler August 14, 1845. She was a native of Richmond, Indiana. His death occurred at Bluffton October 23, 1852. Linus Bascom was born April 4, 1785, in Western, Massachusetts. From 1812 to 1815 he lived in Montgomery county, Indiana. He went to Darke county, Ohio, as a trader in 1816, and in 1818 helped organize that county, and was first clerk of the court there, was also prominent in the Presbyterian church. He married Mrs. Jane (Devor) Gray April 10, 1817, at Greenville, and there his death occurred July 16, 1861. She died September 17, 1829. Moses Bascom, father of Linus Bascom, was born in Western, Massachusetts, April 5, 1745 and he lived there until 1790 when he moved to Brimfield and then Milton, Vermont. He died at Stillwater, New York, March 31, 1812. He married Eunice Reed May 4, 1769, and her death occurred at Milton.

Vermont. Lieut. Samuel Bascom, Jr., father of Moses Bascom, was born at Northampton, Massachusetts, June 13, 1723. He purchased one hundred and ten acres at Western, Massachusetts, and was farmer, tanner and currier, and there his death occurred September 11, 1779. Samuel Bascom was born at Northampton, January 27, 1692, was an extensive farmer on the Connecticut river. He died November 22, 1765. He married Experience Parsons May 10, 1722. She was born in Northampton and died November 20, 1740, at the age of fifty-seven years. Thomas Bascom, the third, father of Samuel Bascom, mentioned above, was born in Northampton, in 1668 and there his death occurred February 3, 1714. He married Hannah Catlin, whose death occurred January, 1747. They became the parents of eleven children. Thomas Bascom, Jr., father of Thomas Bascom, the third, was born at Windsor, Connecticut, February 20, either 1641 or 1642. He married Mary Newell, and his death occurred September 11, 1689. Thomas Bascom, the first, was the emigrant, coming to America in 1634 and settling at Dorchester, Massachusetts, removing in 1639 to Windsor, Connecticut, later to Northampton, Massachusetts. In 1666, he was elected town constable of Northampton, was made a freeman in May, 1670, and took the oath of allegiance February 8, 1678. His death occurred there May 9, 1682. His wife, Avis Bascom, died February 3, 1676. He was one of the first settlers in Northampton. The family is of French origin and in earlier times held high positions under the French government.

George M. Bascom, our subject, received a common school education, and he lived with his grandfather Stettler during his boyhood, the grandfather having conducted a hotel where Fowler's restaurant is now located in Lynn. On August 21, 1863 Mr. Bascom enlisted in Company K, Seventh Indiana Cavalry under Col. J. P. C. Shanks. He saw service along the Mississippi and in Texas, taking part in a number of engagements. He was with the troops that pursued General Price in Missouri. He fought guerillas almost constantly, much of the time along the Missouri Pacific Railway, and he did considerable service in Tennessee and Mississippi. He was honorably discharged February 28, 1866, after which he returned to Lynn, Indiana, and started to school. Learning the painter's trade he followed that for a number of years, then worked in a general store. He was appointed deputy sheriff in 1884 and served two years, and was appointed to the same office in 1890, serving until 1894, giving eminent satisfaction as a public servant. He then moved to a farm in Washington township which he operated six years, was then appointed postmaster at Lynn and held that position for four years, discharging his duties in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the satisfaction of the people and the department. Since then he has lived in retirement. Politically he is a Republican, and in religious matters is a member of the Methodist church. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a member of the township advisory board.

Mr. Bascom was married April 4, 1868 to Arminda J. Price, who was born in Wayne county, Indiana, July 22, 1851. To this union six children were born, two of whom died in infancy; the others were named as follows: Charles E., who lives in Topeka, Kansas, is passenger agent for the Rock Island Railroad Company; Oliver M. is at home; Herbert F., who lives in Wichita, Kansas, is city agent for the Frisco Railroad; James E., of Lynn, this county, is a rural mail carrier. The wife and mother passed away February 22, 1904. Mr. Bascom was again married on April 25, 1906, to Clara B. Woods, who was born near Cincinnati, Ohio.

HENRY TAYLOR ADDINGTON.

Among the successful farmers and stock men of Randolph county is Henry Taylor Addington. Having grown up on a farm and handled stock all his life, he is familiar with that class of husbandry. It requires something more than carefulness to select the best animals in any herd or drove and to rear them in such a manner that the best points will be brought out and emphasized, and it requires a still greater talent to be a successful breeder. As the best stock brings the best price, the best farmers make it an object to raise the higher grades, knowing that the market will be the better for a given effort and outlay. These important points and others equally vital are borne in mind by Mr. Addington who has long been known as one of our most enterprising breeders of horses and hogs, the Norman and Poland-China breeds being his specialty. He has done much towards improving the breeds of these particular brands of livestock in this section of the state and his name has been carried to many remote localities through his fine stock, for he has been a close observer and a wide reader, in order that he might adopt the best and most advanced methods in this, this chosen avenue of endeavor.

Mr. Addington was born February 3, 1863, in White River township, eight miles west of Winchester. He is a son of Henry and Sophia (Bollinger) Addington. The father was born in Randolph county, was reared and educated and when the Civil War broke out, he enlisted for service in the Union Army and died while at the front, leaving a widow and four children, Henry Taylor of this review being the youngest. The others are: Anna, who married Benjamin T. Harris, lives in Missouri; Hannah married William Herron, and they live near Farmland; Ella is the wife of Albert Colliers, of Muncie, Indiana. The mother of these children passed away in 1871 when our subject was eight years old.

Henry T. Addington was reared on a farm in White River township, near where he was born, and when of proper age he attended the public schools in this district. When he was twenty-one years of age he went to Audrain county, Missouri, but after working on a farm three months he returned to Randolph county, which he believed to be a more satisfactory place to live and here he has since remained. He at once resumed farm work and here he was married on November 1, 1885 to Christine Green, daughter of Levi and Elizabeth (Bowers) Green, a well-known family of White River township. She is a sister of Levi W. Green, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Addington grew to womanhood in this county and received a good education in the public schools. One daughter has been born to our subject and wife, whom they named Clara May, now the wife of Milton Rineard, who is farming on our subject's land in White River township.

Mr. Addington began farming for himself after his marriage and has continued in this vocation, together with stock raising in the same vicinity ever since, each year finding him further advanced than the preceding, as a result of his excellent management and persistency. He is owner of one hundred and eighty acres of well-improved and valuable land which is under a high state of cultivation. For many years he has been a breeder of Poland-China hogs and is an extensive feeder, being regarded as one of the most successful stock men in Randolph county, a leading breeder and general farmer. He has also for a number of years been a successful breeder of Norman horses, which, owing to their superior qualities have always brought the highest prices and there is a great demand for them. He was formerly an extensive exhibitor at various fairs and stock shows and always was a prize winner. He has been very successful in a business way, has a beautiful home, large and substantial outbuildings and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Farmland. He is also a stockholder in the Goodrich Brothers Grain Company.

Politically Mr. Addington is a Republican, but has never been active in public affairs or a seeker of office. He and his wife are affiliated with and are liberal supporters of the Methodist church at Maxville. They are pleasant people and leaders in the community, in the circles, in which they move.

WILLIAM E. MILLER.

The student interested in the history of Randolph county does not have to carry his investigations far into its annals before learning that William E. Miller has long been an active and leading representative of its business interests and that his labors have proven a potent force in keeping this county abreast of her sister counties of the great Hoosier commonwealth. During a period of forty-two years he has carried on a mercantile business in this county, the major portion of which has been spent in Winchester where he is now the head of one of the largest stores in this section of the state, and while he has prospered in this, he has also found ample opportunity to assist in the material, civic and moral development of the county, and his co-operation has been of value for the general good. He is one of the honored veterans of the Union army who, when the tocsin of war sounded in the nation's greatest crisis, uncomplainingly went forth to defend with his life, if need be, the honor of the old flag. His career in every respect has been one of commendation and is well worth study and emulation by the young man just starting on his life work.

Mr. Miller was born June 2, 1846 in Germantown, Montgomery county, Ohio. He is a son of Samuel and Nancy (Troup) Miller, both of whom were born in the vicinity of Germantown where they grew up and were married. Daniel Miller, the paternal grandfather, came from Lancaster county, Pennsylvania with his family in an early day and settled at Germantown and there engaged in the tailoring business, spending the remainder of his life there. There his son Samuel learned the blacksmith's trade.

William E. Miller was educated in the public schools. Leaving school when thirteen years of age, he began working in a bakery, and when his employer enlisted in the army he went to Dayton, Ohio and worked in a bakery there, returning to Germantown at the age of fifteen and purchased the bakery which had been formerly operated by his first employer. Young Miller had only eighteen dollars to pay down on his property, going in debt for the balance. He operated the bakery about a year and had it all paid for when the oven fell in and the party owning the building would not reconstruct it, so Mr. Miller quit the bakery business and began clerking in a grocery store. Thus we see how a seemingly minor accident changed completely a business career for he remained a merchant instead of a baker. In 1864, he became a clerk in a dry goods store, but remained there only a short time when he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Eighty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry in which he served faithfully until in September, 1865.

W. E. Nelson

After being honorably discharged from the army he attended Commercial College at Dayton for three months, after which he resumed clerking in Germantown in the dry goods store. In 1867 he went to Dayton and clerked in the large dry goods store of A. B. Darst, eventually becoming the general buyer for that store and made frequent trips to New York City. Having mastered the various ins and outs of the dry goods business, in the fall of 1871, Mr. Miller went to Ridgeville, Randolph county, Indiana as manager of the firm of W. E. Miller & Company, a branch of the Dayton store, and he remained in Ridgeville nine years, building up a large business. In 1872 Henry T. Kitselman, of that town became owner of one-half of the business, the firm name then becoming Miller & Kitselman, which partnership continued successfully until 1880, when Mr. Miller sold his interest to Kitselman, Seeney & Company, who continued the business. In the fall of 1880 Mr. Miller came to Winchester and began business alone handling dry goods, clothing and carpets, being successful from the first, his trade increasing with advancing years through his persistency, able management and uniform honesty and courtesy to his customers. In 1898 he organized the stock company under the firm name of The W. E. Miller Company, of which he became president.

When he opened his store at Ridgeville in 1871, Mr. Miller introduced the one price business for this part of the state, a system now in use in all first-class stores over the country. The wonderful growth of his business he attributes to his plan of fair dealing to one and all alike.

It was in the year 1883 that Mr. Miller built his present substantial business block, and in 1898 when he organized the stock company the building was remodeled, being greatly enlarged, having now a sixty-one foot frontage and being one hundred and sixty feet deep, with three stories and a basement, all occupied by The W. E. Miller Company, one of the largest department stores outside of the large cities in the state and an extensive and lucrative business is carried on with the city and surrounding country. The store is modern in all its appointments, with electric elevators, cash carriers, etc. Everything is under a superb system and a very large and well-selected stock of goods, commonly found in all up-to-date department stores, is carried at all seasons. The store is a favorite gathering place for the country people when in the county-seat and everyone is here made to feel at home and accorded uniform courtesy and fairness.

Mr. Miller is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished alone and in the face of obstacles that would have discouraged men of less sterling fiber. From the humblest beginning he has forged to the front and is one of the substantial and influential citizens of one of the leading counties of the state. He is a heavy stockholder in the Randolph County Bank, the Farmers and Merchants Bank and the Loan and Trust Company. He is a director in the Citizens Water & Light Company, of which he was a promoter, and he is a stockholder of the Eastern Indiana Telephone Company. He is vice-president of the Woodbury Glass Company. He also has valuable and extensive farming interests in Randolph county, owning in all over six hundred and sixty acres of fine agricultural land under a high state of improvement and cultivation.

Mr. Miller was married in October, 1871 to Mary Mosier, of Dayton, Ohio, where she was reared and educated. To this union one son and two daughters have been born, namely: Vora, now the wife of Thomas L. Ward, assistant cashier of the Randolph County Bank; Olive, now the wife of John P. Clark with The W. E. Miller Company, and John D. Miller who is associated with his father in the store. These children were all given excellent educational advantages and are all highly respected by a wide circle of friends.

William E. Miller has been a staunch Republican since attaining his majority, but has never been active in public affairs other than to encourage such movements as made for the general progress of his city and county. He is a member of the Masonic Order and also the Grand Army of the Republic, Nelson Trusler Post. His family belong to the Presbyterian church, he being a liberal supporter of the same and of all benevolent work.

LEVI W. GREEN.

The true measure of individual success is determined by what one has accomplished, and, as taken in contradistinction to the old adage that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, there is particular interest attached to the career of Levi W. Green, since he is a native son of Randolph county, where his entire life has been passed; and he has so directed his efforts and ability as to gain recognition as one of the representative citizens of the locality, being one of our leading agriculturists, stock men and bankers, and a worthy scion of a sterling pioneer family.

Mr. Green was born February 6, 1861, on a farm six miles west of Winchester in White River township, Randolph county. He is a son of Levi and Elizabeth (Bowers) Green, both now deceased and sleeping the sleep of the just in Maxville cemetery.

Levi W. Green was reared on the home farm in his native community and there assisted with the general work during the crop seasons when he became of proper age, and he received his early education in the district schools there. He began life for himself as a teacher, which vocation he followed several years in the common schools of his native county during which time his services were in great demand. Between terms he worked on the home farm, remaining under his parental roof tree until his marriage, December 7, 1897 to Ida Main, a daughter of Henry and Magdalena (Collinsworth) Main, a highly esteemed family of Henry county. The father is deceased, having spent his life successfully engaged in general farming. His widow survives.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Green, namely: Ruth, Mary and Joseph R.

Levi W. Green has remained a resident on the old homestead where he has continue farming. He and his brother, John E. Green, are now owners of over five hundred acres of valuable, well-improved and productive land, and they carry on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, raising large numbers of thoroughbred shorthorn cattle for breeding purposes, for which there is a great demand at fancy prices, these superior cattle being purchased in all parts of the country. They have been frequently exhibited at county and state fairs, and have always taken premiums. The herd at this writing consists of seventy-eight head. Mr. Green is the largest breeder of shorthorn cattle in the county. He has been very successful in a financial way and is one of the substantial men of the county. He is president of the First National Bank of Farmland, which position he has filled since the death of F. L. Shaw in 1905. He was one of the organizers of this sound and popular institution and its pronounced success has been due for the most part to his able and conscientious management. He is also a stockholder and one of the promoters of the Parker Banking Company. He is a stockholder in the Goodrich Grain & Elevator Company. He was one of the promoters of the Farmland Telephone Company and is a heavy stockholder in the same.

Politically, Mr. Green is a Republican and while he has always been deeply interested in public matters he has never sought to become a politician, never asking or holding office, having no ambition whatever in this direction, preferring to devote his attention exclusively to his large personal interests.

Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge at Farmland. He was reared in the Methodist faith, and the elegant new church edifice now under course of construction at Maxville was made possible by the handsome donations of himself and brother. He is a member of the building committee, and is treasurer of the same. The church will probably cost when completed seven thousand dollars. Mr. Green is a member of the National Shorthorn Breeders Association, in which he is a stockholder. He is active and prominent in the affairs of the same and attends its meetings. He has been a member for the past twelve years. He is a man of large affairs, keen foresight, sound judgment, never failing honesty and courtesy, and is foremost in advocating all that pertains to the general good of the community honored by his residence.

ELIAS F. LEWELLEN.

One of the progressive agriculturists and stock raisers of Randolph county and a citizen who tries to do his just part in the general upbuilding of his community is Elias F. Lewellen, a man of broad mind and clear comprehension, a straightforward, right-thinking gentleman, who tries to set a worthy example and lead a helpful, industrious and well-regulated life, quietly and effectively overcoming such obstacles as may attempt to thwart his purposes, and he has not only won material success but the esteem of his neighbors and friends also.

Mr. Lewellen was born November 16, 1865, on a farm in Monroe township, Randolph county. He is a son of Benjamin F. and Harriet (McLain) Lewellen, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. Harriet McLain was brought by her parents to Grant county, Indiana, when she was a young girl and there she grew to womanhood and received her education in the public schools, and there she and Mr. Lewellen were married. Grandfather William McLain was a wood worker by trade and when the family located in Grant county they found a very sparsely settled wilderness, which was still the home of Indians and the haunt of wild beasts. Grandfather brought with him a grindstone with which to grind his tools, and the Indians often came to his shop to have their tomahawks ground, and the mother of our subject would turn the crank to the grindstone for the red men, and in time she came to be a favorite with them. Her father was a manufacturer of wooden bowls and these he peddled over the country from his wagon. He became quite a prominent citizen of Grant county.

Benjamin F. Lewellen grew up in his native locality and received a meager education in the old-time country schools. He was a farmer and laborer, and about the year 1860 he came to Randolph county, and here he engaged in general farming and spent the rest of his life, dying early in the year 1867, when the subject of this sketch was only fifteen months old, leaving a widow and five children, his youngest child having preceded him to the grave in infancy. The family was left in destitute circumstances, except for the widow's pension, Mr. Lewellen having been a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war, a member of Company A, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served gallantly for nearly three years, when he was discharged for disability which was the result of exposure while in the service. The widow and children had a hard struggle, but she heroically set to work to feed and clothe her little ones and reared them in comparative comfort and respectability. She made brooms and did anything that would bring in an honest dollar, and she deserves a great deal of credit for what she accomplished. She is still living, making her home in Farmland, beloved by all for her piety and hospitality.

Elias F. Lewellen attended the public schools when he became of proper age and worked during the summer months. He was an enthusiastic pupil and made rapid progress, and was eventually given a teacher's certificate. He at first worked at whatever he could get to do, later earned nine dollars per month regularly, saved his money and lived a frugal life. When he was twenty-one years of age he purchased forty acres of land, a part of his present finely improved and productive farm of one hundred and seventy-five acres. He went in debt for the major part of his first forty, the first payment due being five hundred dollars, the rest standing as an obligation. He managed well, worked hard and was economical and prospered with advancing years, becoming one of the substantial and enterprising farmers and stock men of his community. His place is under a high state of cultivation and, having laid by a competency for his declining years he has given up the harder work of the farm and is taking life easier than formerly. He has a pleasant home and good outbuildings, and owns a modern, standard-make automobile. He has remained constantly on the place where he now lives since his marriage, which farm is located four and one-half miles west of Winchester. He has devoted considerable attention to raising and feeding live stock. On May 13, 1895, he opened a general merchandise store near his home and has carried a large and well-selected stock of nearly everything needed by the farmer, and has operated the store successfully to the present time, enjoying a large trade with the surrounding country, many of his customers coming from nearby towns to avail themselves of his bargains and reasonable prices, and an automobile bearing customers is to be seen almost any time in front of his large and substantial store building.

Mr. Lewellen was married September 29, 1888, to Mary A. Harper, a daughter of Enos and Eunicy Harper, a highly-esteemed family of Randolph county, formerly of Ohio. Mrs. Lewellen was educated in the common schools and is a lady of many commendable characteristics. To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Lawrence F. is at home; Clarence F. is married and is living on his father's farm; Ralph M. is a high school student; and Maude O. is at home.

Politically, Mr. Lewellen is a Republican and has long been active in public matters, but never an office seeker, although often urged to accept public office. He and his family are Christian Scientists.

JOHN E. CHEESMAN.

When farming can be carried on in the manner in which John E. Cheesman, of near Winchester, Randolph county, does it and one meets with the success with which he has met and is meeting, it is a decided pleasure; but, unfortunately, not all of us have been blessed by nature with as much clear foresight and sound judgment in tilling the soil, neither have we all such well situated and productive farms. He is a man who would have, no doubt, succeeded in any community, for his thinking powers, coupled with his persistent energy would soon surmount the obstacles found any place. At the same time he has been laboring for his individual advancement, he has not neglected his duties as a citizen and neighbor.

Mr. Cheesman was born April 25, 1857, in Wayne county, Indiana, near the city of Richmond. He is a son of Davidson and Ann (Taylor) Cheesman. Both parents were born in Wayne county, from which they removed to Randolph county on February 5, 1867, locating in White River township, about five miles southwest of Winchester, engaging in farming which they always followed, becoming large land owners. The father was very successful in a business way and became one of the influential men of his community. He was originally a Democrat, but later in life voted the Prohibition ticket. He is still living, having arrived at the advanced age of seventy-seven years, his birth having occurred on December 18, 1836. His wife also attained a ripe old age, passing to her eternal rest on January 1, 1908. To these parents nine children were born, six of whom are still living, namely: John E., of this review; Minnie, now the wife of Clarkson Puckett, of Randolph county;

Cora B., wife of George Davis, of Richmond, Indiana; Taylor D. lives in White River township; Edward K. has remained on the home farm; Suda is the wife of John L. Botkin, of near Farmland, this county; Mattie Jane died in infancy; Nancy A. and Clara Belle, both deceased.

John E. Cheesman was reared on the home farm and he worked there when a boy. He received a common school education, remaining with his parents until his marriage on February 1, 1879, to Mary C. Clayton, a daughter of Samuel A. and Elizabeth (Ludwick) Clayton, of Randolph county. The father spent his entire life on the same farm, being born and having died there, the latter event occurring on February 14, 1900. His widow still lives on the old home place.

To our subject and wife five children, three sons and two daughters, have been born, namely: Clayton E., who married Ila Wilson and is living in Anderson, Indiana; Flora B. is now Mrs. Oliver C. Miller, of Delaware county, this state; Garry E. is at home; Lola E. is the wife of Horace D. Hurst, of White River township; Hugh H. is at home.

After his marriage the subject of this sketch located on a farm just west of the old home place where he lived until 1901, when he purchased the Captain Pegg home and removed thereto, and here he still resides, five miles southeast of Winchester. His place consists of one hundred and thirty acres of finely improved and valuable land, which is under a high state of cultivation. He also has a farm of ninety acres one mile east. Here he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, making a specialty of raising potatoes, hogs and fine cattle. He has a good group of buildings on his place.

Mr. Cheesman has always been a Republican in politics and has been active and influential in the affairs of the same. He has been a member of the Republican County Central Committee frequently and always discharged his duties in a manner that reflected much credit upon his ability and to the eminent satisfaction of all members of the party in this locality. He has also been a frequent delegate to county and state conventions. In 1906 he was a candidate for county commissioner, but met with defeat. Nothing daunted he again made the race in 1908 and was elected, and assumed office January 1, 1910, serving until January 1, 1913, in a manner highly satisfactory to his constituents, doing much for the general good of the county. He was again a candidate in 1912 by unanimous consent, but was defeated in the landslide of that fall. Among the commendable things that took place during his incumbency should be mentioned the improved road system which was extended more miles than during any other three years of the history of the county. He is a hearty advocate of public improvements.

Mr. Cheesman is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Encampment and his wife belongs to the Rebekah lodge. He is a man of pronounced views and broad intelligence, being well-read and a thinking man, and is recognized as one of the country's best citizens.

BENJAMIN F. MARSH.

A man who has stamped the impress of his strong personality upon the minds of the people of Randolph county in a manner as to render him one of the conspicuous characters of the locality is Benjamin F. Marsh, lawyer and business man of Winchester. Faithfulness to duty and a strict adherence to a fixed purpose, which invariably do more toward the advancement of one's interests in any field of endeavor than vast wealth or advantageous circumstances, have been dominating factors in his life, which has indeed been most replete with honor and success worthily attained, and he has long since become an important factor in the affairs of this section of the state, standing in the foremost rank of the legal profession and among the substantial men of affairs in a business way. Few citizens of Randolph county are better known, none occupy a more conspicuous place in the confidence of the public, and it is a compliment worthily bestowed to class him with the representative men of his day and generation in the city of his residence, having done much for the general development of his native locality.

Mr. Marsh was born in Hancock county, Indiana, October 15, 1853. He is a son of William and Martha Ann (Chappel) Marsh, natives of Ohio and Virginia, respectively. They both came to Hancock county, Indiana as young people and there met and married, and in that county they spent the rest of their lives successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. The death of the father occurred at the beginning of the war of the Rebellion in 1861, the mother surviving until August 5, 1868, when she passed away in Boone county. They were the parents of five children, named as follows: Thomas L., who became a tile manufacturer, having a plant located on the old home farm; William P. who established himself on a farm in Randolph county, Indiana; died January 26, 1914; Margaret E., who married A. C. Beeson, who became connected with The Winchester Journal many years ago; she died October 8, 1913; Elias J., twin of Margaret E., was for some time postmaster at Portland, Indiana, and engaged in journalism there. He died December 26, 1913. Benjamin F., subject of this sketch. The parents were members of the Society of Friends and in politics the father was a Republican. They were known to their neighbors as people of thrift and unswerving honesty.

Benjamin F. Marsh was eight years old when his father died and yet a young boy when he lost his mother. Being thrown upon his own resources at that tender age was at the time quite a hardship, but it fostered in him courage, self-reliance and fortitude which made for success in after years. He was ambitious to obtain an education despite being handicapped, but he studied hard at home and in the local schools, studying one year at Knightstown, and he began life for himself when only sixteen years of age by teaching, and working on the farm in summer. In the spring of 1871 he came to Winchester for the purpose of attending school and remained over two years, and in 1874 went to Ann Arbor, Michigan, and took a literary course in the State University, after which he returned to Randolph county and taught school four years at Lynn, then taught two years in Winchester. He was fast becoming one of the county's ablest educators, but he had long fostered an ambition to enter the legal profession and during his years of teaching he studied law, and was admitted to the Randolph county bar April 30, 1881, and at once began the practice of his profession in Winchester. He formed a partnership with S. A. Canada, succeeding W. W. Canada, a brother and former partner of S. A. Canada. Mr. Marsh devoted himself assiduously to his profession and was successful from the start, soon ranking among the leading attorneys of the county and figuring conspicuously in the local courts. He remained a profound student and has kept fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to his profession, and he is a forceful and not infrequently eloquent speaker, having great weight with juries and equally impressing the bench. Being an ardent Republican and taking a leading interest in party affairs he was elected prosecuting attorney of Randolph county in 1890 and filled the office until 1892 in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of his constituents. For a number of years Mr. Marsh was associated with E. S. Jaqua in the practice of law.

At present Mr. Marsh has formed a partnership with Charles W. Bradford, a graduate of the law department of the University of Michigan of 1913. He is a stockholder and director in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Winchester. He has completed an abstract of the county after years of painstaking work, and his set of books in this connection is most comprehensive and thorough, embracing all city and township properties. He also conducts quite an extensive loan business on real estate and securities.

Fraternally, Mr. Marsh is a thirty-second degree Mason. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are members of the Friends church, and for many years he was Sunday school superintendent and he and his family have long been active in church and Sunday school work. He has been a member of the official board of the church. He has a commodious home on South Main street and a well equipped office in the Peoples Loan & Trust Company building, where he has maintained his office since he first began practicing law. He was for a number of years a partner of the late Judge John J. Cheney, which partnership continued until the Judge's death.

Mr. Marsh was married in Winchester on October 4, 1883, to Carrie E. Kizer, a lady of education and refinement and long a favorite with the best social circles of Winchester. She is a daughter of Henry P. Kizer, long a well-known citizen of Randolph county.

Mr. Marsh is a congenial and companionable gentleman and liked by all classes.

HARVEY E. McNEES.

The prosperity and substantial welfare of a town or community are in a large measure due to the enterprise and wise foresight of its business men and public officials. It is progressive, wide-awake men of affairs that make the real history of a community, and their influence in shaping and directing its varied interests is difficult to estimate. Harvey E. McNees, for a number of years one of the leading real estate dealers of Randolph county, and for some time an official in the city of Winchester, is one of the enterprising spirits to whom is due the recent substantial development of our thriving county-seat, whose interests he seems to have ever had at heart. With a mind capable of planning he combines a will strong enough to execute his well-formulated purposes, and his great energy, keen discrimination and perseverance have resulted in material success.

Mr. McNees was born on December 10, 1862, on a farm in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county. He is a son of John B. and Sarah (Hiatt) McNees. The father was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and the mother was born near Lynn, Randolph county. Grandfather John M. McNees came with his family to Randolph county in 1830, thus being among the pioneer settlers. He entered land in the woods in Stoney Creek township, there built his cabin home and cleared and developed a good farm. Like other first settlers, the journey from Tennessee was made by wagon over rough roads or trails and unbridged streams. Here John B. McNees and Sarah Hiatt grew to maturity and were married and here they devoted their active lives to agricultural pursuits. To them eight children were born, an equal number of sons and daughters, namely: Ellis L., who was a soldier during the Civil War, lives at Farmland, this county; Mary, who was the wife of David Stanton, is deceased; as is also Mr. Stanton, but her second husband, Jacob Kraft, is living; Calvin W. lives on the old home place in Stoney Creek township; Mahala A. is deceased; she was the wife of Julian Symons; Sabina J. is the wife of Morris L. Ross, of Muncie, Indiana; Martha E., now deceased, was the wife of David L. Clevenger; Harvey E., subject of this sketch; Jesse E., of Stoney Creek township, is a blacksmith by trade.

The death of the father of the above named children occurred in 1906, the mother surviving until February 1, 1911. They were both members of the Christian church, and politically Mr. McNees was a Republican, but never sought to be a public man.

Harvey E. McNees was reared on the home farm and received his education at Farmland, assisting with the farm work during the crop seasons. He began life for himself by teaching which he followed six years, including one year in the graded schools of Farmland. On August 20, 1889, he moved to Winchester and became deputy county treasurer under Isaac V. D. R. Johnson, for two years, also served one term of two years under George W. Veal, giving eminent satisfaction to all concerned. He then engaged in the real estate business in Winchester, building up a very satisfactory business which he followed until the fall of 1896, when he was elected county treasurer. He did not assume office until January 1, 1898, serving one term of two years with his usual fidelity. He also served one term of three years as a member of the city council during which time he did much toward the upbuilding of the city. He was also a member of the school board for one term. In November, 1913, Mr. McNees was elected to the office of mayor of Winchester for a term of four years. For some time he has devoted his attention exclusively to his large and rapidly growing real estate business, dealing largely in farm lands.

Mr. McNees was married on January 1, 1888, to Martha A. Johnson, daughter of Joshua M. and Amanda C. (Pegg) Johnson, a prominent family of this county, where Mrs. McNees grew to womanhood and was educated. To our subject and wife two daughters and one son have been born, namely: France U., Nina E. and Joshua M. are all at home. They were all graduated from the Winchester high school, and are all accomplished and popular with the young people of the city.

Mr. McNees has always been active in Republican politics. He has been a member of the County Central Committee and is now its treasurer. He has been a frequent delegate to county, district and state conventions. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Encampment and the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are members of the Christian church and are active in church and Sunday school work.

Mr. McNee's office is in the city building on West Franklin street, and the pleasant family residence is 333 South Main street, which is a frequent gathering place for the many friends of the family.

CHARLIE FAVORITE.

One of the most progressive business men of Winchester, Randolph county and one of its most worthy and esteemed native sons is Charlie Favorite, well-known business man and manufacturer, one of the men who has done so much for the general progress of the city and county during the past decade, for, while laboring for the advancement of his own interests he has sought to foster such movements as would make for the general good. He has been content to spend his life in his own home city, believing that success awaited him here, as well as in any other city, for he always had great faith in the future of Winchester.

Mr. Favorite was born in this city and county on October 1, 1860. He is a son of Andrew J. and Rebecca (Smith) Favorite. The father was a native of Maryland and the mother was born in Hamilton county, Indiana. Andrew J. Favorite spent his boyhood in the East and was educated there, coming to Randolph county, Indiana, when about nineteen years of age, and here he located the permanent home of the family, and soon had a good start as a contractor and was a successful and influential citizen for many years, honored by all. His death occurred on June 8, 1913, his wife having preceded him to the grave on July 16, 1898, and both are buried in Fountain Park cemetery, Winchester. Politically, the elder Favorite was a Democrat, and took considerable interest in party affairs. He was elected the first marshal of Winchester, but declined to serve; however, he was later elected city councilman and served with much credit for a number of years. He was a member of the German Lutheran church, and his wife belonged to the Society of Friends. He held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and when he died was the oldest Odd Fellow in years of membership in Randolph county. He and his good wife lived to celebrate their golden wedding anniversary in 1905, and they were spared to see three more years before his life companion was called to her eternal rest. They were the parents of three children, Charlie, of this sketch being the oldest living, an older sister having died in infancy; Ida B. is the wife of Jacob P. Fisher, of Indianapolis.

Charlie Favorite grew to manhood in Winchester and was educated here. After leaving school he learned the blacksmith's trade, serving his full time as apprentice, then learned the carriage making business. He became an exceptionally skilled workman in both lines. For a number of years he was employed by various firms. Later he engaged in the business with William Chapman, under the firm name of Chapman & Favorite, which partnership continued for two years, when he left Mr. Chapman and engaged in business for himself—general blacksmithing and carriage repairing. Later he added the manufacture of buggies, and subsequently a school car, which he himself designed, built and patented. It was a pronounced success, and soon achieved much more than a state reputation, which is still rapidly growing and is in great demand, these cars being sold in large numbers in Michigan, Ohio and as far west as Washington. His factory, small at first, has been added to until it has reached large proportions, many men being employed and a large amount of up-to-date machinery and equipment being installed. It is easily one of the leading manufacturing industries of this section of the state and has done much to carry the name of Winchester abroad in the business world. These cars are rapidly growing in demand everywhere by township boards owing to their superiority, giving the greatest amount of comfort to the pupils.

Politically, Mr. Favorite is a Democrat, and while deeply interested in public matters, is not a seeker after political office. He is a member of the Business Men's Association of his home city. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic Order, the Improved Order of Red Men, also the Haymakers, an auxiliary of the latter. He has been honored by being national representative of this order. He is also a member of Pocahontas Order.

Mr. Favorite's factory is on East Pearl street, and the warerooms are on East street and the railroad, where much of the finishing is done.

Personally, Mr. Favorite is a pleasant gentleman to meet, a good mixer, genial, courteous and a man of exemplary habits, whose every relation with his fellow-men is beyond any idle cavil.

JONATHAN G. JOHNSON.

To his own efforts is the success of Jonathan G. Johnson attributable, for he started out upon his life work practically without capital or aid from anyone, but being ambitious and industrious he forged ahead and is today owner of a good farm near the city of Winchester. This too, is the visible evidence of his prosperity and industry, for when it came into his possession it was only partly improved and not nearly so productive as it is at this writing. Such a man deserves the high regard in which he is held by his neighbors.

Mr. Johnson was born in White River township, Randolph county, and here he has been contented to remain. He is a son of Joshua M. and Amanda C. (Pegg) Johnson and a brother of John I. Johnson whose sketch appears in another part of this book.

Our subject was reared on the home farm and there he assisted with the general work when a boy, attending in the meantime the district schools. He remained with his parents until his marriage which took place June 11, 1894 to Elma Allen, a daughter of Joseph G. and Phoebe J. (Dennis) Allen, an old family of Randolph county, both her parents being now deceased. Here she grew up and was educated.

To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson three daughters have been born, namely: Thelma, born September 21, 1897; Irene, born October 29, 1898; Marjorie, born May 13, 1910.

For about five years after his marriage Mr. Johnson continued farming, thereby getting a good start in life, for he worked hard and managed well. In the fall of 1899 he moved to Modoc, Randolph county, and engaged in the dry goods business which he continued for a period of seven years, during which he enjoyed a large trade with the surrounding country. He carried a good stock and his honesty and courtesy with everyone won him many customers. In the fall of 1906 he went to Corpus Christi, Nueces county, Texas and engaged in the real etsate business, handling both farm lands and city property, in which he was very successful and was a very extensive dealer, building up a large and lucrative business. He remained in Texas until May, 1909, when he returned to Randolph county and purchased a farm of J. W. Jarnagin, a fine farm one mile south of Winchester, containing one hundred and one-half acres, constituting one of the most desirable and productive farms in Randolph county. It has changed hands only six times since it was entered from the government, all of those transfer deeds now being in the hands of Mr. Johnson. Jonathan Edwards entered the land from the government. The present owner has added many modern improvements and brought it up to a high state of cultivation. On it stand an attractive and pleasant residence and numerous convenient outbuildings. In connection with general farming and stock raising, Mr. Johnson is also engaged successfully in buying and selling Randolph county farms, and has made many important deals in local property since his return from Texas. One of the finest apple orchards in the county is on the farm he now owns and where he now lives.

Politically, Mr. Johnson is a Republican and since reaching manhood he has been actively interested in public affairs but he has never been an office seeker. He is a member of the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias. His wife belongs to the Presbyterian church as do also the children, and while not a member, Mr. Johnson attends and supports this church. The family moves in the best circles in the county-seat and vicinity.

BENJAMIN E. HINSHAW.

One of the worthy citizens of Winchester, Randolph county, who has proven that he can make a living at many different things, doing well whatever he turns his attention to is Benjamin E. Hinshaw. It has been this readiness and ability of the American citizen to turn from one occupation to another that has brought this nation to the forefront of the world's business. He is at present a railway mail clerk between Indianapolis and St. Louis, on the Big Four.

Mr. Hinshaw was born April 2, 1864, in White River township, this county, two miles north of Winchester, a son of Edmund and Irene (Hiatt) Hinshaw, and a brother of Seth Hinshaw, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work.

The subject of this review was reared on the home farm and was educated in the district schools. His early education has been augmented by a broad and liberal course of reading of the world's best authors in various branches of literature, and he has from time to time collected books until he now has a valuable library of several hundred choice volumes. When nineteen years of age he went to Vermilion and Champaign counties, Illinois, and engaged in farm work, studying during the winter months. He obtained a teacher's certificate and engaged successfully in teaching in these two counties for a period of five years. In January, 1886, he went to Colorado and proved up on a government claim, remaining there one year. He then returned to Vermilion county, Illinois, where he found employment with J. G. Hull & Company, as shipping clerk, in their wholesale hardware store, however, he had been with them but a short time when he was appointed to the railway mail service, and was given a run between Chicago and Burlington, Iowa. Later he was transferred to the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, running between Chicago and Evansville, Indiana, which run he retained for a period of ten years, then in 1903 was transferred to the Big Four lines between Cleveland and St. Louis, which position he still retains. Since that time he has made his home in Winchester. He has given the utmost satisfaction to the department, being alert and conscientious. He is also interested in the general insurance business with his brother Seth. However, he does not do any active work in this line, giving all his time to the railway mail service.

Mr. Hinshaw was married on October 5, 1905, to Mary Stakebake, a daughter of Andrew J. and Ann E. (Jaqua) Stakebake. The father was for many years a prominent attorney, and was also for a number of years a member of the state legislature. He is now deceased, but his widow survives, making her home with our subject. The union of Benjamin E. Hinshaw and wife has been without issue.

Mr. Hinshaw is a member of the Masonic Order, having taken all the degrees up to and including the thirty-second. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. He has been active in Masonic work. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church, of which he is one of the trustees. Mrs. Hinshaw is active in church and Sunday school work and prominent in the social life of the community.

GEORGE E. LEGGETT.

In touching upon the life history of George E. Leggett, one of Winchester's most substantial and widely-known men of affairs, the writer aims to avoid fulsome encomium and extravagant praise; yet he desires to hold up for consideration those facts which have shown the distinction of a true, useful and honorable life—a life characterized by perseverance, energy, keen discernment and well-defined purpose. To do this will be but to reiterate the dictum pronounced upon the man by the people who have known him so long and well, for Mr. Leggett presents, in his career of many and varied lines of business, an interesting study of the manner in which adherence to principles and sturdy endeavor may win worthy distinction in pursuits diverse and ennobling. Throughout an active and interesting, strenuous and eminently successful career, duty has ever been his motive of action, and usefulness to his fellow men not by any means a secondary consideration. Standing today among the most intelligent, enterprising, progressive and alert of his contemporaries, he has performed well his part in life, and it is a compliment worthily bestowed to say that Randolph county is honored by his citizenship, for he has achieved definite success through his own efforts and is thoroughly deserving of the proud American title of self-made man, the term being one that, in its better sense, cannot but appeal to the loyal admiration of all who are appreciative of our national institutions and the privileges afforded for individual accomplishment; and it is a privilege ever gratifying, in this day and age, to meet a man who has the courage to face the battle of life with a strong heart and steady hand and to win in the stern conflict by bringing to bear only those forces with which nature has equipped him, self-reliance, fortitude, courage, self-respect and integrity.

W. D. Leggett

Mr. Leggett was born January 13, 1858, in Alliance, Ohio. He is a son of John D. and Rachael (McAfee) Leggett, both natives of Harrison county, Ohio. The father spent his life engaged in the ministry of the Methodist church and was a prominent and successful man in the same.

George E. Leggett was reared at various places in the Buckeye state, for his father being a minister, was assigned to different charges. His early education was in the public schools of the several towns where he lived when a boy. When seventeen years old he entered Mount Union college at Alliance, where he studied two years, then left school to enter business. He came to Winchester, Indiana, when nineteen years old, purchasing a working interest with Bales Brothers & Company in the grain and milling business, which he learned thoroughly, mastering every process from the time the grain was brought into the mill until it went out again in the form of flour. He remained with this company for a period of seven years, then went with the Barnard & Lees Manufacturing Company, of Moline, Illinois, manufacturers of milling machinery. He traveled for this concern for a period of six years as expert miller, during which he did much to increase the prestige of his company in the territory to which he had been assigned. In 1889 he became deputy county clerk of Randolph county, under John R. Engle. In 1893 he became connected with the Woodbury Glass Company, then operating at Parker, this county, as an expert accountant, and has remained with the company ever since. On July 16, 1894, he was made president and treasurer of the company, having held the position of president continuously to the present time, his able management being principally responsible for the steady growth of the same. The plant of the company was moved from Parker to Winchester in 1904, where it has since been located, and in 1910 they purchased the Indiana Bottle Company of Shirley, Indiana, which is now a part of this concern. They manufacture a high-grade line of all kinds of bottles, boxes, reshipping cases and paper products, which, owing to their superior quality and workmanship, find a very ready market over a vast territory. They have large, modern and well equipped plants at both Winchester and Shirley and employ eight hundred and fifty skilled artisans.

Mr. Leggett has a number of other important business interests. He is a director in the Peoples Loan & Trust Company, the Farmers and Merchants Bank and the Citizens Heat, Light and Power Company, having done much through his wise counsel toward the large success of each. He is a member of the Winchester Public Library Board, in which he is greatly interested. He is also a member of the Hoosier Realty Company, the Consumers Coal Company and various other enterprises. He has by his sound judgment, enterprise and perseverance accumulated a handsome competency, and is the owner of valuable property, his residence being among the best and most attractive in Winchester and here the many friends of the family find true hospitality and good cheer.

Mr. Leggett was married first, on September 29, 1880, to Dora A. Ross, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Stanford) Ross. The father was a prominent citizen and at one time was sheriff of Randolph county. To this union three children were born, namely: John C., who is at this writing, treasurer of the Woodbury Glass Company; Martha V., who married George H. Clark, also connected with the Woodbury Glass Company, and Donald, who died when two years old. The wife and mother was called to her eternal rest May 26, 1906, and in 1907 our subject was again married, his last wife being Mrs. E. C. Sammons, formerly Eva Cottingham, of Indianapolis.

In 1913 Mr. and Mrs. Leggett made a tour of Europe, embracing England, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and France, being abroad about three months. Mr. Leggett has traveled extensively and, being by nature a keen observer, has profited much by what he has seen.

Politically, he has always been a stanch Republican and active in public and political matters. He is a progressive citizen along all lines and has done much for the general good of his city and county. Fraternally, he is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner, and a member of the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and liberally support the same. He is a trustee in the local church.

JOHN STANLEY ROBISON, M. D.

The medical profession of Randolph county has an able exponent in Dr. John Stanley Robison, of Winchester, who, although young in years, has firmly established himself in his vocation and won the confidence and esteem of the people and his professional brethren in this section of the state, for he evidently is the possessor of the natural endowments necessary to the makeup of the twentieth century medical man, and he has also had the necessary training, having been a close student and an indefatigable worker, a good mixer, sympathetic and genial in his deportment, and of exemplary personal habits. He deems it a privilege to be able to bring surcease for humanity's multiform ills. He has also shown a public spirit that is commendable, ever willing to do his full share in the development of his city and county, and so ordering his course as to keep at all times untarnished the bright escutcheon of an honored family name.

Dr. Robinson was born June 12, 1885, on a farm near New Philadelphia, Indiana. He is a son of George William and Mary E. (Morris) Robison, both parents natives of Washington county, Indiana, where they grew to maturity, were educated and married. George W. Robinson is a large land owner and extensive general farmer. He and his wife have two sons and one daughter living, and one son and one daughter dead, namely: Mabel E., now the wife of Dr. James McCullough, of Casey, Illinois; Dr. John S., of this review, and Jesse A., who is a student at the University of Indiana at Bloomington.

Dr. John S. Robison was reared on the home farm where he assisted with the general work when of proper age. During the winter months he attended the district schools when a boy, later was a student at the Normal College at Marion, Indiana, for a period of three years, graduating from the scientic course with the class of 1907, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. During that period he taught two terms in the district schools of his section of the state, and after his graduation from the Marion Normal he became principal of New Philadelphia high school for one year. He gave great promise as a teacher, but realizing that his true bent lay along another line he abandoned the school room and in the fall of 1908 he entered the Indiana University School of Medicine at Indianapolis, where he made an excellent record, and from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, June 19, 1912. Having succeeded in the competitive examination for appointment as interne at the Indianapolis City Hospital, he began his service there a week before his graduation, and he remained at the hospital one year, giving eminent satisfaction to all concerned. In July, 1913, he located in Winchester for the practice of his profession and was successful from the first and is enjoying a rapidly growing practice.

On October 29, 1913, Dr. Robison was united in marriage with Harriet Foster, a daughter of Albert and Mary (Sponsler) Foster, of Lowell, Indiana.

He is a member of the Randolph County Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Association, and the American Medical Association. While in college he was a member of the Phi Beta Pi society. Politically, he is a Republican, and is a careful student of public issues. Religiously he belongs to the Presbyterian church, the faith of his parents. His office is at 111½ South Main street.

CHARLES E. MILLIGAN, M. D.

The writer of biography, dealing in the personal history of men engaged in the various affairs of everyday life, occasionally finds a subject whose record commands exceptional interest and admiration and especially is this true when he has achieved more than ordinary success or made his influence felt as a benefactor of his kind or a leader of thought. Dr. Charles E. Milligan, of Winchester, is eminently of that class who earn the indisputable right to rank in the van of the army of progressive men, and by reason of long and strenuous efforts devoted to the good of his fellows, to the alleviation of their physical sufferings, he occupies a position of wide influence and has made a name which will long live in the hearts and affections of the people of Randolph county. For nearly a quarter of a century, or through the period that marked the recent great development in this locality in a material way, he has been practicing medicine here and his name has become a household word throughout the county.

Dr. Milligan was born June 21, 1862, in Jay county, Indiana, near Portland, on a farm. He is a son of William B. and Harriet L. (Morehous) Milligan. The father was born in Highland county, Ohio, and the mother was a native of the state of New York. William B. Milligan came west with his parents in 1837 and settled in Jay county, Indiana. There his father, Wilson Milligan, began life in typical pioneer fashion, erecting his cabin in the woods, cleared the virgin land and developed a good farm through his industry. A part of the homestead became the property of his son William B., who purchased more land adjoining and there devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits, dying there on July 6, 1912. Like his father before him he was a hard working, honest, hospitable man, well liked throughout the community. Politically, he was a Republican in early life, later a Prohibitionist, and was always interested in public matters on which he kept well informed, but he was never an office seeker, notwithstanding the fact that he was frequently urged to become a candidate for various offices. The Morehous family came west when the subject of this sketch was about two years of age, settling also in Jay county, where the parents of the Doctor grew to maturity, were educated and married. Like the Milligans the Morehous family were prominent people in that locality. The mother died on the old home place on January 14, 1914. She was a faithful member of the United Brethren church, as was also her husband. They were the parents of five sons, all of whom are living at this writing, Charles E. having been the third in order of birth.

Doctor Milligan was reared on the home farm where he did his share of the work, and during the winter attended the district schools, later was a student at Valparaiso Normal school, then took a course in the Nelson Business College, of Cincinnati. He began life for himself by teaching in the rural schools of Jay county for a period of eight years, during which he became one of the leading teachers of that county his services being in great demand. But finally tiring of the school room and believing that his most serious vocation lay in another direction, he entered the Physio-Medical College, of Indianapolis, in the fall of 1888, from which institution he was graduated in March, 1890. The following month he came to Winchester and successfully engaged in the general practice, taking his place in the front rank of the leading medical men of this section of the state, and, having remained opened an office and here he has remained continuously to the present time, a close student, he has kept fully abreast of the times in everything that pertains to his profession. He is a member of the Randolph County Medical Society, the Indiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Politically, the Doctor has always been a Republican and has been more or less active and interested in public matters. In 1901 he was elected a member of the City Board of Education and is now serving his twelfth consecutive year, and he has done much toward bettering local educational conditions. On October 2, 1911, he was appointed a member of the Board of Examining Surgeons of the United States Pension Department without any solicitation on his part, and he is now president of the board, the duties of which responsible position he is discharging in a manner that reflects much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. He has various business interests other than his profession.

Dr. Milligan was married September 3, 1895, to Winnifred Hinshaw, a daughter of Elijah and Rebecca (Lawrence) Hinshaw, a prominent Randolph county family. This union has been without issue. The Doctor and wife are members of the Friends church, he being a member of the board of trustees and treasurer of the same. Both are active in church and Sunday school work.

GEORGE CALVIN SHULTZ.

One of Randolph county's substantial and representative citizens is George Calvin Shultz, of Union City, who has won prominence in an exacting profession—teaching. He is essentially a self-made man, and as such ranks with the most enterprising and progressive of his contemporaries. He has, from early life, steadily pursued the honorable course which in due time brought success and prestige among his fellow men.

Mr. Shultz was born in Greensfork township, Randolph county, December 2, 1861. He is a son of Milton Shultz, who was born in Kentucky, August 16, 1833. He married Julia A. Moore, who was born in Guilford county, North Carolina in 1826, and whose death occurred in 1901. The father moved with his parents to Ohio and later to Indiana, where he grew to manhood, and in 1862 he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Neff and Colonel Orr, and for meritorious conduct he rose from private to lieutenant, and took part in a number of important engagements, including those incident to the memorable siege of Atlanta, Franklin and Nashville, and many others, but he was never wounded, and he received an honorable discharge at the expiration of his term of enlistment. After returning home he purchased a farm in Wayne township and, farming successfully, also followed the carpenter's trade, and is now living in Union City. The grandfather, G. W. Shultz, was a native of Kentucky, where he spent his earlier years and was married, finally moving with his family to Ohio, locating in Highland county, and devoted his life to farming. His wife, Martha A. Hawkins, in her maidenhood, was, like her husband, a native of Kentucky. Both died in Boone county, Indiana, where they moved from Ohio late in life.

George C. Shultz was reared on the home farm and was educated in the common schools of Wayne township, Randolph county, later attending the Central Normal school of Indiana, from which he was graduated with the class of 1882. He began life for himself as a teacher, and studied law at the same time, with the firm of Watson & Engle. He was admitted to the bar in 1883, later he went to Kansas and was admitted to practice there in both the state and district courts, and practiced there before the district court and the United States land office. Returning to Indiana he spent twenty-six years engaged in teaching. He kept well abreast of the times in all that pertained to his vocation and was one of the most popular educators in this section of the state for that long period, during which he did much for a better educational system. His services were in great demand and he was regarded as both an entertainer and instructor.

In 1908 he was elected township trustee and is still incumbent of this office, discharging the duties of the same in an eminently satisfactory manner. He is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished in the face of obstacles and without assistance. In order to get a start he worked out as a farm hand for fourteen dollars per month, and he paid his way through school by working at whatever he could get to do to earn an honest dollar. He was at one time a candidate for state senator, and carried Randolph county against eight opposing candidates, this undoubtedly proving his popularity here and showing that the people reposed the utmost confidence in his ability and honesty. Politically he is a Republican and has long been active and influential in the ranks. He is a member of the Christian church. He is a member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, in which he is prominent and active, being grand chief of the order in the state of Indiana.

Mr. Shultz was married September 5, 1885, to Annie Laurie Peacock, who was born October 7, 1866, near Winchester, Indiana, where she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of Amos and Rachael Peacock, the father having died December 18, 1878. The mother, who was born September 1, 1837, is still living. Amos Peacock was a son of John and Rebecca Peacock, pioneers of Randolph county, locating here when the country was practically a wilderness. The maternal grandparents came from Guilford county, North Carolina, in 1818 and settled one mile east of Spartanburg, Indiana, in the wild forest. There the grandfather died a few years later, and his wife reared their seven children. The family came here in a small wagon, drawn by a blind horse, the grandmother and some of the children walking the major portion of the way, and upon their arrival the grandfather erected a log cabin for his family.

To Mr. and Mrs. Shultz one child has been born, Warren Darst Shultz, whose birth occurred in White River township, Randolph county, July 1, 1886. He was educated in the common schools of Wayne township, and was graduated from the Muncie Business College, and he also attended the Muncie Normal school. In 1913 he married Nellie I. Roe, a daughter of Fred and Nettie Roe. He resides at Union City. Young Shultz taught school successfully for five years prior to his marriage, and he is now employed in the mail carrier service at Union City.

CHARLES W. TRITT.

Clearly defined purpose and consecutive effort in the affairs of life will invariably result in the attainment of a large measure of success; but in following out the career of one who gained success by his own efforts there comes into view the intrinsic individuality which made such accomplishment possible, and thus there is gained an object incentive and inspiration, while at the same time there is enkindled a feeling of respect and admiration. In connection with industrial interests, the reputation of the late Charles W. Tritt was pronounced in the business circles of Union City and Randolph county for a long lapse of years. In studying the lives and characters of prominent men in any walk of life we are naturally led to inquire into the secret of their success and the motives that prompted their actions. Success is oftener a matter of experience and sound judgment and thorough preparation for a life-work than it is of genius, however bright. When we trace the careers of those whom the world acknowledges as successful, and those who stand highest in public esteem, we find that in almost every case they are those who have risen gradually by their own efforts, their diligence and perseverance. These qualities were undoubtedly possessed in a large measure by the gentleman whose name introduces this memoir. Although his life was a busy one, his every-day affairs making heavy demands upon his time, he never shrank from his duties as a citizen and his obligations to his friends and the general public. Always self-possessed, never demonstrative, his life was, nevertheless, a persistent plea, more by precept and example than by public action or written or spoken word, for the purity and grandeur of right principles and the beauty and elevation of wholesome character. He had the greatest sympathy for his fellow men and was ever willing to aid and encourage those who were struggling to aid themselves against adverse fate, yet in this as in everything else, he maintained an admirable dignity and was entirely unassuming. To him home life was a sacred trust, friendship was inviolable and nothing could swerve him from the path of rectitude and honor.

Mr. Tritt was born November 3, 1852, in Fairfield, Greene county, Ohio, and was a son of Tilghman Tritt and wife, natives of Frederick, Maryland. When he was four years old his parents removed to Union City, Indiana, and here he grew to manhood, and here he attended the public schools until he was fourteen years of age, finishing his school work at Hillsboro, Indiana. He also attended White Water College, at White Water, Ohio, a select college. He began his work in the school of experience, as clerk in a grocery store in Union City, owned by Reeves & Robbins, and continued in their employ for about two years, when he bought his employers out and conducted the grocery business successfully for about twelve years, being one of the most enterprising of our local merchants. In the year 1881, with the assistance of James Starbuck and Pierre Gray, eldest son of ex-Governor Gray, he organized the Union City Carriage Company, and for a period of thirty-two years remained at the head of this company, his wise foresight, sound judgment and close application making it a pronounced success, and one of the leading manufacturing plants in northeastern Indiana. The capital stock was originally thirty thousand dollars. Its growth was remarkable and its present plant consists of five large brick factory buildings, which are equipped with every modern device for the rapid manufacture of high-grade carriages which have gained a very wide reputation, and this great institution will long stand as a monument to his name. In a few years the business grew to very large proportions and an extensive and constantly growing trade is now carried on over a vast territory. Mr. Tritt was its general manager up until twelve years ago, when he retired from that position and was made president of the company. Only skilled artisans were employed, and owing to the superior workmanship and quality of the products of this concern they have ever found a ready market, the demand being often greater than could be readily met. When Mr. Tritt retired from the buggy building business four years ago, he entered the automobile business with the firm name of J. W. Shreeve & Company, and early in 1913 this company dissolved partnership and a new company was organized, which is now known as the J. Thornburg Garage Company, of which firm our subject was actively engaged up to the time of his death. He was until shortly before his death the head of the Tritt Electric Company, which his able management made successful, He was also a heavy stockholder in the Commercial National Bank of Union City. He was very successful in a business way, having started with nothing and forged his way to a position of wealth and influence through his individual efforts and honorable dealings with his fellow men, and he was deserving of a great deal of credit for it all. In June, 1911, he retired from active life, spending the rest of his days looking after his large farming and other business interests. His farm in Darke county, Ohio, was kept well improved, retaining its original fertility, and the dwelling thereon remodeled and equipped with all modern conveniences, such as electric lights, furnace, hot and cold water, in fact, everything equal to a home in the city. It is perhaps the finest country home in that county.

C W Tritt

The happy and harmonious domestic life of Charles W. Tritt began on November 7, 1880, when he led to the hymeneal altar a lady of exemplary characteristics, known in her maidenhood as Elizabeth A. Reeves, a representative of a sterling and honored old family. She was born in Lancaster, Jay county, Indiana, June 30, 1858, but she was reared and educated in Union City, Randolph county, whither she removed with her parents when a child, and here the major portion of her life has been spent. The union of our subject and wife was blessed by the birth of five children, namely: Russell J., whose birth occurred November 11, 1882, was educated in the Union City high school and the Muncie Business College; he married Nina Turpen, a daughter of Charles Turpen, and to them one child has been born, John Turpen Tritt, whose birth occurred July 12, 1911; Raymond C., second child of our subject, died at the age of five years; Inez Alberta married W. Mort Martin, of Indianapolis, and they had one child, Elizabeth Jean Martin, born September 20, 1911; the death of Mrs. Martin occurred December 28, 1912; Nellie E., fourth child of our subject, was born July 15, 1890, educated in the Union City high school and Eureka College in Illinois; Frank Tilghman Tritt, born August 31, 1896, was educated in the Union City high school.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Tritt is a daughter of the late Dr. J. L. Reeves, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, September 14, 1827. He was a son of James and Rachael Reeves. In 1882 Doctor Reeves came with his parents to Randolph county, the family locating in the woods in Jackson township, four and one-half miles north of Union City, near where later was built the village of New Lisbon. The elder Reeves built a log cabin, being the fourth voter to build a cabin in that precinct. He entered land from the government which he cleared and developed into a good farm, becoming an influential man in that community. John L. Reeves was reared pretty much the same as other pioneer lads, working on the farm in summer and during the brief term of school in the wintertime he studied at the neighborhood school house. He spent part of his time with his grandfather in Delaware county. When but thirteen years old he walked through the great woods from his father's to his grandfather's home, returning in like manner. He remained at home until he reached his majority, when but a boy he began reading medicine, sending to New York for a few books which he studied eagerly. In the fall of 1851 he began plastering which he followed three years, receiving eight dollars per month for same. With this he bought books and studied medicine at night and also read under Dr. Noah Simmons of New Lisbon. He farmed for awhile, but this induced bleeding at the lungs and necessitated his abandoning tilling the soil. In 1849 he was married to Angelina Milligan, who died in 1854. In that year he began practicing his profession in the village of Pittsburg, northwest of Lisbon, continuing there successfully until 1856, when he located at Lancaster or Salamonia, Jay county, where he built up a fine practice and was actively engaged until the commencement of the war between the states. When Sumter's signal gun heralded the great conflict Doctor Reeves at once organized a company of state guards at Lancaster which was offered to the government at Indianapolis, and the company was distributed throughout various regiments. Doctor Reeves entered the service as lieutenant of Company F, Fortieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was first sent to Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio; later the regiment was sent to eastern Kentucky and became a part of the army of the Cumberland. The Doctor was then made captain of his company and served under Gen. James A. Garfield at Pound Gap, and was in all skirmishes and marches in which his regiment participated, serving his country most faithfully and gallantly for a period of three years and four months. At the great battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was wounded in the left ankle which lamed him for many years. He was also stunned by a shell and his comrades supposed him to be dead. He recovered from the shock in due time but was disabled for three months. He came near being captured the same day, but was spared the horrors of Andersonville. His company was then placed to guard the crossing at Shell Mound, Tennessee, and Captain Reeves remained with his men, lying on a brush pile until the following spring instead of going to a hospital. At that place the company veteranized on January 1, 1864, and in March of that year Captain Reeves was promoted to major and served with that rank most gallantly until mustered out of the army and honorably discharged on December 10, 1864. In the meantime his company had gone into the Atlanta campaign after General Hood. At the bloody battle of Franklin, Tennessee, the Major's regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Major Reeves was offered the commission of colonel of the same, but as he had been in active service for over three years and his health was somewhat shattered he declined the honor, resigned his commission as major and returned home. For a short time he engaged in the grocery business at Union City. In 1866 he entered the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1867. He resumed the practice of medicine in Union City.

He enjoyed a large and lucrative practice until 1882 when an old trouble, which arose while in the army, returned and he was compelled to give up active practice, although he continued to practice to some extent until within a few years of his death, and up to the last he dictated prescriptions and gave advice to friends who sought his services. In 1890 he purchased a drug store in the Ross Opera building which he utilized for office and business rooms.

Doctor Reeves' first marriage resulted in the birth of two children, James S. Reeves, now deceased, for a number of years a well-known business man and postmaster at Union City; and Emmeretta, who lived in Missouri with her grandmother, Mrs. Margaret Milligan, both of whom were driven out by the Confederates in 1861, and both died seven years later at the home of John Milligan in Darke county, Ohio, from exposure and nervous prostration caused by their expulsion. The second marriage of Doctor Reeves was to Esther McFarland, of Pittsburg, Indiana, and to this union four children were born, three of whom survive, namely: Mrs. Elizabeth A. Tritt, wife of our subject; J. C. Reeves, and W. R. Reeves, of Union City.

Doctor Reeves was a man of remarkable energy and strong intellect, which he retained until the autumn of a busy and useful life, gaining for himself unaided and alone an honorable position among his fellow men. Few have tried harder to mount the weary steps of success than did this noble gentleman, and few succeeded better in Randolph county during the generation that is past. As a physician he was exceptionally successful. For years he kept a barn full of good horses and he rode day and night, administering to the sick for miles in every direction. He was always held in highest regard by those in his profession and out of it, all having the greatest respect for his ability and integrity, yet withal he was extremely modest, leaving praise and commendation to others. He believed the world to be a place of usefulness where each should do his part and do it well without ostentation or display. He was kind to every one, simple in habits, strong in will and character. He was an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was president of his company which met in annual reunion, which were among the happiest days during the latter part of his life. He was also a worthy member of the Christian church, and belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Union City, and he practiced the doctrine of both church and fraternal order in his daily life. He was a loving husband, kind father and helpful neighbor, a splendid citizen and loyal friend, and he will long continue to be missed by all whose lives he touched in the long, trying earthly journey. This splendid man was called to his eternal rest on Wednesday, April 7, 1913, and was buried in the Lisbon cemetery, the beautiful

"God's acre," as known to the old Saxons the places where they laid their dead away until the resurrection. In the interest of this cemetery and in other local things he had labored arduously, hence the community owes him a debt of gratitude which it can only repay by reverencing his memory.

Charles W. Tritt was for many years a leader in local matters pertaining to the general good of Union City and community, and while he was a loyal Republican, he never sought political office, desiring to devote his attention to his large business affairs and to his home. Religiously he was a devout member of the Christian church, belonging to the official board of the same. Fraternally, he was a member of the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias, a charter member of the local lodge of the latter.

On February 21, 1914, Mr. Tritt was summoned to close his eyes on earthly scenes, in his sixty-second year, his death being sudden and unexpected, although he had been in failing health for more than a year. His funeral was one of the largest ever known in Union City, people of all walks of life delighting to do him honor, which proved the genuine worth of the man. We quote a few lines from the eloquent and appropriate eulogy pronounced upon him by Rev. C. W. Buchanan. "Whatever work Mr. Tritt undertook he always saw victory. He stood above the mountain peaks of failure among the successful men of his generation. He had a vision of God's kingdom and the harvest field that is waving with the ripened grain. He was convinced that the liquor traffic was opposed to God and His laws and he gave not only his money, but his time to fighting this great menace. He was not only a man of vision—steadfast in his ways, a man of courage and strength, but he was more, he had a heart of sympathy; he could not bear to see any person suffer—to the poor he was always kind. He gave not only to his church, but to every worthy cause, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Temperance Missions and all kinds of benevolent work. He tried to be a man in every way."

The following tribute, an estimate of the life of Charles W. Tritt, appeared in The Union City Eagle, and is well worth preserving in this history:

"Again our city is in the shadow of a cloud of grief. Today there are being enacted the final scenes in the life of one whose career has meant much to the city's growth. We are carried back to another scene of many years ago when a young man, the offspring of hardy, honest, hard-working parents, started out to make his way in the world and solve life's stubborn problem. He had no capital behind him except his own strong body and robust manliness, his own clear and vigorous mind, unwearied energy and worthy ambition to do something worth while in the world. We see him as a clerk, courteous, attentive, efficient. We see him as a partner with a pride of personal interest and ownership. He prospered; he succeeded. People liked him, applauded him, patronized him, encouraged him. He was climbing the weary ladder round by round. Then we see him with others organizing an industry which came to be the greatest in the city. For more than thirty years he was the master mind, the moving spirit of that industry. Others came and went, reorganizations were had and had again, but he remained throughout it all, with his hand on the wheel. Until two years ago he continued in this capacity, then retired. The Union City Carriage Factory is his memorial. He needs no other.

Such in brief is an account of the business career of Charles W. Tritt. And it is an enviable one. He succeeded. Many others who started with him failed and their names are forgotten. Such things do not happen without cause. Why did this boy who started without a dollar of capital in money, achieve success? The reasons may be many but a few will suffice. He was the embodiment of industry. He worked unceasingly. He remained on the job. In the early years of the Union City Carriage works he labored day and night for its welfare and he relaxed his effort only when he severed his connection with it. During its first ten years its future was decidedly uncertain. The bulk of the supervision fell to him. By his efforts a trade was crecreated, a demand for its output. He traveled over the country seeking customers and built up by degrees a patronage which now embraces three great states and even reaches beyond their limits. His whole mind and energy was directed to the accomplishment of this task. It is said that 'every life is a lesson.' To the discouraged and despairing the life of this man is a hope and inspiration, an exemplification of the maxim that 'The gods sell everything for labor.' He was a man of vision, of wide knowledge of human affairs, of keen, cultivated insight into human nature. His mind reached out beyond the present. He saw a glimpse of that which lay beyond the mysterious curtain of the future and applied this knowledge to the present. While conservative in business, yet he anticipated the needs of the business in which he was engaged. He recognized the fact that the people wanted a vehicle of medium price, and he set out to have just that kind of vehicle made, and made in large quantities. He did things on a large scale, believed in a volume of business. Not only in business was he far-seeing, but in everything else as well.

Charles W. Tritt was a natural organizer and leader. He was in control of everything in which he was engaged. From the time he went into the carriage company until the time he went out he held a controlling hand. His cool, forceful, executive mind placed him in the fore rank and kept him there. He was a strong character, firm, resolved, determined, and all who came in contact with him recognized at once his force of will and strength of character. Early and forced economy gave him a most distinct and sharp idea of values. To him economy in everything was a virtue. He believed that 'a penny saved is a penny earned.' His thrift was largely due to this belief. Yet he was by no means parsimonious, but, on the other hand, was generous and charitable. The full extent of his charity will never be known. He did not want it known. He did not care for praises from the housetops. Although he was possessed of a large annual income he gave more than a tenth of it to the cause of the church and charity. For several years he and his brother, the late, E. C. Tritt, gave on an average of eight hundred dollars a year to the cause of charity in this city. The books of one shoe dealer show where they purchased and paid for two hundred dollars' worth of shoes a year. Clothing merchants and grocery keepers will give the same testimony. All this went to help the needy. He started many in life, helped many along the way of life, and many will 'rise up and call him blessed.' Deeply impressed with the truth of his convictions, he supported them with an earnestness born of sincerity, with a fulness of information due to his habit of industry, and with a power that sprung from large natural ability disciplined by severe training. He was simple in his manner, frugal in his habits. When he spoke he hit the mark, used no additional words, sought for no decoration. He said what he thought, in plain, strong, terse, effective words, then listened, To him life was a practical problem and he treated it in a practical way. He knew, likewise, that death must come, and he had prepared for it, as he had prepared for everything else. For many years he had not been a well man. 'I am likely to go any time,' he would remark. Only within the last week he remarked, 'I have my vault in the cemetery completed, and I'm ready for the end.' He dealt with the problem of death just as he dealt with those of life, in that cool, serene and calculating manner. He met the 'king of terrors' like a warrior faces his foe—grandly, bravely, fearlessly, with the sweetest assuring hope that 'joy cometh in the morning' and that all will be well on the morrow.

Charles W. Tritt was a good citizen, a lover of law and order, a patriotic man who wanted the best for the state, city and county. He looked upon the liquor traffic as an outlaw and he fought it bitterly and uncompromisingly with money and with influence until his death. Whatever he considered wrong he opposed; whatever he considered right he supported. He took great pride in his home city. He was in favor of growth, progress and improvement in every way. When the city needed money recently to complete certain improvements he gladly advanced a large amount in order that the improvements might be carried on. His heart was in every good and patriotic cause. His unbounded affection for his family was another of his striking characteristics. When released from business cares and duties he could be found at home with wife and children. Social pleasures had no charms for him. Lodges received but little of his time. He loved his home and dear ones, and there he preferred to be, providing liberally for their comfort, enjoying their companionship. He was deeply interested in the work of the church. For many years he was the leader of the board of trustees and had a leading part in the rebuilding of the Christian church. The church leaned heavily upon him and he remained true to the cause until the end.

And so a strong, good, helpful man has gone from our midst, not in the morning of active life, not in 'the sere and yellow leaf,' but in the meridian of his usefulness and power. The solemnity of this hour, of his funeral, the crowded church, these emblems of mourning, these heaps of fragrant flowers, these idle hands and saddened faces, all unite in expressions of heart-felt sorrow. A good man, a faithful servant has gone from us, one who will be missed by many. But his name will be revered, his memory cherished, his good works treasured by those whose lives he touched and helped and brightened while traveling along life's weary pathway. His life-work is left, his monument erected, not only in stone, but in the memory of those who knew him, in the influence which he wielded, in the molded, rounded, useful life which passes not away."

ISAIAH P. WATTS.

Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record, and the mission of a great soul in this world is one that is calculated to inspire a multitude of others to better and grander things; so its subsequent influence cannot be measured in metes and bounds, for it affects the lives of those with whom it comes into contact, broadening and enriching them for all time to come. By a few general observations may be conveyed some idea of the noble character and useful career of Isaiah P. Watts, who for a long lapse of years has been one of the best known and most influential ministers of the gospel and politicians of Winchester, Randolph county, and he is not unknown to the state and nation, for united in his nature are so many elements of a solid, practical and helpful nature that they have brought him into prominent notice; and, not content to hide his talents amid life's sequestered ways, by the force of an indomitable will and a laudable ambition, has forged to the front. His life has been one of hard study and unselfish industry, whose laborious professional duties in the various relations in which he has been placed, has led to a high position in the esteem of the public, which gives evidence that the qualities which he possesses afford the means of distinction under a system of government in which places of honor and usefulness are open to all who may be found worthy of them.

Mr. Watts was born in Richland county, Ohio, June 15, 1840. He is a son of Samuel Watts, who at one time was a prosperous merchant, but both misfortune and ill health overtaking him he turned to the wilds of Indiana in the hope of regaining both health and fortune. It was in the year 1847 that he removed with his family to Wells county, locating on a farm between the towns of Bluffton and Camden, and there our subject spent his boyhood years, amid the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life. Although only seven years old when he was brought to Indiana he had attended school in Ohio, but was denied the privilege of continuing the same in the woods of the new locality where the family had settled. It was not until 1850 that he had the opportunity of attending school in this state. That was at the village of Rifesburg, eight miles distant from the home place. While attending school there he lived with Henry Elston, doing farm work for his board. At the age of twelve he worked on the railroad in winter in order to obtain funds to pay his way in school, and while living with Mr. Elston he made such rapid progress in his studies that when seventeen years of age, having saved a little money, he entered Liber College, where he studied five terms, his school life terminating in 1860, just prior to the breaking out of the great war of the Rebellion. In 1862 he enlisted in Company H, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. While in the army he served much of the time on detached duty, and during the winter of 1862-63, he was chief clerk of the general hospital at Ashland, Kentucky. In June, 1863, he was taken ill, and sent to the hospital at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and during his convalescence was transferred to Chattanooga, that state. There he was assigned to duty as chief clerk of the general hospital, and afterwards as clerk in the office of the medical director at Chattanooga. In January, 1864, he was appointed counsel of administration to take charge of the effects of deceased soldiers and forward them to their proper destination. In March of the latter year he came home on furlough of thirty days, rejoining his regiment in April at Blue Springs, Tennessee, and continuing with it until the close of the war, participating in the meantime in the battles of Buzzard's Roost, Tunnel Hill, Rocky Face Ridge, Dalton, Resaca, Kingston, Pumpkin Vine Creek, Pine Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, Neal Bow Church, Culp's Farm, Peach Tree Creek, the many sanguinary conflicts in front of Atlanta, Shoal's Creek, Lovejoy Station, Franklin and Nashville, in all of which he proved to be a gallant and courageous soldier for the Stars and Stripes. He was honorably discharged and mustered out on June 14, 1865, and soon thereafter returned to Winchester and engaged in the trade of silversmith, meanwhile devoting his spare time to the study of the law, and was later a student in the office of Cheney & Watson. He made rapid progress as a law student and was admitted to the bar in 1866, from which time until 1870 he was the partner of E. B. Reynolds, and in 1873 effected a co-partnership in the practice with A. O. Marsh, which was continued until the following year. After 1874 he practiced alone, and in 1876 was the Republican candidate for secretary of state. That canvass was one of the most exciting in the history of the state. The state went Democratic with a majority of about five thousand, and Mr. Watts went down in the general landslide. In 1880 he was nominated by his party for the office of clerk of the Randolph circuit court and he was accordingly elected in the autumn of that year. He assumed his duties in that office in August, 1881, and discharged the same with commendable fidelity until 1885.

For a number of years he acted as pension agent in Winchester and had the satisfaction of aiding many a comrade and many a widow and orphan to secure the aid awarded by a grateful country. In addition to his official duties, Mr. Watts for some time had personal charge of the Christian church of Winchester. Although he was regarded as one of the successful and learned lawyers of Randolph county and had built up a lucrative practice, he readily gave this up and devoted his attention to the ministry of the gospel, believing that thereby he could accomplish more good for his fellow men, and he ranks high in the ministry of the denomination mentioned above, with which he identified himself in early life. He is an earnest, forceful and at times truly eloquent speaker, ever active and zealous in the work of the church, self-sacrificing in his devotion to the same. He was for a period of three years pastor of the Christan church at Alexandria besides preaching at various other points. He became interested in the sudden material growth of the town of Alexandria in 1892, and he was elected president of the Phillips Land & Gas Company, in which he was a heavy stockholder and his able management and honest dealings resulted in great success for this company. He was a most potent factor in securing for the town of Alexandria factories and enterprising citizens, and it eventually became one of the most flourishing centers in the gas belt of Indiana, and the town owes him a debt of gratitude that it can never pay. The daily affairs of Mr. Watts have ever been governed by a high sense of honor and right, and he has therefore always had the confidence and good will of all who knew him. He has ever proved himself a faithful and efficient servant of the people, prompt and courteous in the transaction of his duties, ever keeping the best interests of the general public foremost. In the year 1903 he was elected representative from Randolph county to the legislature and served one term to the eminent satisfaction of his constituents. On January 1, 1906 he was appointed door-keeper of the United States Senate and was in Washington four years as a result of this appointment, and he proved to be a popular and faithful man for that post. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was departmental chaplain for that organization when the great Soldiers' and Sailors' monument was dedicated in Indianapolis. While a member of the legislature he introduced the bill providing for the imposing monument of Indiana's famous war governor, Oliver P. Morton, which now graces Capitol Square, Indianapolis. Mr. Watts was a candidate for Congress from the Eighth Congressional district in 1910, but was defeated; and in 1912 he was nominated for the same office without opposition, and made an excellent campaign, but went down in the general Republican defeat of that year, Randolph county going Democratic for the first time in fifty years. He is a pension attorney and is still practicing law with a wide clientele, maintaining an office in the Kizer building, North Main street, Winchester, and he also keeps up his ministry, devoting about one-half of his time to the affairs of the Christian church, and is at this writing, pastor of a congregation in Indianapolis. He is indeed a tireless worker in the vineyard of the Lord. Although past his seventy-third year he is in full possession of his faculties, hale and active as a result of his wholesome life and right thinking.

The domestic life of Mr. Watts began in August, 1861 when he was united in marriage with Ann Eliza Diggs, who proved to be a most excellent helpmeet in every respect, genial, wise in counsel, charitable and high-minded, and, like her distinguished husband has won her way into the affection of a very wide circle of friends. Her father, Littleberry Diggs, long since deceased, was one of the early pioneers of Randolph county, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Watts has been blessed by the birth of five children, named as follows: Inez became the wife of E. F. Tibbott, who was private secretary to President Benjamin Harrison; Grace A. married E. H. Addington, son of Rev. Thomas Addington, a well-known citizen of Randolph county for many years; William A. died in infancy; Thomas M. is engaged in the mercantile business and Shelley D., the youngest is at Middletown, Ohio, where he is manager of the Social Service Bureau.

Personally Mr. Watts is a pleasant gentleman to meet, a type of the true Christian, an obliging and chivalrous gentleman of the old school.

ALBERT L. BOOTS.

The large success that has attended the efforts of Albert L. Boots, one of Parker's wide-awake and progressive business men, who is conducting one of the largest hardware stores in Randolph county, has been well deserved, for he has worked earnestly, persistently and honestly, not depending upon others or stooping to any paltry tricks, so common in present-day commercialism. As a result of his fair dealing with his fellow men, his uniform courtesy to his hundreds of regular customers and his acknowledged public spirit, Mr. Boots enjoys the confidence and good will of all who know him and is deserving to rank among our leading citizens.

Mr. Boots was born in Randolph county, April 14, 1862. He is a son of Morgan and Elizabeth J. (Manor) Boots, and is one of a family of three children, he being the eldest, the other two are Rosel E., who was a farmer in Monroe township, died at the age of thirty-one years, and Lillie, who married Frank E. Keefer, a farmer of Monroe township, has the following children: One having died in infancy, the living are Bessie, Lloyd, Inez, Albert and Harold.

Morgan Boots, mentioned in the preceding paragraph, was born in Ohio, near the city of Xenia. He left that state when a boy, coming to Indiana, where he engaged in farming until his death which occurred in the prime of life. Martin Boots, the grandfather, was born in Virginia, from which state he came to Ohio when eleven years old, there grew to manhood and followed farming until fifty years of age, when he moved to Indiana, locating near Fairview, where he died at the age of seventy-three years. The death of the grandmother occurred at the unusual age of ninety-six years. The maternal grandparents of our subject came from West Virginia, having resided in Berkley county, from which they removed to Indiana when our subject's mother was a child.

Albert L. Boots grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools. On June 10, 1883, he married Emma Manor, daughter of David Manor, and she was one of a large family—sixteen children, eleven of whom grew to maturity. Mr. Manor was a farmer and merchant in Jay county.

Mr. Boots now owns the splendid farm near Redkey, which was formerly the property of his father-in-law. On August 5, 1912, Mr. Boots and George Murphy bought out E. E. Deal's hardware store in Parker City, which they are now conducting most successfully, enjoying a large and rapidly growing trade. It is one of the largest hardware, implement and general supply concerns in Randolph county. They carry a large, up-to-date and carefully selected stock of everything in the hardware and implement line used by the farmer, and their prices are always right, according to their customers.

Politically, Mr. Boots is a Prohibitionist. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 134, at Fairview. He attends the Methodist Episcopal church, and contributes liberally to the support of same.

THEODORE H. SHOCKNEY.

Human life is made up of two elements, power and form, and the proportion must be invariably kept if we would have it sweet and sound. Each of these elements in excess makes a mischief as hurtful as would be its deficiency. Everything turns to excess; every good quality is noxious if unmixed, and to carry the danger to the edge of ruin Nature causes each man's peculiarity to superabound. One speaking from the standpoint of a farmer would adduce the learned professions as examples of the treachery. They are Nature's victims of expression. You study the artist, the orator or the man of inventive genius and find their lives no more excellent than that of merchants, farmers or manufacturers. Many men get but glimpses of the delights found in Nature in its various elements and moods, but there is always ample opportunity to enjoy life in its varied phases, whatever the profession. It depends upon the individual. The late Theodore H. Shockney, for many years a prominent citizen of Randolph county, was one who took a delight in existence. It was because he was in touch with the springs of life. He did not permit material things to supplant his better nature. His life was filled with good deeds and kindly thoughts, and all who knew him entertained for him the highest regard, by reason of his upright, honorable career, his public spirit and his genial disposition. From his career many useful lessons may be gleaned by the youth standing at the parting of the ways, for he was a man who believed in the old adage, "Lose no time in getting off the wrong road as soon as you discover that you are traveling it." He was an advocate of progress in all phases of life, progress at any sacrifice.

Mr. Shockney was born in Randolph county, January 3, 1868. He was a son of Samuel and Sarah (Butts) Shockney, and was one of seven children, namely: Alisa married Charles Burkett, a farmer living now in Michigan, and they have one child, Frank; Thomas is farming in Darke county, Ohio, and he married Lillie Wallace, who has borne him eight children; Valeria, who lives in Winchester, married Riley Hoffman, a stone cutter, and they have two children; Harry of Union City, is a merchant, and he married Minnie Henning; Pearl, who is connected with the city government of Chicago, married Ada Colton and they have two children; Grover, who is farming in Randolph county, married Bertha Way, and they have one child, and Theodore H., of this memoir.

Samuel Shockney, father of our subject, was born in Maryland, where he grew up and was educated. When a young man he came to Randolph county. The Butts family came from Shelby county, Ohio, the mother of our subject having been a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Butts, who lived on a farm, and had a family of three children, Sarah, Nathan T. and Thomas.

Theodore H. Shockney was educated in the public schools of Randolph county and later studied in Lebanon, Ohio. He devoted his life to farming, dealing in live stock and teaching school, making a pronounced success of all three, for he was a man who applied himself closely to whatever claimed his attention and he dealt honestly with his fellow men.

Mr. Shockney was married April 4, 1888, to Hattie Kennon, a daughter of Thomas S. Kennon, a farmer of Randolph county, who also was a noted auctioneer. His death occurred in 1902. The mother of Mrs. Shockney was known in her maidenhood as Hannah Perkins, a native of Randolph county. These parents had five children, two sons and three daughters, of whom Hattie, who married Mr. Shockney is the oldest; William is deceased; Minnie, who lives in this county, is the wife of Marion Ohler who was a farmer, and she has two children; Orla, who lives in Winchester, engaged in the stock and bond business, married Margaret Carver and they have three children; Lillian, who lives in Randolph county, is the wife of Lucas Macy, a hardware merchant of Spartanburg.

The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Shockney was born in Ireland, from which country he emigrated to the United States in early life and settled in Randolph county, Indiana, where he engaged in farming. Mrs. Shockney's mother was born in this county and here she was reared and educated, her people being among the early settlers here.

To Mr. and Mrs. Shockney the following children were born: Raymond K., born August 10, 1889, is a teacher, and he lives at home with his mother; Ada Lee, born September 26, 1891, is also at home—she has been a student of domestic science; Mary Frances, born January 31, 1894, has also been a student of domestic science, and both she and her sister were graduated from the high school.

Politically, Mr. Shockney was a Democrat, and while he took an abiding interest in public affairs, he was not a seeker after political leadership. He was an attendant of the Methodist church.

The death of Mr. Shockney occurred on June 30, 1908. He was sadly missed by his host of warm friends throughout the locality.

HARRY E. MAGEE.

Harry E. Magee was born in Winchester July 11, 1869, and after taking the regular common school course entered business in his native town as a hardware merchant. In this line of trade Mr. Magee has been one of the eminently successful men of his town and county. He has always kept abreast of the times, and anything to be had in his line in the larger cities has ever been accessible to the citizens of Winchester in Mr. Magee's store. There are few larger stocks of hardware to be found anywhere in the county, and none of better selection.

He is an only son of Charles E. and Sarah (Edgar) Magee and inherits much of the sagacity and enterprise of the Buckeye blood from his father, who was born May 6, 1846, in Zanesville, Ohio. His mother was born in Winchester September 4, 1847. Both are still living. Mr. Magee was married October 3, 1900, to Sarah Kitura Wright, a daughter of Hicks Wright, a stock dealer. His father and grandfather were both in the Civil war. Charles E. Magee, the subject's father, served in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and later in the Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry until the close of the war.

Mrs. Magee has one sister, Ida, who married John Christopher, a banker and farmer of Modoc. They have one child, Jean, seventeen years of age.

Besides his hardware business, which he has conducted for twenty-six years, Harry E. Magee for two years had charge of the Indiana Glass Works at Dunkirk, Indiana. At the expiration of two years he returned to his calling of a hardware merchant. He is a Progressive in politics, and his choice of religious denominations is the Methodist. In the enterprises of politics and the business interests of the town, Mr. Magee is an ardent participant, and the reputation of the municipality and county is due in a large measure to his efforts to enhance it.

WILLIAM P. MARLATT.

It will always be a mark of distinction to have served the Union during the great Civil war between the states. The old soldier will receive attention no matter where he goes if he will but make himself known, and when he passes away, as so many of them are now doing, statistics showing that somewhere in this country every fifteen minutes one of the veterans is gathered to his father, friends will pay him suitable eulogy for the sacrifices he made a half century ago on the sanguinary fields of battle in the Southland, or in the no less dreaded prison or fever camp or hospital. And ever afterward his descendants will revere his memory and take pride in recounting his services for his country in its hour of peril. One of the most eligible citizens for specific mention in a history of Randolph county, Indiana, is William P. Marlatt, for many years a well-known business man, now living retired in the city of Winchester, partly because he is one of the old soldiers who went forth in that great crisis in the sixties to assist in saving the union of states, and partly because he has been one of our honorable and public-spirited citizens for a number of decades, a plain, unassuming gentleman who has sought to do his duty in all the relations of life as he has seen and understood the right.

Mr. Marlatt was born in Brookville, Franklin county, Indiana, March 27, 1845. He is a son of James and Mary (Goodwin) Marlatt. The father was born in Martinsburg in what is now West Virginia, and the mother was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, near Miamisburg. The Marlatt family came to Brookville, Indiana, probably about 1830, and there the father of our subject followed the carpenter's trade which he had learned when a young man, also followed bridge building, which was quite a business in those days of wooden, covered bridges. He was a skilled and energetic workman, giving satisfaction in all his work. He spent the remainder of his active life at Brookville. In that town his son, William P., of this review, spent his boyhood years, and there attended the public schools. When the Civil war was in progress he enlisted for service in 1863 in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for three years. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee and saw hard service under Sherman in the Atlanta campaign, also in the Nashville campaign under Thomas. Later our subject was with the eastern army, finding himself with the troops in North Carolina at the close of the war. However about that time and during the Grand Review at the national capital he was confined in a hospital in Washington city. He was honorably discharged from the service on June 14, 1865 after a very faithful service during which he was never wounded or taken prisoner. He was sent to his home in Brookville, this state, where, after regaining his health, he began working in the paper mills, also worked with his father at the carpenter's trade. In May, 1868 he joined his brother, H. R. Marlatt, who was engaged in the stove and tinnery business in Winchester, our subject becoming an apprentice and learned the trade, which he followed for three years or more when he went to Columbus, Indiana, but remained there only a short time when he went to Indianapolis and worked for Johnson Brothers whose variety of work extended his knowledge of the trade, and he became an expert workman, giving eminent satisfaction.

On September 11, 1873, he was married to Hannah Moorman, daughter of Thomas and Eunice (Diggs) Moorman. Both the Moorman and Diggs families were pioneers of Randolph county, and here Mrs. Marlatt grew to womanhood and received a common school education. To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Dr. Clarence L., a successful physician of Indianapolis; and Bertha who married first I. L. Macy and after his death married second, Daniel Heaton, of Winchester.

For a short time after his marriage Mr. Marlatt continued in partnership with his brother in the stove and tinner's business in Winchester, and finally he purchased his brother's interest and conducted the establishment with ever-growing success until the spring of 1880, when he moved to Indianapolis where he engaged in the same line of business for a number of years with gratifying results. In 1885 he was appointed a letter carrier in Indianapolis and was in the service for nine and one-half years, giving eminent satisfaction to the department, when he resigned and returned to Winchester in 1895, on account of the death of his wife's mother, leaving Mrs. Marlatt's father to be taken care of, he being a very aged citizen, who lived to be ninety-one years old. For a time our subject was engaged in the hardware business and later in the lumber business. He accumulated a nice competency through his long years of good management and honest dealings with his fellow men. He retired from active life in 1906 and is spending his declining years quietly at his pleasant home at 133 East North street, the old Moorman homestead, which stands in the midst of spacious and beautiful grounds.

Mr. Marlatt has always been a Democrat and interested in the affairs of his party but was never active or an office seeker. He was never a biased partisan, always according his neighbor the same freedom of opinion which he claimed for himself. In 1911 he was appointed deputy state oil inspector for the counties of Randolph and Delaware, in fact, he is still incumbent of this office, and has discharged the duties of the same with satisfaction to all concerned. He is a member of the Nelson Trusler Post, Grand Army of the Republic at Winchester, and he has filled all the offices in the same. He has been a delegate to state encampments. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has passed all the chairs in the subordinate and Encampment of Winchester Lodge, No. 121; he is also a member of the Masonic order, and has tried to live up to its sublime precepts in all the relations of life.

JOHN I. JOHNSON.

The name of John I. Johnson, of Winchester, is one of the best known in Randolph county, for here his life of fifty-six years has been spent and he has long been prominent in public affairs. In his earlier life he followed blacksmithing, but eventually turned his attention to politics and served in the county offices in a mannner that has ever since made him a well-liked citizen. As vice-president and one of the promoters of the Peoples Loan and Trust Company, he has shown himself to be one of our leading business men. He has ever had the good of his locality at heart and has done much to promote its general upbuilding.

Mr. Johnson was born December 23, 1857 in Buena Vista, Randolph county. He is a son of Joshua M. and Amanda C. (Pegg) Johnson, both natives of this county also, and representatives of old pioneer families, the Johnsons coming from North Carolina.

Joshua M. Johnson was born September 13, 1831. He was a son of John and Phebe Johnson. At the age of sixteen years he began life for himself, by going to Williamsburg, Indiana, and beginning the blacksmith's trade, serving his apprenticeship under Nathan Bond, after which he set up a little shop of his own at Buena Vista, this state. What time he was not busy in the shop he was chopping wood and burning charcoal from wood. By his industry and straight bearing he enjoyed the full confidence of the whole community. On September 30, 1855, he married Amanda C. Pegg, to which union thirteen children were born, all growing to manhood and womanhood except one which died in infancy, and all married except one; Alwilda Johnson Lewis died September 12, 1883, leaving two children; Mary Earl Johnson Mills died February 25, 1885. With his kind and generous heart no one was ever turned from Mr. Johnson's door hungry. Sometimes in his shop he worked from four to six hands who shared in his home life. He was true to his convictions of right, and would hold to what he thought was right. After years of toil and hard work he left the shop and took to the farm, buying land adjoining the place of his beginning in Randolph county, Indiana, where he had removed from his native state in early life, and he became a large land owner here. He was a Republican. While he was not identified with any church he was one of the prime movers of the introduction of Christianity, donating the ground on which the church stands at Buena Vista, and the beautiful cemetery is adjoining it because of his untiring efforts when the church was organized, in which there was a general awakening. There were none more interested than he, and none did more than he in local church matters during his lifetime. He was a firm believer in the principles of Christianity and delighted to see it practically carried out. His death occurred on April 23, 1901, at the age of sixty-nine years, seven months and ten days, leaving a widow, five sons, five daughters, eighteen grand children, three brothers, three half-brothers, three half-sisters, step-mother and a large number of relatives and friends. During the last forty or more years of his life he was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons. Mrs. Amanda C. Johnson, now advanced in years, is still living on the old homestead in West River township.

John I. Johnson grew up in his native community on the home farm, and obtained his education in the country district schools. When a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade under his father and followed that for a period of fourteen years, becoming a very skilled workman and was thus kept busy, many of his patrons coming from remote parts of the county. He maintained his shop in Buena Vista.

On November 18, 1880 he married Agnes Mills, a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Miller) Mills. The father was born in Ohio and the mother in northern Ireland, from which place she emigrated to America when a young girl. Her father became a farmer in West River township. Both parents are now deceased.

Only one child has been born to our subject and wife, Gerald M., whose death occurred on February 8, 1907.

In 1898 Mr. Johnson moved to Winchester and entered the county treasurer's office as deputy, serving four years. In 1901 he was elected county treasurer, serving one term, with much credit. After his term of office had expired he continued to serve as deputy in the same office for five years more, and since that time has assisted materially in the business of that office. He has always been an active Republican, and he has been a frequent member of the County Central Committee. As stated above he is vice-president of the Peoples Loan & Trust Company, one of the popular and solid financial concerns of Winchester. He owns a valuable farm two miles west of the county-seat, which receives some of his attention, however for a number of years he has lived practically retired.

EMORY L. ASHCRAFT.

Among the enterprising, wide-awake and public-spirited newspaper men of Randolph county, who is a potent factor in molding local public opinion is Emory L. Ashcraft, editor and publisher of The Review, of Parker. He has worked hard to advance himself in his chosen calling for which he evidently has considerable natural talent, else he would not have succeeded at all, for anyone who knows anything about the publishing business knows that it takes something else besides hard and persistent work to win in this uncertain, precarious field.

Mr. Ashcraft was born at Fort Recovery, Ohio, October 18, 1872. He is a son of Emanuel and Susan (Campbell) Ashcraft, whose family consisted of five children, namely: Emory L., of this sketch; Jesse, who is farming near Tippecanoe City, Ohio, married Lulu Sutton and they have one child, Myrtle; Belle who lives at Fort Recovery, married Burl Graves, and they have one child, Madge; William F., who is employed at the Marion Glass Works, married Effie McKibben and they have three children; Harvey is a barber at Fort Recovery. The father of the above named children was born in Jay county, Indiana, and is still living. His father was a farmer and was a native of Muskingum county, Ohio. The paternal great grandfather of our subject was a native of Virginia. Both he and the paternal grandfather of our subject entered their farms from the government and were typical pioneers. The great-grandfather was a soldier in the Mexican war. The mother of Emory L. Ashcraft was of Scotch-Irish descent. Her father came from Vermont, and his family consisted of six children. He lived on a farm near Fort Recovery.

Emory L. Ashcraft received his education in the common schools of Fort Recovery, and was graduated from the high school there. When a boy he learned the printer's trade in the office of The Fort Recovery Journal, where he worked three years, after which, in 1896, he came to Redkey, Indiana, where he was foreman of The Times, three and one-half years, then, in 1899, he came to Parker and established The Review, which was successful from the first, and it now ranks with leading country newspapers of this part of the state, being all that could be desired from a mechanical standpoint, and its columns teem with the latest and best news and much advertising matter. Its circulation is rapidly increasing.

Mr. Ashcraft was married October 27, 1893, to Bertha Hall, of Redkey, a daughter of Amos and Elizabeth Hall, a highly respected family, now living retired. She is one of five children. Mrs. Ashcraft grew to womanhood and was educated and graduated from the schools of that city.

To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Myron, born April 6, 1895, was graduated from the Selma high school, class of 1913, and specialized in the manual training department of the University of Chicago ,and Martah, born September 10, 1902. This family are members of the Christian church.

JOHN L. DE VOSS.

The dental profession of Randolph county suffered materially on the 22nd day of January, 1909, for on that day occurred the death of Dr. John L. De Voss, one of the most able and promising of the men in the dental profession of the county, also one of the most public-spirited of her citizens, and one of the youngest. Just a few months over his thirty-third year of life, the uncompromising hand of death came at a time when he was in the prime of life, when the laurels of success and reward for untiring perseverance had begun to be realities to him. Such are the unaccountable vagaries of life, that the young and gifted should be destroyed, while others, whose presence on earth is of no consequence to themselves or fellows, should be allowed to live the full three score and ten. As a dentist, Doctor De Voss was a success. Of a decided mechanical turn of mind, combined with an artistic temperament, it is not to be wondered that he found success awaiting him. Added to this natural bent was his industry and persistency, being willing to put forth any effort in order to learn a little more of this, one of the world's most important and useful professions. Then, too, he was a gentleman of integrity and uniform courtesy, which won for him a wide circle of friends in the county which he called home.

John L. De Voss was born near Fairview, Indiana, on October 4, 1875, and was the son of Joseph C. and Cynthia Armillia (Read) De Voss. Joseph C. De Voss was born October 7, 1837, in Hillsboro, Highland county, Ohio, and died in Winchester, December 24, 1908, when at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs. De Voss died January 18, 1914, at the age of sixty years. Mr. De Voss was a soldier in the Civil war, being a member of Company K, Ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He served for nine months, and during that time participated in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, Tennessee. Mr. De Voss was twice married. His first wife was Julia Campbell, and four children, namely: Milton, David A., Daniel and Cora, were born to the union. With the exception of David, all the children are deceased. His second marriage was to Cynthia Armillia Read, and two sons—John L. and Cyrus Read—were born to them. Fraternally, Mr. De Voss was a member of the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic. In religious matters, he clung to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Our subject spent his youthful days on the farm, and from there attended the district schools. Afterward he attended the high schools at both Albany and Tipton, Indiana. Thinking of a business career he entered the Muncie Business College, but gave that up and decided to take up dentistry. Accordingly he matriculated in the Central Dental College of Indianapolis, and graduated from that institution with high honors with his class in April of the year 1901. He located soon after his graduation in the town of Winchester, this county, and conducted a very lucrative practice here for a period of eight years, until the sickness that so untimely called him to his Maker.

Mr. De Voss was married to Mary Stout in Winchester on April 26, 1900, and two children were born to them, namely: John Roger, born November 18, 1904, and Francis Armillia, born June 5, 1908. Since her husband's death, Mrs. De Voss has owned and conducted a first-class ladies' furnishing emporium and is making a decided success of her venture. Mrs. De Voss' mother was a native of Illinois and died when our subject's wife was twelve years of age.

Fraternally, Mr. De Voss was a loyal member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Sons of Veterans, and the Randolph Club. Politically, he was a Republican.

CYRUS B. COURTNEY.

Success has come to Cyrus B. Courtney, well known real estate and loan man of Winchester, Indiana, because he has worked for it along well-tried and legitimate channels, has forged ahead despite obstacles and depended upon himself rather than someone else to do his planning and likewise the execution. He is a man of public spirit and while laboring for his own advancement, does not neglect his duty to his county and his neighbors, and he may always be depended upon to assist in the furtherance of all movements calculated to be of general benefit to Winchester and Randolph county.

Mr. Courtney was born August 20, 1853 in Switzerland county, Indiana. He is a son of William and Mahala (Pretzman) Courtney. The father was born December 3, 1814 in Harrison county, Kentucky, and he came to Switzerland county when twenty years old. The mother was born on March 25, 1820, in Switzerland county. William Courtney was a prosperous farmer. He moved to Randolph county in 1872 and settled on a farm in Greensfork township, which farm is now owned by his son, Cyrus B., of this sketch. The death of the father occurred on June 14, 1897, his widow surviving until May 2, 1912. Robert Courtney, paternal grandfather of our subject, came from New York state with his family to Harrison county, Kentucky, as a young married man, and later moved to Switzerland county, Indiana. The Pretzmans, the maternal side of our subject's family came from New Jersey with the early pioneers. The father of our subject helped build the first railroad in Indiana, having had a contract to build six miles of the grading. He was always a man active in public affairs. In the early days it was his custom to frequently take produce down the Ohio river and the Mississippi river to New Orleans on flat boats. This he followed for a number of years with gratifying results.

Cyrus B. Courtney was reared on the home farm and he assisted with the general work there when a boy. He received a common school education. He continued farming until 1891 when he moved to Winchester and engaged in the real estate and loan business, handling both farm and town properties, having an excellent knowledge of both, and he has built up a large and ever-growing business through his foresight, and honest and courteous dealings with his fellow men. He also owns the old home farm which he supervises.

Mr. Courtney was married on June 16, 1901 to Eva Roberts, daughter of George and Osia (Stutson) Roberts, of Williamsburg, Indiana. The father was born in the last named city and always lived there, with the exception of three years service in the Civil war, as a member of the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. Both her parents are now deceased.

To our subject and wife one son has been born, George William Courtney.

Politically, Mr. Courtney is a Republican, but he has never sought to be a public man. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined in 1890, Spartanburg Lodge, also belongs to the Encampment. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and is active in church work.

HON. LEANDER J. MONKS.

Indiana has been especially honored in the character and career of her public and professional men. In every county there have been found individuals born to leadership in the various vocations and professions, men who have dominated not alone by superior intelligence and natural endowment, but by innate force of character which has minimized discouragements and dared great undertakings. It is always profitable to study such lives, weigh their motives and hold up their achievements as incentives to greater activity and higher excellence on the part of others just entering upon their first struggles with the world. Standing out distinctly as one of the central figures of the judiciary of Indiana is the name of Hon. Leander J. Monks, whose home is in Winchester but who maintains an office in Indianapolis. As a lawyer he has won a reputation for distinguished service second to none of his contemporaries, and as a jurist of the highest type and a man of sublimated integrity and honor, for many years judge of the circuit and supreme courts, he has made a deep impress upon the history of this state of which he is one of her distinguished and honored native sons. He is a worthy and conspicuous member of a striking group of public men whose influence in civic and social life as well as in professional circles of the state has been of a most beneficent order. Wearing the judicial ermine with becoming dignity and bringing to every case submitted to him a clearness of perception and ready power of analysis characteristic of the learned and unbiased jurist, his name and work for years have been allied with the legal institutions, public enterprises and political interests of the state in such a way as to earn him recognition as one of the most influential citizens in a state noted for the high order of its talent. A high purpose and unconquerable will, vigorous mental powers, diligent study and devotion to duty are some of the means by which he has made himself eminently useful, and every ambitious youth who fights the battle of life with the prospect of ultimate success may peruse with profit the biography herewith presented.

Judge Monks was born in Winchester, Indiana, July 10, 1843, and is the eldest son of George W. and Mary A. (Irvin) Monks. George W. Monks was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, April 25, 1814. In 1820 he came with his parents to Randolph county, Indiana where the future home of the family was established, this locality being at that time a very sparsely settled wilderness and here the grandparents of the future jurist endured the usual privations and hardships incident to pioneer life on the frontier, but they were courageous and industrious and in due course of time were comfortably established. Amid such a primitive environment George W. Monks grew to manhood and received such educational advantages as were possible in those early times. In 1839, while still almost a boy, he was nominated by the Whig party as a candidate for clerk of Randolph county and elected by a large majority. He filled the office so satisfactorily that he was re-elected in 1846 and served until 1853. In 1854 the Republican party was organized in this county by the coalition of the Anti-slavery and Free Soil parties, and Mr. Monks was the first Republican nominee from Randolph county for a legislative office. He was elected and took a conspicuous part in the session of 1854-55. He had studied law, and, after his admission to the bar, he was associated in the practice for a short time with Carey S. Goodrich, subsequently entering into partnership with Judge James Brown, with whom he continued successfully until his death. He was industrious and energetic. He was charitably inclined and materially assisted many in need of help, for, after providing well for his family, he had no inclination to hoard his large income, and many lives were made brighter and better through his assistance and encouragement. He was a man of exemplary character and in every way merits the universal esteem which was so long accorded him. He did a great deal toward the upbuilding of the county in its earlier history.

George W. Monks united with the Methodist Episcopal church in 1843, and remained faithful to its principles the rest of his life, carrying his religion into his every-day affairs. He donated to the grounds in Winchester upon which is located the present church building of this denomination, and also the parsonage lot. He joined the Masonic order at Winchester in 1845. He was a member of the State Board of Agriculture for a number of years and was active in the work of the same.

George W. Monks was twice married, first to Belinda A. Hulett. To this union one child was born, Charles N. Monks, a well known citizen of Randolph county. His second marriage was to Mary A. Irvin and of this marriage there are living three children, namely: Judge Leander J., subject of this review; Minerva B., of Mankato, Minnesota; and J. Irvin, of Bonners Ferry, Idaho. After the death of his second wife in 1864, George W. Monks purchased land in Minnesota, intending to remove to that state with his children, but soon thereafter illness overtook him and he died April 4, 1865, thus closing the career of one of the most active, useful and honorable citizens known in Randolph county in its pioneer period.

Leander J. Monks grew to manhood in Winchester in which city he acquired a good common school education, and in 1861 entered the State University at Bloomington, Indiana, where he remained during three school years, leaving the university in his junior year. For some time he had been studying law and was admitted to the bar in 1865. He rose steadily in his profession from the first, and while yet a young man was called upon to fill responsible and honorable public positions. In 1870 he was chosen chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Randolph county, and in 1872 was again called to the same position. In 1874 he was elected a member of the Republican State Central Committee and re-elected in 1876, was also a member of the Executive Committee. In 1878 he was the Republican candidate for judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Randolph and Delaware, and in view of his candidacy for this office, declined the position as a member of the State Central Committee. Something of his popularity in this district will be gained from the fact that he was elected judge without opposition. In 1884 he was again nominated for the office of circuit judge in the same district, and a third time elected to the same office in 1890, Randolph county alone then constituting the district. His long retention in this office is sufficient evidence of the confidence and trust reposed in him by his constituents and of his fairness and ability in discharging the duties devolving upon him. His decisions were always characterized by uniform fairness and showing a profound knowledge of jurisprudence in all its ramifications. He was prompt and energetic in the dispatch of the business of this court and won the hearty commendation of all concerned. In 1894 he was a candidate for judge of the supreme court from the Fourth District and was elected in November by a plurality of over forty-six thousand. His term of office on the supreme bench expired January 7, 1913, having been commissioned January 7, 1895, and re-elected in 1900 and 1906, thus serving eighteen years as supreme judge, his long career on the nisi prius bench having been in every way successful, fully meeting the expectations of the people of Indiana, for he came to the supreme bench exceptionally well qualified for its exacting duties and responsibilities and from the beginning of his judicial career his decisions were characterized by a profound insight into the law and an earnest and conscientious desire to to apply it impartially; so he was not long in gaining the confidence of the attorneys and litigants and earning for himself a reputation among the leading jurists of the state.

In the practice of his profession Judge Monks has been associated with several gentlemen who have distinguished themselves at the Randolph county bar. First, in 1865, he was associated with Col. M. B. Miller, which partnership was discontinued in 1866, but re-established the following year and continued until 1871. In November of that year he entered into partnership with Hon. E. L. Watson, with whom he practiced until July, 1875. He then formed partnership relations with W. A. Thompson, which continued until he retired from practice in October, 1878, when he entered upon his illustrious judicial career. The day after leaving the bench, January, 1913, he opened offices in the Knights of Pythias building, Indianapolis, for the practice of law, forming a partnership with James P. Goodrich and John F. Robbins and H. C. Starr under the firm name of Monks, Robbins, Starr & Goodrich, and this is one of the busiest and best known legal firms in the state capital.

As already indicated Judge Monks is a Republican, and as such has been active in public and political affairs and an influential force in his party, not only in local matters, but in the larger and more important theater of state and national politics. He comes of a Republican ancestry, but he does not attribute to this fact his strict adherence to the principles which he supports, but rather to history, also to reflection, judgment and conscience, all of which have combined to make him not only an able and judicious counselor, but a molder of public opinion and leader of men, in what concerns the best interests of the body politic. While loyal to his party to promote its success, he believes that a man can be an earnest and active politician and yet be strictly honest in his methods and above reproach in all that he does to advance the interest of his cause. He is a member of the Indiana State Bar Association, and was elected by that body as a member of the committee on judicial procedure, to serve during the year 1882. He became a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity, when in college. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church and has not departed from the same.

The domestic life of Judge Monks began on August 2, 1865, when he led to the hymeneal altar a lady of culture and refinement, known in her maidenhood as Lizzie W. White, daughter of Alexander and Margaret B. (Smith) White, a sterling pioneer family of Randolph county where Mrs. Monks grew to womanhood and received a good education. She was called to her eternal rest on April 18, 1908, after a mutually happy, helpful and harmonious married life of nearly forty-three years. She was always a favorite with a wide circle of friends and influential in the best circles of Winchester and wherever she was known. The union of the Judge and wife was blessed by the birth of four children, named as follows: Margaret married Thomas J. Kizer, and they live in Indianapolis; Mary D. married Dr. Milo V Smith, of Winchester; Alice and Agnes, twins, the former married George L. Davis, of Kokomo, Indiana; Agnes married William R. Hunter, and they reside in Indianapolis. The children are the possessors of many praiseworthy attributes of head and heart, reflecting the wholesome home atmosphere in which they were reared.

Judge Monks is a member of Winchester lodge No. 56, of the Masonic order, Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Encampment, at Winchester. Also of Columbia and Marion clubs of Indianapolis.

Personally Judge Monks is entirely unassuming, a plain, genial and uniformly courteous gentleman who makes and retains friends without effort, inspiring the utmost confidence and respect in all with whom he comes into contact.

WALTER G. PARRY.

The biographies of successful men are instructive as guides and incentives to those whose careers are yet to be achieved. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and consecutive endeavor strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, if he is willing to press forward in the face of all opposition, refusing to be downed by untoward circumstances, thus making stepping-stones of what some would find to be insurmountable stumbling blocks. The gentleman whose life history is herewith, we hope, accurately and succinctly set forth, is a conspicuous example of one who has lived to good purpose and achieved a definite degree of success in the special sphere to which his talents and energies have been directed.

Walter G. Parry, one of the leading attorneys of Winchester and Randolph county, was born in Richmond, Indiana, March 30, 1873. He is a son of George and Anna (Larsh) Parry, both natives of Wayne county, Indiana. The Parry family came from Pennsylvania, and the Larsh family from New Jersey, both being pioneer settlers of Wayne county, Indiana. George Parry learned the plasterer's trade in early life, which he followed for some time, but devoted the major portion of his life to farming. The family came to Randolph county over a quarter of a century ago and settled on a farm near Lynn, where our subject lived until he was seventeen years of age, then removed to the city of Winchester where he became connected with the offices of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad, with which he remained for three years in various capacities, at different points along the line.

On October 18, 1891 Mr. Parry married Hattie Belle Monks, a daughter of Richard and Margaret (Fraze) Monks, of Winchester. To this union two sons were born, Robert L., and James R. The elder is associated with his father; the younger is attending school.

Mr. Parry received the equivalent of a high school education in his youth and this has been materially added to through close application at home and by actual contact with the world. Deciding that his true bent lay along legal lines he entered the law office of J. S. Engle, now judge of the courts. This was in 1892 and our subject made rapid progress, completing the course in shorter time than usual, and was admitted to the bar in 1894. He then formed a partnership with Mr. Engle which continued with much success until September, 1899, when F. S. Caldwell became a member of the firm, the new firm continuing with growing business until 1908 when Mr. Engle was elected to the judgeship. Then the firm of Caldwell & Parry was formed which continued with satisfactory results until September 1, 1913 when Mr. Caldwell became a judge of the appellate court of the state of Indiana. Since that time Mr. Parry has carried on his practice alone, practicing in all the state and federal courts. He has been very successful with all kinds of cases, is careful, painstaking, persistent and vigilant and always has the interest of his client at heart. He keeps fully abreast of the times in all matters of jurisprudence and late decisions and statutes.

Politically, he is a Republican and has been active and influential in public matters. He has three times been secretary of the Republican County Central Committee, and in the fall of 1906 was elected mayor of the city of Winchester, and he served one term, being the first mayor under the new codification, serving three years and four months, during which time much was done for the permanent material and moral good of the town. He has proven himself to be a conscientious, honorable and faithful public servant. He has always actively participated in local, district and state politics, and has been a frequent delegate to county, district and state conventions. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and he and his family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. He is a member of the Randolph club and an earnest advocate of good, healthy athletics, and a thoroughly public-spirited gentleman.

The first brick street paving in Winchester was done during Mr. Parry's administration as mayor, and was brought about largely through his influence.

WILLIAM Y. PUCKETT.

This well-known citizen is another of the old soldiers who went out to fight their country's battles a half century ago. What a splendid sight it is at the present day to see a company of these honored veterans go by on Decoration Day or the Fourth of July, in their blue uniforms and their battered flags flying. But they will all be gone in a few more years, and nothing will be left but a memory. That memory should be something more than a sound. Their deeds should be perpetuated in song and story, in monument and perpetual commemoration, so that future generations may draw inspiration from their patriotism and gallantry.

William Y. Puckett, of Winchester, Randolph county, has had an eminently successful, active and useful business career. He has played his part well in the general development of his town and county, and as a result of his public spirit, his genial address and obliging nature he enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him, having a wide acquaintance throughout the locality of which this volume treats. He was born in Winchester, Indiana, February 23, 1843. He is a son of Benjamin and Sarah (McNees) Puckett. The father came with his parents, Joseph and Mary Puckett, when a small boy, from their home in Pennsylvania, having made the long overland journey in wagons when most of the states comprising the Middle West were only sparsely settled. This family located on a farm in Randolph county, Indiana, near the town of Buena Vista. The father was a physician, was very popular among the pioneers, practicing in Winchester for a period of thirty-six years, being one of the best known and most successful physicians in this part of the state in his day and generation. Politically, he was a Republican and was active in the affairs of his party. His death occurred on September 18, 1871, his wife having preceded him to the grave twenty-three years, dying on July 23, 1849, when the subject of this sketch was six years old. He was one of six children the others being Luther G., of Winchester; Jehu N., deceased; Hardy H., deceased; Sarah and Mrs. Adolph Rocheleau, both of Winchester.

William Y. Puckett was reared in Winchester and here he has been content to spend his life. He received his education in the common schools and in the old Winchester Academy. He has engaged in various pursuits. In later years he became a general contractor, especially of sewer and street construction. He built practically all of the sewerage system of Winchester. He has been very successful in a business way, having managed well and dealt fairly with his fellow-men. He owns a finely improved and productive farm of sixty-one acres, four and one-half miles southwest of Winchester which he superintends.

Mr. Puckett has been twice married, first, on February 23, 1872 to Belinda Monks, daughter of Scott and Crestilla Monks, an old family of Randolph county. To this union two children were born—Benjamin and Edward, both now deceased. The death of the wife and mother occurred on August 11, 1883. On September 19, 1885 Mr. Puckett married Sarah Green, daughter of William and Tenie (Bowers) Green, a highly respected family of this county. To this second union one daughter was born, Bernice E., who is at home with her parents; she was graduated from the Winchester high school, class of 1912.

Mr. Puckett has always been a loyal Republican and has been active in public matters since reaching manhood. He has a most praiseworthy record as a member of the city council of Winchester for the past twenty-five years during which time he has done as much as any other man for the general upbuilding of the city and the protection of its interests. He was instrumental in securing the fine sewerage system, good water works for the city and in securing the paving of all the principal streets with brick.

Mr. Puckett was the last president of the town board of Winchester, before it became an incorporated city.

During the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry for three months, at the expiration of which he enlisted in Company K, of the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth regiment for one year, in which he served most faithfully, until the close of the war, in the army of the Cumberland and the East, participating in many hotly contested engagements, but he was never wounded or taken prisoner. He is a member of the Nelson Trusler Post No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic. Fraternally, he belongs to the Improved Order of Red Men. He owns an attractive and well-furnished home at 332 South Main street, Winchester, of which city he is regarded as one of the most substantial citizens.

SQUIRE COLUMBUS BOWEN.

Success is only achieved by the exercise of certain distinguishing qualities and it cannot be retained without effort. Those by whom great epoch changes have been made in the political and industrial world began early in life to prepare themselves for their peculiar duties and responsibilities, and it was only by the most persevering and continuous efforts that they succeeded in rising superior to the obstacles in their way and reaching the goal of their ambition. Such lives are an inspiration to others who are less courageous. Judging from the record of Squire Columbus Bowen, of Randolph county, he carefully laid the foundation in the beginning of his career for large future success, much of which he has achieved, as a glance at his life history will indicate.

Mr. Bowen was born in 1848 in Randolph county, Indiana, and is the youngest son of Ephraim L. and Ruth (Dwiggins) Bowen. The father was born in Greensfork township, this county, March 20, 1819. His parents were Ephraim and Hannah (Hale) Bowen. Ephraim, Sr., was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, in August, 1759, and his wife was born in Maryland in 1777; they each came to Ohio when young and were married there. They were the first white couple to settle in Randolph county, Indiana, having come here on October 22, 1814. They founded a vast stretch of woods where the axe had done but little execution and wild game of all kinds was plentiful. To the senior Ephraim Bowen and wife the following children were born, namely: Catherine, John, Nancy, James C., Squire, Rebecca, Hannah, Rachael and Ephraim L. Thus for an entire century the Bowens have been well-known citizens of this locality which they have helped develop.

Ephraim L. Bowen grew up on the home farm where he remained until nineteen years of age, when he married Ruth Dwiggins, who was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1818, and was the youngest of a family of seven children, namely: Jane, Lydia, Ann, Sarah, Mary, Elizabeth and Ruth, all girls. Mr. Bowen and wife settled on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres that his father had given him. Here he prospered as a general farmer and added to his original farm until he had three hundred and eighty-five acres. About 1890 he bought a ten-acre tract on which stood a fine residence in which he spent the rest of his life, retiring from active farming in 1895, and dying June 20, 1901. He was twice married, and to his first union eight children were born, named as follows: James, William and John are all deceased; Squire C., subject of this sketch; Elizabeth married John C. Wise; Hannah married Henry Wise; Elmira married James Peele and Jane married John W. Jackson. After a married life of twenty years the mother of the above named children died, August 5, 1858. Just prior to the commencement of the Civil war in the early sixties, Mr. Bowen married Mrs. Anna J. Corbett, widow of Alfred T. Corbett and daughter of John and Mildred (Tharp) Thompson. She was born in North Carolina, December 16, 1827, and came to Randolph county, Indiana, with her parents when a child. To this second union four children were born, all of whom are deceased, namely: Julian M. died in 1885, at the age of twenty-four years; Rosa died in 1914; Lula died in 1887, and Clarence E., whose death occurred in 1892. The mother of these children passed away in 1899.

Throughout his life Ephraim L. Bowen took a lively interest in public improvements, and contributed largely to the enterprises having for their object the ultimate benefit of the county. He never felt political ambition, but yet consented to serve his fellow citizens as trustee three terms and as assessor two terms. He was a Republican, was a pronounced anti-slavery advocate in earlier years, and became one of the first adherents of the Republican party upon its organization. He was a worker for temperance and in his daily life fully exemplified the principles he held. As a member of the Christian church he led a consistent life, and as a worthy citizen none stood higher than he in the community in which he lived. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was identified with Bethel lodge, No. 250. He helped all his children to a good start in the world and he was proud of his many grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Squire C. Brown grew to manhood on the home farm in Greensfork township and received a common school education. He has devoted his active life to general farming and stock raising and has been exceptionally successful. He is now owner of two valuable and well improved farms of two hundred and seventy-five acres and desirable property in Spartanburg. He is a stockholder in the Greensfork Township Bank and the Lynn Banking Company. He has been very successful in his life work and is one of the substantial and progressive citizens of his locality.

Politically, Mr. Bowen is a Republican, but has never been especially active in public affairs. Religiously, he belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Bowen was married on March 7, 1885, to Philena Ross, who was born in Greensfork township, this county, March 18, 1854. She is a daughter of Timothy and Susannah Ross. The father was born in 1819 in Virginia where he spent his early years, finally coming to Indiana and locating in Randolph county where his death occurred in 1865. His wife was born in Greensfork township, this county, February 12, 1826, and died September 9, 1895. Mrs. Bowen grew to womanhood in her native community and received a common school education.

To our subject and wife three children were born, named as follows: Florence Ruth, born January 14, 1886, and married Lester Taylor. They are the parents of two children, Mervyn Bowen Taylor and Squire Lesley Taylor; Harry E., was born December 21, 1889 and died November 9, 1907, age 17 years, 10 months, 18 days, and Wanda E., was born April 26, 1892 and died January 28, 1893, age 9 months, 2 days.

GEORGE W. BROWNE.

In the course of a long, industrious and interesting life, George W. Browne, now living in retirement in his attractive and modernly appointed home in Winchester, Randolph county, has learned many valuable lessons and has been of great help to those with whom he has come into contact. The reason he has been able to give up the active duties of life at an earlier age than many men is because he has always been persistent and energetic, at the same time using his thinking powers. He has kept abreast of the times in all that pertained to his chosen line of endeavor—agriculture and stock raising—and he is one of our most substantial and large land owners. During his residence here of thirty-five years he has done much for the general upbuilding of White River township and has so ordered his life as to gain and retain the good will and esteem of all.

Mr. Browne hails from the "dark and bloody ground" country, his ancestors having been excellent Kentucky stock, and his birth occurred in Bourbon county, that state, February 4, 1849. He is a son of John A. and Ellen (Whaley) Browne. When our subject was about three years old the family moved from Bourbon county to Grant county, Kentucky, where he grew to manhood, assisting his father with the general work on his farm there. In the meantime he attended the country schools.

Mr. Browne was married in Grant county, Kentucky, on December 21, 1869, to Emma Burroughs, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Edmondson) Burroughs, and in the fall of 1878 he removed with his family to Randolph county, Indiana, and settled on a farm in White River township, and here he soon became a leading farmer and stock man, developing one of the choice farms of the township. His land now consists of four hundred and eighty acres, all in White River township. It is well improved in every respect, fertile, and on it stand substantial and convenient buildings. For many years he was one of the largest stock feeders of the community. In 1907 he left the farm and moved to Winchester where he owns a fine residence at 524 South Meridian street. He has earned his splendid estate through his own efforts, the exercise of sound judgment, proper principles and industry, and has the name of having always dealt honestly with his fellow men.

To Mr. and Mrs. Browne nine children have been born, namely: John W. is married and is farming in White River township; Thomas G. is also farming in this township; Charles N. is married and living in Winchester; Minnie and Mary are at home; Frank M. is married and is farming in White River township; Sarah is at home; Eva is now the wife of Robert Jackson, a farmer of this township; Bonnie is at home.

Politically, Mr. Browne has always been a Republican, but he has never sought or held public office. He is a brother of General Thomas Browne, who, for several terms, represented this district in Congress and was for many years one of the leading men of this section of Indiana.

EDGAR L. MONKS.

Deeds are thoughts crystallized, and according to their brilliancy do we judge the worth of a man to the country which produced him, and in his works we expect to find the true index to his character. The study of the life of the American representative never fails to offer much of pleasing interest and valuable instruction, developing a mastering of expedients which have brought about most wonderful results. Edgar L. Monks, well-known groceryman in Winchester for many years, now engaged in the loan, real estate and insurance business here, is a worthy representative of that type of American character and of that progressive spirit which promotes public good in advancing individual prosperity and conserving popular interests. Members of the Monks family have long been prominently identified with the affairs of Randolph county, and while their endeavors along material lines have brought them success they also advanced the general welfare by accelerating industrial activity.

Mr. Monks was born December 15, 1868 in White River township, Randalph county. He is a son of Charles N. and Evoline (Reed) Monks, both parents born in the same township and county, mentioned above, each representing sterling old pioneer families, and here they grew to maturity, received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded, and here they were married, and here they spent their lives successfully engaged in general agricultural pursuits. The death of Charles N. Monks occurred on February 12, 1900. His widow is still living on the old home farm in Washington township. Besides our subject they were the parents of one other child, Nathan R. who is operating the home farm.

Edgar L. Monks grew to manhood on the farm and assisted his father with the general work during crop seasons, and during the winter months he attended the district schools, later the Valparaiso State Normal. He began life for himself by teaching in the district schools of the county, which he continued with great success for a period of ten years, his services being in much demand. Finally tiring of the school room he turned his attention to the grocery business in Winchester for a period of five years, during which he enjoyed an excellent trade as a result of his fair and courteous dealings with his many customers, and he always carried a good line of fancy and staple groceries. In 1906 he discontinued the grocery business and engaged in the loan, real estate and insurance business in Winchester, with offices in the Knights of Pythias building, and he has built up a large and growing business.

Mr. Monks was married three times, first, on June 30, 1894. to May Chapman, daughter of William and Ellen (Kizer) Chapman, of Winchester. To this union one son was born, Reed C., now a high school student. The wife and mother died April 13, 1899. On January 15, 1906 Mr. Monks married Sarah F. Bales, daughter of William D. and Rebecca (Jackson) Bales, of Randolph county. She survived but a few months, her death occurring on July 9, 1906. Our subject's last marriage took place on October 29, 1909, when he espoused Sarah J. Heaston, daughter of Abram and Margaret (McIntire) Heaston, both old pioneers families.

Mr. Monks owns a good farm in Washington township to which he gives considerable attention in addition to his other business.

Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and also belongs to the Sons of Veterans, by virtue of the fact that his father was a gallant soldier for a period of three years in the Union army during the Civil war, a member of Company C, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. Our subject is a Republican and he has long been active in the affairs of his party, but never an office seeker.

THOMAS F. MOORMAN.

The name of Thomas F. Moorman, banker, agriculturist and all-around man of affairs needs no introduction to the readers of this volume, he having for a number of decades been one of the leading financiers in this section of Indiana, one of this county's most deserving and representative native sons and one who has done much toward the later-day progress of the city of Winchester. Mr. Moorman's extensive business interests are the legitimate fruitage of consecutive effort, directed and controlled by good judgment and correct moral principles. He has forged his way to the front over obstacles that would have thwarted men of less heroic mettle, gradually extending the limits of his intellectual horizon until he is not only one of the leading business men of his county but also one of the most symmetrically developed mentally, having always been a student and kept fully abreast of the times, and one of the most influential in civic and social circles. Taken as a whole his career presents a series of continued successes rarely equalled in this locality. In the most liberal acceptation of the phrase, he is the architect of his own fortune, although springing from a family of noted bankers, yet he preferred carving out his own career with as little assistance as possible, and his entire business record has been such as to entitle him to the high esteem in which he is universally held.

Mr. Moorman was born in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, Indiana, May 28, 1852. He is a son of Thomas Moorman, who was born in North Carolina, March 13, 1815, and in 1821 he was brought by his parents to Randolph county, Indiana, who settled four miles west of the present city of Winchester, and were thus among the earliest pioneers of this county. They found here a wilderness, indeed, where the ring of the axe had yet been but little heard, for their neighbors were few and far between. Amid such an environment Thomas Moorman grew to manhood, knowing the meaning of hard work on the farm and he was denied the liberal education which he so much desired. In 1838 he entered land in Stoney Creek township, where he was engaged successfully in farming until 1865, when he removed to Winchester and became connected with the Winchester Bank, which connection he retained until 1878, when he became vice-president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, with which he remained until his death, which occurred on December 23, 1905.

On April 19, 1838, Thomas Moorman married Eunice Diggs, who was born on a farm two miles west of Winchester, April 19, 1821. She was a daughter of William Diggs, who was an early settler of this county. Her death occurred December 9, 1892. She was a woman of beautiful Christian faith and fortitude. Seven children were born to Thomas and Eunice Moorman, namely: Thomas F., subject of this sketch; Tarlton W., born April 11, 1839, died September 22, 1860; Agnes, born April 30, 1842, died October 13, 1860; William D., born August 25, 1844, died December 26, 1848; Hannah married William P. Marlatt, who became an employee of the government at Indianapolis; she was born April 30, 1848; Hiram D., born March 7, 1855; William A., born January 5, 1860, became a banker at Portland, Indiana.

Thomas F. Moorman, of this review, grew to manhood in his native county and received his early education in the schools of Winchester, which he attended until eighteen years of age; he then went to Richmond, Indiana, for the purpose of obtaining a more extended education, but was compelled by illness to abandon the plan, and consequently he returned home to labor upon the farm, and he continued general farming until 1872, when he located in Winchester, assuming a position in the Winchester Bank. Upon the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, in 1878, he was elected cashier, which responsible position he held to the satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons of the bank until the expiration of its charter, in 1898, or a period of twenty years. During that time he did much to increase the prestige and substantial growth of the institution, rendering it one of the sound and safe banks of this section of the state, and to his good management and financial experience belongs the credit of taking the bank successfully through the panics of 1882 and 1893. He has also long been interested in a bank at Union City, Randolph county, and in one in Portland, Indiana, and he is still a director in the Farmers and Merchants Bank, of which he declined to continue as cashier when the bank was reorganized in 1898. Aside from the banking business, he is also interested in agriculture, owning three large, productive and well-improved farms in Randolph county, and has considerable valuable city property. At one time he owned farming land of more than one thousand acres. His three farms, which lie in White River and Washington townships, contain over five hundred acres. Since 1908 his large agricultural interests have occupied his time and attention almost exclusively, and he has carried on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. In 1893 he erected the magnificent and substantial block at the northeast corner of the public square in Winchester, which is still one of the best commercial blocks in the city, and he has a beautiful home at 414 South Main street. He also erected the Masonic, the Knights of Pythias and the Red Men's blocks.

Mr. Moorman was married December 4, 1877, to Elvira A. Hiatt, a lady of many estimable characteristics. She is a daughter of A. R. and Mary A. (Clark) Hiatt, the former for many years one of the highly respected and influential merchants of Randolph county, where Mrs. Moorman grew to womanhood and received her education. Allen R. Hiatt was born February 20, 1829, and died October 22, 1910. Mary A. (Clark) Hiatt was born November 8, 1829, and died April 29, 1912. Mrs. Moorman was born near Winchester, September 21, 1851. To our subject and wife three children have been born, all of whom graduated from the Winchester high school, namely: Walter H., born March 4, 1879, married Otho F. Farlow, and his death occurred September 27, 1907; Herbert R., born December 28, 1883, married Nellie Butler, and he is an electric engineer in the employ of the New York Telephone Company, stationed at Buffalo, New York; Lester F., born November 2, 1887, married Horace Marshall; he is a rising young lawyer of Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Moorman are leading members of the Society of Friends, of which he became, years ago, treasurer of the quarterly meeting, and one of the trustees of the yearly meeting, and has been a member of the board of trustees for over thirty years. Politically, he is an ardent Republican and has been deeply interested in public matters, and he served two terms in the city council. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, and has filled all the chairs in the lodges, and for two years was worthy patron of the Eastern Star. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. To show the undoubted confidence the philanthropist, James Moorman, had in him, it may be well to state that he was appointed administrator of the philanthropist's estate, which was valued at over a half million dollars, and was also elected by the testator as one of the trustees of the Orphans' Home, which is located just west of Winchester. He is a plain, unostentatious gentleman, charitable, broad-minded, genial and neighborly.

HENRY WISE.

Although born under alien skies and taught to revere a flag other than the Stars and Stripes, nevertheless Henry Wise, one of the venerable agriculturists and public-spirited citizens of Randolph county, loved his adopted country so well that he risked his health, business chances, even life itself, in our great war between the states that the national union might not be disrupted; and this is not to be wondered at when we learn that he comes of a sterling race that produced the redoubtable Iron Chancellor, universally regarded as one of the greatest statesmen of the world, past or present, in other words, he came of a race of fighters in periods of war, when the fabled Mars strides menacingly up and down the welkin. But men who have such stick-to-itive qualities that they seldom give up any undertaking until the coveted goal is reached cannot be other than helpful and successful wherever they deign to cast their lots; therefore, the German people have been of great assistance to us in forwarding our civilization, in clearing the wilderness from the various states of the Union, in conquering our enemies and building solidly the foundations of our various institutions.

Mr. Wise was born May 5, 1838, at Oppenrod, Germany, and is a son of Melchiar and Elizabeth (Fellig) Wise, both natives of the Fatherland, where they grew to maturity, were educated and married and there spent their lives engaged in farming. There also Henry Wise grew to manhood and attended school, and when about sixteen years of age he emigrated to the United States, reaching our shores on February 11, 1854. He came to the central states and found work in a foundry in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he remained six months, then took up carpentering at Greenville, that state, for a year and one-half, after which he farmed six months, then came to Randolph county, Indiana, and here worked on a farm and attended school. At the age of twenty years he rented a farm, but met with bad luck and began working by the month again and continued going to school, but he has engaged continuously in general farming and stock raising ever since with the exception of the war period. However, he is now living practically retired.

Mr. Wise enlisted August 19, 1862, in Company F, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and saw much hard service, but proved to be an excellent soldier. He was in the battle at Richmond, Kentucky, Chickasaw Bayou, Siege of Vicksburg and the battles incident to the same, was on a campaign through Arkansas, then fought at Carthage, afterwards was sent to Texas and was in the Red River expedition, then fought at Natchez, was in the Mobile campaign, also that of Pensacola, Florida. It was his regiment that opened the famous Vicksburg campaign under General Grant. He relates very vividly the awful scenes of that siege. He was honorably discharged at Mobile, Alabama, July 5, 1865. He was never wounded or captured, but sustained an injury to his left shoulder by a fall. After returning home he resumed farming and was successful with advancing years, and at one time owned three hundred acres of valuable land and large herds of good stock. Old age coming on, he being now seventy-five years old, he discontinued active farming and has lived practically retired for the past ten years, now owning but ninety acres of land, which is all he cares to manage. He has a good home and well improved farm and is very comfortably fixed in his declining years as a result of his good management and hard work of former days. Politically he is a Republican and was the first member of the Greensfork township advisory board. He is a member of the Methodist church.

Mr. Wise was married August 18, 1862, to Hannah L. Bowen, who was born in Greensfork township, Randolph county. She is a daughter of Ephraim L. Bowen and wife, who live on the farm in this township which was entered from the government by his grandfather, and here Mrs. Wise grew to womanhood and had the usual educational advantages of the early days here. To our subject and wife the following children have been born: Elnora, wife of Michael Lahey; John married Dora Moore; Elizabeth is the wife of John Hart; Hattie is the wife of Uriah Dowlar; Ulrie married Minnie Powder; Florence, deceased. The Wise family belongs to the agricultural class and are each substantial citizens and owners of well-improved homes.

NATHAN U. STRAHAN.

It is a good sign when a county like Randolph can boast of so many of her enterprising agriculturists, business men and public officials who are native sons, for it indicates that here are to be found all the opportunities necessary to insure success in the material affairs of life and that her native sons, unlike so many from various sections, have found it to their advantage to remain at home. They have been wise in doing this for nature has offered the husbandman unusual advantages here and seldom fails to reward the honest worker with gratifying results, and when the tillers of the soil are prosperous, all lines of business flourish, consequently not only the farmers succeed in the locality of which this volume treats, but also the merchants millers, lumbermen, stock dealers, and others, and the county ranks well with the thriving sections of this or any other state.

One of our well-known, successful and useful native sons is Nathan U. Strahan, ex-sheriff of the county, who was born on January 4, 1864 in Nettle Creek township. He is a son of Samuel R. and Martha (Hunt) Strahan, both parents natives of Fleming county, Kentucky, where they grew to maturity, received such educations as the early day schools afforded and there were married, and continued to reside until in the early fifties they left the "dark and bloody ground country" and removed with their three children to West River township, Randolph county, Indiana, but soon afterward moved to Nettle Creek township. There they became well established through their industry, working hard and enduring not a few privations and hardships, like most early settlers in any country, but they succeeded nevertheless. There Samuel R. Strahan engaged successfully in general farming and stock raising. His family consisted of eleven children, five of whom are living, namely: Russell P., of Muncie, Indiana; Basil H. lives at Parker, Randolph county; Dr. Charles S. lives at Galesburg, Kansas; Nathan U., of this review; Hattie M., who married W. French lives in Indianapolis. The mother of these children passed away in March, 1896, the father surviving until in February, 1900.

Nathan U. Strahan grew to manhood on the home farm in Nettle Creek township, being sixteen years of age in 1879 when he removed with the family to White River township, this county. He received his education in the public schools of his locality. He remained on the home place until his marriage on April 2, 1888 to Mary E. Wolfe, a daughter of John I. and Malinda (Pegg) Wolfe, a substantial Randolph county family, and here Mrs. Strahan grew to womanhood and received her education. To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Ethel, Orla, Verna and Esther, all at home.

After his marriage Mr. Strahan engaged in farming a year and was then appointed sexton of Fountain Park Cemetery, which position he held three years with satisfaction to all concerned. He then went to Indianapolis in 1892 and worked for a railroad company one year, after which he returned to White River township, his native county and resumed farming, finding the country more to his taste than the hurry and worry of the state capital. He continued general farming and stock raising with a large measure of success attending his efforts until 1910 when he was elected sheriff of Randolph county. He served two years in this important office in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. Leaving the farm he removed to Winchester where he still resides. He was at one time assistant assessor of White River township, proving to be a most faithful and conscientious public official. Since the expiration of his term of office as sheriff in January, 1913 he has devoted his attention to overseeing his finely improved and productive farm of over two hundred acres in White River township, two miles northwest of Winchester. Politically he has always been a loyal Republican, taking an active part in public affairs. He has frequently served as a member of the Republican county committee. Fraternally he is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, having been a member of the same for twenty-three years. He has also been a member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle for a period of twenty-one years, and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for twelve years.

Mr. Strahan is a progressive citizen and favors public improvements of all kinds, good roads, schools, etc.

JOHN C. HENNING.

Randolph county has been fortunate in the character of her public officials, as a rule, the strongest men of the county being elected. This is due to the fact that all her citizens are public-spirited and are willing to do whatever they can to further the best interests of the county, not caring to leave the affairs of the same to idlers and ne'er-do-wells, so the best citizens are accustomed to seek the county offices; another thing, the voters of the county refuse to endorse the candidacy of anyone who is not a strong-minded, clean-living man, one whom they know they can trust to look after the best interests of the locality.

John C. Henning, the present sheriff of Randolph county, is one of the able and popular county officials at this writing, and although he has been incumbent of the office less than a year, he has shown himself to be eminently fitted for the same and is popular with his constituents and all concerned. He was born September 13, 1861, in Darke county, Ohio. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Finfock) Henning. The father was born in Pennsylvania and the mother in Miami county, Ohio. John Henning devoted his life to general farming. He left the Keystone state and came to Darke county, Ohio, in 1834 with his parents, being then six years old, his birth having occurred on May 9, 1828. He died June 20, 1912. His wife was born in 1837, and died in March, 1904.

John C. Henning grew to manhood on his father's farm and there assisted with the general work when a boy. He received a practical education in the district schools. He was married on December 20, 1883, to Mary C. Stump, a daughter of Adam and Catherine (Cole) Stump, of Darke county, Ohio. To this union three sons have been born, also an equal number of daughters, named as follows: Bessie P., now the wife of Newton Wilkinson, deputy sheriff of Winchester; Charles G., of Hartford City; Edith and Flora are both deceased; John Raymond is telegraph operator at Millgrove, Indiana; James W. is at home.

John C. Henning left Darke county, Ohio, in 1884, where he had been successfully engaged in farming since a young man, at that time selling his farm and removing to Union City, Indiana, where he was on the police force from 1906 to 1909, when he was elected marshal of that place, serving three years, giving the people there eminent satisfaction in both positions. In the fall of 1912 he was elected sheriff of Randolph county and took office January 1, 1913. He has so far proven an alert, able and conscientious officer. At that time he moved to the sheriff's residence in Winchester.

Politically, Mr. Henning is a loyal Democrat and active in the affairs of the party. He enjoys the distinction of being the first Democrat elected sheriff of this county since the year 1854. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of the Golden Eagle.

BADER S. HUNT, M. D.

The life of the scholarly or professional man seldom exhibits any of those striking incidents that seize upon public feeling and attract attention to himself. His character is generally made up of the aggregate qualities and qualifications he may possess, as these may be elicited by the exercise of the duties of his vocation or the particular profession to which he belongs. But when such a man has so impressed his individuality upon his fellow men as to gain their confidence and through that confidence rises to high and important standing he is deserving of a great deal of credit. Dr. Bader S. Hunt, of Winchester, is one of the scholarly men of Randolph county, who, not content to hide his talents amid life's sequestered ways, has, by the force of will and a laudable ambition, forged to the front in a responsible and exacting calling and earned an honorable reputation in one of the most important branches of human service. His life has been one of hard study and research from his youth and since maturity of laborious professional duty; and the high standing which he has attained is evidence that he possesses the qualities that afford the means of distinction under a system of government in which places of honor and usefulness are open to all who may be found worthy of them.

Doctor Hunt was born December 13, 1868, near Union Port, Randolph county, Indiana. He is a son of Giles P. and Elmira (Botkin) Hunt. His parents were born in this county and here grew to maturity, were educated in the early-day schools and were married here. The mother is a daughter of Dr. J. W. Botkin, also a native of Randolph county, born in 1819, and was thus a pioneer child, and here he practiced medicine for a period of sixty years, a fine type of the old school doctor. His death occurred at the age of eighty-two years. He was one of the first white children born in this locality. His daughter, Elmira, was born September 5, 1847, and she is now living in Winchester. Giles P. Hunt was born January 12, 1843, and his death occurred October 30, 1905. He was a successful farmer. Politically, he was a Republican. He was a member of Company D, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, enlisting in 1861 under Capt. John Ross, and he served three years in a faithful and praiseworthy manner.

To Giles P. Hunt and wife six children were born, namely: Dr. Bader S., of this sketch; Mary is the eldest daughter; Morton is deceased; Emma is living at home; James is deceased; the youngest child died in infancy, unnamed.

Dr. Bader S. Hunt grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his early education in the common schools, and was graduated from the Winchester high school in 1889. He then entered Rush Medical College in Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1894, and in 1902 he took a post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic Institute. In 1894 he began the practice of his profession in Winchester and has remained here to the present time, enjoying a liberal patronage from the first, and he has long since taken his place in the front rank of leading medical men of this section of the state. He practiced alone until 1910, when his brother, Dr. Morton Hunt, joined him, but his death occurred two years later, and since then our subject has remained alone. He has ever been a deep student of all that pertains to the medical profession and is well abreast of the times.

Doctor Hunt was married October 30, 1894, to Winifred Thomas, who was born in Randolph county, September 1, 1870, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of John W. and Eliza (Aker) Thomas. Her Grandfather Thomas came from Missouri, and Grandfather Aker was a native of Virginia. He located in Randolph county in pioneer days and opened the first store in this locality, it being the only one between the cities of Richmond and Fort Wayne. Mrs. Hunt, after graduating from the Winchester high school in 1889, entered the Conservatory of Music at Cincinnati, Ohio, and subsequently took a special course in vocal music, also the violin, in Indianapolis. She is a talented musician, and a lady of refinement and many estimable attributes, a favorite in the best social circles of the county.

The union of the Doctor and wife has been graced by the birth of two children: Frances E., born February 5, 1905, is attending school; and Mary Martha, born June 14, 1909.

Politically, Doctor Hunt is a Republican and has long been active in the ranks and influential; in fact, is a local leader in the party. He is at present ably and faithfully serving as state senator from Randolph and Jay counties, and is making his influence felt for the general good of this locality, being regarded by his colleagues as an able, far-seeing and conscientious public servant, and his course so far has been entirely satisfactory to his constituents. From 1902 to 1906 he served Randolph county as health officer in a most faithful manner. He has been a member of the city council for the past eight years, during which he has done much for the general upbuilding of the city of Winchester.

Doctor Hunt is a charter member of the Randolph Club; he holds membership in the Randolph County Medical Society, the Indiana Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic Blue Lodge No. 638, and is past master of the same; he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

Doctor Hunt has not only kept in close touch with the trend of current medical thought but is also a close student of all social, political and scientific subjects, being broad-minded, full of spirit and a leader in the matters relating to the advancement of the community honored by his citizenship and the welfare of his fellow men. He is a man of decided convictions on all public questions, maintains his stand with resolute firmness and has made his influence felt in formulating and directing political policies, as well as in the various official trusts with which he has from time to time been honored. He is a plain and unassuming gentleman, yet possessing that innate dignity which stamps the true man of modern affairs, genial, obliging and never-failing courtesy, and, the genuineness of his public spirit being unquestioned, he is popular with all classes.

JOHN EDWIN LACEY.

It makes a great difference in one's life whether he earns his property by severe toil or by easy methods, or has it bequeathed to him by some industrious kinsman, for our personal habits are determined in no small measure by the manner in which we become the possessor of material things. People of all occupations should be thrifty enough to take care of what they have, no matter how they obtained it, for they have others to consider—children who have the right to demand of their parents that they save the property left to them by ancestors. Such is a family inheritance, which no member has the right to dissipate. One of the thrifty families of Randolph county who have been careful both as to how they secured their property and its retention are the Laceys, of whom John Edwin Lacey, well known real estate dealer of the town of Lynn, is a worthy representative.

Mr. Lacey was born January 3, 1862 in White River township, this county. He is a son of John A. and Mary S. (Butterworth) Lacey. The father was born in Wayne county, Indiana, May 2, 1839. John A. Lacey received very little schooling. When a young man he learned the painter's trade, and, being by nature an excellent penman he taught penmanship in White River township, also Greensfork and Washington townships for a number of years. He owned eighty acres of land in Greensfork township which he farmed. His death occurred on July 30, 1913. He married Mary S. Butterworth. She was born in Randolph county, Indiana, and here grew to womanhood and received a meager education in the early-day schools. Her death occurred April 1, 1890. She was a representative of one of the old families of this county, and both the Butterworths and Laceys have been known in this section of the state for a number of generations.

John E. Lacey grew to manhood on the farm in his native community and received his education in the common schools of his locality. After working on the farm some time he learned the painter's trade and worked as a painter and contractor for a number of years in Lynn. In 1903 he opened an insurance office here, also began dealing in the real estate business, conducting both with much success until 1911 when he sold out the insurance end of his business and has since devoted his attention exclusively to real estate, and he is a very busy man in this connection. He is regarded as one of the best judges of property both city and farm, to be found in Randolph county, and, dealing honestly and promptly with his fellow men, has won their good will and confidence.

Politically, he is a Progressive and religiously he belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Lacey was married July 7, 1888 to Nora Dell Carter, a daughter of Thomas W. and Lydia Carter. She was born October 22, 1871, in this county and here grew to womanhood and received a common school education.

To our subject and wife one child has been born, Lena E. Lacey, widow of Charles E. Cloud.

CALVIN S. ENGLE.

Realizing, with Lowell, at the outset of his career that, "New occasions teach new duties, time making ancient good uncouth, and we must up and onward," Calvin S. Engle, one of Randolph county's old and honored citizens, sought to keep fully abreast of the times in all that pertained to his special field of endeavor, and so he has prospered; and no doubt much of his material success has been due to the fact that he has been an advocate of progress in all lines, material, civic and moral, playing well his part as a citizen in this locality for more than a half century during which he has noted vast changes in every way. He represents one of our worthy pioneer families, the name Engle having been familiar throughout this county since pioneer times.

Mr. Engle was born September 9, 1844, on a farm in Washington township, Randolph county, and he now owns the farm on which he was born. He is a son of William and Letitia (Cabe) Engle, and a brother of Judge James S. Engle, a sketch of whom appears in another part of this work.

Our subject was reared on the home farm and he attended the country schools. On December 8, 1863 he left school, and enlisted in Company C, Second Regiment, Indiana Cavalry, in which he served nineteen months, lacking nine days. The regiment was in the army of the Tennessee and was with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign, and on May 9, 1864, he was captured while in advance of Sherman's army at Varnell Station, Georgia. Our subject was taken to Andersonville prison and tasted the horrors of that place for four months, when he was transferred to Charleston, South Carolina, where he was a prisoner for a month, then sent to Florence, that state, for four months, later to Wilmington, North Carolina, and there paroled on February 28, 1865. He with other Union soldiers came north to Columbus, Ohio, where Mr. Engle was furloughed, after which he came back to Randolph county. He was so emaciated by his long imprisonment that his home folks hardly knew him, and his recovery was very slow. He was not able to return to his regiment until the war was over. His furlough was extended from time to time, and he was finally mustered out July 31, 1865, when his regiment returned to Indianapolis, after it had seen much hard service in many important campaigns.

Calvin S. Engle

For a year after the war Mr. Engle remained on the home farm, and in the spring of 1866 he went to Rice county, Minnesota and bought a farm where he soon had a good foothold and there he remained for a period of seventeen years.

He was married on December 12, 1867 to Ellen Greeley, a distant relative of Horace Greeley, the famous editor and politician. She was a daughter of James and Sarah Jane (Rand) Greeley. To our subject and wife six children were born, namely: Sarah Letitia died when one and one-half years of age; Lillian married Omar Van Landingham, a farmer of White River township; Ella died when seven years old; Price died when five years of age; Alice who married J. O. Batchelor of Winchester, is also deceased; Jennie is the wife of Samuel Staudt, of Darke county, Ohio.

Mr. Engle returned from the North to Randolph county, Indiana in 1883 and rented his father's farm, the old homestead for one year, and a year later he returned to the old place where he was born. After the death of the father he bought the interests of some of the heirs and he still owns one hundred and sixty acres of the old homestead, including the old buildings there. Here he continued to reside and carry on general farming successfully until he removed to Winchester in the fall of 1898, having been elected county auditor, and he assumed office on November 17th of that year. He served in this capacity four years and during a term extension until January 1st. He has always been a Republican and always more or less active in party affairs. After his term of office expired he remained in Winchester. He owns besides the old home place seventy-six acres in White River township, all good and well-improved land. The last mentioned land lies southeast of the county-seat. He lives retired but looks after his farms in a general way.

Mr. Engle's first wife died on August 20, 1908, and on September 7, 1911 he married Mrs. Martha E. Johnson, daughter of Philip and Mary (Owens) Snoderly. She was born on a farm near Gordon, Darke county, Ohio. At the time of her marriage she lived in Miamisburg, Ohio. Mrs.

Engle's father was a native of North Carolina, and the mother was a native of Tennessee.

Several years ago Mr. Engle published his experiences in Andersonville in a series of well-written and interesting articles which ran several weeks in the Winchester Journal. Other Southern prisons were also included and they attracted widespread attention.

Mrs. Engle's first husband was Jacob H. Johnson, who was also a soldier in the Federal army, serving three years as a member of the Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry under the famous Phil Sheridan. Mr. Engle is a member of the Nelson Trusler Post, No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic. He was formerly a member of the Jake Jackson Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and he filled all the chairs of the same before coming to Winchester. At one time he belonged to Williamsburg Post, of this organization. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs. He holds membership with Carlos City Lodge, No. 643, in Carlos City and has passed through all the chairs of the same He and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he was for many years a member of the board of stewards, and he has always been active in church and Sunday school work.

SETH D. COATS.

In placing the name of Seth D. Coats, for more than twenty-four years president of the Randolph County Bank, in the front rank of Winchester's business men, simple justice is done to a biographical fact, universally recognized throughout the section of Indiana of which this history treats by those at all familiar with his history, for he is not only one of our most influential financiers but is a potent factor in public affairs. A man of rare soundness of judgment, wise discretion and business ability of a high order, he has managed with tactful success important enterprises and has so impressed his individuality upon the community as to gain recognition among the leading citizens and public-spirited men of affairs. What of the man and what of his work? This is the dual query which represents the interrogation at least nominally entertained whenever that discriminating factor, the public, would pronounce on the true worth of the individual. The career of Seth D. Coats indicates the clear-cut, sane and distinct character, and in reviewing the same from an unbiased and unprejudiced standpoint, interpretation follows fact in a straight line of derivation. In this publication it is consistent that such a review be entered, and that without the adulation of ornate phrases. The city of Winchester naturally takes pride in the work performed by Mr. Coats, who has stamped the mark of definite accomplishment on the highest plane of industrial activity, and consistently demands that he be given due relative precedence in a work which has to do with those who have lived and labored to good purpose in the county of Randolph, and thence permeated the great industrial and civic life of the commonwealth of Indiana, in which he stands well to the forefront in representative citizenship. His history and that of the later day progress of Winchester and vicinity is so indissolubly interwoven that they are pretty much one and the same, for he has taken a leading part in the general upbuilding of the locality for the past two decades, and no man stands higher in public esteem.

Mr. Coats was born in White River township, Randolph county, February 20, 1847. He is a son of William and Mary (Moffet) Coats. This is one of the sterling pioneer families of Randolph county and has been well and favorably known here for several generations. They are of Scotch descent and possess the characteristic thrift, integrity and perseverance of that noble race of people. Three brothers, Robert, James and William, belonging to the "House of Coats" and the family of the thread-makers of Paisley, Scotland, emigrated to North Carolina in the old Colonial period, prior to the Revolutionary war. These three brothers established homes in North Carolina and there spent the rest of their lives. John Coats, the first of the name in Randolph county, was the son of William Coats, one of the three brothers who came from Scotland. William Coats was the son of Philip Coats, of Scotland, and a sister of William Coats was the mother of Rev. John Coats, of Coatsville. Of the large family born to William Coats and wife it is known definitely that seven of them left their native state in the far southland and came to the northwest; they were John, William, Joseph, Mrs. Hepsy Wright, Mrs. Rhoda Wrench, Mrs. Hattie Harrison, and Mrs. Beanblossom. John Coats was born in North Carolina, January 20, 1788, and his death occurred September 19, 1878, at the advanced age of ninety years; he married Sally Wright in 1807; she was born September 20, 1789, and died July 11, 1875, also at an advanced age. She was a daughter of Thomas Wright. John Coats and wife came to Ohio soon after their marriage, and in 1819 moved to Randolph county, Indiana, locating on White river, and were thus among the earliest settlers here, the county still being a wilderness, with settlers few and far between. John Coats and Thomas Wright, his father-in-law, lived for a while near Covington, Ohio, upon what was later destined to be famous stone quarries.

William Coats, father of Seth D., of this sketch, was a son of John and Sarah (Wright) Coats, and his birth occurred near Covington, Ohio, May 28, 1817. He devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising and was a substantial citizen, well liked throughout his community, and he did much for the early-day progress of White River township.

Seth D. Coats grew up on the home farm in his native township, and there he assisted with the general work until he was nineteen years of age, and he received his early education in the common schools of his neighborhood, which has been greatly supplemented in later life by contact with the business world and by extensive home reading and study. He proved his courage and patriotism when but seventeen years of age by enlisting for service in the Federal army during the war between the states. He became a member of Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry on May 11, 1864, and was assigned to the Army of the Cumberland, in which he proved to be a faithful and brave soldier, and he was honorably discharged and mustered out in Indianapolis the following September, having enlisted in the one-hundred-day service. After leaving the farm, in 1866, he engaged in section work on the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad, also worked in this capacity on other roads for four years. He was then elected trustee of his native township, in which office he served four years in a most faithful and creditable manner, and during this time was also in the boot and shoe business. He built up a good trade with the surrounding country and had by this time gotten a good start. Then he turned his attention to banking, which has remained his chief vocation to the present time. He secured employment in the Randolph County Bank of Winchester, as assistant cashier. On March 5, 1891, he was elected president of this institution, which position he has held to the present time, discharging the responsible duties of the same in a manner that has reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons of the bank; in fact, his personal popularity, his able management and wise foresight have been responsible for the steady and substantial growth of this strong and solid institution. Before his election to the presidency he had served some time as cashier, and in all his positions his connection with the bank covers a period of thirty-four years.

Mr. Coats has manifested an abiding interest in the public affairs of his town and county. In the autumn of 1902 he was elected to the state senate from the joint district of Randolph and Jay counties, and during the sessions of the legislature of 1903 and 1905 he made his influence felt for the general good of his locality and the entire state, winning the hearty commendation of his constituents. He served on many of the most important committees, and was chairman of banks, trusts and savings associations during both sessions. He has been a member of the county council board since 1908, and is president of the board. He is a Republican in politics and has been loyal in his support of the party. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic, and, fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Tribe of Ben-Hur and the Knights of the Golden Eagle. He holds membership with the Randolph Club. He was reared in the Friends faith, and his wife and family belong to the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Coats was married in Winchester, November 4, 1865, to Lucinda Skiver, who was born in Randolph county February 18, 1850, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of Adam and Margaret (Shaw) Skiver, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. The father was born in 1805 and the mother in 1812, near the city of Bellefontaine. Mrs. Coats is a lady of many estimable characteristics which have won and retained for her hosts of warm personal friends.

To Mr. and Mrs. Coats have been born three children, named as follows: Oren married Dora Heaston, who died in 1908, leaving two children; he died in Winchester in August, 1913; William Oscar, the second son of our subject, is engaged in farming in White River township; the daughter, Lydia Leona, married Charles E. Reed, a druggist of Winchester. These children were all given excellent educational advantages and are all well located in life and highly respected throughout their native county.

Mr. Coats is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished, for he started out at the bottom of the ladder, which he has mounted unaided and has through entirely honorable methods become one of the leading business men of this section of the state and at the same time enjoys the confidence and respect of all classes.

ERNST E. CHENOWETH.

One of the best known and most successful of the younger members of the Randolph county bar is Ernst E. Chenoweth, of Winchester, formerly one of the most prominent educators. He has always been an assiduous student and is therefore a man of scholarly attainments and gifted by nature for a professional career, so we do not hesitate to predict for him a future replete with large success and usefulness.

Mr. Chenoweth was born November 12, 1874, at Hollandsburg, Darke county, Ohio. He is a son of John M. and Lydia A. (Bowen) Chenoweth. The father was born in Maryland and the mother in Randolph county, Indiana, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. Her parents were well-known in the early history of the county. John M. Chenoweth grew to manhood in his native state and was educated in the public schools. He came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1862, remaining about two years, then returned to the East for a short time, but came back to Randolph county. In 1863 he enlisted in Company H, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served faithfully until the close of the war, participating in the many battles of the regiment, but was never wounded or taken prisoner. After being honorably discharged from the service he returned to Indiana, and he and Lydia Bowen were married on January 14, 1867, and began housekeeping on eighty acres of land lying in the very southeastern corner of Randolph county. Soon afterwards they removed to Richmond, Indiana, and remained there two years, moving from Richmond to Hollandsburg in 1873, and in 1877 returned to the farm in Randolph county, where they continued to reside until 1909, in which year they went back to Hollandsburg, Ohio, where they still reside. The father was a tinner by trade, which he followed while a resident of Richmond and Hollandsburg, but after returning to the farm, in 1877, he engaged exclusively in general agricultural pursuits until 1909, when he retired from active life and moved to town.

To John M. Chenoweth and wife five sons and two daughters were born, namely: Cora V. is the wife of Alvin I. Hiatt, of Lynn, Indiana; Everett M. lives at home; Sarah E., who married Lewis Mikesell, is deceased; John B. resides at Lynn; Ernst E., of this sketch; Chester C. lives in Wayne county, Indiana; Squire G. is operating the old homestead. The father of these children has always been a loyal Republican, and actively interested in public matters. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Spartanburg. He and his wife belong to the Christian church.

Ernst E. Chenoweth was reared on the home farm, where he did his share of the general work during the crop seasons, and during the winter attended the public schools in his neighborhood. He was graduated from the Hollandsburg high school in 1894, after which he attended Lebanon University, at Lebanon, Ohio, for a year, then was a student at the Normal School at Danville, Indiana, completing the scientific course and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1896. He then attended the Indiana State Normal at Terre Haute for one year. Thus exceptionally well equipped for the serious work of life he began teaching in 1896; however, this was before entering the State Normal, and after leaving that institution he continued teaching for a period of seven years in the district schools of Randolph county, during which his services were in great demand. But finally tiring of the school room and believing that his true bent was in another direction, he began studying law in the summer of 1900 in the office of S. A. Canada, of Winchester, and taught in the winter, completing his law course, and was admitted to the bar in the summer of 1903. He was admitted to practice by the supreme court in 1906. He gave up teaching permanently in the spring of 1905, and engaged in the practice of law with S. A. Canada, under the firm name of Canada & Chenoweth, and they still continue, being successful from the first, and this is now recognized as one of the strongest law firms in Randolph county and one of the busiest.

Mr. Chenoweth is a member of the county and state bar associations. In the fall of 1910 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Randolph county, serving one term in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of his constituents, doing as much in those two years for the enforcement of law and order as had any other man. He was elected justice of the peace in 1905, and served a term of five years, giving satisfaction to all concerned, his decisions being noted for their uniform fairness and clear insight into the basic laws of jurisprudence and the statutes of the state of Indiana, and his decisions were never revoked at the hands of a higher tribunal. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and active and influential in local public affairs. He has been a member of the Republican County Central Committee.

Mr. Chenoweth was married August 2, 1902, to Cora B. Stapelton, a daughter of Samuel J. Stapelton, of Darke county, Ohio. To this union two children have been born, Cecil E., whose birth occurred May 22, 1903; and Dale M., born June 22, 1911.

Mr. Chenoweth is a member of the Masonic Order, including the Chapter and Council. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, including the Encampment; the Improved Order of Red Men, including the Haymakers; he also belongs to the Modern Woodmen, and the Sons of Veterans. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and are active in church and Sunday school work. His office is in the Red Men's Building, and his home on East Franklin street.

FOREST A. CHENOWETH, M. D.

Among the prominent and successful medical men of Randolph county who are deserving of conspicuous mention in a work of the province assigned to the one in hand is Dr. Forest A. Chenoweth, of Winchester, for his career has been in every way an honorable one and though strenuous there is nothing in it savoring in the slightest degree of disrepute, his relations with his fellowmen having ever been above reproach. Although his father was a physician of note and he was reared in a comfortable environment our subject is entitled to the proud American title of self-made man, being for the most part the architect of his own fortunes, for he realized at the outset that he could not win on the reputation of his father or the assistance of anyone, but must work diligently and persistently in order to advance himself; so he may feel a sense of pride in his achievements and the honorable position which he has attained among the enterprising and successful citizens of the locality in which the busy years of his active life have been spent. He comes of a distinguished old family.

Doctor Chenoweth was born February 26, 1858, in Darke county, Ohio. He is a son of John T. and Hannah V (Miller) Chenoweth, both natives of Darke county, Ohio, where they grew to maturity, were educated and married, where they resided until 1860, when they moved to Huntsville, Randolph county, Indiana, moving on in 1863, to Williamsburg, Wayne county, this state, and in 1875 located in Winchester, where they made their home until in April, 1903, when the father died. The mother still survives. The Chenoweths are an old family, the first of the name having emigrated to America in 1716 and settled in Maryland, near what is now the great city of Baltimore. There were three of them, John and his two sons, Arthur and Richard. The subject of this sketch is descended direct from the son, Arthur. From Baltimore this branch of the family settled in Virginia, Thomas, son of Arthur, having located in Berkley county, that state, and in the year 1750 he braved the wilds across the Blue Ridge mountains, locating at Maysville, Kentucky, moving on with his family in 1788 to what is now Franklin county, Ohio. John, son of Thomas, married Betsy Foster, September 6, 1807, and they settled in Darke county, Ohio, in 1818. They reared a family of twelve children, and their descendants located in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas. The family is of French origin and some were among the Huguenot refugees who fled to England and thence to Switzerland, from which country they crossed the great Atlantic to the new world about 1716. Doctor Chenoweth, of this review, is a descendant of John and Betsy Chenoweth, who located in Darke county, Ohio, in 1818. Many of the male members of the family have been well known as successful lawyers, physicians, educators and ministers, as well as bankers and commercial men.

John T. Chenoweth, father of our subject, was a physician of more than ordinary ability. He practiced his profession from 1860 until his death, and he had a record of having lost but two diptheria patients during all those years, one case after he had practiced twenty years and another after an experience of forty years, a record probably never experienced by any other physician, especially in those early days when anti-toxine and the modern methods of treating that dreaded disease were unknown. He was a man of strong character and pronounced convictions, a leader of his professional brethren and an influential man in the community.

Dr. Forest A. Chenoweth lived in Williamsburg, Wayne county, until he was twelve years of age. He attended the public schools, and after coming to Winchester he took the high school course. He began life for himself as a teacher, following that profession in Washington township during the winter of 1876-7 and taught in the winter of 1881-2 in the Round Top district in White River township, reading medicine under his father the meanwhile. In the winter of 1880-1 he attended the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, and also the winter of 1882-3. He located at Deerfield, Randolph county in 1883 for the practice of his profession, but remained there only a short time, for we find him in Winchester in August of that year, where he practiced until August, 1884, when he went to a cattle ranch in Kansas, roughing it for a year, then returned to Winchester, but soon took up his studies again in the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, from which institution he was graduated in 1886. Thus well equipped for his chosen vocation he located in Winchester, where he has since been successfully engaged in the general practice of his profession, taking his place in the front rank of the medical men of this section of the Hoosier state, building up a large and lucrative practice. He has remained a close student of all that pertains to his work and has kept well abreast of the times. He took a post-graduate course in the Post-Graduate Hospital in New York in 1898. During the early part of his career he specialized in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, but in recent years he has done a general practice.

Doctor Chenoweth was married June 8, 1887, to Anna Railsback, a daughter of Edward and Mary (Adams) Railsback, a prominent family of Oxford. The mother is a descendant of the famous Adams family of Massachusetts. The union of the Doctor and wife has been without issue.

Doctor Chenoweth is a member of the Randolph County Medical So-city, the Indiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has been president of the first named. Politically, he is a Republican, and is actively interested in local public affairs. He has been health officer of both Winchester and Randolph county. Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic Order, and has taken the degrees up to the thirty-second. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. His wife belongs to the Presbyterian church. They are prominent in the best social circles of Winchester.

HENRY D. GOOD.

By words and by actions the personality reveals its quality, its force, its direction of purpose. The invisible spirit embodies itself in signs of service and in language. Words also are deeds, and actions are symbols of the inner being which we cannot see, nor touch, nor weigh. Hence the value of a biography, which writes out a life by telling a story of what one has said and done. But since speech is forgotten and actions fade away in the clouds of a distant past, we hasten to record the happenings in the lives of men who do things well and set forth the observations on the momentous transformations from the old to the new by present-day witnesses. With such values of biography in mind, we here write briefly the salient features in the career of Henry D. Good, formerly a well-known educator and later a progressive business man who is now the able and popular treasurer of Randolph county.

Mr. Good was born in Wayne county, Indiana, December 22, 1853. He is a son of Rudolph and Sarah (Moore) Good. The father was born January 21, 1825, in York county, Pennsylvania, and the mother was born September 11, 1828, in Perry county, Pennsylvania. Rudolph Good was left an orphan in early life. He grew to manhood in his native state and came west in 1848, locating in Wayne county, Indiana. The Moore family located in that county in the year 1848. In that county the parents of our subject were married in 1850, and to them nine children were born, namely: John M. is a millwright and resides at Parker, Randolph county; Elizabeth is the wife of Joseph Ellis, of Albany, Delaware county, Indiana; Henry D., of this sketch; Mariah is the wife of Thomas L. Painter, a retired farmer of Farmland; Jacob W. is deceased; Alice is deceased; Milton is deceased; Charles A. is a contractor and lives in Arkansas; Edith May married Josiah Mills and they live at Maxville, Indiana.

The father of the above named children was a miller, and in 1869

he moved to Macon county, Illinois, where he remained about eighteen months, then returned to Randolph county and engaged in farming near Parker, later moving to the village of Maxville, this county, where he bought a mill, which he operated from 1873 to 1890, doing a large business with the surrounding country. He then retired from that line of endeavor and now he is making his home with his son, Henry D. His wife died December 25, 1900. In early life Rudolph Good was a Whig, then a Republican after that party was organized, in the middle of the fifties. He and his family are members of the Methodist church. He is now advanced in years and is an interesting talker on the pioneer times.

Henry D. Good lived with the home folks in the various localities to which they moved, and he received his education in the public schools. His parents gave their children the best advantages in schooling possible. Henry D. attended high school at Farmland for a while and was a diligent student at home. He began life for himself by teaching school in 1874, in the district schools of Randolph county, which he continued until 1888, when he was chosen principal of the Farmland high school, a position he filled with much credit for a period of four years. Later he taught four years in the Windsor graded schools, teaching in all twenty-two years, during which time his services were in great demand and he was regarded as one of the most thorough and progressive educators of the county. In 1895 he became deputy county treasurer under Joseph C. DeVoss, serving two years and four months. He then began in the grocery business in Farmland, which he continued for two years, retiring from the same in 1902, after building up a large and remunerative business. He then organized the First National Bank of Farmland and became its cashier, in which capacity he served until January 1, 1913, with eminent satisfaction to the directors and stockholders, when he resigned to become county treasurer, to which office he had been elected in the fall of 1912. However, he still retains his banking interests.

Mr. Good was married August 18, 1881, to Ida B. Branson, a daughter of Joseph B. and Catherine (Miller) Branson, of Randolph county. The father was born in North Carolina and the mother was a native of Pennsylvania. The union of our subject and wife has been without issue.

Politically, Mr. Good has been a Republican ever since he reached his majority, having been active and influential in the ranks. He was trustee of the Farmland town schools for a period of twelve years following his career as a teacher. He has served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee at various times and has been a frequent delegate to county, district and state conventions. He served as a member of the Farmland town council and was clerk of that body for six years. He has filled all positions of trust with rare fidelity and satisfaction, giving his best attention to the public interests. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Encampment and Rebekahs, is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. He and his wife belong to the Methodist church, and have always been active in church and Sunday school work.

Mr. Good still retains his home in Farmland.

J. VINING TAYLOR.

A man of naturally sound judgment and shrewd perception, gallant and thoughtful in his relations with those with whom he comes in contact, characteristics of the typical and well-bred Southerner, is J. Vining Taylor, well known official of The National Hay Association of Winchester, Randolph county. He has so ordered his career as to be eminently eligible to representation in a work of the province of the one in hand. He has risen through his exemplary personal habits, his fidelity to duty, his industry, his desire to deal fairly and promptly with his fellow men, and his name stands high in business circles with which he has come into relationship. His domestic and social relationships have ever been of the most pleasant character, and the fact that his surroundings are such as to make life enjoyable is due solely to his individual merits, his affable and courteous treatment of others and his strict adherence to justice in all his dealings.

Mr. Taylor was born in Richmond, Virginia, July 18, 1877. He is a son of Theodore F. and Florence I. (Goddin) Taylor. The father was a native of Lockport, New York. The mother was a daughter of John M. Goddin, a Southern planter, of Henrico county, Virginia. These parents are now making their home in Washington, D. C. Theodore F. Taylor was one of the substantial and influential citizens in Henrico county, Virginia, and for many years was treasurer of that county. For some time he was engaged in the wholesale commission business in the city of Richmond. He is now a public accountant and auditor for W D. Moses & Company, of Washington City.

J. Vining Taylor was reared in Richmond and educated in the public schools. But he left school when twelve years of age and went to work for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company as messenger boy in his native city. He remained there with that company for a period of ten years, during which period he worked up to the position of chief clerk of the local freight department. The road changed presidents, G. W. Stevens being elected president in 1898, at which time the main offices of the company were moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, and Mr. Taylor was transferred to the latter city as chief clerk in the freight claim department, in which he remained eighteen months, giving his usual high grade service. His eyes failing, he obtained leave of absence for six months and came to Winchester, Indiana. Here his health improved and he was induced to remain, and he became connected with the Goodrich Brothers Hay & Grain Company, with whom he remained for a period of nine years in the capacity of book-keeper and cashier. He also found time to perform the duties of assistant secretary of The National Hay Association, of which he was elected secretary and treasurer on July 29, 1909. Soon afterward he severed his connection with the Goodrich Brothers and devoted his time to his new duties with the National Hay Association, which responsible position he still holds in a manner that reflects much credit upon himself and to the satisfaction of his employers. It is the largest association of its kind in the world, becoming international by including Canada in its operations. The association is composed of nearly one thousand members, representing the hay, straw and grain interests in nearly every state in the Union and Canada.

On July 1, 1912, Mr. Taylor engaged in business with his brother-in-law, John C. Bates, in the gents' furnishing business in Winchester. He is also a stockholder in the Goodrich Brothers Hay & Grain Company, also has other business interests there.

Mr. Taylor was married in Winchester on August 10, 1899, to Elizabeth A. Johnson, daughter of Thomas H. and Viola E. (Jobes) Johnson, a prominent and influential family of Winchester, where Mrs. Taylor grew to womanhood and was educated. To our subject and wife one daughter has been born, Maurine Viola Taylor.

Fraternally, Mr. Taylor is a member of the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias and Sons of Veterans; he also belongs to the Illinois Commercial Men's Association, Travelers' Protective Association, the Winchester Business Men's Association and the Randolph Club, having been secretary of the last named for about four years. He and his wife belong to the Presbyterian church, in which he is a deacon, and they are both active in church and Sunday school work, and prominent in the social life of the city. Politically, he is a Republican and is well informed on current issues.

WERT McALLISTER.

When one farms with the care and discretion, the persistence and the application which has characterized Wert McAllister, one of the leading farmers and stockmen of White River township, Randolph county, one is bound to succeed in any community much less in that of our own, which has been so signally favored by mother Nature; for he is a man who has used his mind as well as his muscle, ever keeping up with the advance of the science of husbandry. At the same time he has tried to be a good citizen in the broadest sense of the term, always advocating measures that were calculated to make for the general uplift of the county whose interests he has ever had so much at heart.

Mr. McAllister was born June 7, 1867, in Perry township, Delaware county, Indiana. He is a son of Joseph and Sarah A. (Hiatt) McAllister. The father was also a native of Delaware county, Indiana, and spent his boyhood in the same township in which our subject was reared. The mother was a native of Montgomery county, Ohio, her birth having occurred near the city of Dayton. Her parents came to Delaware county when she was but six years of age, and the parents of our subject were married in Delaware county, and there they spent the active years of their lives on a farm, on which the father died on November 3, 1890. The mother is still living, at an advanced age, making her home in the town of Windsor.

Twelve children, all of whom grew to maturity, and married, were born to Joseph McAllister and wife, namely: Emily A., now the wife of John Hawk, of Stoney Creek township, Randolph county; Marcus A., of West River township; Francis and Franklin, twins; the former lives in Delaware county, this state, and the latter in Union township, this county; Ella is the wife of Lynn Thornburg, of Stoney Creek township; Henry is deceased; Wert, of this review; Lillie Belle, now deceased, was the wife of Sumner Swingley; Cora, deceased, was the wife of Thomas Reese; Nora is the wife of Edward Gable, of White River township; Edward lives in Liberty township, Delaware county; Alma is the wife of George Dill, also of Liberty township, Delaware county.

In 1877 Joseph McAllister and wife moved from Perry township, Delaware county, to Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, where the family home has since remained. The father was a Democrat politically, but was never an office seeker.

Wert McAllister was reared on the home farm and worked there when growing to manhood. He received his education in the district schools of his community remaining at home until his marriage, which took place on June 4, 1892, when he espoused Eva McGuire, a daughter of John H. and Sarah A. (Pursley) McGuire. The death of the mother occurred on October 4, 1900, but the father is living, making his home in the town of Farmland, Randolph county. He was formerly an extensive farmer and stock man. Politically he is a Republican, and at one time was elected county commissioner. He is also a veteran of the Civil war.

To our subject and wife have been born one son and one daughter, Chase, born November 3, 1894; and Letha May, born July 5, 1899. The son was graduated from the Lincoln high school in 1910, and the daughter is at present a student in the high school, and when she entered the high school from the eighth grade she had the highest grades of any pupil in the county. Mrs. McAllister received a good education herself and taught school for one year.

After his marriage Mr. McAllister first settled in Perry township, Delaware county, Indiana, where he farmed two years, then moved to Maxville, Randolph county, and was superintendent of the cemetery for three years. He then moved to a farm of his father-in-law in Monroe township where he farmed for two years. He then moved to the farm of John Clayton, in White River township, and operated that for four years, then moved to a two hundred acre farm, also belonging to John Clayton, in White River township where he farmed four years. He then purchased eighty-eight acres in Monroe township, which he continued to own and manage for four years, then he rented his farm and moved to another of John Clayton's farms in White River township, of two hundred acres, and expanded his farming operations. He sold his own farm in 1912 and purchased his present farm of one hundred and ten acres in White River township, four miles west of Winchester on the Muncie road, known as the old Sample farm. He is bringing his place up to an excellent state of improvement and cultivation and he raises an excellent grade of live stock and is one of the most successful general farmers in the township.

Politically Mr. McAllister is a Democrat, but he has never been an office seeker. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Farmland. His wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, of which the family are regular attendants and liberal supporters.

THEODORE SHOCKNEY.

The biography of such a man as Theodore Shockney, attorney and politician of state-wide reputation, may well serve for an example and inspiration to the youth who seriously meditates life, yet hesitates to lay the foundation for the stern realities of life which await him. He began his career under somewhat discouraging conditions, but with a persistence as rare as it was admirable, adhered to his purpose and in due time achieved notable success. The crude, inhospitable environment of his youth, however, was not without its compensation. The usual and persistent effort required to obtain liberal qualifications for professional results, in spite of adverse surroundings, develops and strengthens the mind as labor hardens and renders flexible the muscles. Not satisfied with existing conditions he determined to rise above them, and to this end he lost sight of every other consideration or made it subordinate to the object in view. Every step in his progress has been due to matured plans and well-defined purposes. By his courage and energy, he has climbed steadily and persistently and stood firmly upon each round of the ladder of success. When beginning the study of law, he determined, regardless of obstacles, to master the principles and rise above mediocrity, instead of being satisfied with a mere superficial knowledge, such as so many professional men under similar circumstances are content to acquire. So whatever success he has achieved in his notable and useful career has been the result of careful preparation as much as to innate ability, a high sense of justice, candor as a counselor, religious regard for the truth and courteous demeanor and gentlemanly conduct in all relations with his fellow men. As a practitioner or public official no charge of suspicion of any wrong doing ever tarnished his name or marred his record, his personal honor having never been compromised and his private life wholesome and exemplary, indeed his sterling worth has made him a power for good among all with whom he has come into contact, and he deserves to rank among the notable men of his generation in this section of Indiana.

Theodore Shockney, one of the best-known and most influential citizens of Union City, was born September 16, 1852, in Wayne township, Randolph county. He is a son of William P. and Jane C. (Frazier) Shockney. The father was born in Maryland, October 4, 1823, and there he spent his boyhood days and attended the common schools. When thirteen years old he came west with his father, in 1836, the family locating on a farm within four miles of Union City, Indiana. He studied medicine and practiced here and in Tipton county, ranking among the successful physicians of the old school in the pioneer days of this locality. He removed to Tipton in 1856, and there continued practice until his death, September 23, 1863. His wife was born in North Carolina, April 23, 1826, and there spent her childhood, moving with her parents, James and Nancy (Dillon) Frazier, to Randolph county, Indiana, about the same time that the Shockneys came here. Her death occurred October 1, 1862. She had received a good education for those early days, and Dr. William P Shockney was exceptionally well educated, having taken courses in literature and mathematics, and graduated in medicine from a medical college in Baltimore, Maryland. In his younger days he taught school for some time. To these parents five children were born, namely: John A. a well-known attorney, who many years ago formed a partnership with our subject in Union City; Theodore of this sketch was the second in order of birth; James N. became state agent for the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and located at Marshalltown, Iowa; Charles H. studied law and began practicing his profession at Dunkirk, Indiana; Mary J., who married Levi Cox, a farmer of Wayne county, Indiana, is now deceased. The paternal grandfather of the above named children was John Shockney, a native of Maryland, who fought in the war of 1812. Patrick Shockney, the great-grandfather, was a native of Ireland, from which country he emigrated to the United States in colonial days, and he was subsequently a soldier in the Revolutionary War.

Theodore Shockney spent his boyhood on the farm. At ten years of age he was left an orphan, and he remained on the farm until he was sixteen years of age, working for his board and clothes. He attended district school for a brief time each winter, but, being ambitious to acquire an education he studied assiduously at home, as a result he was enabled to begin teaching when but sixteen years old, and secured a district school, and he continued teaching for a period of nine years, giving eminent satisfaction despite his youth. During vacations he attended school at Winchester and Union City and spent three years in the old college at Ridgeville. He early decided upon a legal career, and with that end in view the last six years of his teaching were spent in reading law, during spare moments, under Governor Isaac P. Gray. In 1877 he entered the law office of Stanton J. Peelle at Indianapolis, remaining a year and completing his course, his preceptor being at that time a member of Congress. Mr. Shockney was admitted to the bar in 1878, upon recommendation of Judge L. J. Monks, and soon began active practice in Union City, remaining here ever since. He was successful from the first and has enjoyed a large and lucrative practice. He soon took his position in the front ranks of his professional brethren and long since has become one of the noted legal lights of Indiana. He has long been in partnership with his brother John A., under the firm name of Shockney Brothers. He has remained a close student of everything that pertains to his profession and has kept fully abreast of the times. He is an alert, painstaking, earnest and learned advocate and is a forceful and earnest pleader before a jury, his candor, logic, courtesy and eloquence equally impressing the bench.

Mr. Shockney has always taken an abiding interest in public affairs and has long been an influential leader in Randolph county. He was elected mayor of Union City in 1880, and before his term expired he was the nominee of the Republican party for representative to the state legislature, and was duly elected. In 1888 he was nominated and elected joint senator of the counties of Delaware and Randolph, and made an enviable record in the state senate, in the face of an overwhelmingly Democratic majority. The Republicans of Indiana nominated him in 1892 for lieutenant-governor, and although he made a brilliant race, went down in his first defeat with the rest of the ticket. He has been a member of nearly every state convention since he was twenty-one years of age, and was a member of the state executive committee until nominated, and without his solicitation. He has also been usually a participant in each campaign in Randolph county, making stirring speeches in almost every neighborhood. During the Ohio campaign in 1893, Mr. Shockney was extended a pressing invitation from the state committee to assist in that state, but important business affairs kept him at home. His canvass of Indiana in 1892, while a candidate for lieutenant-governor, widened an already extensive acquaintance with the foremost men of the state, and acquaintance with him means friendship, and this has continued to the present time until today he is an intimate friend of most of the leading politicians and attorneys of Indiana. As a public servant, his record was highly commendable in every respect, and his interest in behalf of this locality, while in the legislature, both as representative and senator, met the hearty approval of his constituents.

Mr. Shockney was married September 23, 1876, to a lady of culture and refinement, Emma Alice Keever, who was born in Illinois, July 19, 1858. She was a daughter of John and Abigail (Kramer) Keever, the progenitors of both having been Hollanders, from which country they emigrated to America and located in Warren county, Ohio, in an early day. Mrs. Shockney was six years old when her parents brought her to Randolph county, Indiana, where she grew to womanhood, and she received her education in the Union City high school.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Shockney was blessed by the birth of four children, two of whom are deceased, namely: Blanche, born May 16, 1878, was graduated from the local high school, later taking a two years' course in the University of Ohio at Delaware, then was graduated from Miami Commercial College at Dayton, Ohio; she was also graduated from the State Normal at Terre Haute, Indiana; owing to failing health she made an extensive trip to Europe in hopes of recuperating the same, but she was called to her eternal rest on April 19, 1912; she was a young lady of brilliant mind and of much promise. Don P., our subject's second child, was born March 28, 1880, was graduated from the Union City high school, later was graduated from Miami Commercial College at Dayton, Ohio, then spent two years in the University of Indiana at Bloomington; he is now manager of West Dale plantation in Louisiana, and is regarded as a young man of much business ability. Ava Marie, the third of Mr. Shockney's children, was born July 16, 1885, was in the graduating class of the Union City high school, where she was making an excellent record, when summoned from her studies by death on September 19, 1905; Mary Lucille, born September 29, 1895, was graduated from the local high school with a fine record, and is at this writing at home with her father. The Shockney residence is one of the modernly appointed and attractive homes in this part of the county, and has long been known as a place of hospitality to the many friends of the family. But death invaded the same, casting over it a dark pall which even time cannot dispel, the wife and mother being called to her reward in the silent land on March 26, 1913. She was a great home woman, an ideal mother and wife, and the wholesome atmosphere in which she reared her children, is clearly reflected in all their lives. She was a woman of beautiful attributes of head and heart, kind, neighborly, genial and of uniform pleasing presence, and, also possessing rare intelligence. She did much toward the large success of her husband, encouraging, counseling and sympathizing with him, which induced him to put forth his best efforts. She was greatly beloved by a wide circle of friends who will long lament her untimely departure. She was a devout member of the Christian church, in which Mr. Shockney also holds membership. Politically, he is now inclined to the progresssive movement. Personally he is a gentleman whom it is a pleasure to know, companionable, high-minded, plain and unassuming, who eminently deserves the confidence and esteem that is universally accorded him.

CLIFF G. BALES.

Randolph county was especially fortunate in the character of her pioneers, who, save in rare instances, possessed the pluck, fortitude and courage of the true Anglo-Saxon—that race which appears to delight in difficulties, because thereby opportunities are afforded to conquer them. The founders of this country were brave, strong-armed, far-seeing, God-fearing, law-abiding citizens, patriotic and true to their native or adopted land, and conscientious in the discharge of their every duty toward their fellow men. From such a people sprang Cliff G. Bales, a successful young real estate, loan and insurance man of the town of Farmland, Randolph county; for we note the fact that his great grandfather braved the wilds in this locality in pioneer days and established the family home in the face of obstacles that would no doubt have appalled us of the present generation, and he and the rest of the Baleses have ever shown themselves to be public-spirited, honorable minded, helpful people in all relations of life.

Mr. Bales was born on his grandfather's old farm in Washington township, Randolph county, October 25, 1880. He is a son of Henry S. and Louie C. (Stout) Bales, whose family consisted of three children, namely: Cliff G., of this sketch; Mabel, born February 7, 1891, resides with her parents in Traverse City; Charlotte, born December 16, 1895, is also a member of the home circle. Henry S. Bales, the father, was also born on the old Bales homestead in Washington township, this county, this having been also the birthplace of our subject's grandfather. The founder of the Bales family in this county emigrated from England with the famous historical character, William Penn. Mr. Bales first settled in North Carolina, later came to Ohio, and from there to Indiana, locating in Randolph county when white settlers were indeed few and the wilderness was the home of Indians and wild beasts. This family has done much for the general upbuilding of the county in many ways. They have, most of them, followed general farming for a livelihood, and have been known for their thrift, honesty and neighborliness. The mother of the subject of this sketch came from Ohio where she was born. The father spent his life engaged in farming in his native county.

Cliff G. Bales grew up on the home farm, and he had the advantages of a good education, having attended the local public schools, later graduating from the Winchester high school and the Indianapolis Business College.

On June 3, 1895 he married Colona Owens, daughter of William N. Owens, a successful farmer in Randolph county. Mrs. Bales is one of four children, and she grew to womanhood in her native community and received a good education in the public schools. She is the eldest of the family, the other children being named Pearl, wife of Ernest Fetters, a farmer of Randolph county, and they have two children; Robert, a mechanical engineer, was graduated from Purdue University, and now a member of the faculty of that college; he married Edith Hormell; Anna, the youngest child, was born February 17, 1893.

Mr. Bales after leaving school was for some time assistant cashier of the Farmland State Bank, in fact held that responsible position for a period of nine years, discharging his duties in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons. Since severing his connection with the above named institution he has been engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business in which he was successful from the start and now has a large, lucrative and rapidly growing business.

Politically, he is a Progressive. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he attends the Christian church. Owing to his natural ability, his honesty, and courtesy, he has an especially bright future as a business man.

JESSE L. HOPPES.

The office of biography is not to give voice to a man's modest estimate of himself and his accomplishments, but rather to leave upon the record the verdict establishing his character by the consensus of opinion on the part of his neighbors and fellow citizens. The life of Jesse L. Hoppes, who, although yet young in years, is one of the leading business men of Farmland, Randolph county, where he owns and conducts a well appointed and modern drug store, has been such as to elicit just praise from those who know him best, owing to the fact he has always been loyal to the trusts reposed in him and has been upright in his dealings with his fellow-men, at the same time lending his support to the advancement of any cause looking to the welfare of the community at large.

Mr. Hoppes was born in Jay county, Indiana, January 22, 1881. He is a son of Sylvester and Emaline (Daugherty) Hoppes, whose family consisted of five children, namely: James P., a farmer near Redkey, Indiana, married Molly Jenkins, of the same neighborhood, and they have one child, Mabel; John O., of Traverse City, Michigan, is employed at the asylum there; he married Ida Cates, of Wayne City; Anna Belle, who lives near Redkey, married Neil Carter, a farmer, and they have one child, Lucy Belle; William O., a druggist at Redkey, married Della Meanda, which union has been without issue; Jesse L., subject of this sketch, is the youngest.

Sylvester Hoppes is a native of Ohio, and when a youth he moved with the family from Fayette county, that state to near Redkey, Jay county, Indiana, where our subject's Grandfather Hoppes settled in pioneer days, and there his son Sylvester grew to manhood and took up farming which he always followed. The Hoppes family is of German descent. The parents of the mother of our subject moved from Ohio to the vicinity of Redkey when she was a child, and there established their permanent home. It was in that vicinity that the parents of our subject were married and began housekeeping; they are both still living.

Jesse L. Hoppes grew to manhood on the home farm and he received excellent educational advantages, having passed through the public schools at Redkey, then the Marion Normal and subsequently Purdue University at Lafayette, Indiana, where he made an excellent record and from which he was graduated with the class of 1908. He took a course in pharmacy and received his degree in the same.

Mr. Hoppes was married September 20, 1905 to Florence Bell Swhier, a daughter of G. W. Swhier, a retired farmer, whose family consists of eight children, all surviving at this writing. To our subject and wife one child has been born, Marjorie May, whose birth occurred on October 22, 1909. Mrs. Hoppes is also well educated, having been graduated from the Purdue University.

Mr. Hoppes went to Marion, Indiana, as a drug clerk, and he later came to Farmland where he clerked a year in a drug store, then bought a fourth interest in the Bly Botkin Drug Company, whereupon he assumed management of the same. A year later he purchased the entire business, which he has conducted to the present time with great success, enjoying one of the largest trades of any drug store in the county, and carrying an extensive and carefully selected stock of drugs and drug sundries. His store is neat and well kept, one of the best in every way in this locality, in fact, would be a credit to a city much larger than Farmland. Mr. Hoppes understands every phase of the business and honesty, carefulness and promptness as well as unfailing courtesy are his watchwords.

Politically, he is a Democrat, and fraternally, is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic order. He attends the Christian church. His maternal grandfather Daugherty was a minister in the Methodist church.

Personally, Mr. Hoppes is a gentleman of pleasing address who makes and retains friends easily.

CARL W. WATSON.

The prestige which attaches to Carl W. Watson of Farmland is that which comes of a line of succession in business. Mr. Watson is the leading baker and grocer of Farmland, and the enterprise with which he is associated extends back to the days of the Civil war. He is one of those men who come into the possession of an established business with genius sufficient to sustain and develop its reputation. In this way many of the largest enterprises of the nation have been built up. The Watson bakery was started in an unpretentious way in 1868, and by close attention to detail and grasp of conditions the business has been brought up through three generations to its present ample proportions. Mr. Watson is one of the leading and influential citizens of Randolph county and his bakery and grocery trade are of the largest and most flourishing in the state. It is to such thoughtful and energetic men as he that Farmland and Randolph county owe their reputation for wealth and progress.

Farmland is Mr. Watson's native town. He was born there April 11, 1887, and is the son of George B. and Abigail (Miller) Watson. He had one brother and three sisters. One of the latter, Dolly, lives in Hartford City and is the wife of J. P. Cronin, cashier of the Citizens Bank. The father of Carl W. Watson was born near Piqua, O., January 25, 1838. His grandfather moved to Indiana, near Ft. Wayne when his father was an infant, and a few years later went to Randolph City. From there he moved to Farmland and was postmaster of that town thirteen years. At the expiration of that time he went into the bakery business, and the name of Watson has been over the door ever since.

July 12, 1901, the subject of this review, Carl W. Watson, was married to Bertha Smithson, a daughter of Michael Smithson, a prominent and prosperous farmer near Ridgeville. They have one child, Marjorie, who was born October 26, 1907, and is being educated in the local schools. At the age of fifteen Mr. Watson entered upon the business career that he has since pursued so successfully. For two years he did work in a restaurant preliminary to taking partnership with his father, and in 1893 they bought the place where the bakery and grocery is now established. The entrance of the son into the firm infused new life into it, and from that time the trade has grown with astonishing rapidity. The firm has all modern appliances and its trade extends throughout the surrounding country. Few bakeries in the state, and none in the county, carry a larger and fresher stock. Mr. Watson is a member of the Friends Church and is a hearty participant in all its undertakings.

A notable fact in the commercial history of Farmland is that Peter S.

Miller, the father of Mr. Watson's mother, was the first dry goods merchant of the town. He conducted the store he started for thirty years and was later in the drug business ten years. So both branches of the family have been closely identified with the mercantile interests of the town from their incipiency. Mr. Miller lived to be sixty-eight years of age and was one of ten children. The father of Mr. Watson, it may be noticed, was the first city marshal of Farmland and was for a number of years a member of the town council. He served through the Civil war in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He has been a Mason since 1866.

Farmland is one of the enterprising and socially distinguished towns of the state, and among its leaders in social, religious and business circles is Carl W. Watson. Farmland is the better by his residence there, and will ever bear the marks of his enterprise, energy and devotion. Its interests are his interests, and in the unfolding of his powers the town has been the greatest beneficiary. In the fullest sense Mr. Watson is a public-spirited citizen, and his influence is felt wherever he is known.

THOMAS H. CLARK.

It has always been the fruitful soil from which have sprung the moral bone and sinew of the country, and the majority of our nation's leading men, great warriors, renowned statesmen and distinguished men of letters were born on the farm and were indebted largely to its early influence for the distinction which they attained; indeed, it seems that the best citizens of all our states, whether noted in any special line of endeavor or not, were tillers of the soil, and the same rule holds good today as in the past. From the farm came the Clarks, one of the honored and representative families of Randolph county.

Thomas H. Clark, substantial farmer, public servant and man of affairs, was born August 26, 1846, on a farm in Warren county, Ohio, and he is a son of Thomas and Susannah (Cox) Clark, and was one of nine children, he being the only son, and was fourth in order of birth. His sisters are, Ann Eliza, married B. V. M. Brouse, a farmer of Ward township, and died at the age of fifty-one years, leaving seven children: Mary Jane is the widow of William Valentine, who was a farmer near Springfield, Ohio, and she has seven children; Emmeline married Cyrus Sackett, now deceased; she lives near Winchester and has five children, two having died in early life; Sarah Elizabeth is the widow of Thomas Seagraves, who was a farmer, and she had five children; Arabella, deceased, married Henry Hobbick, a farmer in Kansas, and three sons were born to them; Martha, of Muncie, Indiana, is the widow of Colvin Mann, who was a farmer, and five children were born to them; Margaret, widow of Robert Reynolds, lives at Winchester, by whom she had four children; she later married Daniel Keys and to them four children were born: Hannah, deceased, was the wife of Robert McCracken, also deceased; he was a farmer and merchant of Green township, and to them three children were born.

MRS. THOS. H. CLARK.

THOS. H. CLARK.

Thomas Clark, father of our subject, was reared on a farm in Warren county, Ohio. About 1840 he came to Indiana and took up a homestead, then returned to Ohio, where he remained seven years, then came back to Indiana and established his future home, and here his death occurred in 1888 at the age of seventy-one years. His farm has remained in the family, our subject now occupying the same. He was a successful farmer and a good and useful man. The paternal grandfather of our subject was Jacob Clark, a native of Pennsylvania, and he came to Indiana about 1844 and took up a farm in Ward township, Randolph county. He was a blacksmith by trade, which he followed in connection with farming. His death occurred in Ohio about 1880 at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The father of our subject had a premonition of his death six months before the final summons came, and made his arrangements accordingly. Our subject's maternal grandmother, Mary Cox, was a native of New Jersey and grandfather Cox was a soldier in the Mexican war. The Clarks originally came from Ireland, where the remote ancestors, of whom but little is known, made their homes for a number of generations. Some of the family emigrated to America in the old Colonial days and settled in Pennsylvania, where we first hear of Thomas Clark, father of Jacob Clark, mentioned above. Jacob Clark first moved to Maryland from his native state, thence to Ohio, where he remained some time before coming on to Indiana. His wife, Patience Snyder, whom he married in Pennsylvania, died within a few years after the family arrived in Randolph county, and a short time afterwards Mr. Clark returned to his old home in Warren county, Ohio, and there spent the rest of his life.

Thomas H. Clark, of this review, grew to manhood on the old home farm in Ward township, this county, and there worked when a boy during crop seasons, and he received a good practical education in the local schools. He was a mere boy when the war between the states began, but he proved his courage by enlisting in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, December 25, 1863, and he proved to be a faithful and gallant soldier, serving until honorably discharged August 31, 1865. He was with the Army of the Ohio most of the time and took part in a number of engagements, including the many battles and skirmishes of the memorable Atlanta campaign under General Sherman, fought at Franklin and Nashville under General Thomas, also in numerous minor engagements, passing through all without receiving any serious injury. In the battle of Atlanta he was struck between the shoulders by a spent ball, and, at another time, a bullet struck his cartridge box, saving his life thereby. After the war he returned home and purchased a farm in White River township, Randolph county, where he resided two years, and in 1868 purchased a part of a valuable farm in section 30, Ward township, later adding to the same until he owned two hundred and fifty-three acres of very productive land, his finely improved and well kept farm lying about five miles from Winchester. On it stands a commodious dwelling and substantial outbuildings and here he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, ranking with the leading agriculturists of the county. Through his thrift and industry he has accumulated a handsome competency and is a stockholder and director in the State Bank at Ridgeville. He has always been a lover of good livestock and has devoted considerable attention to raising the same. He formerly also owned an interest in an establishment for the manufacture of drain tile. He is one of our worthiest and most conspicuous examples of a self-made man. Politically, he is a Republican and has long been active and influential in local party affairs. He was one of the commissioners of Randolph county for six years, filling the office in a manner entirely creditable to himself and to all concerned. He is president of the Orphans' Home Board, and has done much for the promotion of this commendable work. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He belongs to and liberally supports the Christian church. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Clark has been three times married, first, to Barbara Hobbick, in 1866. She was a native of Pennsylvania, but came with her family to Randolph county, locating in Ward township, when but a child. Her death occurred March 25, 1873, leaving two children, Ida A., born August 15, 1867, married Edward Mickey, who died July, 1913, at Saratoga, and to them two children were born, Ivan and Paul; Elmer E., born October 12, 1872, married Gertrude Thomas, and is a farmer of Randolph county; to them seven children have been born. Mr. Clark's second marriage occurred in 1875, when he espoused Mrs. Jane Reitenour, daughter of James Hale of Randolph county, and to this union two children were born, Clarissa S., who married Ora Collins, a farmer of Ward township, and to them seven children have been born; and James T., who married Estey Michael, is farming in Ward township. The second wife of our subject died in 1898. By her previous marriage she had one child, William H. Reitenour. On December 24, 1898, our subject married his last wife, Emma Keener, daughter of a farmer of White River township. Her parents were both deceased at the time of her marriage.

Mr. Clark is a gentleman in whom the utmost confidence is reposed by all who know him owing to his long life of honest dealings with the people of Randolph county, and he is liked by all classes.

GEORGE P. KENNEDY.

We should indeed be proud of the fact that there is no limit in this country to which natural ability, industry and honesty may not aspire. One born in the most unpromising surroundings and reared in the most adverse environments may nevertheless break from his fetters and rise to the highest station in the land, and the qualities do not have to be of transcendent character to enable him to accomplish this result. It is more the way he does it and his skill in grasping the opportunities presented than to any remarkable qualities presented by him. Accordingly it is found that very often in this country the chief executive of the nation or state and other high public officials possess no greater ability than thousands of others. They have simply taken better advantage of their opportunities than their fellows. And this truth runs through every occupation. The business man rises above his competitors merely by taking advantage of conditions which others overlook or fail to grasp. One of the thrifty and successful business men of Randolph county is George P. Kennedy, well-known hardware dealer of Union City.

Mr. Kennedy was born January 4, 1868, in the above named city and county and here he has been content to spend his life. He is a son of Patrick G. and Catherine (Wiese) Kennedy. The father was born in Ireland in 1838 and there grew to manhood and was educated, remaining in the Emerald Isle until 1855, when he emigrated to the United States. He located in Randolph county, Indiana, and here spent the rest of his life, successfully engaged in the grocery business in Union City, where his death occurred in 1875. His wife was born in Ohio in 1841, and her death occurred in 1877. She grew to womanhood in her native state and received a good education, and she came to Randolph county when young, where she met and married Mr. Kennedy, who was at that time engaged as a book-keeper, but later entered the mercantile field.

Four children were born to Patrick G. Kennedy and wife, namely: Mrs. Mary M. Connelly, Mrs. Gertrude R. Coulter, George P., and Mrs Margaret M. Blootman.

George P. Kennedy received his education in the parochial schools of Union City, then learned telegraphy, and when only sixteen years of age he commenced work as telegrapher for the old "B" line, with which he remained twelve years, the last seven of which were spent as train dispatcher on the same railroad. He gave the company eminent satisfaction, being regarded as one of their most efficient and trustworthy employees. The road is now known as the Big Four. Finally, tiring of the exacting work of dispatcher, he left the service of the road and began in the hardware business in Union City, in partnership with P. J. Wiese, under the firm name of J. P. Wiese & Company, which partnership continued satisfactorily until the death of Mr. Wiese, in 1901, after which his widow, Mrs. Angie Wiese, continued the business until 1913, when she sold out to Mr. Kennedy, but the firm is still known as the Wiese Hardware Company. This is one of the largest and best known stores of its kind in Randolph county, and a complete stock of general hardware, stoves, paints, oils, pumps; in fact, everything used in a thriving farming community like this. Mr. Kennedy has been very successful as a hardware man, building up an extensive and ever-growing trade, which now extends over a vast territory.

Mr. Kennedy was married October 22, 1889, to Catherine Maloney, who was born in Shelby county, Ohio, December 10, 1869. She is a daughter of John and Margaret (Enright) Maloney, natives of Ireland, from which country they emigrated to the United States when young and established their home in Shelby county, Ohio. Mrs. Kennedy received a good education in the common schools.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, namely: Andrew Jerome, born July 30, 1890, died May 5, 1894; Charles B., born July 31, 1895, graduated from the Union City high school and is now attending St. Mary's College at Dayton, Ohio; Marcella, born September 11, 1898, is attending high school; Catherine, born January 12, 1901, is attending grade school.

Politically, Mr. Kennedy is a Democrat; fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Columbus in Union City, and to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Greenville. He belongs to St. Mary's Catholic church in Union City. He is secretary of the local school board and is a member of the library board. He is one of the influential men of the town and has done much for the general good of the same.

HENRY C. HULL.

The able and popular superintendent of the Randolph County Infirmary, Henry C. Hull, has been distinctively the architect of his own fortunes, has been true and loyal in all the relations of life and stands as a type of that sterling manhood which ever commands respect and honor. He is a man who would have won his way in any locality fate might have placed him, for he has sound judgment, coupled with great energy and business tact, together with upright principles, all of which make for success wherever they are rightly and persistently applied. By reason of these principles he has won and retained a wide circle of friends throughout this, his native county.

Mr. Hall was born on November 16, 1857, in White River township, Randolph county, and here he has spent his life. He is a son of Joseph and Lucy (Haynes) Hull. The father was born in New Jersey and the mother in the state of New York, and both came to Randolph county as children with their parents, who came as early pioneers, making the long journey from the East in wagons across the rugged Alleghanies. All was woods here and game was abundant. Grandfather Johile Hull settled on land about two miles south of Winchester and there built his log cabin home in the heavy timber, and began clearing and developing his land. Grandfather Stephen Haynes settled with his family near what is now Huntsville in West River township, and there cleared and developed a farm. They were both carpenters and worked considerably at their trade. They became large land owners and were prominent men in the early affairs of the county.

Joseph Hull also engaged successfully in farming in this vicinity. He was also a brick maker and a builder. Many of the substantial brick houses over the country were built by him and still stand as monuments of his skill and honesty as a builder. Many of them are in Winchester. His family consisted of four sons and four daughters, all now deceased but three, namely: Laura, wife of George Mace of Hancock county; James F., who is farming in White River township; and Henry C., of this review. The death of Joseph Hull occurred on June 1, 1905, his wife having preceded him to the grave eighteen years, dying February 14, 1887, in Tangerine, Florida. The father died in Winchester.

Henry C. Hull was reared on the home farm where he worked hard when a boy. He received his education in the common schools, however his education was limited to about three months each winter for only a few years. But he has read extensively in later years and is a well informed man.

Mr. Hull was married August 27, 1885, to Minnie Lock, a daughter of William F. and Mary (Robbins) Lock, of Randolph county. The father was born in New Jersey and the mother was a native of Kentucky. They came to Randolph county as young people. Our subject and wife have one daughter, Mabel C. Hull, who has been well educated in the Winchester schools.

After his marriage Mr. Hull located on a farm, two and one-half miles northwest of Winchester where he farmed for two years. He then moved to his father's old home farm two miles south of Winchester, where he remained three years, then moved to a farm near Mt. Zion, where he spent three years, and from there moved to his own small farm one mile south of Winchester, adjoining the home farm. Here he lived twelve years. On September 1, 1905, he moved to the County Infirmary home and took charge of the farm and property as superintendent. This fine farm of over three hundred acres he has managed in a most commendable manner, keeping it well-improved and under a high state of cultivation, and all interested, agree that he is one of the most skilful and conscientious men who has ever been in charge of the county farm. He carries on general farming and keeps large herds of cattle and hogs, feeding large numbers of a good grade of livestock annually. The soil was formerly thin, but is now rich and productive. Nearly everything that is consumed at the institute is raised on the farm. He has made this one of the model farms of the county. He not only conducts the farm here most successfully and satisfactorily, but he and his estimable wife look well to the comfort and welfare of more than fifty inmates of the institution. All buildings are kept in perfect order, sanitary, neat and comfortable.

Politically Mr. Hull has always been a Republican, and has long been active in local party affairs, however, he has never been an office seeker and never held office. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order and seems to carry its sublime precepts into his every-day relations with his fellow-men.

ALBERT R. ABSHIRE.

There could be no more comprehensive history written of a city or county or even of a state and its people than that which deals with the life work of those who, by their own endeavor and indomitable energy, have placed themselves where they well deserve the title of "prominent and progressive." In this sketch will be found the name of a gentleman who has outstripped the less active and ambitious plodders on the highway of life, one who has been consistent in his life work and never permitted the "grass to grow under his feet," one who, while advancing his own interests has not neglected his full duties to the general public, at the same time upholding an honored family name.

Albert R. Abshire, of Winchester, Randolph county, was born in Washington township, this county, March 12, 1850, seven miles south of Winchester, where he lived for a period of fifty-five years, and which valuable farm he yet owns, this place having been in the Abshire family about ninety years, and from the early pioneer days to the present this family has been one of the best known in this locality, its various members having done much toward the general development of the same. He is a son of Isaac and Sarah (Ballard) Abshire, who spent their lives successfully engaged in general agricultural pursuits and who were well-known and highly respected in their community. The death of the father occurred on June 12, 1900, having been preceded to the grave over a quarter of a century by his wife, her death occurring on January 18, 1874. They are both buried in Liberty Cemetery, Washington township.

Albert R. Abshire was reared on the home farm where he worked when a boy. He received his education in the district schools, also went to school two years in Winchester. He began life for himself as a teacher, which profession he followed for a period of fourteen years with much success, his services being in great demand. In 1882 he was elected trustee of Washington township, which office he held for two years, then turned his attention to farming on the old home place in Washington township where he continued general farming and stock raising with gratifying results until the spring of 1905, when he moved with his family to Winchester and here he still resides. He owns a highly improved and productive farm of one hundred and eighty-five acres. He is a heavy stockholder in the Citizens Banking Company, of Lynn, Indiana, and was for many years a director in the same.

Politically he is a Republican and has always been a loyal party supporter and always greatly interested in public matters and active in all matters having as their object the general upbuilding of his city and county.

Mr. Abshire was married on February 6, 1889, to Alberta Arnold, daughter of C. A. M. and Susan (Carlton) Arnold, of Meigs county, Ohio. To this union four daughters and one son have been born, namely: Arnold T., born May 23, 1905, died in infancy; Edith B., born June 15, 1890, was graduated from the Winchester high school, is proficient in music and is teaching that art in her community, is also teaching one of the district schools; Elma Susan, born September 10, 1892, also a graduate of the high school in Winchester, is a student of art and the violin, and she also is gifted with the artistic temperament; Esther Lucile, born October 3, 1894, was graduated from the Winchester high school, is also a teacher and musician of marked ability; Helen Ruth, born August 31, 1899, is a student in the public schools, and is also a gifted musician. They are all young ladies of culture, refinement and much promise. The family attends the Methodist church and Sunday school, and they are prominent in the best social life of the city.

JESSE F. BIRD.

In looking over the list of eligibles for this history and studying the data for the same the biographer finds that many of our enterprising citizens have come from the Carolinas. Those old states, while yet able to sustain a vast population are pretty well worn, the soil not having been properly managed and has therefore become thin, so many of the thriftier of the citizens of that section of Dixie land have desired newer countries where the soil was richer and therefore opportunities greater, so large numbers have been coming to Randolph and other counties in the Hoosier state since the close of the Civil war. Among them was the Bird family.

Jesse F. Bird, farmer and stock raiser of Washington township, was born in Randolph county, North Carolina, January 28, 1851, the scion of an old Southern family, many of whose praiseworthy traits of head and heart he seems to have inherited. He is a son of James and Caroline (Macon) Bird. James Bird was born September 30, 1811, in the same county and state as was our subject and there he grew to manhood, received a meager education in the common schools, married Caroline Macon, who was born October 7, 1815, and there established the family home, where he remained until the fall of 1867, when he made the long overland journey with his family to Randolph county, Indiana, locating in Washington township, walking from Richmond, this state. After living here three years he went back to North Carolina. Politically, he was a Republican, and in religious matters was a member of the Christian church. His death occurred on May 20, 1888, and his wife died February 28, 1895. He and his wife were the parents of eleven children, five of whom are deceased; those living are Hartwell, Mrs. Rebecca Brown and Zimri, all residents of North Carolina; Gideon lives in Winchester, Indiana; Eli lives near Castleton, and Jesse F., of this sketch.

Jesse F. Bird received practically no schooling, for he was a boy when the war between the states was in progress and schools as well as most everything else was neglected in his section of the country. He was sixteen years old when he came with his parents to Indiana, and soon afterward began working out by the day on various farms. At the age of seventeen he went to Missouri and stayed a year. After working as a farm hand for seven years he rented seventy-five acres which he farmed nearly five years, then purchased eighty acres, which is now a part of his home farm. He worked hard, managed well and therefore prospered with the advancing years. His original purchase had no buildings, but he improved it properly and added to it until he now owns one of the choice farms of Washington township, consisting of two hundred and thirty-four acres, all well tiled and well drained. He has a large up-to-date home, good barns, fences of the latest model, steel and concrete posts. He raises a general breed of livestock and feeds large numbers of hogs for the market.

Politically, Mr. Bird is a Progressive. He belongs to the Christian church in which he is an elder and trustee and was superintendent of the Sunday school for a great many years, in fact, is one of the pillars in the local church. For many years he was president of the Washington Township Sunday School Union and was one of its organizers. He is a trustee of New Liberty cemetery. He has served as road supervisor and was elected a member of the advisory board, but refused to serve.

During the war a Confederate camp was located a mile or two from the home of James Bird. A brother of our subject refused to enlist and in retaliation, the Confederates held our subject's parents in their camp as prisoners for several weeks, leaving six children at home alone.

Mr. Bird was married February 15, 1877 to Aletha J. Willis, who was born in Washington township, this county, September 22, 1853, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of Joseph and Sarah (York) Willis. Her father was born in 1825 in this county, his parents having been among the earliest settlers here. Joseph Willis was an invalid from his twenty-first year. His death occurred September 14, 1866. Sarah York was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, July 7, 1823, and came to this county in early life where her death occurred April 24, 1898.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bird two children were born, namely: Walter F., born May 30, 1881, died October 17, 1886; Clara May, born September 20, 1887, married Walter A. Johnson, and they live on the old home farm. They are the parents of one child, Aletha Jane, born November 5, 1913, in Detroit, Michigan.

GRANT C. MARKLE, M. D.

The name Markle has been a household word to the people of Randolph county for the past forty years, and during that period no name in the list of medical men in this section of the Hoosier state has stood out any more prominently, for Dr. Grant C. Markle, of this review, and his worthy father before him, Dr. John E. Markle, have been prominent physicians and surgeons of the county during that period, the former during the latter part and the latter during the first part of the period designated. They have brought health, and therefore happiness to the people of this locality and have won the lasting gratitude of all. The elder Markle has passed on to a higher plane of endeavor, but his mantle seems to have fallen on his son who is carrying on the commendable work of bringing surcease for the multiform ills to which humanity is heir, and he is in every respect proving himself to be a worthy son of a worthy sire.

Dr. Grant C. Markle, of Winchester, was born in Portland, Indiana, October 31, 1868, and is a son of Dr. John E. and Emily V. (Johnson) Markle. Owing to the prominence of the father his biography will be given at some length before proceeding with the life history of the son.

Dr. John E. Markle was born at Ithaca, New York, December 2, 1838, his father, Jacob Markle, having been a merchant at that place, and who subsequently moved with his family to Candor, Tioga county, New York, in 1841, where he lived until 1853, in which year he came to Madison county, Indiana, locating at a village which was later named Markleville. He was engaged in mercantile pursuits at this point until his death in 1864. His son, John E., received an excellent education in the Academy at Candor, New York and the University at Meadville, Pennsylvania. In 1859 he began the study of medicine, and a year later found him pursuing his studies at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio. In the spring of 1861 he began practicing at Fishersburg, Indiana. But his practice was interrupted by the breaking out of the Civil war, and on August 4th of that year he enlisted in Company E. Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. While in camp at Anderson he was detailed for duty in the hospital department, and he did not return to his company until in November, 1862, at Helena, Arkansas. On January 4, 1863, he was appointed second lieutenant and was detailed as commander of a squad to assist in carrying out one of General Grant's plans in the Mississippi campaign. For valuable service he was made first lieutenant April 4, 1863. He had charge of his company at the battle of Magnolia Hills, Mississippi and for bravery displayed in the capture of a rebel battery, he was given a captain's commission. As captain of Company K, he participated in thirty-two engagements, winning an enviable record for bravery and daring courage. He was in the battle of Palo Alto, Texas, one of the last of the war. Here he performed one of his most courageous feats by rescuing the regimental colors from the enemy into whose hands they had fallen. On October 15, 1865, he was commissioned assistant surgeon of his regiment, serving in that capacity until February 19, 1866, when he was honorably discharged and mustered out of the service. At the close of the war he was the only one among forty applicants who passed a successful examination for admission into the regular army. He was never wounded or taken prisoner.

After his military career had ended, Dr. John E. Markle located at Portland, Jay county, Indiana, in March, 1866, and there began the practice of his profession. He later attended a course of lectures in the Ohio Medical College from which he was graduated in the spring of 1868. He continued to practice at Portland until 1873 when he removed to Hagerstown, Indiana, and on November 2, 1874, located at Winchester, where he remained successfully engaged in the practice of his profession until his death which occurred on March 20, 1903. He was secretary of the Jay County Medical Association and in 1866 was president of the same. In 1876 he suggested a similar organization for Randolph county and was the principal organizer of the same, was president for one year. In the winter of 1878-9 he attended the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, of New York City, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1879. Later in that year he assisted in organizing the Delaware District Medical Society, and was elected vice-president, and president in 1880. He was a member of the Indiana State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and he contributed numerous valuable papers to the medical journals of the country. At the organization of the Randolph County Board of Health he was elected secretary, and was by virtue of the same, health officer of the county. He was appointed United States pension examiner July 1, 1882, serving four years, and was later re-appointed. He was a Republican and a member of the Masonic Order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was noble grand of the latter lodge, and reached the master's degree in the former, being a Scottish Rite, a Knights Templar and a member of the Chapter. He was also past grand of the Odd Fellows and was representative to the grand lodge of Indiana in 1870. He was a great physician of the old school and enjoyed a very large and lucrative practice and was one of the best known doctors of his day in northern Indiana. He was elected clerk of his county in 1896, serving four years.

Dr. John E. Markle was married September 19, 1866 to Emily V Johnson, daughter of Jephtha Johnson, of Wayne county, this state, and she is still living, making her home with her son, Dr. Grant C. Markle. The only other child of these parents was Minnie, who died in infancy.

Dr. Grant C. Markle was reared in the atmosphere of a physician's home and attended the public schools, graduating from the Winchester high school in 1886. He then entered Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Indiana, from which he was graduated in 1890 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Deciding to follow in the footsteps of his father in a professional way he began studying medicine under him at his office in Winchester, subsequently entering the medical department of the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1892. He at once began practice with his father in Winchester and has remained in the general practice to the present time. He was not long in rising to distinction in his profession. He has always kept well abreast of the progress of the science, is an enthusiast in his practice, and tireless in his performance of duty. During the past year he has been compelled to give up much of his practice in view of the fact that on January 29, 1913, he was struck by a locomotive at a street crossing in Winchester and seriously injured, while making a professional call. He remained in partnership with his father for five years, then practiced by himself. He is a member of the county, state and national medical societies. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias. Politically he is a staunch Republican and has been active in public matters since attaining his majority. He was county health commissioner for several years, and is a progressive citizen in every respect. He has also been city health officer.

Dr. Markle was married December 30, 1897 to Bessie Smith, a daughter of Dr. W. G. and Julia (Lucas) Smith, a prominent Winchester family. Here Mrs. Markle grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a lady of culture and pleasant address. The union of the Doctor and wife has been without issue.

SIMON RAMSEY.

The most elaborate history is perforce a merciless abridgement, the historian being obliged to select his facts and materials from manifold details and to marshal them in concise and logical order. This applies to specific as well as generic history, and in the former catagory is included the interesting and important department of biography. In every life of honor and usefulness there is no dearth of interesting situations and incidents, and yet in summing up the career of men like Simon Ramsey, a venerable and highly respected citizen living just south of the city of Winchester the writer must touch only on the more salient facts, giving the keynote of the character and eliminating all that is superfluous to the continuity of the narrative. The gentleman whose name appears above has led an active and useful life, devoid of the spectacular or exciting, and the more prominent features have been so identified with the useful and practical that it is to them almost entirely that the writer refers in the following paragraphs.

Mr. Ramsey was born February 22, 1834 in Lebanon, Warren county, Ohio. He is a son of Benjamin and Jennette (Moore) Ramsey. The father was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania and the mother was born in Scotland. When the Moore family first emigrated to America they settled in New York, later crossing the Alleghany mountains to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, then took flat boats in which they descended the Ohio river, first settling in woods of what is now Lawrenceburg. The Ramseys came west in the early years of the nineteenth century and settled in Cincinnati, Ohio. The parents of our subject were married in 1827 and later established their home in Warren county, Ohio. The grandparents, Arthur and Agnes (Fleming) Moore located in the vicinity of the above named city and Mr. Moore engaged in the foundry business in Cincinnati, also the machine business. After their marriage the parents of our subject moved to Lebanon, Warren county, where the father engaged at the shoemaker's trade, later he moved to Cincinnati, and in 1851 the family moved to Spartanburg, Randolph county, where the father continued working at his trade and also engaged some in farming, purchasing some land. Benjamin Ramsey was born April 1, 1805, and his death occurred in 1866 in Fletcher, Miami county, Ohio where he had lived for several years. He had married a second time. Jennette Moore, mother of our subject, was born in Scotland in 1799, and her death occurred in October, 1858.

Five children were born to Benjamin Ramsey and wife, two of whom died in infancy; Agnes, who married John W. Love, is deceased; Hester, who was the wife of John T. Chenoweth, is also deceased; Simon, of this review, is the only one of his immediate family now living. He has a half sister, Clara Belle, now Mrs. Fentors, who lives in Miami county, Ohio.

Simon Ramsey was reared in Lebanon and Cincinnati, Ohio until he was seventeen years of age when he accompanied his parents to Randolph county, Indiana. He attended the public schools in Cincinnati, and he also went to the Spartanburg, Indiana, schools for a time. About 1853 the family moved to Winchester where the father worked at his trade. As a young man our subject worked at various things. On February 6, 1860 he married Eliza Ellen Lister, a daughter of James and Sarah (Ellis) Lister. To our subject and wife two sons were born, namely: Charles Amos, who is married and living in Muncie; Nathan W. is married and lives with his parents on the home farm.

For a number of years both before and after his marriage Simon Ramsey was a deputy in the various county offices. In September, 1873 he was elected treasurer of Randolph county and served one term of two years. After leaving this office he lived in Winchester for some years and in 1878 he moved with his family to his farm one and one-half miles south of this city and here he has resided continuously to the present time. He has a valuable and well-kept farm on which he has carried on general farming and stock raising and on which stands a comfortable home. The active work of the farm is now done by the son, the elder Ramsey taking life easy in his old age, enjoying the fruits of his former years of labor.

Politically he has always been a Republican and active and influential in local party affairs. His first presidential vote was cast for John C. Fremont in 1856. He has done much to encourage better methods of farming in this locality and was for some time president of the Randolph County Agricultural Society. He is a member of the Masonic Order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having joined both lodges in the year 1856, and has been in continuous good standing in each, thus for a period of over half a century. His wife and family are members of the Methodist church.

GEORGE A. EASTMAN.

Among the most commendable attributes of human character is faithfulness to duty. No one contemplates for even a moment the life record of George A. Eastman, the genial, efficient and popular agent of the Big Four Railroad Company at Winchester, without noting his marked fidelity to duty. That has been the main reason of his success in railroad work, for, everyone knows that lack of interest in one's tasks is not conducive to reward. There is never a serious blot on his record of many decades in the railroad service, neither is there, so far as known to the public, a stain on his private record, so we are glad to give him mention in this work.

Mr. Eastman was born in Union City, on the Ohio side, February 19, 1867. He is a son of Henry O. and Harriet J. (Livingood) Eastman. The father was born in New Hampshire and the mother in Darke county, Ohio. The elder Eastman came to Cleveland, Ohio in March, 1861 after spending his boyhood in New England, and engaged in railroad construction work, later coming to what is now Union City, and engaged in the construction of the Bellefontaine & Indianapolis Railroad, now the Big Four, and while living at Union City he and Harriet J. Livingood were married. Her father, Jacob Livingood, had moved to that place from Darke county, Ohio, and built the first house in the new town. He was a great Abolitionist and was active in the workings of the "underground railroad." Henry O. Eastman became roadmaster of the Bellefontaine & Indianapolis road, and during its subsequent changes, until he was incapaciated for work and retired. He is still living at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His aged wife is also living. They are each of good sturdy New England stock.

To Henry O. Eastman and wife six sons and one daughter were born, namely: Major Nelson is engaged in electrical work at Cambridge, Massachusetts; Sherman met an accidental death by an electric car in Anderson, Indiana, in 1896; George A., subject of this sketch; Charles A., of Chicago, where he is engaged in structural work; Ruby G. is secretary and treasurer of the National Carpet Sweeper Association, of Marion, Indiana; Chester L. is a farmer in Darke county, Ohio; Dora L. is at home.

George A. Eastman was reared in Union City and there attended school until he was fifteen years of age, when, much to the regret of his parents he decided to leave school and seek employment, which he found in the Superintendent's office of the Big Four at Union City, where he learned telegraphy, remaining there one year, when he went to various points on the line, for a time as operator, and in 1885 as telegrapher, remaining with the Big Four in that capacity until March 8, 1888. He acted also as extra agent, and was operator at various towns on the line during this period. On the last named date he went to Ansonia, Ohio, as agent, where he remained until January 1, 1898, then was appointed agent at Winchester, Indiana, and here he has remained to the present time, giving his company eminent satisfaction in every respect, just as he did in all his previous positions.

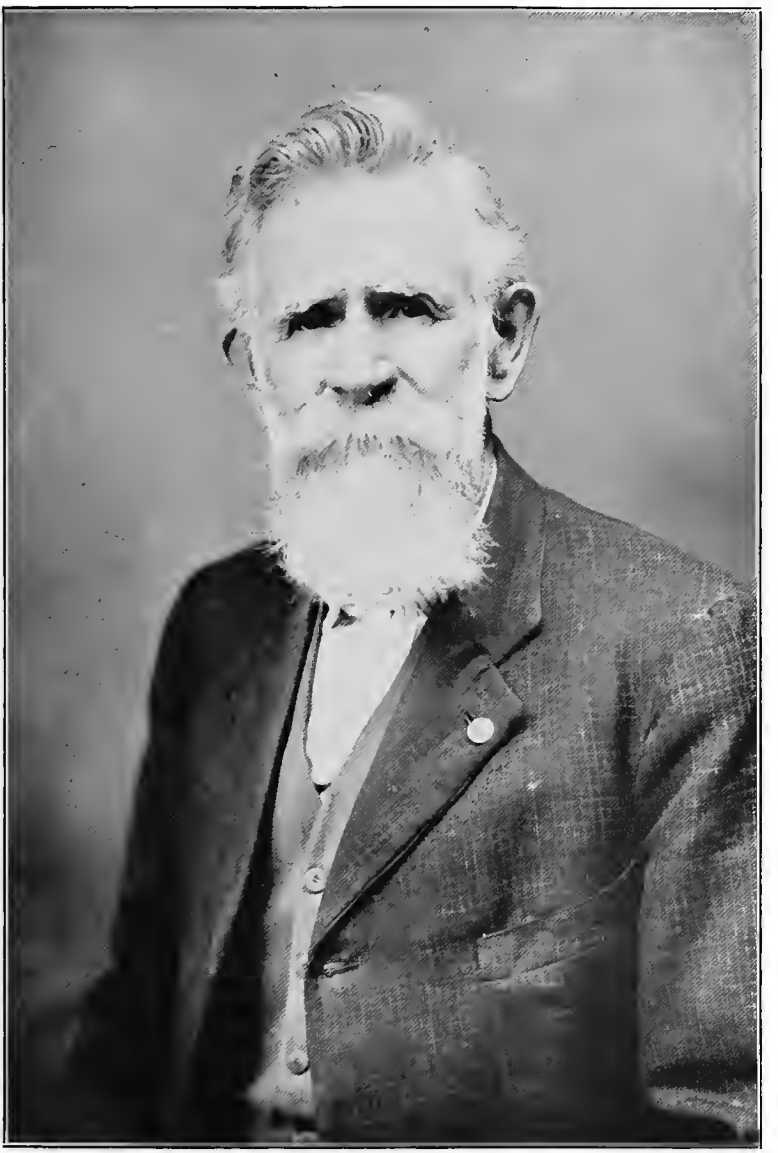
Mr. Eastman was married February 19, 1889 to Laura Winbigler, a daughter of Uriah and Sarah H. (Johnson) Winbigler, of Ansonia, Ohio. This union has been without issue.

WILLIAM T. ROSZELL.

The public eye is being turned more and more every day toward those thinning ranks of the "blue and the gray." At the rate of eleven thousand a year they are departing from this life, leaving imperishable records of their heroism and fortitude. The hardships of blistering marches, the death harvest of the battlefield and the hot, restless fever camps, the filth-laden prisons, cannot be appreciated in their horror by ones who have not experienced them, but the brave boys who survived that awful struggle remember, and it is the universal desire among them that the fair country of the United States shall never feel the touch of the war demon again, nor shall their children know the terror and agony of service such as that, where brothers fought brothers, and civilization was forgotten in the lust of combat. William T. Roszell is the proud possessor of war record which is without superior in point of service and actual fighting. Some men went through the war without a smell of gunpowder, so to speak, and they are generally the loudest in their praises of themselves, but others, including our subject, were fated to be at the critical points at the crucial time, and suffered wounds and hardships.

William T. Roszell was born in Greensburg, Decatur county, Indiana, on December 3, 1843, and was the son of John F. and Perlina (Sullinger) Roszell, being one of the following children, namely: Samuel, who died en route to California in the gold rush of 1849; Elsie, Nancy, Mary, Elvira B., Mahala, James M., Terrell and Emma, all deceased; and Laura, of Georgia. Both of our subject's parents were from the state of Kentucky, where the father followed the trade of the blacksmith. They came overland to the fair Hoosier state in a very early day, settling in Greensburg, where the father and his brother did the first blacksmithing ever done in the town.



W. T. ROSZELL.

Our subject's grandfather was a farmer of Indiana, and died at the age of ninety-five years. The Roszells trace their ancestry to an old Hugenot family.

On September 26, 1872 William Roszell was married to Hannah C. Hiatt, a daughter of Amos Hiatt, a citizen of Randolph county, a farmer who entered land, which he lived upon, from the government. Mrs. Roszell was one of twelve children, the father being twice married. The children by the first wife were: Louisa, deceased, Lucinda E., Samuel M., and Malissa, both dead; John W., died while in the army; and the children by the second wife were: Mrs. Roszell; James C., of Winchester; Charles O., a Minnesota farmer; Mary E., deceased; Allen R., in charge of Orphan's Home; Rosa Almeda, of Albany, Indiana; and Ella, who is deceased.

Two children have been born to our subject and wife, and they are: Oolie Myrtle, married Arthur Dean, a Randolph county farmer, and they have seven children; Hattie, Bertha, Vernal, Charles, John F., Flora May, and Walter A.; and the second child is Orpha May, married Austin Barnes, and has one child, Martha Catherine. They reside on the Roszell homestead.

Mrs. Roszell's father was from the state of North Carolina, near Raleigh, being of Welsh descent. He came to Winchester about 1829, at the age of 18, having been born April 20, 1811. He followed the trade of a blacksmith and farmer. He was reared a Quaker and his wife a Methodist. Religiously our subject's father was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and politically belonged to the Republican party.

William Roszell, our subject, when but eighteen years of age, on August 8, 1862, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, Captain Clayton commanding. He was discharged June 1, 1865, at Chester Hospital, Pennsylvania. Mr. Roszell's first engagement was at Thoroughfare Gap on August 27, 1862. Two days later he fought in the second battle of Bull Run, and in this conflict performed a brave act, that of rescuing the colors from the enemy from a fallen color bearer. On September 14, 1862 he participated in the battle of South Mountain. On the 17th he fought at Antietam, in October at Shepardstown, and on November 2nd, at Uniontown, Virginia. At this latter place he was wounded in the arm by an exploding shell which killed two and wounded eleven others. December 23rd found Mr. Roszell at Fredericksburg. On May 3, 1863 he engaged at the sanguinary clash at Chancellorsville. Mr. Roszell was in action during the greatest battle of the war, the four days at Gettysburg. In December, '63, he was at Mine Run. He fought during the famous battle of the Wilderness from May 5th to 7th, '64, and at Spottsylvania, May 12th, the same year, and on May 23d, was at North Anna. Later he engaged at Coal Harbor, and in the battles around Petersburg. At Petersburg he was shot through the leg by a Minie ball. When Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered at Appomattox, to Grant, Mr. Roszell was there. After his discharge from the army, he returned to private life as a farmer, and has continued ever since, although he has forsaken active work.

JESSE W. JACKSON.

White River township, Randolph county, has an able exponent in twentieth century farming in Jesse W. Jackson, whose excellent farm, three miles west of the city of Winchester, is being rapidly brought to a state of perfection. Our subject has not long resided in this vicinity, but he has been here long enough to prove that he is a persistent and intelligent worker and a good citizen in every respect.

Mr. Jackson was born on October 27, 1870, on a farm in Stony Creek township, this county. He is a son of Isom and Susan J. (Moore) Jackson, a highly respected old couple of this locality. A complete sketch of them appears in another part of this work. These parents are still living in Stony Creek township.

Jesse W. Jackson grew to manhood on the home farm in his native township and county, and he attended the country district schools, and helped with the general farm work. He remained with his parents on the home farm until he was married, September 5, 1891, having selected for his life-companion Millie B. Pursley, a daughter of James M. and Mary E. (Addington) Pursley, a well-known family of Randolph county.

Four children have been born to the union of our subject and wife, named in order of birth as follows: Norval W., born February 9, 1894; Rolland W., born April 22, 1898; Miltie O., born May 6, 1900; Edith Olive, born August 19, 1903.

Our subject first settled on a farm two and one-half miles southeast of Farmland, where he carried on general farming for a period of twenty years with ever increasing success. In the spring of 1912 he removed to his present place three miles west of the county-seat and here he is meeting with his usual success as a general agriculturist and stock raiser, ranking with the best in White River township. This move was made because he wanted a larger farm as his boys had grown to young manhood and he wanted to give them an opportunity at home, to teach them farming by his own methods. He devotes much attention to stock raising and feeding, being regarded as one of the best hog raisers in Randolph county, and a goodly share of his annual income is derived in this manner. In both breeding and feeding he has been very successful.

Mr. Jackson has always been a Republican in politics and he has long been active and deeply interested in public affairs, however has never been an office seeker, not caring to neglect his farming. He and his family are members of the Friends church and are active supporters of the church and Sunday school. They stand well in this community as they did in their old one.

SAMUEL B. RUBY, M. D.

The early pioneers, having blazed the path of civilization to the section of Indiana of which Randolph county is a part, finished their labors, and many of them have passed from the scene, leaving the country to the possession of their descendants and to others who came at a later period and builded on the foundation which they laid so broad and deep. The Ruby family is of this class, and its members have played no inconspicuous part in the affairs of this locality, a very creditable representative of the present generation being Dr. Samuel B. Ruby, of Union City, very ably carrying forward the commendable work of ministering to the ills of our people, with that skill, sympathy and honesty that characterized his well remembered father, who was one of the leading early-day physicians of northeastern Indiana.

Dr. Ruby, of this review, was born in Darke county, Ohio, January 15, 1855. He is a son of Dr. James Ruby, who was born in Kentucky, in the year 1807, and there he grew to manhood and received his early education. He came to Wayne county, Indiana in 1828, and commenced the practice of medicine, which he continued to follow with great success the rest of his life, dying in Union City in December, 1876. During his years of practice he spent a portion of his time in Ohio, and in 1867 he located in Union City, Indiana where the last years of his life were spent and where he enjoyed a large and lucrative practice. He was a man of exceptional ability and broad-minded in his views. He was a loyal member of the Methodist church, and was charitably inclined, always ready to minister to the poor and help those in need. He never neglected any one giving the poor the same care he gave the rich, although he knew he would never receive pecuniary reward. He married Hannah Hamilton, who was born in Virginia in 1827.

She was a worthy member of the Methodist church, and her death occurred in 1894. Eleven children were born to this union; those living are J. F., Dr. Samuel B., Mrs. Ella Bohn resides at Dayton, Ohio; A. B. lives at Moberly, Missouri; Lizzie B. lives at Union City, and is a teacher in the public schools there. Two of our subject's uncles were also practicing physicians and surgeons. They were brothers of Dr. James Ruby.

Dr. Samuel B. Ruby received his primary education in the public schools of his native community and Union City. He attended the medical college at Cincinnati, Ohio, where he made an excellent record and from which he was graduated with the class of 1876. The same year he began practice in Union City and has continued here to the present time, his name becoming a household word all over the county during these thirty-seven years of successful practice. He has remained a profound student of whatever pertains to his science and has from the first stood in the front rank of local medical men. When a young man, before entering upon his more serious life work, he engaged in different pursuits, saved his money and paid in part his own way through college, the ambition, independence and persistency he displayed then, remaining dominant factors in his every-day life, resulting, as one might naturally surmise, in ultimate success of a high order. Being the third child in a family of ten children, he was compelled to assist in rearing the younger.

Politically Dr. Ruby is independent. He is a member of the Methodist church, and fraternally belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Randolph County Medical Society and the Indiana State Medical Association.

Dr. Ruby was married September 5, 1878 to Della Haise, who was born in Illinois, January 16, 1858. She is a daughter of Dr. John Haise, a practicing physician in Ohio in the early days, dying in that state when his daughter, Della, was very young.

To Dr. Ruby and wife these children were born: Dr. Fred M., born September 19, 1881, married Estrelin Butcher; he was educated in the public schools of Union City, later attended high school at Ann Arbor, Michigan, then entered the University of Michigan, from which he obtained a degree of Bachelor of Arts, also a degree of Doctor of Medicine from that institution, making an excellent record in the same. He has been practicing medicine since 1908, making a specialty of the eye, ear, nose and throat and has been very successful, enjoying a large practice at Union City. Clem G. Ruby, our subject's second son, was born August 17, 1884. He has remained single, and is engaged in Young Men's Christian Association work at Canton, Ohio. Florence, only daughter of our subject, was born December 25, 1885, received a degree of Bachelor of Arts from the University of Michigan, and is engaged in teaching in Indianapolis; she is unmarried. James, the youngest of the children, was born January 7, 1887.

CLARENCE S. PIERCE.

The biographies of the representative men of a county bring to light many hidden treasures of mind, character and courage, well calculated to arouse the pride of their family and of the community, and it is a source of regret that people are not more familiar with the personal history of such men in the ranks of whom may be found tillers of the soil, mechanics, teachers, professional and business men of various lines. Clarence S. Pierce is one of the creditable representative business men of Union City, Randolph county and as such has made his influence felt in this locality and earned a name for enterprise, integrity and honor.

Mr. Pierce who is engaged in the grain business, was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, December 9, 1870. He is a son of Charles W. and Emma (Haddock) Pierce. The father was born in the state of New York, January 12, 1835. He received a limited education, and when a young man came to Randolph county, and engaged in farming, also followed other pursuits. About thirty years ago he went into the grain business in Union City and this has since claimed his attention, the Pierce Elevator Company which he established and built up being one of the best known of its kind in this section of the state, and for many years its operations have covered a wide territory. The company deals in grains, seeds, hay, fertilizer and coal. Although now advanced in years the elder Pierce is still successfully attending to business and is hale and hearty as a result of careful living and right thinking. He has been influential in the affairs of the community and has always been highly esteemed for his industry, public-spiritedness and honesty. His wife, who was a native of Columbus, Ohio, died in 1873. To these parents eight children were born, but only these three survive: Mary C., Frank W. and Clarence S., of this sketch.

Clarence S. Pierce grew up in his native community, and he received a common school education, graduating from the high school at Union City in 1887, soon afterward entering DePauw University in which he spent two years, then returned to Union City, later taking a commercial course in Dayton, Ohio. Thus exceptionally well equipped for life's serious duties, he entered the business world with his father in the elevator at Union City and has remained with the same ever since, its rapidly increasing success and prestige being due in no small measure to his industry and sound counsel. The Pierce Elevator Company is a corporation, with a capital stock of eighty thousand dollars, and is well equipped in every respect to render prompt and high grade service and a very large annual business is carried on. Clarence S. Pierce is president of the company; C. C. Fisher is vice-president; C. L. Northlane is secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Pierce was married March 27, 1894 to Bertha Smith, who was born in Union City, Ohio, October 27, 1873. Mrs. Pierce received an excellent education in Oxford, Ohio, in the public schools and college. She is a lady of many estimable characteristics and is popular with the best circles wherever she is known.

Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, namely: Charles Stuart, born February 6. 1895, is at this writing a student in the University of Michigan; Mary Alameda, born July 27, 1897, is attending high school.

Politically, Mr. Pierce has followed the example of his father and supports the Democratic party in which he is active and influential. In 1898 he was elected mayor of Union City, serving until 1902 in a very faithful and creditable manner, doing much for the general upbuilding of the town. In the campaign of 1912 he made the race for representative to the state legislature and was duly elected. He has made his influence felt among his colleagues for the good of his county and won the hearty commendation of his constituents. He served for a period of four years on the Union City school board. Fraternally he belongs to the Masonic Order, Modern Woodmen of America, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Religiously he is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is a trustee in the local congregation.

Broad-minded, progressive in his ideas, a thinker and close observer, Mr. Pierce keeps fully abreast of the times and in touch with current thought and discharges the duties of citizenship in a manner becoming an enterprising American of honorable impulses. He stands high in the esteem of those with whom he mingles, makes and retains friends easily, and is a genial, courteous, straightforward and companionable gentleman whom it is a pleasure to know.

LINCOLN S. C. REINHEIMER.

Improvement and progress may well be said to form the keynote of the character of Lincoln Sherman Chase Reinheimer, formerly a well-known merchant of Winchester and for a number of years past a dealer in real estate, and he has not only been interested in the work of advancement in individual affairs but his influence is felt in upbuilding the community where he has always resided. He has been a very industrious man all his life, striving to keep abreast of the times in every respect, and as a result every mile-post of the years he has passed has found him farther advanced, more prosperous, more sedate and with a broader view of life in all its immensity, and with a larger number of friends than the preceding.

Mr. Reinheimer was born in Winchester, Indiana, February 25, 1866. He is a son of Peter and Elizabeth (Irwin) Reinheimer. The father was a native of Eastern Pennsylvania, and the mother was born in North Carolina. They came west with their families when each were young in years, both the Reinheimers and Irwins locating near New Paris, Preble county, Ohio, and there the parents of our subject grew to maturity, received common school educations and were married. Remaining in the Buckeye state until December, 1865 the family removed to Winchester, Indiana, and here Peter Reinheimer became landlord of the Franklin House, which he continued to conduct in a successful manner and one that was highly satisfactory to the traveling public for a period of twenty years, his hostelry becoming one of the best known and most popular in this section of the state. In fact, he spent the rest of his life here engaged in the hotel business, dying in June, 1885, his widow surviving two years, joining him in the Silent Land, mentioned by the old German poet, in May, 1887. They were hard-working, hospitable and honest people, whom everybody respected.

The subject of this sketch was born and reared in the Franklin Hotel here and when a boy he assisted his parents in operating the same, attending the city schools during the winter months. When but a boy he became a grocer's delivery wagon driver, and he clerked for about six years, giving satisfactory service, and in the meantime, being ambitious and quick-minded he learned every phase of the grocery business, and finally opened a store of this nature himself and was highly successful from the start, following the grocery business for a period of twenty years, during which time he enjoyed a large and lucrative trade with the city and county as a result of his good management and courteous and honest treatment of his patrons. Accumulating a competency and tiring of the close confinement of his store,

Mr. Reinheimer retired from the active affairs of life in June, 1911, since which time he has not been actively engaged in anything; however, he has handled some real estate.

Mr. Reinheimer was married on March 16, 1892 to E. Olive Bales, daughter of Joseph L. and Malinda (Thornburg) Bales, a highly respected Randolph county family. Here Mrs. Reinheimer grew to womanhood and received a common school education.

To the union of our subject and wife one daughter, Helen, has been born. She is a graduate of the Winchester high school, and is now a student at Hanover College, where she is making a splendid record.

Politically Mr. Reinheimer has always been a Republican, and has been more or less active in the ranks of the same, active in public matters as pertaining to the general welfare of Winchester and Randolph county. He is now serving as a member of the city council and is doing much for the permanent good of the town, being an ardent advocate of civic improvements. He is president of the Randolph Club, an organization of business and professional men, where party lines are not drawn, all working for the good of Winchester and Mr. Reinheimer has been very largely responsible for the large success of this praiseworthy club. He is a member of Winchester Lodge, No. 91, Knights of Pythias. The family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. The Reinheimer residence, a cozy well-furnished one, is located at 303 South Main street, in one of the most desirable sections of the city, and it is known to the many friends of the family as a place of hospitality.

ALONZO L. BALES.

Alonzo L. Bales, a member of the firm of Nichols, Goodrich & Bales, one of the best known legal firms of Winchester, was born September 25, 1864 in West River township, Randolph county, on the Wayne county line, on a farm. He is a son of William D. and Rebecca A. (Jackson) Bales. The father was born in Dalton, Wayne county, and the mother in West River township, Randolph county. Jacob Bales, the great grandfather, came to Indiana from near Knoxville, Tennessee, in the year 1816 when the state was in its infancy and settlers were few and the land covered by practically a wilderness throughout. He settled with his family about two miles southwest of what is now the village of Economy, Wayne county, when that section was the home of the red man and many varieties of wild beasts. There this courageous pioneer erected a log cabin and began life as a true frontiers man, developing a good farm through hard, persistent work. His son, John Bales, grandfather of our subject, grew up in that section, worked at the carpenter's trade, and remained there until 1862 when he moved to Randolph county and settled on the land where our subject was born. He succeeded here as a farmer and his death occurred in 1884, at an advanced age, his birth having occurred in 1807. His son, William D. Bales, father of the gentleman whose name initiates this sketch, devoted his life successfully to general agricultural and stock raising pursuits, becoming one of the leading men of his community. His family consisted of five children, namely: Alonzo L., of this sketch; Oliver H. died in infancy; Sarah E. is deceased; Mary J. is deceased; Charles E. is engaged in farming in West River township. The father is still living on the homestead, but the mother passed away on July 10, 1913. She was a woman of fine Christian fortitude and charitable impulse.

Alonzo L. Bales grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked when a boy, attending the district schools during the winter months, and for a time the Winchester high school. He then taught successfully in the district schools of his native county for two consecutive winters, beginning in the fall of 1884. During this period he read law with A. O. Marsh and J. W. Thompson and was admitted to practice in 1891. He moved to Winchester in September, 1895 and began practicing in partnership in December of that year with William S. Diggs under the firm name of Diggs & Bales which continued with ever increasing prestige until 1900 when Mr. Bales formed a partnership with John W. Macy and J. P. Goodrich, under the firm name of Macy, Goodrich & Bales which lasted until Mr. Macy went on the bench in 1902, when A. L. Nichols came into the firm as Nichols, Goodrich & Bales, and thus the firm stands at this writing. Judge Macy came back to the firm upon leaving the bench and after his death in 1912 his son, John W. Macy, Jr., succeeded him as a member of the firm.

Mr. Bales practices in the state and federal courts and is known to be a painstaking, alert, well-grounded and competent lawyer in every line of legal science. He is an earnest and forceful pleader and is one of the most conspicuous figures in the trial of important cases in the local courts. His success has been pronounced from the start and his practice and influence have steadily grown with advancing years. He is a member of the county and state bar associations. Politically, he is a Republican and has been active in the ranks. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Randolph county in the fall of 1898 and served one term in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. He served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee for a number of years and did much for the success of the party in Randolph county.

Mr. Bales was married, first, on September 1, 1892 to Martha E. Foutz, a daughter of Henry and Mary Jane (Boyd) Foutz, of Randolph county. To this union four children were born, namely: Ralph W., whose birth occurred August 7, 1893; William H., born December 9, 1895; Mary R., born June 21, 1898; Ruth A., born February 28, 1901. The wife and mother was called to her eternal rest on April 24, 1901. Mr. Bales' second marriage took place on June 21, 1905 when he espoused Emma G. Engle, daughter of Edmund and Gertrude (Bishop) Engle, of Winchester, and to this union one child has been born, John E., whose birth occurred January 29, 1908.

Prior to her marriage, Mrs. Bales, for a term of seven years successfully taught history and English in the Winchester high school. She was a student at Butler College, Indianapolis, for two years. For many years she has taken an active part in all branches of church work.

Fraternally, Mr. Bales is a member of the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of the Golden Eagle and the Modern Woodmen of America.

He owns a valuable and well-improved farm in West River township and a commodious home on South Main street. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church as are also his children. Mrs. Bales belongs to the Main Street Christian church. All are active in church and Sunday school work. He is a teacher in the men's Bible class, which was organized under the state Sunday school organization as the A. L. Bales Bible class. He is a man of broad influence and usefulness, both in his profession and public life, and is regarded by all as a liberal, broad-minded, public-spirited citizen.

DON C. WARD.

The life of Don C. Ward, the broad-minded and progressive editor of The Union City Eagle, has been such as to bear aloft the high standard which was maintained by his father, who was for a long lapse of years one of the leading educators of Randolph county, and whose life was signally noble, upright and useful, one over which falls no shadow of wrong in word, thought or deed. Such was the type of men who laid the foundation and aided in the development of this locality, and to their memories will ever be paid a tribute of reverence and gratitude by those who have profited by their well-directed endeavors and appreciated the lesson of their lives.

Mr. Ward was born October 26, 1883 in West Union, Randolph county. He is a son of A. H. and Ella (Scott) Ward. The father was born in Maryland July 3, 1848, was reared in Pennsylvania and educated in the district schools and Chambersburg Academy, also attended a normal college in Pennsylvania. He began teaching when a young man and followed this line of endeavor for a period of forty-four years, thirty-six of which he taught in the schools of Wayne township, Randolph county, one year in Marshall county, Indiana, one year in Miami county, Ohio, and six years in Pennsylvania. He was a man of progressive ideas and was very popular and influential as an educator. His services were always in great demand. His death occurred April 4, 1912. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born near Winchester, Indiana (July 21, 18—) and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools and Winchester high school She was a teacher for several years, and is now living in Union City.

To A. H. Ward and wife four children were born, three of whom are still living, namely: Don C., of this sketch; Mabel E. is teaching in Marion, Indiana; Merle S. is teaching in Union City; Clyde E. is deceased.

Don C. Ward received his education in the common schools of West Union and in the Union City high school, graduating from the high school at the age of fourteen, being the youngest graduate ever known in that city. He then spent two years in the Eastern Indiana Normal University at Muncie, after which he taught school seven years, five of them in Union City and two in Wayne township. He gave great satisfaction as an instructor and proved himself to be a worthy son of a worthy sire as an educator, but finally deciding that some other line of endeavor would suit him better, he began the study of law in the office of Shockney Brothers, of Union City, also took two correspondence courses in law, one from the American School of Law in Chicago, and one from the Lincoln and Jefferson school at Hammond, Indiana. He was admitted to the bar in Randolph county in due course of time, and began practice He was successful from the first and soon had a good business. In 1910 he became assistant city attorney of Union City. Believing that journalism held still greater attractions for him he became connected with The Eagle Publishing Company of Union City, on June 1, 1912, and since that time has been editor and manager of The Union City Eagle. He has already made it a moulder of local public opinion, a valuable news and advertising medium, and its circulation has rapidly increased. He has brightened its appearance from a mechanical standpoint, and placed it on a paying basis.

Mr. Ward has remained unmarried. Politically he is a Democrat and has been active in public affairs. He made the race for representative from Randolph county, also for prosecuting attorney. His services are in great demand as a public speaker, as he is an orator of no mean ability. He is an excellent campaign manager, and was township chairman during the only two campaigns when a complete Democratic ticket was ever elected in Union City. He is a member of the Methodist church, and fraternally belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Loyal Order of Moose, and the Order of Owls. He is a member of the Joint Fraternal Memorial Board in Union City. He is musically inclined and gifted as a musician, and has been a member and manager of the Union City Concert Band ever since its organization. It is composed of twenty-five pieces, and is one of the best and most popular bands in the county.

CYRUS CLYDE WRIGHT, D. D. S.

An able young exponent of the science of dentistry as we know it in this progressive twentieth century is found in the person of Dr. Cyrus Clyde Wright, of Lynn, Randolph county. He seems to have all the natural attributes of head and heart for the successful performing of his chosen vocation, and the pronounced success he has already attained would bear out this statement, and to him the future years hold much of promise. He had the tact to see when but a boy that his true bent was in this direction, but he did not depend on Nature to do it all for him, but set about diligently to advance himself in the science and he has been a close student of the same and proposes to keep fully abreast of the profession in all its future changes and improvements.

Dr. Wright was born in Steuben county, Indiana, May 2, 1882. He is a son of Monroe F. and Caroline (Parr) Wright. The father was born October 2, 1858, and is a son of Elbridge and Martha (Cochran) Wright. Elbridge Wright was a native of Vermont, of a sterling old New England family. He came to Indiana in an early day and entered a farm in Randolph county, which is still in possession of the family. Here he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1879. He was a successful farmer and became owner of about three hundred acres of valuable land. Martha Cochran was a native of the state of New York. Her death occurred in 1892.

Monroe F. Wright, mentioned above, grew up on the old homestead and there he worked when a boy, attending the rural schools in the winter months.

He has devoted his entire life to farming and has met with success all along the line. Politically he is a Republican, and in religious matters is a member of the Christian church. He and Caroline Parr were married in 1878. She was born near New Philadelphia, Ohio, May 12, 1856, and she came with her parents to Steuben county, Indiana in 1862.

Dr. Wright grew up on the home farm and made himself generally useful about the place when a boy. He received a common school education. He began life for himself by working in a cement factory which he continued for five years. He was economical and at the end of that time had enough money to take up his more serious life work. The above named factory was at Stroh, Indiana. After severing his connection with the same he entered the Indiana Dental College at Indianapolis, where he made an excellent record and from which he was graduated in 1907. He located at Ft. Wayne for the practice of his profession, but remained there only five months, when he moved to Angola, Indiana and was there a year, then came to Lynn, where he has continued successfully to the present time, and now enjoys a large and ever-growing patronage.

Politically, Mr. Wright is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masonic Order, and is now worshipful master of the local lodge of the latter. He is a member of the Royal Arch Masons of Winchester. Religiously, he belongs to the Christian church.

Dr. Wright was married November 16, 1910 to Maud Skelley, who was born at Stroh, Indiana and there grew to womanhood and was educated. The date of her birth is December 19, 1882. To this union one child has been born, Caroline L. Wright.

AUSTIN H. BURKE.

A man of marked individuality, Austin H. Burke, well-known cement contractor and builder of Winchester is a typical representative of that large and enterprising class of business men to whom Randolph county owes much of its prosperity and development, and his record shows him to have been faithful in the performance of his duty in the community to his neighbors and to himself. He is the scion of a sterling old family of West Virginia, noted for their industry, integrity, hospitality and public-spiritedness.

Mr. Burke was born September 3, 1877 in Randolph county, West Virginia. He is a son of John and Martha (Ferguson) Burke. The father engaged all his life in general agricultural pursuits and spent his active life in West Virginia, but after the death of his wife in 1892 he came with his family to Winchester, Randolph county, Indiana, and here again engaged in farming which he followed with his usual success for a period of seven years when he retired.

Austin H. Burke was reared on the home farm in West Virginia and there worked hard when a boy, and during the winter months he attended the public schools in his community. After coming to Indiana he worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-one years of age, when he engaged in the cement contracting business. Being apt to learn and a young man of ambition, he soon had mastered the ins and outs of the business and had a good start in the same, and he has remained in this business continuously ever since. He started with little capital, but he was a boy of good character and he had all the credit necessary, and he succeeded from the first, his business continuing to grow with the years until it has now assumed large proportions and he is known, favorably and well all over this section of the state, where many fine buildings, business, public and private, stand as monuments to his skill and honesty as a builder. He does all kinds of cement work, from the plain substantial to the ornamental and fantastic in building. He also handles all kinds of building material and is regarded as one of Randolph county's most reliable contractors. His business extends far beyond the confines of this county and he is a very busy man at all seasons.

Mr. Burke was married on July 13, 1902, to Ella M. Summers, daughter of David and Elmira (Rough) Summers, an excellent Randolph county family. Here Mrs. Burke grew to womanhood and received a good education in the public schools. The union of our subject and wife has resulted in the birth of one son and one daughter, namely: Charles and Lettie.

Mr. Burke is a member of the Independent Order of Red Men, and politically, he is a Democrat, and has long been interested and active in public matters. He is a member of the city council of Winchester and has done a great deal toward the general upbuilding of the town, being an ardent advocate of substantial public improvements, and everything that looks to the betterment of public conditions.

Mr. Burke's place of business is located at 233 West Washington street, where he is well situated and where he always carries an excellent stock of building material.

Personally, he is a genial, companionable, trustworthy gentleman whom everybody respects and trusts.

CHARLES F. YOUNT.

One of the substantial and influential business men of Farmland is Charles F. Yount, hardware merchant. Mr. Yount was born in Darke county, Ohio, June 15, 1879, and is the son of Eli and Rebecca (Martindale) Yount. He was educated in the local schools till 16 years of age and then attended for two terms the Versailles high school. After that, he taught school two years and was four and a half years in his brother's hardware store at Portland. He went on the road for the Home Pride Range Company and was subsequently superintendent of its factory for two years. Then he went to Farmland and bought a half interest in a hardware store. In 1907, at the end of three years, he bought out his partner, which gave him the sole ownership of the leading hardware store in Farmland. The measurement of floor space is 7,200 feet.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Yount's career, from his earliest school days, has been one of continual advancement. It will be noticed that there has been no deviation, no waste of time on side issues. The schooling was ample and the foundation of the business career of the character that made the achievement of success easy and certain. His principle of business seems to be extensive sales on small profits. Nobody goes away from Farmland to the larger towns to buy hardware, but the circuit of country is large which goes to Farmland for its supplies in this line of goods. Mr. Yount's store has the full variety of equipment to be found in the leading hardware establishments of Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland and Cincinnati. It is a big city store in not a very large town, and has wonderfully enhanced the reputation of Farmland. It is said that there isn't a home in Randolph county has hasn't an article of Yount's hardware in it. Certainly no name is better known in the county than Mr. Yount's and he bases his reputation on the fair and comprehensive way in which he conducts his business.

Mr. Yount was married Oct. 4, 1900, to Mina Christian, a daughter of Henry Christian, a farmer near Versailles, Ohio. Two children have been born to them—Howard, August 21, 1901, and Martelle Jeanette, May 30, 1907. The father of the subject of this sketch was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, in 1840, and still lives on the homestead. His grandfather and grandmother were both Germans and came from Pennsylvania. The father of Mr. Yount's mother was born in Montgomery county and reared a family of fifteen children, the youngest of which was the subject's mother.

Mr. Yount had eleven brothers and sisters, named as follows: John;

Frederick died at the age of 33 and left a widow. He lived in Darke county, Ohio, and was a farmer. William D., who has a hardware store at Portland, Ind., married Mary Wilson, of Darke county, and they have two children. Elizabeth, who lives near Portland, married William Stocker, a farmer, and has had five children, four of whom are living. Anna, of Greenville, Ohio, married John A. Martin, a tobacco merchant. Four children have been born to them. Lula, born April 1, 1873, lives on the old homestead, as does also Emma, who was born November 14, 1877. Ora and Cora, deceased, were twins; Walter, a farmer of Darke county, married Devona Gottschall, and to them one child, Thelma, has been born. Ohmer, with his wife and one child, live in Farmland and is employed in our subject's store.

In religious circles, Mr. Yount is quite active and prominent, and is one of the faithful who hold fast the belief that the church still has its grip on the world and is the hope of it. It is through such men that the faith of the fathers is preserved to us and the church made a vital power in the activities of modern life. He affiliates with the Christian church and participates in all its charitable enterprises. Farmland is the richer in many ways for the citizenship of Charles F. Yount.

GEORGE W. ROBBINS.

The every-day life, with its cares, necessities and duties, affords ample opportunities for acquiring experience of the best kind and its most beaten paths provide a true worker with abundant scope for effort and improvement. This fact was recognized early in life by George W. Robbins, one of the enterprising and representative citizens of Winchester, who seized the small opportunities which he encountered on the rugged hill that leads to life's lofty summit where lies the ultimate goal of success, never attained by the weak, inactive and ambitionless. Mr. Robbins has carried on special lines of endeavor with that energy, discretion and perseverance which are sure to find their natural sequence in definite success, and in such a man there is particular satisfaction in offering in his life history justification for the compilation of works of this character.

Mr. Robbins was born August 21, 1847, in Ithaca, Darke county, Ohio. He is a son of Solomon and Mary (Shepherd) Robbins. The father was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, and was a son of Richard Robbins, who came to that locality in the year 1804 from Randolph county, North Carolina. The father of the subject of this sketch was born November 7, 1811,

G. W. ROBBINS AND GRANDAUGHTER, HENRIETTA KELCH.

MRS. G. W. ROBBINS
AND HENRIETTA KELCH.

and the mother was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, April 15, 1813, and she came with her parents, Dennis Shepherd and wife, to Ithaca, Darke county, Ohio, in 1821. Both Grandfather Robbins and Grandfather Shepherd settled in the woods and began life in Darke county as true pioneers. They came by wagon overland, thence by steamboat down the Ohio river. The Shepherd family started by boat on the Monongahela river from their old home in Pennsylvania, and while enroute they were caught in an ice gorge, the boat wrecked and they lost all their belongings. They were detained in their journey to Ohio about three years, during which time they made money enough to come on to their destination. Grandfather Dennis Shepherd acquired a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which is still in the family and has never been sold or mortgaged. His death occurred at the advanced age of ninety-two years, and his wife at the age of ninety-five years. They were a remarkable old couple. Their family consisted of ten sons and one daughter, Mary, who was the mother of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Shepherd became one of the prosperous farmers of Darke county. He was a "hickory Quaker." In addition to farming he kept a tavern, where many a weary traveler found rest. In frontier days the Robbins family settled in Montgomery county, Ohio, and in 1808 Grandfather Robbins went to Darke county, that state, and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land on Twin creek, but the Indians were so annoying that he returned to Montgomery county, where he had first settled, and there he remained until after the war of 1812, and in 1813 returned to his land in Darke county. He gave twenty acres of his land to a friend that he might have a neighbor. Here Solomon Robbins and Mary Shepherd were married in 1835. During the war of 1812 Grandfather Richard Robbins was a regimental drummer. The parents of our subject lived in Darke county, Ohio, until 1853, when they moved to Randolph county, Indiana, and settled on a farm of forty acres about twelve miles northwest of Winchester. Early in life the father learned the blacksmith's trade, which he worked at before leaving Ohio. He brought his family from Darke to Randolph county in a one-horse wagon. He paid three hundred dollars for his forty acres here, the money being in silver half-dollars—six hundred of them. This sum he had saved from his blacksmithing back in Darke county. He continued his trade in Randolph county in connection with farming, and in 1855 left the farm and moved to Farmland and opened a blacksmith shop in partnership with Jonathan Macy, grandfather of the late Judge Macy, of Winchester. In 1859 Solomon Robbins moved to a farm four miles north of Farmland, where he remained until 1867, farming and blacksmithing. In 1867 he moved to a farm one mile east of Farmland, where he lived until his death, July 12, 1877. His widow survived until December 16, 1895, dying at Redkey, Indiana, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Thomas Gray. Politically, Solomon Robbins was a Republican, and he was a man of influence in his community, and was one of our best farmers in his day and generation as well as one of the most skillful blacksmiths of that period. His family consisted of eight children, two dying in infancy, three sons and three daughters living to maturity, namely: Rosanna, who married John Elwood, died in Grundy county, Missouri; William S. lives in Chico, California; Ruth V married Thomas Gray, of Redkey, Indiana; George W., of this sketch; Elizabeth S. is the wife of William Collins, of Chico, California; Enos R., of Indianapolis.

George W. Robbins was reared on the various farms owned by his father and in Farmland, and was educated in the public schools. He began learning the blacksmith's trade under his father in 1864. He worked with James Rice in Greenville, Ohio, one year, then returned to Farmland and finished learning the trade with his brother. In 1868 he opened a shop of his own in Farmland, which he operated until 1869, when he added the implement business to his blacksmithing, and was soon doing a large business.

Mr. Robbins discontinued the blacksmithing business in 1873, but continued the implement business until 1889 with ever increasing success. On March 1, 1890, he moved to Winchester and has since resided here. He has engaged in the live stock business. He has traveled extensively for Altman-Miller & Company, The Buckeye Reaper Company, of Akron, Ohio. In 1891 he resigned his position with the Buckeye Reaper Company and became general agent for Indiana for the Ohio Rake Company, of Dayton, which position he still holds. In 1900 this company sent him to Europe in the interest of the firm and again, in 1901, he went to Europe for the company, traveling in England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Holland, Denmark, Austria and Italy, firmly establishing the company's business in all those countries. He has given eminent satisfaction to the above-named firms, being regarded as among their most efficient, reliable and trustworthy employees. He has had other business interests. He owns a splendid farm in Randolph county, and has valuable land in other counties. He and his wife have traveled extensively in the United States, especially to the Pacific Coast, California, Yellow Stone Park and most places of interest, and, both being keen observers and excellent conversationalists it is pleasant to spend a few hours in their commodious and attractive home on South Main street, listening to their instructive discourse on their travels.

Mr. Robbins was married November 19, 1871, to Henrietta Shaw, who was born September 13, 1852. She was a daughter of Aaron Shaw, who was born in Delaware county, Ohio, June 28, 1816. Her mother was Betsey Ann Jenkins, born August 4, 1816, in Jefferson county, Virginia. To our subject and wife only one child was born, Lola, whose birth occurred September 20, 1872. She married on December 26, 1895, John C. Kelch, of Mt. Carmel, Illinois. He is engaged in the lumber business there, and is also an extensive farmer. They had two children, one died in infancy, and Henrietta.

Politically, Mr. Robbins has always been a Republican and more or less active in public matters. In 1892 he was a candidate for sheriff of Randolph county but was defeated by a small majority. In the fall of 1904 he was elected treasurer of this county, but he did not take office until July 1, 1906. He served one term of two years in a manner entirely satisfactory to his constituents. He was not a candidate for re-election. But Harry Jack, who had been elected to succeed him, died and Mr. Robbins continued in the office until a successor was elected, in the fall of 1909, thus serving three years in all. Fraternally, Mr. Robbins is a Mason, also belongs to the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his wife are regular attendants and supporters of the Presbyterian church.

The mother of Mrs. Robbins died in Farmland, Indiana, January 23, 1879, and Aaron Shaw, father of Mrs. Robbins, died in Hopkins, Missouri, June 8, 1892. They were the parents of six children, namely: Fremont died when about twenty years of age; he was the only son, the five daughters being Sarah, now the widow of David Hobbick, of Winchester; Mrs. Christian Williamson, of Youngstown, Ohio, both of whom are now deceased; Caroline, who married Edward Ritter, a captain in the Civil war, is deceased, as is also her husband; Mary, who married James Zachary, of Des Moines, Iowa, is living, but he is deceased; Henrietta S., wife of Mr. Robbins, of this sketch.

JAMES M. BROWNE.

As a painter and decorator James M. Browne, of Winchester, stands in the front rank in Randolph and adjoining counties. This position was not attained by him without persistent and long continued effort. Of course he had natural ability in that line but everyone knows that no matter how much Mother Nature may help us we must apply ourselves diligently if we would meet with more than mediocre success in any line of human endeavor. This was clearly understood by Mr. Browne at the outset, consequently he left no stone unturned whereby he might ascend the ladder to the coveted goal.

Mr. Browne was born in Ridgeville, Randolph county, October 23, 1868. He is a son of George W. and Sarah (Sims) Browne. The father was born in this county also, being a representative of one of our well-known old families; but the mother's birth occurred in Parkersburg, West Virginia. George W. Browne grew to manhood in his native community and was educated in the common schools of his day, and when a young man he learned the carpenter's trade which he made his principal life work, becoming quite a skilled workman. He was active in Republican politics and at one time was trustee of White River township. He was a soldier in the Civil war, a member of Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving gallantly for three years, part of the time with Sherman and took part in the sanguinary Atlanta campaign. He was never wounded or taken prisoner. His death occurred on June 6, 1906, his wife having preceded him to the grave on March 20, 1875. Mr. Browne was a member of the Nelson Trusler Post, Grand Army of the Republic. He belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, filling all the chairs in the local lodge, was also a member of the Encampment. He was a member of the Christian church. Soon after the birth of our subject, the elder Browne moved to Winchester with his family where he worked at his trade.

James M. Browne was reared in Winchester and was educated in the local schools. When a young man he learned the painters' and decorators' trade and has followed this to the present time, having become widely known throughout this section of the state for his skill, conscientious and high-grade work and his promptness in turning out jobs, consequently his services have long been in great demand. Since 1893 he has been a contract painter and decorator. He maintains a well and carefully stocked store, carrying all kinds of paints, oils, wall paper of all grades, glass and decorative goods, also has a picture department and picture framing. His store is regarded by all of his many customers as one of the finest and best appointed stores of its kind in this part of the state, in fact, it would do credit to cities much larger than Winchester. He has built up a large and ever growing trade through his foresight, industry, honesty, and courteous dealings with his fellow men.

Mr. Browne was for four years a member of the city council, a member-at-large since 1909. Politically he is a Republican and has always remained faithful to its precepts, and is always active in local public affairs, having done much to encourage the general upbuilding of his town and county. He is a man whose counsel in public matters is always regarded as valuable and reliable. He belongs to the Business Men's Association. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, and the Modern Woodmen, also Camp of the Old Forty-four Sons of Veterans.

Mr. Browne was married August 12, 1892 to Dollie Cranor, a daughter of Joseph C. and Mary (Hunt) Cranor. The father is deceased, but the mother is living at Richmond, Indiana. To our subject and wife five children have been born, namely: Mary, born November 2, 1893; Doris, born July 20, 1895; Reva, born August 3, 1896; Joe Donald, born June 1, 1898; and Juanita, born February 14, 1904. They are all at home.

Mr. Browne and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has been a member of the official board since 1907, and is financial secretary of the board. His place of business is at 111 West Franklin street.

ARLA M. BROWN.

There is always satisfaction in writing, even briefly, of men of the type of Arla M. Brown, secretary of the National Poland-China Record Company and an extensive stock raiser, breeder and farmer, of Winchester, and one of the valued citizens of Randolph county; for it is a record of triumph after hard climbing up the steps of life, often in the face of obstacles and with little or no encouragement. It shows, in a word, what one may accomplish with the attributes of grit, perseverance and honorable impulses, when rightly directed. There is always a satisfaction, gained no other way, to the individual, who feels that his struggles have brought success, even if delayed.

Mr. Brown was born on January 24, 1872, in Washington township, Randolph county. He is a son of Edward I. and Melsena J. (Hinshaw) Brown. The father was born in Darke county, Ohio, and the mother in Randolph county, Indiana, both representing prominent pioneer families. The father is still engaged in farming in Washington township, where he is highly esteemed. The mother was called to her eternal rest on July 7, 1892.

Arla M. Brown was reared on the farm where he worked when growing to manhood, and he received his early education in the district schools and the Normal School at Danville, after which he began life for himself by teaching three years in the district schools of Randolph county. He was then deputy county treasurer under M. H. Rubey for some time, and deputy county auditor for over four years under Calvin S. Engle, giving very satisfactory service under both. In 1903 he became secretary of the National Poland-China Record Company, with offices in Winchester. Prior to that he was secretary of the Ohio Poland-China Record Company at Dayton, Ohio, for a period of two years, then that association consolidated with the Poland-China Record Company of Indianapolis, becoming the National Poland-China Record Company, with international scope, including all the states of the Union, Canada, Argentine Republic and other countries. The general offices have been in Winchester since 1903. Mr. Brown has given eminent satisfaction as secretary, and although he is a very busy man he has found time to look after his farm, being extensively interested in general farming, feeding and breeding live stock, and he is regarded as one of the county's leading agriculturists and stock men. He is a stockholder in various banks and other interests and by his industry and good management has become one of our substantial citizens.

Fraternally, Mr. Brown is a member of the Masonic Order and the Knights of Pythias, being grand chancellor of the latter in 1910 and a representative to the supreme lodge of the world in 1911, which is a term lasting four years. Politically, he is a Republican and is active in public affairs.

Mr. Brown was married on February 11, 1892, to Eva E. Price, a daughter of James and Lydia (Woofter) Price, a highly respected family of Randolph county.

Four children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Floyd H. is a student of osteopathy at the Sill school at Kirksville, Missouri; Norville E., Mary M. and Mabel are attending high school.

Mr. Brown and family are members of the Friends church, and he is superintendent of the Sabbath school and has long been active in church and Sunday school work.

SETH HINSHAW.

As a twentieth century business man Seth Hinshaw is deserving to rank among the forefront of this class in Winchester. He is one of the well-known and successful general contractors of the county and is at present doing a general insurance business. He has always looked to the good of Randolph county and did what he could toward its development in every way, and here he has been content to spend his life, having lived to note many momentous changes in the county and its towns, and it might be well to add here that he and his family have by no means been idle spectators of all this change.

Mr. Hinshaw was born May 30, 1853, in White River township, Randolph county. He is a son of Edmund and Irena (Hiatt) Hinshaw. The father was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, and the mother was born in Virginia. The Hinshaws came to Randolph county, Indiana, as early as 1833 and were therefore among the early settlers, and from that day to this the name has been prominent in the affairs of the county. The paternal grandfather, Benjamin Hinshaw, came with his family to Wayne county, this state, and his son, Edmund, father of our subject, came to Randolph county, where he became a leading farmer and land owner. His death occurred on December 14, 1883, and his wife died February 7, 1870. Their family consisted of three sons and three daughters, namely: Seth, subject of this review; Mary, who is the wife of Cornelius Rouch, of Jay county, Indiana; Edmund is deceased; Anna has remained single; Benjamin E., who lives in Winchester, and Rachel A., who died February 25, 1870. By a former marriage, Edmund, Sr., had three sons and one daughter: Abner and William were both soldiers in the Civil war and died during the service; Jesse died in Winchester August 5, 1898; Phoebe is the wife of James E. Huston, a Civil war veteran. The father of the above named children was a Democrat in the early part of his life, but later became a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Friends church. He was a man of sterling integrity and prompt in all his business obligations, and he instilled this principle into the family.

Seth Hinshaw was reared on the home farm and he attended the common schools, remaining with his parents on the farm until he was married on December 13, 1877, to Mary Owens, a daughter of Peter and Rachel (Davis) Owens, of Randolph county. This union resulted in the birth of two children, namely: Bessie, who married Wilbur Grow, of Ward township, Logan married Bonnie James and lives on his father's farm in Ward township.

After his marriage, our subject farmed successfully in Ward township until 1906, when he moved to Winchester and here he has been engaged in contracting road work and bridge building in this county and has built up an extensive business. His work gives satisfaction always, for it is honestly and skillfully done. He also conducts an insurance and loan office and has built up a large and growing business in this line.

Politically, he is a Republican, and has long been actively interested in public matters, and for a number of years has been on the drainage commission of Randolph county, an office appointed by the court. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his family belong to the Christian church, of which he is a trustee. He is a stockholder in the Ridgeville State bank. He is one of the county's substantial, broad, liberal and energetic business men. His office is at 120½ West Washington street, and his residence at 551 North Main street.

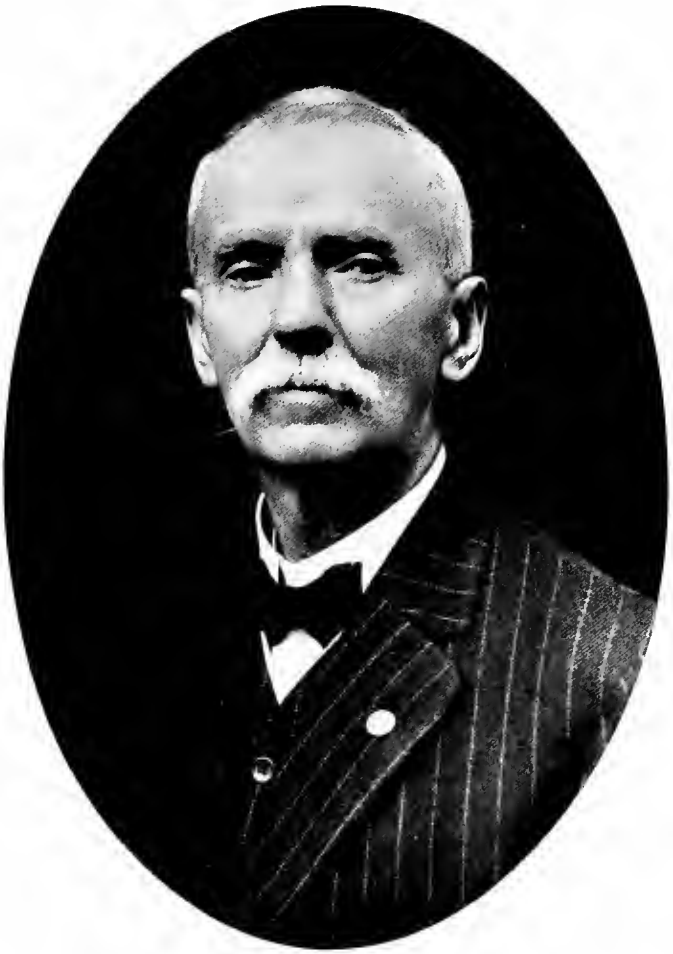
JOSEPH WATTS.

The career of Joseph Watts, of Winchester, Randolph county, has been a varied and interesting one. Faithfulness to duty, public-spirit, and perseverance have been some of his most noted characteristics all his life. He was formerly engaged in agricultural pursuits, but for a period of over thirty years has been in the railway mail service. He is one of our honored veterans of the great Civil war and a man highly esteemed by his wide acquaintance. He first came to Winchester nearly half a century ago, and his conversation, relating to the many changes during that period, is very interesting. He was much impressed with the future possibilities of the place upon his first arrival and has been deeply interested in its general development ever since, although living away from here part of the time.

Mr. Watts was born November 18, 1843 in Richland county, Ohio. He is a son of Samuel and Martha Ann (Paxson) Watts, and a brother of Isaiah P. Watts, a sketch of whom appears in another part of this volume, in which an account of the family history will also be found. Suffice it to say here that this is a sterling old family of the Buckeye state, and that in 1847 they left their ancestral halls in Richland county and removed to Wells county, Indiana, and established their home there since which time the Watts have remained in the Hoosier state.

Joseph Watts was reared in Wells county and attended the public schools. He proved his patriotism and courage during the Civil war by enlisting on September 25, 1861 in Company A, Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, but after four months' service was discharged for disability, and after recovering his health, he again enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry for one hundred days which he served, and on October 19, 1864 enlisted a third time, selecting Company E, Seventh Regiment, Indiana Cavalry, in which he served his term of enlistment of one year. He showed a most admirable desire and unflagging determination to serve his country in its greatest hour of need. He has testimonials relative to his faithful and gallant service from his commanding officers.



JOSEPH WATTS.

After his career in the army, Mr. Watts returned to his home in Wells county, Indiana where he remained until 1867 when he came to Winchester, Randolph county and worked in a saw-mill, returning to Wells county two years later, where, on October 10, 1869 he married Matilda A. Irey, a daughter of Jonah Irey, of Jay county, Indiana, and to this union five children were born, namely: Clyde M., of Cheyenne, Wyoming; Herbert I. lives in Winchester; Fred J. died July 31, 1904; Floy W. is now the wife of O. O. Fraze, of Union City, Indiana; Chester B. is in the Naval Observatory at Washington, D. C.

After his marriage Mr. Watts settled at Fiat, Jay county, where he remained until 1871 when he moved to Winchester. In the spring of 1872 he went to Rice county, Kansas and entered a homestead, where he remained until 1877 when he returned to Winchester. In December of that year, he was appointed in the railway mail service, and with the exception of three years, has thus been continuously engaged to the present time, his long-continued service of over three decades being, it would seem, sufficient criterion of his high-grade service and fidelity to duty.

Mr. Watts has always been loyal in his support of the Republican party. He is a member of the Nelson Trusler Post, No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic.

He has been twice married, first to Matilda A. Irey, whose death occurred on August 22, 1900. On September 4, 1901 he married Martha J. Hiatt, daughter of Alvin M. and Rebecca (Jackson) Owens, of Hartford, formerly of Winchester.

Mr. Watts is a member of the Christian church and his wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, and is active in church work, she being president of the Ladies' Aid Society.

BENJAMIN F. GREEN.

In all that constitutes true manhood and good citizenship, Benjamin F. Green, farmer of Randolph county, is one of our conspicuous examples and none stands higher than he in the confidence of the community. His career has been characterized by duty faithfully done and by industry, and wisely-directed efforts he is receiving his just share of this world's goods, besides earning a reputation, like the rest of the Green family, that has never been clouded by the commission of a single unworthy act as far as his neighbors and those who have been closely associated with him have discovered. He is known to be a man of good judgment and pronounced views and while keeping himself informed upon current events and taking a lively interest in all public affairs of his township and county, he has never expressed so much as the faintest desire to exchange the quiet and contented life of the farm for the distractions and cares which usually come to the man who fills official positions and aspires to some exalted station among his fellow men. He is to be commended in this attitude, for such as he constitute our best citizens.

Mr. Green was born July 29, 1863, on a farm about three miles southwest of Winchester, in White River township. He is a son of William S. and Christina (Bowers) Green. Grandfather Jesse Green came with his family overland in wagons from North Carolina as early as 1818, and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in the woods of Randolph county, Indiana, having for neighbors Indians and many kindreds of the wild. He located not far from where our subject now lives, there erected a log cabin and began clearing the dense woods that surrounded it and in a few years he had a good farm under cultivation and became one of the influential citizens in the early days of the county. The elder Green and family was one of seven families that came to this vicinity about the same time. The white children played with the children of the red men, and Mr. Green often traded corn to the Indians for venison. He lived to an advanced age, and his good wife died when nearly one hundred and two years old. This sterling old couple sleeps the peaceful sleep of the just in the quiet Dunkirk cemetery.

William S. Green, father of our subject, grew to manhood on the homestead, where he worked hard when a boy, sharing the hardships incident to such an environment. He never had any school advantages and never learned to read or write or count money, but nevertheless this somewhat remarkable man became very successful and left a large estate, comprising some four hundred acres of valuable land, besides other properties. He learned much about woodcraft, hunting and the habits of the denizens of earth, water and air from his Indian playmates when a child. He was a man of rugged physique and unswerving honesty, and he did what he could toward the early development of his community. His death occurred May 12, 1887, at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, a woman of kind heart and helpful impulses, preceded him to the grave in 1871. They were buried in Maxville cemetery. To them fourteen children were born. The father married a second time, his last wife being Sylvania Hiatt, by whom two children were born. Of the first family only four are now living, namely: Sarah, who married William Y. Puckett, resides in Winchester; Alva C., farmer of White River township, this county, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work; Benjamin F., of this review; and George, who lives in White River township.

Benjamin F. Green grew to manhood on the home farm and worked there when growing up, and he obtained his education in the district schools of his neighborhood. He remained under his parental roof-tree until 1884.

Mr. Green has been three times married, first, on July 12, 1884, to Mattie Williams, a daughter of Joshua and Sarah Williams, and to this union three children were born, all of whom died in early childhood, and the wife and mother died September 21, 1894, at the early age of twenty-eight years. The children were named Archie, born in May, 1885, died May 11, 1892; Julia, born September, 1888, died September 21, 1890; and an infant died unnamed, December 26, 1893. Mr. Green's second marriage was on October 22, 1896, to Lillie Kayser, a daughter of Henry and Rachel Kayser, of Randolph county. This union was without issue. The second wife died December 23, 1902. Mr. Green's last marriage took place June 20, 1903, when he espoused Ida Morrical, a daughter of Floyd and Nancy Ellen (Brown) Morrical, of Winchester, both parents being now deceased. Two children have been born to this last union, namely: Everett C., born March 14, 1906; and Mary F., born January 17, 1911.

Mr. Green has lived on the farm where he now resides since he left home, forty acres of land and two thousand dollars being his marriage portion from his father. He has a well-improved place, and carries on general farming and stock raising. He has a pleasant home. He does not farm on as extensive a scale as some of his neighbors but does his work well and makes a good living.

Politically, Mr. Green is a Republican. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was reared in the Quaker faith, from which he has never departed. He is giving his children proper educational advantages.

DANIEL WALTER CALLAHAN.

Perhaps no agency in all the world has done so much for public progress as the press, and an enterprising, well-edited journal is a most important factor in promoting the welfare and prosperity of any community. It adds to the intelligence of any people through its transmission of foreign and domestic news and through its discussion of the leading questions and issues of the day, and more than that, it makes the town or city which it represents known outside of the immediate locality, as it is sent each day or week into other districts, carrying with it an account of the events transpiring in its home locality, the advancement and progress there being made, and the advantages which it offers to its residents along moral, educational, social and commercial lines. Randolph county is certainly indebted to its wide-awake journals in no small degree, and one of the men who are doing a commendable work in the local newspaper field is Daniel Walter Callahan, editor and publisher of The Winchester Democrat. He has long been connected with newspaper work in various localities, however, only recently in this. But his power as a writer and editor, as well as a business man is largely acknowledged among contemporary journalists and the public in general.

Mr. Callahan was born October 5, 1872, in Urbana, Ohio. He is a son of Daniel and Catherine (Flynn) Callahan. The father was born in Ireland and the mother in the state of New York. Daniel Callahan spent his boyhood in the Emerald Isle and was educated there, emigrating to America when a young man, locating in Ohio, where the Flynn family had also located, coming from the East, and there the parents of our subject were married and settled on a farm near Urbana. There the death of the father occurred when Daniel W., of this sketch, was eight years old. The mother died October 4, 1913, at her home in Urbana.

Daniel W. Callahan was reared in Urbana and there received a common school education. As a lad he began learning the printer's trade in the office of The Champaign County Democrat, at Urbana. He continued the same in various places in Ohio and in the year 1894 he purchased The Jeffersonville Citizen, in Fayette county, that state, which he conducted successfully for a period of seven years. He subsequently published a paper in West Alexandria, Preble county, Ohio, for five years, and one at New Vienna, Clinton county, that state, for some time prior to coming to Winchester, Indiana, in July, 1911. Here he purchased The Democrat, which he has since published, proving himself to be an able and aggressive editor, fearless in his advocacy of the right and in his condemnation of the wrong. He has made this one of the very best weekly newspapers in Indiana, has greatly improved its mechanical appearance, made it a modern news dispenser and its learned and timely editorials moulders of local public opinion. It has increased greatly in subscription and much advertising matter is finding its way into its pages.

Mr. Callahan is a Democrat of pronounced principles. For a time during the administration of Governor Harmon, of Ohio, he was superintendent of the printing plant at the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Xenia, the duties of which he discharged most acceptably to all concerned.

Mr. Callahan was married August 18, 1898, to Leota Core, daughter of Dr. W. D. Core, a prominent family of London, Madison county, Ohio. This union has been without issue.

ROBERT H. LUMPKIN.

One of the owners of extensive farming interests in Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, is the gentleman whose name initiates this sketch. His valuable property has been acquired, for the most part, through his own efforts, his persistency of purpose and his determination, and the prosperity which is the legitimate reward of all earnest efforts is today his. Mr. Lumpkin is easily the peer of any of his fellows in the qualities that constitute correct manhood and good citizenship. He is one of the highly esteemed and useful men of this section of the county, and eminently entitled to special mention.

Robert H. Lumpkin was born in Wayne county, Indiana, July 2, 1865, and is the eldest son of Rufus and Rachel (Jordan) Lumpkin. Robert Lumpkin, his great grandfather, was born in Virginia, from which state he moved to Tennessee in 1799, with his wife, who was Elizabeth Forrest, prior to her marriage. The Lumpkins were of Scotch descent, and the Forrests of Welsh extraction. James L. Lumpkin, grandfather of our subject, was born in 1791 in Virginia, and he moved to Tennessee with his parents. In 1818 the family removed to Indiana and settled near Economy, Wayne county, later moved to Dalton township. His death occurred in 1870. He married Sarah Thornburg, who was of Irish descent. Her death occurred in 1875 in Dalton township, Wayne county. Rufus Lumpkin, father of our subject, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, April 15, 1835, and died August 2, 1907. His wife, who was also a native of the vicinity in which he first saw the light of day, was born March 16, 1842, and died April 3, 1909. She was a daughter of John W. and Catherine (Davis) Jordan, natives of Ireland. Rufus Lumpkin remained on the farm of his father until he reached his majority. He received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded. When twenty-one years old he went to Iowa, where he entered eighty acres of land, which he improved and on which he lived three years, then sold out and returned to Wayne county, Indiana, where he was married in 1858. Six sons and three daughters were born to our subject's parents, namely: Mary C., wife of Nelson Weaver, of Wayne county; America J., wife of Wallace Cheesman, of Wayne county; Robert H., of this sketch; Florence M., wife of Frank Waltz, of Hagerstown, Indiana; Charles died in infancy; John C. lives in Wayne county; Orin died when young; James and William E. are on the old home farm. After his marriage Rufus Lumpkin located in Wayne county, where he owned a farm of seventy acres, selling the same nine years later and purchased one hundred and sixty acres nearby. After remaining there three years he purchased the old Lumpkin homestead of four hundred acres, on which he and his good wife spent the rest of their lives, engaged successfully in general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, and were among the most influential and highly respected people of the township. Mr. Lumpkin was a member of the Baptist church, while his wife belonged to the Methodist church. Politically, he was a Republican.

Robert H. Lumpkin, of this review, was reared on the home farm and received a good practical education in the common schools. He remained with his parents until his marriage, December 20, 1888, to Nora Maulsby, a daughter of Martin V. and Sarah M. (Bookout) Maulsby. She was born in Randolph county, October 18, 1870, and her father was also a native of this county. Her mother was born in Henry county, Indiana. The parents of both were born in Tennessee. Mrs. Lumpkin grew to womanhood in her native community and received a common school education.

To our subject and wife three children were born, namely: Arthur W., born January 2, 1893; Marie, born August 11, 1894; and Marguerite, born April 3, 1907, all at home. The two eldest are teaching school in this county with much success.

In June, 1889, Mr. Lumpkin purchased the beautiful homestead of the grandfather of his wife, consisting of one hundred and fifty-nine acres, and on this he still lives, having greatly improved the place. Later he purchased seventy-two acres, and now owns two hundred and thirty-one acres of as fine farming land as can be found in the county, and here he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. He has a commodious home in the midst of attractive surroundings, and has many substantial outbuildings and such modern farming implements as his needs require.

Mr. Lumpkin is one of the representative men of Nettle Creek township and is highly respected by all who know him. The fact that he has been appointed guardian of several valuable estates indicates the implicit confidence which is reposed in him by his fellow citizens. He was elected trustee of his township in 1908 to serve six years, and is giving eminent satisfaction in the same. He is a loyal Republican, a faithful Mason, and his wife is a worthy Baptist.

DR. WILLIAM ANDREW MEREDITH, D. V. S.

The science of veterinary surgery has an able exponent in Randolph county in the person of Dr. William Andrew Meredith, of Lynn, a man whose services are in great demand over the county, partly because he has established a solid reputation for skill in his chosen profession and partly because he is a genial and well-liked gentleman that makes and retains friends easily.

Dr. Meredith was born in Williamsburg, Indiana, March 26, 1871. He is a son of John W. and Malissa C. (Cox) Meredith. The father was born near Williamsburg, January 31, 18—, and is a son of Andrew and Mary Meredith. Andrew Meredith was a native of South Carolina and a pioneer of Wayne county, Indiana, making the long overland journey from the far South when traveling was a hazardous undertaking for many reasons, such as bad roads, unbridged streams and few settlers, to say nothing of lurking Indians and white highwaymen, who frequently waylaid those who pushed to the frontiers of civilization. He began life in the woods in Wayne county and worked hard to get a start in the new country.

John W. Meredith, the father, grew up amid pioneer environment and he worked hard when a boy on the home farm. He received a meager schooling in the early-day schools. He has devoted his life to active farming and stock raising and is at this writing still living in the town of Williamsburg. His wife passed away April 31, 1913, at an advanced age. Politically, John W. Meredith is a Democrat, and religiously a Quaker. He has served as trustee of his township. Fraternally, he belongs to the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment, being prominent in each and holding high offices in all three.

Doctor Meredith grew to manhood on his father's farm, where he made himself useful during the crop seasons, and he received a common school education in the schools of his native locality. When a young man he decided to take up veterinary surgery and with that end in view he entered the Toronto College of Veterinary Surgery at Toronto, Canada, and there made a splendid record, graduating with the class of 1894. He began the practice of his profession at Williamsburg, Indiana, where he remained two years, being successful from the start, then moved to Lynn, Randolph county, where he has remained to the present time. enjoying an ever-increasing and lucrative practice, which extends throughout this locality, and he has met with a high degree of success in all his practice. He has remained a deep student and has kept well abreast of the times in all that pertains to his work.

Politically, Doctor Meredith is a Republican, and fraternally, he belongs to the Masonic Order, having held all offices in the local lodge except that of Worshipful Master. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, being Past Chancellor of the lodge at Lynn. In religious matters, he belongs to the Christian church.

Doctor Meredith was married on April 6, 1898, to Cynthia A. Newton, of Lynn, and to this union one child was born, Margaret. The wife and mother passed to her rest on October 10, 1904. The Doctor was again married on September 10, 1912, to Mrs. Daisy Mills, of Farmland.

WILLIAM H. ROBY.

In nearly every community are to be found individuals who, by innate ability and sheer force of character, rise above their fellowmen and win for themselves conspicuous places in public esteem. Such a one is the well-known manufacturer of fertilizer, William H. Roby, of Winchester, Randolph county, a man who has been identified with the material growth and development of this locality for many years, wielding a potent influence in business circles, while his career as a progressive man of affairs has been synonymous with all that is honorable.

Mr. Roby was born May 23, 1857 in Huntington county, Indiana. He is a son of Jacob H. and Sarah (Griffith) Roby. The father was born in Ohio and the mother was a native of Virginia. Both removed from their respective communities with their parents in early pioneer days and spent their earlier years in Indiana. Jacob H. Roby engaged in farm work when young, later learning the plasterer's trade which he followed until his death in Huntington county.

William H. Roby lived in Hartford City, this state until he was twelve years of age, at which time his mother died and he was thrown on his own resources, consequently, his education in the public schools was meager; but this has been made up in after years by miscellaneous home reading and by actual contact with the business world. He first learned the plasterer's trade, but about the time he became a skilled workman his eyes became so badly affected that he abandoned this field and learned to be a millwright, which trade he followed for a number of years, also followed railroad bridge building until the year 1900, doing an extensive business, and becoming known as one of the best men in this line of endeavor in this section of the Middle West. During that period he made his home at Mt. Carmel, Illinois. He was an extensive builder of mill properties. In May, 1904, he came to Winchester, Indiana. In December, 1907, he located two miles west of this city on a farm and became engaged in the farm fertilizer business, which was a success from the start and it has now grown to very large proportions, there being a great demand for his product, owing to its superior quality and it is shipped to remote parts of the country. He has a substantial, modernly equipped and well managed plant, with a capacity of five hundred tons per year. It is the only plant of its kind in Randolph county and is one of sixty-six such plants in the state. A large number of men are employed here.

Mr. Roby's attention is divided between the factory and his fine farm of two hundred and ten acres, which, owing to his close proximity to the county-seat and its exceptionally well-improved condition, is one of the most valuable farms of the county. On it is to be found an attractive dwelling and substantial and convenient outbuildings. Here general farming and stock raising are carried on extensively, particular attention being paid to raising and feeding a fine breed of English York hogs, the finest on the market, as well as in Randolph county, and they are greatly admired by all who see them. He also breeds for breeding purposes, and ships his hogs all over the country, always obtaining high prices. His cattle are of the finest Durham breed and, like his hogs, find a very ready market at fancy prices. Mr. Roby is a great corn grower. His home is modern in all its appointments, like a city home.

Mr. Roby was married on September 11, 1882 to Maggie N. Fischer, a daughter of Adam and Catherine Fischer. The parents were born, reared and educated in Germany and married there, finally emigrating to America and settling at Mt. Carmel, Illinois, where Mrs. Roby was born.

To our subject and wife three sons have been born, namely: Harry B., Roscoe D., and Adrian J., all at home and assisting their father in business. Pearl H. is an adopted daughter.

Politically, Mr. Roby is independent and he is always encouraging public improvements of all kinds. Fraternally, he is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and the Tribe of Ben-Hur.

Mr. Roby was one of the promoters of the Farmers Telephone Company and is one of the largest stockholders of the same. He is much devoted to his home and family and is regarded as one of our worthiest citizens in every respect.

G. WILLIAM MILLS.

One of the progressive farmers and stock raisers of Randolph county is G. William Mills, at present county commissioner and a scion of one of our sterling old families. He is a man who has always known how to appreciate the true dignity of labor and to place a correct estimate upon the value of money and he has worked hard for what he now possesses. Nevertheless, he is liberal in his benefactions and stands ever ready to support with his influence and means all measures for the material and moral welfare of the community in which he has so long resided.

Mr. Mills was born in Washington township, Randolph county, March 24, 1859. He is a son of Joel and Cynthia (Beard) Mills. Joel Mills was born in Wayne county, Indiana, January 6, 1833. He was a son of Aaron and Rebecca (Small) Mills. He grew up on the farm in his native county and received a fairly good education in the common schools. When sixteen years old he began learning the carpenter's trade, receiving thirty-seven and one-half cents per day for his labor, and he spent practically his entire life in the contracting business, covering almost the entire county of Randolph and much of Wayne county, and was known as a skilled and honest workman. Politically, he was a Republican and was trustee of Washington township for two terms, was also county commissioner for one term, filling both offices exceptionally well. In 1895 he retired to the farm he had acquired, his health having induced him to give up the more exacting business of contracting, and his death occurred on April 7, 1898. He and Cynthia Beard were married November 10, 1855. She was born May 19, 1840, and was therefore but fifteen years old when she married. She was a daughter of William and Lydia (Cox) Beard. William Beard was born in North Carolina about 1812 and he came to Randolph county, Indiana, August 9, 1815, with his parents, who were thus among the earliest settlers here. His parents were Paul and Hannah Beard. William Beard devoted his life to farming and died in 1857, his wife preceding him to the grave in 1847. Both these families were very active and useful in the Friends church. Doctor Cox, grandfather of Mrs. Mills, was a minister in that church. Mrs. Mills is still living and is an acknowledged minister in the Friends church. Six children were born to Joel Mills and wife, namely: Caroline E.; G. William (our subject); Dr. Cassius C., born September 24, 1861, is practicing medicine at Muncie; Martin Luther, born April 24, 1864, is a merchant at Winchester; Rose Alma, born December 31, 1867, is the wife of William Edwards, a farmer of Washington township, this county; Eva Nora, born February 22, 1874, is at home.

G. William Mills worked on the farm in his boyhood and received a common school education. In 1880 he branched out for himself and farmed with success until 1900, when he moved to Lynn. In 1905 he was elected county commissioner on the Republican ticket, and he made such a commendable record that he was re-elected in 1908 and is now serving his second term to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. He still manages a farm of several hundred acres, where general farming and stock raising are carried on extensively. He is a worthy member of the Friends church.

Mr. Mills was married March 27, 1880, to Mary E. Meredith, who was born in Highland county, Ohio, April 10, 1859. To this union one child has been born, Cynthia May, now the wife of Frank M. Johnson, a farmer of Washington township. They have two children, viz.: Joel Mills Johnson and Helen M. Johnson.

ADAM R. HIATT.

One would find it necessary to search long and far to find a farm kept in better condition or managed under more up-to-date methods than that of Adam R. Hiatt, a progressive and honored citizen of Washington township, Randolph county, for he has not only worked hard and persistent in keeping everything in its proper place, but has been a student of local conditions and has widely read much literature as pertains to advanced methods of husbandry, so that he has been enabled to reap just rewards for his pains and labors from year to year, and, owing to the superb system of his operations, he accomplishes more at a less expenditure of labor than do most men. When he first began his career he learned that "haste makes waste" very frequently, and while he has endeavored to do everything with dispatch and neatness, he has always realized that there are times when rushing methods are not the best, when patience must be exercised. Himself a pioneer, he is a scion of one of the early-day Hoosier families, members of which have sought to do their full duty in the affairs of the communities where they have dispersed.

Mr. Hiatt was born January 9, 1837, on a farm near Bethel, Wayne county, Indiana. He is a son of Enos and Nancy (Miller) Hiatt. The father was born August 28, 1805, in Guilford county, North Carolina, and from there the family removed to Wayne county, Indiana, in 1810, and settled on a farm when that locality was practically a wilderness and they endured the usual hardships and privations incident to pioneer life. The Miller family originally lived near Versailles, Woodford county, Kentucky, being among the earliest families in the "dark and bloody ground" country. Grandmother Miller often told interesting stories of the Indians, who were numerous in that country when she was a girl. Once they made an attack on the Miller cabin and her mother was seized by an Indian who raised his tomahawk to brain her, when she wrenched loose, seized an axe and killed the red man. His tribesmen later retaliated by killing her husband the first time they ran onto him in the woods. Eleven children were born to Enos Hiatt and wife, namely: William, Adam R. (subject of this sketch), Rachel, Sallie, Elizabeth, Cornelius, Harrison T., Jabez, Martha A., Mary C., and George V.

Adam R. Hiatt grew up amid pioneer environments and he was compelled to work hard on the home farm when a boy. The advantages for an education in those days were very limited and he received little more than the knowledge of how to read and write, but in after life he has become a well informed man by wide home reading and contact with the world. Early in his youth he took up farming for a livelihood and this he has continued to the present time with ever-increasing success, remaining many years in Wayne county, finally removing to Randolph county and locating in Washington township, where he now owns a large, well-improved and productive farm, on which stands a substantial and convenient set of buildings and where an excellent grade of livestock may always be found, everything about his place denoting good management and thrift. He has worked hard and in his earlier years was a man of exceptional physical strength, and although he is now seventy-seven years of age he is still hale and hearty, as a result, very largely of his clean personal habits and methods of high thinking.

Mr. Hiatt was married May 27, 1855, at Bethel, Indiana, to Lucinda Wolf, who was born July 5, 1837, on a farm near Bethel, Wayne county, where she grew to womanhood and received a meagre education in the old-time rural schools. She has proved to be a faithful and genial helpmeet, and has borne her husband seven children, named as follows: Mary F., who married John D. Flatter; Cassius F., who married Cora Fulghum; Alvin I., who married Cora V. Chenoweth; Elmer P is deceased; Harrison, who married Grace Anderson, who is deceased; Carrie C., who married Elmer E. Chenoweth; Ida Maud, who married Frank Chamness. These children were all given proper educational advantages and are all well situated in life and well liked wherever they are known. Two of the sons conduct a large hardware and furniture store in the town of Lynn, Indiana.

Mr. Hiatt was reared in the faith of the Christian church, from which he has never departed, and has been an elder in the church of this denomination for over twenty-five years, and he and his family are faithful in their support of the church. Politically, he is a Progressive. He is a man of public spirit and has done much for the general upbuilding of his township and county. He was a member of the board of commissioners of Randolph county from 1885 to 1890, was justice of the peace four years, and was assessor four years. As a public servant he proved most faithful and efficient, winning the hearty approval of all concerned, irrespective of party alignment. Fraternally, he has been a member of the Free and Accepted Masons since boyhood and his every-day life would indicate that he has made an effort to live up to its sublime precepts. He is a man of progressive ideas, ready to adopt new methods of agriculture when he sees they are practical. He was one of the first to purchase the self-binder in this locality, also among the first to secure other improved farming machinery. Mr. Hiatt was one of the first men of Randolph county to advocate the building of macadamized roads and to help build the first one. His home is known as a place of old-time hospitality, and, as a result of his numerous estimable characteristics he is held in highest esteem by a very wide circle of acquaintances and friends.

CHARLES F. HALLIDAY.

If there is one thing which distinguishes the American business man from those of any other country it is the faculty with which any and all occupations are readily taken up by him and made successful. In the older countries it was customary for the son to follow the father's pursuit. It is in such countries as the United States that full swing can be given to the energies of the individual. A man may choose any business or profession he desires, and he is limited only by competition. He must meet the skill of others and give as good service as they or he will not get the position, or business, as the case may be. Such adaptation to any work or business is well shown in the career of Charles F. Halliday, one of the substantial and influential men of affairs of Randolph county, a banker of Parker.

Mr. Halliday was born in Randolph county January 11, 1862. He is a son of Elias F. and M. Jane (Ringo) Halliday, whose family consisted of five sons and one daughter, namely: William R., a druggist at Lynn, Indiana, married Ella F. Stafford, and they have three daughters, Olive G., Ada F. and Bernda; Waldo M., who lives at Long Beach, California, married Elizabeth Neal, of Randolph county, and they have one son, Herbert Garfield; Flora R., of Farmland, married Philip M. Bly, a banker, and they have two children; J. Garver, a banker of Farmland, married Minnie Edwards, and they have one child, Geraldine; Charles F., of this sketch; George Lincoln, of Indianapolis, is state agent for the Ohio Cultivator Company; he married Laurel M. McKenzie, of Bellevue, Ohio, and they have one child, Justine.

Charles F. Halliday grew to manhood in his native county, and in Farmland he received a good education in the public schools, later attending a commercial college in Dayton, Ohio, from which he was graduated. His father was a farmer and he remained with him on the home place until he was twenty-three years old, then worked in a claim office for two years, then was employed in the State Bank at Farmland for seven years, after which he was employed by the Ohio Cultivator Company, of Bellevue, Ohio, for a period of five years. In all three positions he gave eminent satisfaction, winning the confidence and trust of his employers and showing himself eminently capable in every way. Upon invitation he came to Parker, Randolph county, after leaving the Ohio concern mentioned above, and organized the now popular and well-known Parker Banking Company in December, 1899, with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars, and his wise counsel and able assistance made it a pronounced success from the first and its growth has been rapid and constant. On March 15, 1913, this sound and safe institution was re-organized as a state bank, with a capital stock of twenty-five thousand dollars, but retaining its former name. Mr. Halliday has been cashier of this institution since it was first organized, and his service of fifteen years in this connecton has been eminently satisfactory to the patrons and stockholders of the bank. For a number of years he has been a director of the Parker Telephone Company, and did much to make it a pronounced success.

Politically, Mr. Halliday is a Republican, but he has never been specially active in political matters. His father was county commissioner for a period of six years, and was incumbent of that office when the court-house and jail were built. He did much for the general good of the county. He also served as treasurer of Randolph county for four years, during the Civil war period, from 1861 to 1865.

Charles F. Halliday was married to Sarah L. Jones, of Delaware county, a daughter of William W. and Rebecca Jones, who spent their lives engaged in farming. Their family consisted of five children. Mrs. Halliday grew to womanhood in her native community and was educated in the common schools. She is purely a home woman, devoted to her family.

The union of our subject and wife has been blessed by the birth of three children, namely: Rebecca Jane, born June 19, 1894, was educated in the local schools and DePauw University, and is employed under her father in the bank at Parker; Adah Florence, born May 24, 1900; Helen Elizabeth, born September 6, 1911.

Mr. Halliday is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal church.

THOMAS CLARENCE LOVE.

One of the native young men of Randolph county who has been wise in deciding to spend his life in his own locality is Thomas Clarence Love, now engaged in the feed business in the town of Lynn. He seems to be the possessor of those characteristics that make a definite degree of success wherever found, for he is not only industrious, believing in keeping his shoulder to the wheel, but is broad-minded and honorable, knowing that while one may beat his fellow men successfully for a time, in the end it does not pay and he is sure to be found out, thus ruining his reputation among his acquaintances which prevents to a large extent the successful carrying on of any large business, especially in a small town where everybody knows intimately everybody else.

Mr. Love was born in Greensfork township, Randolph county, October 8, 1886. He is a son of Thomas A. Love, who was born in 1860, and is a son of Lindsey and Mary Love. Thomas A. Love received a fairly good education and he grew to manhood on the home farm and worked there until his marriage, in 1881, when he espoused Clara Moody, who died in 1886, after which he went to Kansas and engaged in farming until 1896, when he left the Sunflower state and returned to Randolph county and resumed farming, which he continued with success until his death, in 1907. Politically, he was a Republican, but was never an office seeker, preferring to lead a quiet life on his farm. He was a member of the Friends church, and fraternally he belonged to the Knights of Pythias.

The mother of Thomas C. Love died when he was two weeks old, and he was reared by his grandparents, the Moodys. He worked on the farm of Grandfather Moody when a boy during the summer months and in the winter time attended the common schools of Lynn, graduating from the grade schools in 1904, after which he continued to work on his grandfather's farm until 1913, when he left the farm and took up well drilling until August 21st of that year, when he purchased the feed exchange in Lynn, which he is now successfully conducting, and is building up a large and lucrative trade. He handles all kinds of feed, and has a modern grist mill, where he grinds feed in any manner desired. He handles the following brands of flour, both in wholesale and retail lots: "Gold Medal," "Richmond Fancy," "Carpenter," and "I-Am-Boss." He handles all kinds of coal and has quite a large trade in coal as well as feed and flour. He keeps at all times oats, grasses, salt and stock foods. He also has an automobile agency.

Politically, Mr. Love is a Progressive, and religiously, he belongs to the Friends church.

Mr. Love was married December 25, 1907, to Edna May Chenoweth, who was born in Randolph county, December 20, 1889. She is a daughter of Benjamin F. and Hannah Chenoweth, a well-known family of this county. She grew to womanhood and was educated in her native community.

To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Alice E., born February 12, 1909; and Idris L., born May 8, 1911.

STEPHEN CLEVENGER.

During the sixty-six years that Stephen Clevenger has passed in Randolph county momentous changes have taken place, and in these he has not by any means been an idle spectator, but has done much as an enterprising business man and public-spirited citizen to encourage the general progress of the same. He is the scion of a worthy old pioneer family, the name Clevenger having been a familiar one throughout this locality since the early forties and it has always stood for industry and good character. After a long and successful career as a business man and farmer our subject is now living in honorable retirement in his pleasant home in Winchester. He is one of our honored veterans of the Civil war and one of our worthiest native sons.

Mr. Clevenger was born on October 27, 1847, in Greensfork township, Randolph county. He is a son of Thomas and Mary Ann (Clanin) Clevenger. These parents were both natives of Ohio, the father of Warren county, and they grew to maturity and were married in their native state; shortly after their marriage they removed to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1844, and here established the permanent home of the family on the farm, which they developed by hard work. In this county they spent the rest of their lives, the father dying on December 1, 1889, and the mother joined him in the spirit-land on August 3, 1892. They had, however moved in 1863 to a farm four miles east of Winchester in White River township. Thomas Clevenger became one of the largest land owners and most prosperous farmers in this vicinity. His family consisted of ten children, eight of whom grew to maturity.

Stephen Clevenger grew up on the home farm where he did the usual chores assigned to a boy. He was educated in the district schools. When only seventeen years of age he proved his courage by enlisting in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry in which he served very faithfully until the close of the war in the famous Army of the Potomac, also served in the Shenandoah valley. He bore the hard service he saw without a murmur and was honorably discharged on August 15, 1865. After the war he returned home and continued farming in White River township until 1881 when he moved to Winchester and engaged in the coal and building material business. Through the exercise of good judgment, industry and honest dealings he prospered and continued in this business for a period of thirty years, during which period he ranked among the leading business men of the county-seat. Accumulating a competency he retired from active life in 1911, however he supervises his fine farm of two hundred and sixty acres in White River township. It is well improved and on it stands an excellent group of buildings, and here general farming and stock raising are carried on extensively.

Mr. Clevenger has been twice married, first, on September 23, 1873 to Julia A. Jobes, daughter of Dr. George O. and Evaline Jobes. The father was a prominent physician of Farmland for many years, later in life moving to Indianapolis where he engaged in the drug business, and where his death occurred a few years ago. The death of Mrs. Clevenger occurred on May 8, 1883, and on November 10, 1893 our subject was united in marriage with Mrs. Sarah Ellen Gebhard, a daughter of Simon P. Hewett, of Miamisburg, Ohio, of an early pioneer family of that state. To this second union one son was born, Thomas Reed Clevenger, whose birth occurred on August 13, 1894. He was graduated from the Winchester high school.

Politically, Mr. Clevenger is a Republican and has long been very active in public matters. He served as a member of the city council for twelve consecutive years and many of the important public improvements were consummated during that period. He has also served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee at various times. He is a member of Nelson Trusler Post, No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic. He was a delegate to the state encampment in 1913. He is a member of the Masonic order, and all intermediate degrees up to the thirty-second degree. He is a charter member of Winchester Commandery, No. 53, in which he has filled all the chairs. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Encampment and has filled all the chairs in the same. He has represented this lodge to the Grand Lodge and also the Encampment to the Grand Encampment. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men. He is one of the most popular lodge men in the county, and this speaks much for his standing and character as a citizen and neighbor.

THOMAS H. CONDON.

One of the men who has stamped the impress of his strong individuality upon the minds of the people of Randolph county is Thomas H. Condon, well known grain and coal dealer of Parker. He has so ordered his career since taking up his abode in our midst that he has become one of the conspicuous characters of this locality. Faithfulness to duty and a strict adherence to a fixed purpose, which always do more to advance a man's interests than wealth or advantageous circumstances, have been dominating factors in his life, which has been replete with honor and success worthily attained. He is a scion of a sterling old Irish family, and many of the strong characteristics of his progenitors have been revealed in him, and he has been most vigilant in keeping unsmirched the good name of the Condons, who have always been noted for their unswerving honesty, their readiness to assist in all worthy enterprises for the good of their neighbors and the community in general in which they resided.

Mr. Condon, of this review, was born in Springfield, Massachusetts, May 26, 1856. He is a son of David and Margaret (Hayes) Condon, and is one of eleven children, being the eldest; the others were named Dennis, who lives in Chicago and is on the police force there; John, who is engaged in merchandising at Momence, Illinois, married Margaret McGraw, and they have seven children; Katherine married Richard Dwyer, who had charge of a power house in connection with the street railways of Chicago, was killed by a live wire, leaving a widow and five children; James, who was in the employ of the United States Express Company, died in Chicago some time ago, leaving a widow; Johanna married William McGraw, a farmer of Benton county, Indiana, and they have three children; Mary married James E.

Garvin, a teacher by profession, but now employed in the Chicago postoffice; Elizabeth, wife of John Garrity, a merchant of Chicago for some time, has three children; Margaret married J. C. Eman, and they live in Los Angeles, California; Michael lives in Chicago; David, a merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, married Sadie Stack.

David Condon, father of the above named children, was born in County Limerick, Ireland, and when only thirteen years old he emigrated to the United States, the voyage requiring three months, in an old-fashioned sailing vessel. He found employment in a woolen mill in Webster, New York. He subsequently went to Springfield, Massachusetts, and there he met and married Margaret Hayes and established the family home there. She was born in the same locality in Ireland from which he came, and had emigrated to America in her girlhood. The father eventually moved his family to Illinois, and in 1868, when his children were still small, he removed to Benton county, Indiana, and bought a farm, spending the rest of his life engaged in farming. His death occurred in 1900, his widow surviving until 1910. They were an honest, kind, hard-working couple who did all in their power to give their large family an education and get them properly started in life, and they are now well situated and highly respected wherever they reside.

Thomas H. Condon was married December 16, 1886, to Florence A. Mott, a daughter of a farmer of White county, Indiana, and one of three children. To this union two children were born, Cecil died at Fowler, Indiana, when eight years of age; Ray I., born June 14, 1891, graduated from the high school at Parker, later studied at Purdue University, is now associated with his father in the grain and coal business; he married Helen Arbogast, of Parker.

Thomas H. Condon farmed on the home place until he was twenty-one years of age, then took a position with the Buckeye Harvesting Machine Company, with which he remained for a period of seven years, giving his employers eminent satisfaction, proving to be one of their most trusted and faithful employees. He then came to Parker and went into the gas and oil business, and here he developed the Parker City oil field and thereby incidentally did much for the general upbuilding of Parker and vicinity. He then went to Goldfield, Nevada, where he engaged in mining for a period of four years with gratifying results. He was prominently identified with the interests of Goldfield during the strike of the mining district there in 1906-7. He then returned to Parker and has since been successfully engaged in the grain and coal business, building up a large and ever-growing trade which extends over a wide territory. He is also still engaged in the oil business. By his close application, wise foresight, sound judgment and ability to grasp large opportunities readily he has accumulated a handsome competency, becoming one of the substantial men of the county. He owns a modern and commodious home at Parker.

Fraternally, Mr. Condon is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Improved Order of Red Men. He is a faithful member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically, he is a Republican, and has been active and influential in local political and public affairs. For a period of ten years he was president of the city council of Parker, during which he did much for the general upbuilding of the city. He helped to organize the first fire department here; in fact, no man has done so much toward the material growth of Parker as he. He has also been prominent in educational affairs, and appointed the school boards for years while a member of the council. He studied law and has been a member of the Winchester bar for the past fifteen years. Personally, he is a pleasant gentleman to meet, courteous, high-minded, genial and a man who at once impresses you as being of superior attributes.

JOHN T. BURROWS.

It is an unquestionable fact that biographies of enterprising men, especially of good men, are instructive as guides and incentives to others. The examples they furnish of patient purpose and steadfast endeavor and integrity cannot help but influence others who are thrown in their company. Some men seem to belong to no exclusive class; apparently insurmountable obstacles have in many instances awakened their dormant faculties and served as a stimulus to carry them to ultimate renown. The instances of success in the face of adverse circumstances and unkind fate would seem to justify the conclusion that self-reliance with so much as a half chance can accomplish any reasonable object.

One of the enterprising citizens of Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, who has overcome the obstacles that led to the successful goals which he coveted when starting out in life, is John T. Burrows, the present popular postmaster at the village of Losantville. He was born December 9, 1852, in Nettle Creek township, this county, and is a son of Franklin and Anna (Medesker) Burrows, both natives of this township also. The paternal grandparents were born in Virginia, and the maternal grandparents were natives of Pennsylvania, and they came to Randolph county, Indiana, in the early days of the nineteenth century. The paternal great-grandparents were Scotch-Irish, and the maternal great-grandparents were of German blood. Franklin Burrows was brought up on the home farm and he continued general farming all his life. His death occurred September 11, 1910. The death of the mother of our subject occurred in 1885. Six children were born to these parents, three of whom died in infancy; one sister, Catherine B., who married a Mr. Hunt, died in 1886, and another sister, Mrs. Amanda Wiggins, lived at Losantville until her death in 1914.

John T. Burrows grew up on the home farm and there he worked in summer, and attended the common schools in winter. He remained on the farm until he was twenty years of age, then ran a huckster wagon for Daniel Wiggins, beginning in 1874, after which he worked on Mr. Wiggins' farm until 1876, in which year his employer sold out to Lemuel Wiggins, for whom he farmed a year, then clerked for him in his store until 1885, when he commenced dealing in agricultural implements, especially reapers and mowers, and again engaged in farming. In 1890 he was elected township trustee for a term of five years. He was appointed postmaster at Losantville during President McKinley's administration, having been recommended for the place by C. L. Henry, at that time Congressman from the Eighth district of Indiana. Mr. Burrows has continued in office to the present time, holding the same over sixteen years. As a public servant his record has been marked by fidelity and honesty, courtesy and carefulness and he has ever given the utmost satisfaction to all concerned. He owns a good farm in Randolph county, consisting of over two hundred acres of fine land.

Mr. Burrows was married March 17, 1877, to Emma J. Wiggins, who was born, reared and educated in Nettle Creek township, this county. The date of her birth is November 26, 1862. She is a daughter of Lemuel and Mary Wiggins. To this union four children have been born, namely: Nellie E., the eldest, is still at home; Boyden O. is married to Bertha Burroughs, and is living on the farm belonging to our subject, and he has four sons, Ivan, Norrice. Sharon and Clois. Delia O., third child of our subject, married Cal. C. Lamb, of New Castle, and they have one daughter, Bernice J. The youngest of our subject's children, Franklin Chase, is at home with his parents.

Mrs. Burrows is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and stands high in the congregation. Politically, Mr. Burrows is a loyal Republican and is active and influential in the ranks and is a man well informed on present day public matters.

FRED RETTER.

As one reviews the history of Randolph county and looks into the past to see what people were prominent in its early development, it will be found that for the past three-quarters of a century the Germans have been closely connected with the progress and general advancement of this secton of the Hoosier state. Wild was the region into which they came. Its forests stood in their primeval strength, the swampy land was still undrained, and the Indians still roamed through the dense woods, seeking deer, bear and lesser game which were in abundance. The Retter family, while not so early as some, yet figured in the latter-day development of this section of the state, and Fred Retter, a farmer of Washington township, although born in the Fatherland, has spent his active life within our borders, ever manifesting the characteristic thrift of the emigrant from the great empire of northern Europe.

Mr. Retter was born in Wittenburg, Germany, on December 9, 1846. He is a son of Fred and Eliza (Kasper) Retter. The father was born in the same city and country as our subject and there he grew to manhood, learned the shoemaker's trade, married and resided until 1852, when he brought his family across the Atlantic to the United States, our subject being then six years old. The family located near Eaton, Ohio, where the father worked at his trade a short time, then removed to Eldorado, that state, but remained there only a short while, when he moved to New Hope, Ohio, then to Jay county, Indiana, where he purchased ten acres of land, which he cleared and on which he built a house. In a short time he sold out, removed to Randolph county, and purchased one hundred and two acres near the village of Ridgeville, and there lived until his death.

Fred Retter, of this sketch, assisted his father with the hard work of establishing a new home in a strange land, and he received a limited education at a subscription school, taught in a log school house near the home farm. He remained with his parents until he was seventeen years old, then began working on the Pennsylvania railroad, which was then being built in this locality. He then worked on a farm and with a threshing machine for six months; then hired out by the month for seven years; then rented one hundred acres of land, which he eventually purchased and which he now owns. He worked hard, managed well and saved his earnings, and added to his original purchase until he was the owner of valuable, productive and well-cultivated land of ten hundred and fifty acres; he has deeded to his children all but five hundred and fifty-eight acres. It is well drained and otherwise well improved and he has a substantial dwelling and good outbuildings. He carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale and is one of the best and foremost farmers in the county. He annually markets large numbers of livestock.

Mr. Retter takes an abiding interest in local public affairs, and politically he is a Republican.

Mr. Retter was married to Mary Smith, to which union two children were born, Laura, who is now the wife of Grant Wright, and James, who is farming in Washington township, this county. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Retter married Sarah Jane Stegall, and to this union six children have been born, namely: Otis and Otho, who are assisting in operating our subject's large farm; Louisa married Alden Miller; William married Louisa Gessey; Roxanna is the wife of Guy Marker; Arnold married Edith Hinshaw.

JOHN L. DOWNING.

There is always valuable lessons to be gained in pursuing the life histories of such men as the late John L. Downing, one of Randolph county's well-known and highly-respected citizens of a past generation, whose life forcibly illustrated what energy, integrity and a fixed purpose can accomplish when animated by noble aims and correct ideals. During the years of his residence in this locality he held the unequivocal confidence of those with whom he came into contact, for he was a man whom to know was to trust and admire owing to his many commendable attributes of head and heart. When the "reaper whose name is death" gathered him in his sheaves while in the fulness of his strength and prime of life, his loss to the community was keenly felt.

Mr. Downing was born November 29, 1862, in Randolph county. He was a son of Dennis and Emiline (Lenington) Downing. The father was born in Henry county, Indiana, and soon after his marriage moved to Randolph county, where he died when our subject was a small boy. The mother was also a native of Henry county. Her death occurred in August, 1891. Dennis Downing devoted his life to farming, and politically he was a Republican. His family consisted of four children, namely: Frank is living; Mary and Jennie A. are both deceased, and John L., of this memoir.

John L. Downing grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools. On March 17, 1887, he married Maggie C. Gettle, who was born in Randolph county, June 25, 1870, and she is a daughter of John N. and Caroline (Maurer) Gettle. She was reared in her native community and was educated in the public schools. Her father was born in Germany, from which country he emigrated to the United States when a boy, first locating near Winchester, Ohio. He came on to White River township, Randolph county, Indiana, fifty-eight years ago, being among the early settlers here, and, being a man of thrift he soon had a good home established. He was born September 2, 1822, and his death occurred June 6, 1897. The mother of Mrs. Downing was born in France, October 30, 1833, and when fourteen years of age she emigrated to the United States, being forty-one days on the Atlantic ocean; her death occurred June 12, 1912.

To John L. Downing and wife thirteen children were born, ten of whom are living at this writing, namely: John N. is living; Lena Eleanora is deceased; Dora and Ethel are both living; Jennie is deceased; Mary and Magdalene are both living; Frank is deceased; Alta, Agnes, Ardis, Adolph and Margaret are all living.

John L. Downing devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising. However, the last eight years he was in failing health and did little active work, keeping his farm rented. His place consisted of ninety-four and three-fourths acres, which is productive and well improved, including a good dwelling and numerous outbuildings. Here the widow and children still reside but the land is still rented.

Politically, Mr. Downing was a Republican, and was a member of the Methodist church. He was called to his eternal rest on October 15, 1913. He was an honest, upright man and liked by all who knew him. He bore his long sufferings patiently and with rare Christian courage.

DAVID E. PURSLEY.

It is known to all professional men and tradesmen that one of the chief essentials of success in life is thorough preparation. Realizing this at the outset of his career David E. Pursley, of Winchester, Randolph county, bent every possible effort in the direction of his chosen profession, with the result that he has become, while yet a young man, one of the most expert and best known embalmers in this section of the state. He has energy, persistence, and at the same time fortitude. These qualities, coupled with good personal habits, have rendered him popular with the people of this locality.

Mr. Pursley was born May 2, 1887, near Unionsport, Randolph county, Indiana. He is a son of James M. and Mary E. (Addington) Pursley, both natives of this county, where they grew to maturity, were educated and married, and established themselves on a farm. The death of the father occurred on November 24, 1912, but the mother survives. To them were born two sons and four daughters, namely: Nora B. is the wife of Andrew Jackson; Myrtle R. is the wife of Orla Amburn, of Winchester; Nellie is the wife of Jesse W. Jackson, of Randolph county; Mattie is the wife of J. C. Jackson, also of this county; Ernest is married and lives on the old home farm, and David E., of this review.

Our subject was reared on the home farm and he attended the common schools in his district. When but a boy he decided to enter the embalming field, and in order to properly equip himself he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and spent some time in the Cincinnati School of Embalming, and later attended Barnes' School of Anatomy, Sanitary Science and Embalming, of Chicago, then was a student at the Askin Training School for Embalming in Indianapolis. He made a splendid record in each of these and has a diploma from all three.

In the year 1907, Mr. Pursley became connected with C. L. Thornburg at Farmland, an undertaker, and there he remained a year, then went to Marion, Indiana, with C. M. Showley, completing his term in practice before entering in business for himself. In 1909 he came to Winchester and was associated with S. E. Fraze, until December, 1910, when he purchased the business of Mr. Fraze, and has since conducted the same with ever growing success, until he is today one of the busiest and best-known embalmers in Randolph county. Prompt and high-grade service are his watchwords, and his fair and courteous treatment of his patrons have won him the good will of all. He has an able assistant in the business in the person of his wife, a lady of talent and enterprise. They have a neat and well-equipped place of business at 130 North Main street, and all kinds of funeral equipment, caskets, cases, etc., are carried.

Mr. Pursley was married on January 19, 1907, to Opal Fodrea, daughter of Albert and Mary E. (Dick) Fodrea, of Randolph county. The death of the father occurred on May 13, 1907. The mother survives.

Mr. Pursley is a member of the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men, also other organizations. Politically, he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

To Mr. and Mrs. Pursley two sons have been born, Robert D. and Roger V.

SEWARD S. WATSON.

Journalism is a profession that has never been overcrowded—perhaps the only one—and we do not have to go far for an explanation. The journalist is born, the same as the poet, although, of course, not so favored of the gods, except in rare instances. The average newspaper man or publisher seems little different, if any, from the average man in any other walk of life, and yet there is a difference. Few men are gifted with the peculiar attributes that go to make up the successful editor or publisher, and unless Mother Nature has stamped her inscrutable approval on one he might as well never begin. Training and experience count for a great deal, it is true, but they count for nothing unless the capacity is there to begin with. Seward S. Watson, well-known editor and publisher of The Winchester Herald, is a typical newspaper man, both by nature and training, and he has therefore succeeded at his chosen vocation.

Mr. Watson was born in Winchester, Randolph county, January 29, 1857. He is a son of Enos L. and Mary (Judd) Watson, a prominent pioneer family of this locality.

Mr. Watson grew to manhood in his native city and here received a public school education, which has been greatly supplemented in later years by wide home reading and study and by actual contact with the world. As a lad he learned the printer's trade. Desiring to forge to the front in the field of journalism he assiduously applied himself to learning the ins and outs of every department, and he has filled every position in a country newspaper office, from "devil" to managing editor. In due course of time he became part owner of the paper mentioned above, and for a period of twenty-six years was associated with different individuals in its publication. In 1901 he became sole owner of The Herald, and has since conducted the same alone, making it one of the brightest, newiest and most influential papers of its type in the state. It is up-to-date in every respect in its mechanical appearance and method of handling news, and it has become a valuable advertising medium. It has a wide and constantly growing circulation and has ever been a most potent factor in the molding of local public opinion, especially as an organ of the Republican party, Mr. Watson having always been a staunch defender of its principles.

Mr. Watson is the present efficient and popular postmaster of the city of Winchester, having been appointed to this position in February, 1907, by President Roosevelt. At the expiration of his term of four years he was again appointed to the office by President Taft for another term of four years. He is discharging the duties of the office in a manner that has reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the people and the department.

Mr. Watson was married in November, 1880, to Nancy E. Deardoff, a daughter of Lafayette and Nancy (Rush) Deardoff, and to this union six children have been born, namely: Edith D. is the eldest; Mary Alice is now the wife of Charles R. Anderson, of Dodge City, Kansas; Amelia B. W., Margaret Jane, John Enos and Ralph Engle. John Enos has had charge of The Herald since the appointment of his father to the postmastership.

Mr. Watson is a member of the Masonic Order, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Knights of Pythias.

Enos L. Watson, father of our subject, died in Winchester in December, 1910. His widow survives at the advanced age of eighty-three years. Our subject is a brother of Hon. James E. Watson, of Rushville, Indiana, one of Indiana's leading politicians of the present generation.

WILLIAM A. ROSS.

The name of William A. Ross, the present popular postmaster at Modoc, needs no introduction to the people of Nettle Creek township, of which he is the oldest native born citizen and where his entire life has been spent. He has lived to see and take part in the great transformation of this township from the wilderness epoch to the present time when it ranks with the leading agricultural sections of the great Hoosier commonwealth. He talks most interestingly of the early days here and his mind is a storehouse for valuable historical facts. His life has been such that he has kept unsullied the good name of this worthy old family and he is highly respected by all who know him.

Mr. Ross was born three miles northwest of Modoc, in Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, September 17, 1848. He is a son of Thomas F. and Eunice (Brown) Ross. The mother was born and reared in Wayne county, Indiana. The father was a native of Kentucky and his father brought him to this locality in a very early day and here he grew to manhood. The family located near the present town of Huntsville. Thomas Ross worked hard assisting his father develop the home farm from the wilderness, and he spent his life successfully engaged in general farming, and at his death October 11, 1882, he owned two hundred and ten acres in Nettle Creek township. He was one of ten children, six sons and four daughters, all now deceased, with the exception of Wesley D., of Dunkirk, Indiana; and Elijah P., of Greenville, Ohio. The death of Mrs. Eunice Ross occurred December 4, 1909.

William A. Ross was reared on the home farm and received his education in the rural schools. He has been a farmer the major portion of his life and has been successful in his work. Besides the common schools he attended high school at Bluntsville, Indiana, also at Indianapolis and the Normal school at Winchester. Thus well qualified for life's serious duties, he began teaching in 1869 and he followed teaching and farming for a period of twenty-one years, during which time his services were in great demand and he ranked among the county's most popular educators. Thus by farming in the summer and teaching in the winter time he was a very busy man in his earlier career. In 1882 he was elected township trustee for one term of two years and in 1894 was elected to the same office for a term of six years. On November 24, 1906, he was appointed postmaster at Modoc under President Roosevelt, which office he still holds. He has been township assessor and land appraiser at different times. As a public servant he has discharged every duty assigned him in a manner that has reflected much credit on himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned, being always very faithful in the trusts reposed in him.

Mr. Ross has been very successful in a business way and he now owns considerable valuable city property in Modoc, including the post office building, which is one of the best in the village.

In 1872 Mr. Ross was married to America Howell, who died in 1876, leaving one child, Francis Omer Ross, who is now in the wholesale business in Cleveland, Ohio. On December 2, 1882, our subject married Rhoda I. Lamb, of Randolph county, and a daughter of Restore and Mary Lamb, who established themselves on a farm here in an early day, but are now living in Kansas with their youngest son. Mrs. Ross was one of three children. To Mr. Ross and his second wife four children were born, namely: Mrs. Ethel Jordan, who lives two miles southwest of Modoc, has four children, Wilbur, Flava, Graydon and Crystal; Mrs. Mary Bessie Swain, of Modoc, has three children, Galen, Ruth and Albert; Willis A., in the wholesale business, lives in Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Nettie Victoria Hutchens, of Losantville, has one son, Charles. The second wife of William A. Ross died January 23, 1910, and for some time he has been making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Swain.

Politically, Mr. Ross is a Republican and has long been active in the ranks. He is a member of the United Brethren church. Fraternally he holds membership with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is secretary of both the local lodges. He is also secretary of the Modoc Natural Gas & Oil Company, of which he is a large stockholder. Personally Mr. Ross is a pleasant gentleman to meet, enjoys exceptionally fine health for one of his years, and does not appear to be over fifty years of age. He is one of the leading citizens of Modoc and Nettle Creek township.

ERNEST MILTON DUNN.

There is no positive rule for achieving success, and yet in the life of the successful man there is always lessons which might well be followed. The man who gains prosperity is he who can see and utilize the opportunity that comes in his path, so he who succeeds in a professional career must have the tact and courage to grasp opportunities in an instant when they arise and know how to make the most of them. He must also be willing to work persistently and remain a deep student throughout his career, for there is so much to learn in any line that one must forever keep at it, be a fearless and independent thinker and have the courage of one's convictions. Such briefly describes Ernest Milton Dunn, a successful young lawyer of Union City, Randolph county.

Mr. Dunn was born November 10, 1878, in Randolph county, Indiana. He is a son of William H. and Delilah (Dailey) Dunn. The father is a retired farmer living in Union City. The mother is a daughter of Charles Dailey. John S. Dunn, the paternal grandfather, was among the well-known pioneers of Randolph county and here he lived and died. He married Elsie Sweet, who died many years ago. The Dunns have been among the prominent and influential families in this locality for several generations and have played well their parts in the general development of Randolph county.

Ernest M. Dunn grew to manhood on the home farm, where he assisted with the general work when he became of proper age, and during the winter months he attended the district schools. Early in life he began the study of law and he completed his law course in the University of Valparaiso, where he made a good record, and he was admitted to the bar during the May term of court, 1909, and soon thereafter formed a partnership with Bert E. Woodbury at Union City, under the firm name of Dunn & Woodbury, which continues at this writing. Their business is rapidly increasing and it is one of the best and most successful firms of the younger attorneys of the county. Mr. Dunn deserves a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished in a professional way, for he is purely a self-made man, starting at the bottom of the ladder and forging ahead without assistance. He taught school for five years and worked at the carpenter's trade for six years and in that manner acquired the means whereby he could educate himself in the law. He is a persistent and earnest worker, making all other interests subservient to those of his clients, who are rapidly increasing, in view of his ability as an attorney and his high standing as a citizen. He is at this writing deputy prosecuting attorney of Randolph county and is discharging his duties in a highly acceptable manner to all concerned. Politically he is a Progressive, and in religious matters he belongs to the Christian church. He is secretary of the Federal Club, of Union City.

Mr. Dunn was married on January 31, 1914, to Miss Doris L. Robinson of Indianapolis, a daughter of John Robinson. Mrs. Dunn is a graduate of the elocution department of the University of Valparaiso, Indiana, and was a successful high school teacher for a period of nine years at Bremen and Woodville, Ohio.

ELIHU S. GILLAM.

Conspicuous among the representative business men and public-spirited citizens of Randolph county is the well-known gentleman whose name forms the caption of this article. Mr. Gillam has made his influence felt for the good of his community at Modoc, being a man of sterling worth, the latter part of whose busy, useful and honorable life has been closely interwoven with the history of the locality in which he resides, and his efforts have always been for the material advancement of the same, since removing here several years ago, as well as for the social and moral welfare of his fellowmen; and the well regulated life he has led has gained for him the respect and admiration of all with whom he has come in contact—thus for many reasons he is eminently entitled to representation in a biographical work of the scope intended in the present volume.

Elihu S. Gillam, who conducts an extensive mercantile establishment at the town of Modoc, was born in Fayette county, Indiana, August 13, 1852. He is a son of Benjamin and Mary (Case) Gillam, whose family consisted of eight children, namely: Henry, who died during the Civil war, while a soldier for the Union; Kate, who has been twice married, both husbands being now deceased, had five children by the first marriage, which was to Joseph Beaver, her last marriage being to S. Murray, and she is now living in Colorado; Fannie, who lives at Anderson, Indiana, is the wife of John Vardaman, a mason by trade, and they have two children; Elihu S., of this review, was fourth in order of birth; Charles Alvin, who was engaged in farming in the West, died some time ago, leaving a widow and four children; John Franklin, a carpenter by trade, of Anderson, this state, has been twice married, first, to Naomi Price, and lastly to Lena Hale, and he and his last wife have two children; Mary, deceased, was the wife of Charles A. Morrison, who preceded her to the grave, leaving no children; the eighth child died in infancy.

The father, Benjamin Gillam, was born in Pennsylvania, where he spent his boyhood, finally coming to Fayette county, Indiana, where he remained some time, finally removing to Randolph county, in the fall of 1868, and here he spent the rest of his life, which was brief, his death occurring in 1869, at the age of fifty-six years. He devoted his life to farming, and after his death his widow remained on the home place until her death in 1887 at the age of sixty-eight years.

Elihu S. Gillam was reared on the farm and assisted with the general work about the place when growing up, and he received his education in the common schools. He has been twice married, first, to Rachael J. Howell, a daughter of Levi Howell, a farmer of Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, and to this first union two children were born, namely: Maud, who lives at Alexandria, Indiana, is the wife of Bert Jones, a minister of the Methodist church. and they have two children, Keith, born in November, 1906; and Robert, born in August, 1909. Edna, second daughter of our subject, married Morris Lee, a farmer of West River township, where his family have long been among the leading agriculturists. The second wife of Elihu S. Gillam was Pearl Holly, who had been previously married, and who has a son thirteen years old by that marriage. Her maiden name was Ballard, her family being from Henry county, Indiana. Mr. Gillam's first wife died on April 28, 1906, and his second marriage took place in September, 1911.

Mr. Gillam began life for himself by farming. He also learned the carpenter's trade and devoted many years to this work and to contracting and building, with pronounced success, being known as a skilled workman and reliable builder. In 1907 he began operating a general store at Modoc with Hunt & Jones, subsequently buying out Mr. Hunt, and they have since conducted the business alone under the firm name of Jones and Gillam, their trade gradually increasing, and he now ranks with the leading merchants of the county, his large and well-selected stock of goods being a credit to the town, in fact, would not be out of place in cities of much larger population. He enjoys an extensive country trade, his neatly kept and comfortable store being a favorite stopping place for the families of farmers when in Modoc, for they know that here they will receive honest and courteous treatment.

Politically, Mr. Gillam is a Republican and religiously he attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

CHARLES EUGENE BOWEN.

Few men of a past generation in Randolph county were held in higher esteem than the late Charles Eugene Bowen, who, now that life's fitful fever is over, is sleeping serenely "in the windowless palace of rest." His memory will long be revered by the vast host of people who knew him and admired him, for he was a man in whom all took a delight, owing to his sterling honesty, his charitable nature and his readiness to help in the furtherance of any movement looking to the general upbuilding of the community. He was a scion of one of our sterling pioneer families to whom we owe so much, for his grandfather came here when this country was a veritable wilderness, and, working long and hard, redeemed, with others, the fertile fields and the fine farms which we of today enjoy and which are now so valuable. We can never say too much regarding these brave and courageous pioneers, who literally took their own lives in their hands and, not counting the cost, cast their lots in the new country, away from the pleasant hearthstones of their childhood and the advantages of civilization. Both our subject and his father helped complete the work begun by the frontiersmen here a century ago, and to all much credit is due.

Mr. Bowen was born at Spartanburg, Greensfork township, this county, December 6, 1858. He was a son of James D. and Mary E. (Chenoweth) Bowen. James Dwiggins Bowen was a son of Squire and Elizabeth (Dwiggins) Bowen, and was born in Randolph county, Indiana, in 1832, and died August 20, 1899, in his sixty-seventh year. The scene of his birth and death was his farm in Greensfork township, which was entered in 1814 by the first Bowen who came to this section of Indiana. On September 13, 1855, James D. Bowen married Mary E. Chenoweth of Carroll county, Maryland, and to them three sons and six daughters were born. He united with the Methodist church in 1859 and remained a faithful member of the same until his death. During the Civil war he was appointed enrolling officer for his township, during which time he was actively engaged in looking after the sick and wounded soldiers of his district, besides aiding their families. He was always very attentive to the welfare of his neighbors and friends, and was honest and courteous to all, carrying his religion into his every-day life. March 31, 1866, he joined the Free and Accepted Masons, Bethel Lodge No. 250, and later became a Master Mason. He also belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows when a young man. He passed all the chairs in the order and was Past Grand. He was said to be a man absolutely without enemies, having lived so exemplary a life. His wife, Mary Etta Bowen, was a daughter of John Baxter Chenoweth and Sarah (Murray) Chenoweth. She was born in Baltimore county, Maryland, in 1836, and died August 3, 1902. She united with the Methodist church early in life and remained a constant member until the end. She bore her sufferings with rare fortitude and enjoyed the friendship of all who knew her well.

Charles E. Bowen grew to manhood on the old homestead in his native community and he received a common school education, later spending one year in the Valparaiso Normal. Early in life, he took up merchandising and for over twenty years he conducted general stores at Crete, Carlos City and Spartanburg, building up a large and lucrative business with the surrounding country, owing to his honesty and thrift. At the time of his death he owned the farm which his grandfather settled in 1814, a century ago. This place has never been out of the possession of the family and is now owned by our subject's widow and children. It has been well cultivated and kept highly improved so that it has not lost its original strength of soil, the Bowens having always been noted as skilful agriculturists.

Mr. Bowen was married on the anniversary of his birth, December 6, 1890, to Josie Nelson, who was born in Virginia in May, 1871. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Nossette) Nelson. The father was born in Virginia and died January 18, 1875. The mother was also a native of Virginia and her death occurred March 16, 1874. To our subject and wife two children were born, namely: Ephraim M., born in 1891, was graduated from the Spartanburg high school in 1907, then spent one term at the State Normal at Terre Haute, then a year in Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, specializing in history; he is now teaching history in the Spartanburg high school with much success. John M., second child of our subject, was born in 1897 and is now attending the Lynn high school.

Charles E. Bowen was a faithful member of the Christian church. He was entering upon his second year as county commissioner and had fulfilled his duties in such a manner in this important office as to be honored with the nomination to succeed himself for a second term. He had all the qualities which combine to make a worthy citizen, a neighborly gentleman, a true friend and devoted husband, a gentle and indulgent father.

The death of Mr. Bowen occurred suddenly and without warning on June 10, 1910, at the age of fifty-one years, six months and four days. His fellow commissioners, William Mills and John E. Cheesman, and Mack Pohue, county auditor, passed the following resolutions of respect on his death, at Winchester, Indiana, June 13, 1910:

"It is with profound sorrow that the board of commissioners of Randolph county, State of Indiana, record the loss of one of its members—Charles E. Bowen, commissioner of the eastern district, who passed away at his home in Greensfork township last Friday, in the prime of his usefulness as a servant of the people of this county, as a member of this board. During his year and almost a half as such official we found him to be a conscientious, careful, punctual, efficient and honest official and as such we learned to admire him, as a man and companion we learned to love him.

Quiet, modest, unassuming, but never shirking, ever ready to bear his portion of the responsibilities and burdens of this board, we feel that it is no fulsome praise, but his just merits, when we record that in his death the people of Randolph county have lost the service and counsel of a faithful servant, one who always did his duty as he saw it, and always for the greatest good for the greatest number. We feel that we can speak no greater eulogy to him than to recommend to his successor and to all other public officials the emulation of his official life.

While we sorrow in our personal loss of the benefit of his counsel and companionship, we realize that the public has lost a faithful servant, but the greatest loss is to those he loved best, his wife and sons, and to them we express our sympathy and with it the assurance that to us, as well as to them, his clean, upright life will be an inspiration.

Be it therefore Resolved, That the auditor of the county be authorized to spread this memento of record, in the proceedings of this day's business and that he furnish the family with a careful copy thereof."

ALONZO MERRILL ANDERSON.

History and biography for the most part record the lives of those only who have attained military, political or literary distinction or who in any other career have passed through extraordinary vicissitudes of fortune. But the names of men who have distinguished themselves in their day and generation for the possession of those qualities of character which mainly contribute to the success of private life and to the public stability—of men who, without brilliant talents, have been exemplary in all their personal and social relations, and enjoyed the esteem, respect and confidence of those around them—ought not to be allowed to perish; for all are benefited by the delineation of those traits of character which find scope and exercise in the common walks of life. Among the individuals of this class of a past generation in Randolph county was the late Alonzo Merrill Anderson, for many years a well-known agriculturist and business man in Lynn and vicinity. He had the interests of his locality at heart and sought to promote the same whenever possible. His life history was distinguished by the most substantial qualities of character and exhibited a long and virtuous career of private industry, performed with moderation and crowned with success, and his memory will long be revered by the people of this locality.

Mr. Anderson was born February 20, 1859, in Bethel, Wayne county, Indiana. He was a son of Wilson and Ann (Ellis) Anderson, an excellent old family, a complete sketch of which appears on another page of this work, hence will not be repeated here.

Alonzo Anderson received a common school education and at an early age began buying and selling live stock. He lived on the home farm two years after starting out for himself, on the farm east of Spartanburg, then lived eight years on a farm west of that town, and fed large numbers of live stock for the market and at the same time superintended the general work of the farm. Then lived one year in Spartanburg, after which he moved to a farm east of Lynn, where he lived five years, after which he moved to Lynn and spent two years there, then lived in Mooreland two years, where he engaged in the grain and elevator business. In 1911 he moved back to Lynn. All the while he had been engaged in the stock business, and, being a hustler and an exceptionally good judge of live stock of all kinds, he was very successful; in fact, he made everything pay that he turned his attention to, for he was a man of keen discernment and good management, and, being honest in all his transactions, he had the confidence of the people. His health finally failed in 1911, and he was summoned to his eternal rest on April 18, 1913.

Politically, Mr. Anderson was a Republican, but was not ambitious to become a political leader. On August 1, 1891, he married Mary Welsh, who was born in Preble county, Ohio, July 16, 1872. She is a daughter of John and Ellen (Cavanaugh) Welsh. They came to Randolph county about 1875 and settled in Greensfork township. John Welsh was born in Ireland in 1841 and he emigrated to America in 1858. He devoted his life successfully to farming, dying in 1890. His wife, Ellen Cavanaugh, was also a native of the Emerald Isle, born in 1842. Her death occurred in 1894. They were industrious, honest and highly-respected people.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, namely: Ursulla M., who married G. S. Bowen, lives in Fountain City, Indiana; and Theresa, who is at home.

ALBERT E. FUDGE.

It is always a delight to look over such a farm as that owned by Albert E. Fudge, which lies just outside the corporate limits of the city of Winchester and which may well be described as one of the show farms of Randolph county. Such a place would be the envy of many a city man who has tired long ago of the grind, the dust and the heat, the endless strife that shrivel the soul and bend the body. Indeed, many a man who now is weary of the toil and bondage of the metropolis, which he eagerly entered when a youth, fresh from the farm—not being able to see clearly what awaited him in the oncoming years—would be delighted to be able to leave it all and establish himself on this fine farm, with all its picturesqueness, comfort and freedom. Mr. Fudge has been wise enough to stay away from the city and build up a splendid home like this where he can spend his life satisfactorily.

He was born November 5, 1863, on a farm, five miles south of Winchester, Indiana. He is a son of Francis M. and Margaret (Hall) Fudge. The father was born in Preble county, Ohio, while the mother is a native of Randolph county, Indiana. The elder Fudge was a farmer, and his death occurred on September 3, 1888, his wife having preceded him to the grave in March, 1864.

Albert E. Fudge was reared on a farm and he received his education in the district schools, doing general farm work during the summer time, however, his months of school were few and far between. He remained with his father until he was twenty years of age when he began working out at farm work by the month which he followed until his marriage on October 10, 1888, to Geneva Diggs, a daughter of Jesse and Julia (Hobbick) Diggs, of Randolph county. One child was born to this union, Edna, now the wife of Claude Wilson, of Winchester. The wife and mother passed away on August 26, 1893, and Mr. Fudge married for a second wife, Louise Hormel, on January 21, 1896. She is a daughter of Jarvis Hormel, of Wayne county, Indiana. Both parents of Mrs. Fudge died when she was quite young. Two sons have been born to this last union, namely: Frank C., born November 6, 1896, and Walter H., born July 3, 1900.

After his first marriage Mr. Fudge rented the home farm, which lies one and one-half miles northeast of Winchester, which his father had bought and had moved to some years previously. The place consists of one hundred and twenty acres of valuable and productive land. Here Mr. Fudge, of this review, has resided continuously to the present time. He has managed well and has prospered with advancing years, adding to the original place, until he now has two hundred and eighty-two acres, all in one body, and extending to the corporate limits of the city of Winchester. It is well-improved in every respect, and on it stands an excellent set of buildings. General farming is carried on, together with stock raising, on an extensive scale. Mr. Fudge feeds stock and buys and ships in large numbers, handling both hogs and cattle. He ships to the Indianapolis market, also Cleveland.

Politically, Mr. Fudge is a Democrat, and has been actively interested in public affairs for many years, but has never been an office seeker. He is a member of the Winchester Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Fudge has been exceptionally successful as a business man and his place shows thrift. He has one of the most attractive modern residences in the township. He has an automobile and, in fact, every modern comfort and convenience. He keeps his fine farm up to the highest point of productiveness, making a careful study of soils, crop rotation, fertilizers and everything necessary to success.

EMMETT B. HARRIS.

It is no very rare thing for a poor boy in our country to become a prosperous man and occupy a commanding position in the business world, but many who have fought their way from poverty to wealth, from obscurity to prominence, retain some marks and scars of the conflict. They are apt to be narrow and grasping, even if not sordid and unscrupulous. Emmett B. Harris, the able and popular cashier of The Citizens Banking Company, of Modoc, Randolph county, although he did not come up from the ranks of the poverty stricken and has not reached the affluence of the rich, yet he has worked his way from a modest beginning to a comfortable station in the world of affairs, being an instance of a man who has achieved success without paying the price at which it is so often bought. His success has not removed him further from his fellow men, but has brought him into nearer and more intimate relations with them, and, although he has led a busy life, he has yet found time to devote to those interests which develop the intellectual and moral nature of man, living not to himself alone, but showing a desire all the while to aid his fellow men.

Mr. Harris was born July 12, 1876, in Farmland, Randolph county. He is a son of David T. and Mary V. (Botkin) Harris. The father was born in Hagerstown, Indiana, and was a son of John G. Harris, a native of Lynchburg, Virginia, from which place he emigrated to Indiana in pioneer times and spent the rest of his life engaged in farming near Hagerstown, and there also the father of our subject engaged in farming. The mother of our subject was born on the old Botkin homestead, which has come down through three generations from the great-grandfather, who was one of the earliest settlers in this part of the state, and from that early day to the present the Botkins have been influential citizens in Randolph county, where Mrs. Harris grew to womanhood and was educated in the early schools. She is still living, being now sixty years of age. The death of David T. Harris occurred November 27, 1908. To these parents four children were born, two sons and two daughters, namely: Emmett B., of this sketch; Chester R., who is employed by the Western Union Telegraph Company in New York City, married Mabelle Skeele, and they have one child, Franklin; Jennie G. married C. A. Davis of the Western Electric Company, of East Orange, New Jersey, and they have one daughter, Mabel Marie; Mabel N., who was graduated from a high school, and is a successful teacher in Modoc, was born September 20, 1889.

Emmett B. Harris grew to manhood in his native locality and he received a good practical education in the local schools, later was graduated from a commercial college, after which he worked for some time as bookkeeper for the Strawboard Company at Yorktown, Indiana. He gave eminent satisfaction in this position, and since 1904 he has been cashier of The Citizens Banking Company, of Modoc, Indiana, and has done much to increase the prestige and high standing of this solid and popular institution. It was established in March, 1903, with a capital of ten thousand dollars and has made a gratifying growth ever since, doing a general banking business in a safe and conservative way, thereby gaining the confidence of the people. Their surplus and undivided profits have now grown to over ten thousand dollars. Its president is John Christopher, of whom a sketch appears on another page of this work. The directors are W. T. Farquhar, H. A. Gaddis, B. C. Mendenhall, Arthur R. Moore, M. V. Maulsby, J. C. Cropper and John Christopher.

Mr. Harris was married July 14, 1907, to Inez Porterfield, of Richmond, Indiana, a daughter of M. C. Porterfield, a well-known citizen of that city, where Mrs. Harris was born, reared and educated. To Mr. and Mrs. Harris one child has been born, Freeman, whose birth occurred July 25, 1909.

Mr. Harris is Independent politically, but has never been active as an office seeker, but has been town treasurer of Modoc for some time. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

ISAIAH W. KEMP.

As the day with its morning of hope and promise, its noontide of activity and accomplishment, its evening of completed and successful efforts, ending in the grateful rest and quiet of the night, so was the life of the late Isaiah W. Kemp. His career was a long, useful and busy one, fraught with much good to himself, his family and to humanity, and his memory will long be revered by those who had occasion to come into contact with him on life's highway. His activities in a material way added to his individual prosperity and to the locality of his residence. Devoting the major part of his time and attention to the development of his general agricultural interests in Randolph county, he never allowed the pursuit of wealth to warp his kindly nature, but preserved his faculties and the warmth of his heart for the broadening and helpful influence of human life, being to the end a kindly, genial friend and gentleman whom it was a pleasure to meet.

Mr. Kemp was born on January 1, 1840, at Dayton, Ohio. He was a son of Nathaniel and Margaret (Boyer) Kemp, whose family consisted of eight children, five of whom survive at this writing. The father was a native of Pennsylvania where his earlier years were spent and from which state he removed to Ohio, thence to Indiana, his son, Isaiah W., being four years old when the family settled in the Hoosier state. They located in Randolph county where a good farm was developed through hard work and good management and here the father spent the rest of his life, and the son, our subject, also devoted his active life to general farming and stock raising with much success, eventually becoming one of the leading farmers in the community, having remained in the same vicinity where he had spent his boyhood and received his education. The mother of our subject was a native of Maryland, and was a good woman and faithful helpmeet.

Isaiah W. Kemp was twice married, first, to Mary J. Wysong, of Randolph county. Her death occurred in 1874, and Mr. Kemp subsequently married Mary E. Hippenhimer, a daughter of Jacob Hippenhimer, a native of Pennsylvania. His wife was born in Maryland. The date of our subject's second marriage was January 5, 1876. To this union three sons were born, namely: Harry, who is farming on the old homestead, married Ethel Peacock, and they have one child, Ronald, born February 23, 1908; Troy W., a machinist in Muncie, Indiana, married Mary E. Thornburg, and they have two children, Edith, born May 23, 1905, and Alice, born September 23, 1908; George married Florence Kratzer, June 22, 1913.

The death of Isaiah W. Kemp occurred on April 8, 1909, having nearly attained his three-score and ten.

Mr. Kemp was a gallant soldier in the Civil war, serving four years in all, three of which were in the Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was a Republican in politics.

ALVA C. GREEN.

It is proper that the descendants of the old settlers, those who cleared the land of its primitive woods, should see that the doings of the earlier years are fittingly remembered and recorded. It was said by one of the greatest historians that those who take no interest in the deeds of their ancestors are not likely to do anything worthy to be remembered by their descendants. Alva C. Green, successful farmer of Randolph county, is a scion of two of the earliest families of this locality, many of whose worthy characteristics he seems to have inherited, for he believes in keeping busy and in doing what he can in furthering the interests of his community, at the same time so guarding his conduct as to merit the confidence and respect of his neighbors and friends. He was formerly a famous livestock breeder and raiser.

Mr. Green was born March 3, 1857, on a farm in White River township, four miles southwest of Winchester. He is a son of William S. and Christina (Bowers) Green. The father was born in Ohio and he came with his parents, Jesse Green and wife, in 1818 to Randolph county, Indiana, locating in the woods which were still the haunts of Indians and wild beasts and here the family erected a log cabin, began clearing and developing a farm, experiencing the hardships and privations incident to a life on the frontier. The Bowers family came in 1819 and settled in the same vicinity, having made the long overland journey in wagons from their former home in Pennsylvania, and here William S. Green and Christina Bowers grew up and were married.

MR. AND MRS. ALVA C. GREEN.

The mother of our subject was one of the first school teachers in this locality. The father became a large land owner and was one of the leading farmers of the community. These early settlers were all Quakers or Friends and they founded the old Dunkirk church. The New Dunkirk church stands on a corner of Mr. Green's farm on land donated by him for that purpose. Our subject's paternal grandparents, Jesse Green and wife, reared a family of eleven children, all of whom grew to maturity. These parents reached very advanced ages, Jesse Green dying a few years prior to his wife, who reached the age of one hundred and two years. A remarkable fact is that although they reared a large family they never had a doctor to enter their home. They were an exceptionally robust family. William S. Green, father of our subject, became a successful farmer in his community and was a man of industry, honesty and influence. His death occurred May 1, 1887, at the age of eighty-five years, his wife having preceded him to the grave February 1, 1871. They were buried in Macksville cemetery. They, too, had a large family—fourteen children, only four of whom, three sons and a daughter, are living at this writing, namely: Sarah Jane, now Mrs. W. Y. Puckett, of Winchester; Alva C., subject of this sketch; Benjamin F., of Winchester, and George W., of White River township.

Alva C. Green was reared on the home farm, where he worked when a boy, and he received his education in the country district schools. He remained with his father until his marriage on January 13, 1876, to Louticia Wright, daughter of William and Catherine (Davidson) Wright, of Randolph county. The father was a soldier in the Civil War and he died soon after the war, his wife dying in 1867, leaving five small orphan children, all of whom are now deceased except Mrs. Green and Mrs. Dora E. Pursley of Farmland.

To Alva C. Green and wife have been born three sons and one daughter, namely: William T. is married and lives in Winchester; Dora E. is the wife of Carl Huffman, of White River township; Clyde E. lives in Winchester, and Ollie B., who lives at home, is attending high school.

Since his marriage Mr. Green has lived on his present farm, which adjoins the old home farm four miles southwest of Winchester. He has a well-improved and productive place of one hundred and twenty acres, where he carries on general farming and stock raising. For a number of years he was a breeder of fine stock, Dutch belted registered cattle, owning the first herd in Randolph county; also bred the Essex and Suffolk hogs. He exhibited at all state fairs and at the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, in 1893, where he took twelve premiums. He exhibited at state fairs from Kansas to New York and was always a premium taker. He has two quilts and a flag made from premium ribbons taken at various fairs. He raised these animals for breeding purposes, and shipped to all the states in the Union and to Cuba and several South American countries. He won world-wide renown through his exceptionally fine livestock which were greatly admired by all who saw them, and which he sold at fancy prices, no small portion of his substantial fortune having been made in this manner. He is one of the best judges of all kinds of live stock that could be found in the state of Indiana today. He was for many years a member of the American Dutch Breeders' Association, the American Essex Breeders' Association and was president of the latter for a period of four years, discharging the important duties of the same in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned, doing much to increase the prestige and good work of the association during that period. He is also a poultry fancier and a raiser of White Wyandotte chickens and Buff turkeys, and is an extensive shipper of eggs for hatching purposes to all parts of the country, including every state and Canada. He is still a large producer in the poultry business, but has not been actively engaged in the livestock business for several years.

Mr. Green has been a Republican in politics all his mature years, but has never been active in public matters. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment, a charter member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and also a charter member of the Tribe of Ben-Hur. He and his family belong to the Friends church, in which he and his wife are active workers and overseers. They stand high in the best circles in the community and are pleasant, neighborly and obliging and number their friends by the scores.

HERBERT M. KABEL.

Herbert M. Kabel, of Winchester, was born in Randolph county, September 27, 1880, and is the son of Frederick and Mary Florence (Mercer) Kabel. He was educated at Normal School at Muncie and at the Central Normal College. He thereupon adopted the profession of teacher, for which he had patiently and thoroughly equipped himself. This profession he followed for thirteen years and made a reputation in educational circles to be envied by even the most successful. To large natural capacity he added the most careful and efficient training, and thus became in the highest sense of the word a scientific instructor. It is to the ability and labor of such teachers as Mr. Kabel that the schools of Indiana owe their enviable reputation. He mastered the principles and details of his profession, and his achievements in the mental training of his pupils is evidence of his mastery.

The present occupation of Mr. Kabel is that of cabinet maker, which he pursues quite as ardently and successfully as he did that of instructor. In this line he is an extensive manufacturer and is one of the most reliable and enterprising in the state. Mr. Kabel has five sisters and had one brother, who died in his youth. Mary Florence of Wayne county is the wife of Clyde Miller, a farmer. They have one child. A former husband was Bruce Keever, also a farmer, and one child was the result of this union. Iva B., of Randolph county, married Percy G. Stump, a farmer, and has two children. Philip Ray, the only brother, died at the age of sixteen. Clara married Henry Johnson, now dead, and of this marriage there was no issue. Ella and Elfie are single.

Mr. Kabel's ancestry is historic, and reaches back to association with the great Napoleon. That is something worth remembering, for surely no other man ever so revolutionized the world and created consternation in the hearts of kings as did Napoleon. The father of Mr. Kabel was a Randolph county farmer. His grandfather was from Frankfort, Germany. He was a tailor for a number of years, then joined the French army and came to the United States from France. His great grandfather furnished foodstuffs for the army of Napoleon. That was something of a regular occupation for the men who engaged in it, for Napoleon was always recruiting his ranks. Mr. Kabel had the distinction of seeing the Corsican in his amicable and also his frowning moods, and his reminiscences of the world's greatest strategist had the lively interest of recitals by an eyewitness. The mother of Herbert M. Kabel was born in Randolph county and survives at the age of fifty-four. His father is living at the age of sixty. His grandmother came to Indiana from Ohio and was ninety-six at the time of her death.

September 4, 1901, Mr. Kabel married Alma Gwin of Randolph county. She is one of three children and her mother still survives. Roger Harold, born July 10, 1902, and Virginia Florence, born September 7, 1908, are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Kabel, and two sprightlier, healthier and happier young Hoosiers would be difficult to find. Each is a reigning sensation in the home, and neither father nor mother plays a favorite. They look upon the children as the sunbeams of the household and cultivate their association as an inspiration to love and cheerfulness. Ronald, the youngest child, died in infancy.

In the matter of church affiliation, Mr. Kabel is a Methodist and in politics a Republican. He takes a broad and profound view of politics and indorses the policy of his party for what he esteems its achievements for half a century in the promotion of popular government. He has the distinction of being the first man in Indiana to receive a certificate for manual training. And now when manual instruction has become so popular and familiar, this is quite a remarkable distinction.

VOLNEY H. HUSTON.

Few present day business men of Winchester are better known or more highly esteemed than Volney H. Huston, for he seems to be the possessor of that peculiar combination of attributes which results in the attainment of much that is worth while in this world. He has ever aimed to be progressive in what he does, is always in sympathy with enterprises having for their object the common good, and his influence is invariably exerted on the right side of every moral issue. Like all men of positive character and independence of mind, he is outspoken in what he considers right, and his convictions are such that those who have come into close contact with him know well his position on all questions. His private life has always been exemplary, and his genial and obliging nature makes him popular with all classes.

Mr. Huston was born May 2, 1857, in White River township, Randolph county, on a farm, two and one-half miles southwest of Winchester. He is a son of David M. and Rebecca (Miller) Huston. The father was born in Preble county, Ohio, where he remained until about 1840, when he was seventeen years old, when he came with his father, John Huston, and the rest of the family to Randolph county and settled in the woods on the farm where the subject of this sketch was born. There they erected a log cabin, cleared and developed a farm like the rest of the pioneers. David M. Huston devoted his life to general farming in this county and became an influential man in his neighborhood. He left the farm in 1874 and moved to Winchester, where he engaged in small fruit growing and gardening, later establishing the first coal and wood yard in Winchester, which he operated for several years and was succeeded by Stephen Clevenger. He spent the rest of his life in retirement. Politically, he was a Republican and was active in public affairs as affecting the community in which he lived. He and his wife were members of the United Brethren church. His death occurred January 31, 1896, at the age of seventy-three years, his widow surviving until April, 1901. They were the parents of eight children, of whom Volney H. is next to the youngest. One of the children is deceased.

V. H. HUSTON.

Volney H. Huston was reared on the farm until he was seventeen years old, and he received his early education in the district schools. At the age mentioned above he moved with the family to Winchester and here attended high school, and assisted his father meanwhile in gardening and fruit growing. In the fall of 1878 he went to Moultrie county, Illinois, where he taught school, but boarded just across the line in Piatt county with his sister, and received his mail in Douglass county. He taught one term, during which he formed the acquaintance of Joe Cannon, formerly Congressman from that state, who was at that time a budding politician. Returning to Randolph county, Mr. Huston taught in the district schools for seven years, all in White River township but one when he taught in Green township. He gave splendid satisfaction as a teacher, being popular with both pupils and patrons. On March 18, 1886, the evening of the last day of his last school, Mr. Huston married Kathryn Miller, a daughter of Samuel and Nancy (Troup) Miller, a highly respected family of Germantown, Montgomery county, Ohio, where she was reared and educated. This union has been without issue.

April 1, 1886, a few days after his marriage, Mr. Huston began clerking in the store of W. E. Miller in Winchester. As a salesman he remained for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Miller's bookkeeper resigned and Mr. Huston was promoted to that position which he filled with much credit for a period of twenty years. When the W. E. Miller Company was incorporated our subject became a stockholder and director in the company and secretary of the corporation, which position he still holds. As the business grew he became head bookkeeper with assistants. In October, 1908, on account of trouble with his eyes, he gave up office work and became head of the carpet department, succeeding John A. Barnes, who died after eighteen years of service there. Mr. Huston still has charge of this department and does the buying and also has general supervision of the office. He has done much toward making this one of the leading department stores of Indiana outside of the larger cities, and it would be a credit to cities much larger than Winchester. It is up-to-date in every respect and an enormous annual business is carried on with the surrounding country.

March 25, 1889, Mr. Huston assisted in organizing the Winchester Home and Savings Association, and became a member of the board of directors, and has served as president of the board for fifteen consecutive years. His wise counsel has been responsible for the large success of this concern in no small degree. It is a solid institution and is thriving. One remarkable feature of the record of the company is that it has never foreclosed a mortgage given to secure a loan. Mr. Huston also took an active part in organizing the Eastern Indiana Telephone Company, and assisted in building the first independent toll line in the county, connecting all the towns in the county with the county-seat. He was a member of the first board of directors and served one year as secretary of the same. Owing to the rapid increase of the telephone business he was compelled to resign as secretary because of lack of time to give it proper attention together with his other numerous duties. He continued a member of the board for a few years and was a member of the building committee which constructed lines through Randolph and all toll lines beyond the county limits. In a few years he resigned from the board on account of the growing business to which he did not have time to give proper attention. He has other business interests in Winchester and elsewhere, and has been very successful in a financial way.

Politically, Mr. Huston is a Republican and has long been active in public affairs. He has frequently been urged to accept public office, but has declined. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and for many years was active in its affairs. He was a member of the building committee which constructed the magnificent new home of this lodge in Winchester. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is a member of the official board and is at this writing superintendent of the Sunday school. He has a beautiful home on South Main street and he and Mrs. Huston are popular in the best social circles of the city.

FERNANDIS B. MULLIN.

One of the most extensive and reputable lumber dealers of the state is Fernandis B. Mullin, of Winchester. Most of the mature life of Mr. Mullin has been devoted to the lumber business, and it would be hard to find one more expert in its details than he. For the last nine years he has been manager for the Greer-Wilkinson Lumber Company, one of the big concerns of the country. Mr. Mullin knows the lumber traffic from the invasion of the forest to the disposition of the finished product. There is no process through which the tree goes that he is not thoroughly familiar with. This intimate knowledge enables him to figure with the greatest accuracy and to close contracts with a surety and rapidity that are quite surprising. The reputation of a community, it is said, rests chiefly with its leading citizens, and Mr. Mullin is one of those who have made Winchester famous among the towns of the state.

F. B. Mullin was born in Winchester, December 9, 1856, and is the son of Elihu Mullin and Mahala (Edwards) Mullin. He is one of seven children. Lewis Mullin, a brother, of Washington, married Flo Canfield, and is by occupation an architect. They have one child. Calvin, also of Washington, married Hattie Canfield, a sister of Flo, and is a farmer. They have three children living. Minnie, of Chadburn, North Carolina, married W. H. Hunt, a farmer, and has a family of eight children. George, of Muncie, who is a builder by occupation, married Flora Wysong, and has two boys. May, the wife of Ed. Heaston, of Randolph county, a farmer, has three boys and one girl living, and one died in infancy. Mary died in infancy. Mr. Mullin's father, of Irish stock, went originally to Wayne county and was for thirty years a carpenter and builder in Winchester. He died at the age of sixty-eight from a fall off the roof of a building he was erecting. His wife, a native of Randolph county, sruvives, at the age of seventy-nine.

Mr. Mullin was married December 31, 1882, to Adella B. Naftzger, of Ohio, a daughter of Ephraim Naftzger, a miller. Two girls and one boy were the fruit of this union. Grace, the eldest, was born in Minnesota, January 4, 1885, and married John Bishop, agent of the Big Four at Winchester. She taught school five years with success. Cecil, who was born in Minnesota, February 17, 1887, died at the age of two years.

Vera K., the youngest, was born August 31, 1891, in Winchester, and has a national reputation as a platform entertainer. She has made a feature of vocalism and is directed by the Central Lyceum Bureau. Nothing is more difficult in the realm of art than voice culture. Its secrets are harder to acquire and master than those involved in the vibration of musical instruments. There is that in the cultivation of the vocal cords which taxes the genius of the most intellectual speakers and singers, and probably no one has ever confessed to a complete understanding of their mysteries. Sarah Bernhardt and Nazimova, among dramatic artists, and Mary Garden and Tetrazzini, among lyric artists, are considered the greatest living exponents of vocal culture. And certainly no instrumentalists rank above them. Vera Mullin is one of the younger aspirants in the supreme art of vocalization and has not yet attained the maturity of her powers. She has range and timbre, the essential qualities of great voices, and has that extraordinary faculty of cultivation that makes control seem perfect. Miss Mullin belongs to the higher order of artists who have that rarest of combinations, genius and cultivation. Her reputation grows from season to season, and in the list of Lyceum Bureau entertainers she ranks with the top notchers. She is an ardent devotee of her art and claims that no great achievement comes easily. Besides her remarkable attainments in voice culture, Miss Mullin is eminent as a whistling soloist, rivaling in this peculiar department of art the renowned Alice Shaw. She is one of the most constantly employed and highest priced artists under lyceum direction.

Fernandis B. Mullin has been trustee and is a member of Masonic lodge No. 56, and Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 121, both of Winchester. He was educated in the public schools and attends the Methodist church. He is a member of the Republican party.

CHARLES D. WYSONG.

It is a great privilege to be able to spend our lives on the old home place. "The roof that heard our earliest cry," in the language of the poet Tennyson, has a charm and fascination for us which we can not find elsewhere, and no matter where on earth our restless footsteps may wander we ever long to be back under the old roof-tree of our parents. However, this is not always the privilege of man. For many reasons, often through necessity, we leave our childhood home and seek our fortune in other countries, and seldom revisit the hearthstone around which we played as a child. So those who, like Charles D. Wysong, one of Randolph county's most successful and extensive farmers, are fortunate enough to spend, if not all, the major portion of their lives at their birthplace, are to be envied, and, no doubt, being a fair-minded man, he fully appreciated the privilege and he has labored hard to keep the old place well tilled and well improved, so that it has retained, rather than lost, its original strength of soil, and the home has been carefully looked after and tastily kept.

Mr. Wysong was born May 27, 1875, on a farm three miles south of Winchester, where he now lives. He is a scion of one of our worthiest and most prominent pioneer families, being a son of Harvey and Mary (Summers) Wysong. The mother died when our subject was only five days old and he was reared by relatives, being taken by an uncle when fifteen months old. He grew up, therefore, in the home of John D. Summers and wife, remaining with them until he was about eighteen years of age, assisting Mr. Summers on his garden farm, his uncle having been a gardener. During that period our subject attended the Winchester public schools. The death of his father occurred on September 6, 1893, and, he being the only heir to the homestead and his father's entire estate, moved to the home farm, which consisted of three hundred and ninety acres. He went to work with a will and prospered with the advancing years, adding to his original holding until he is now owner of five hundred and twenty acres in one tract, and also one hundred and forty acres in West River township. His land ranks with the best in Randolph county, and he has placed it under modern improvements and a high state of cultivation. It is nearly all tillable. It is all well fenced and well drained. He carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, and was formerly one of our best known fancy stock breeders, but has abandoned that department. He is one of the most substantial farmers of his township and one of the best posted on farming and livestock.

Mr. Wysong was married October 12, 1898, to Margaret T. Anderson, a daughter of Edmund L. and Lydia (Paxson) Anderson, who lived at Union City, Indiana, at the time of our subject's marriage. They are now residents of Anderson, this state. Four children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Mary Lydia, born December 17, 1900; John Harvey, born August 12, 1902; James Edmund, born February 21, 1907; Robert Anderson, born June 21, 1909.

Politically, Mr. Wysong is a Democrat and he has always given his support to such measures as make for the public weal. He belongs to the Masonic Order, including the Blue Lodge, No. 638, Chapter No. 35, Council No. 20, Commandery, also belongs to the Knights of Pythias No. 91. Mrs. Wysong is a member of the Eastern Star. He and his family are members of the Main Street Church of Christ. The family is prominent in the social life of the community, and the picturesque Wysong home is frequently the gathering place for their many friends, the best people of the county.

JOHN FLETCHER MIDDLETON.

Specific mention is made within these pages of many of the worthy citizens who have honored Randolph county with their residence, citizens who have figured in the growth and development of this favored section of the Hoosier state, and whose interests are or have been identified with its every phase of progress, each contributing in his sphere of activity to the well being of the community which he selected for the arena of his life labors and to the advancement of its normal and legitimate growth. Among this worthy number none have been more influential in Greensfork township, at least, than John Fletcher Middleton, who, now that he has passed his three score and ten mile-post and has accumulated a comfortable competency through a long life of close application to general farming, is living in retirement in the hamlet of Spartanburg. Practically all of his busy and useful life has been spent in this locality where he has seen and taken part in many great changes, he being one of our venerable native sons and one who has come down to us from the pioneer epoch. There is added interest in his record in that he is a veteran of the Union army.

Mr. Middleton was born in the township and county named in the preceding paragraph, November 26, 1842. He is a son of Thomas A. and Sarah (Borders) Middleton, the former of whom was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, November 5, 1799, and the latter in Greenbrier county. Thomas A. Middleton was a son of Benedict and Hannah (Harrison) Middleton. Benedict Middleton was born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, but most of his life was spent in Guilford county, North Carolina where his death occurred, and there his wife also died. In 1827 Thomas A. Middleton and his brother, Samuel, came from North Carolina to Randolph county, Indiana, making the long overland journey in a wagon. Thomas A. Middleton first married Margaret Webb, in 1825, and to this union four children were born, namely: Minerva, Calvin, Caroline and Sidney. In 1830 he settled in Greensfork township, entering from the government eighty acres which our subject now owns, and here he cleared and developed a farm and spent the rest of his life, dying November 14, 1883. Politically, he was a Republican, and religiously a member of the Methodist church, in which he was a trustee. His wife died in 1836. Two years later he married Sarah Borders, and to this union three children were born, namely; Wesley, deceased; Sarah A., who married Thomas Reagan; and John F., of this sketch. The father passed the remainder of his life on the eighty acres mentioned above. The death of Mrs. Sarah Middleton occurred December 28, 1862, at the advanced age of fifty-eight years.

John F. Middleton was reared on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools, and in the Industrial Academy in Wayne county which he attended three terms. On August 18, 1862 he enlisted in Company F, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and saw much active and hard service in the south. He took part in the battle of Richmond, Kentucky, where he was taken prisoner and after three days was paroled and sent to Camp Wayne, at Richmond, Indiana, where he remained for two months. At the expiration of that time he was exchanged and sent to the department of the Cumberland under General Grant. He was in the battle of Chickasaw Bluff, where he was stunned by a shell. He was also in the engagement at Arkansas Post, then went into winter quarters at Young's Point. During the campaign of 1863 he took part in numerous battles, including Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Champion Hill, the siege of Vicksburg and others. He was transferred to the Gulf department in the fall of 1863, and spent the following winter at Indianola, Texas. From there he was sent to assist Banks in the Red River expedition, and with a marine corps detailed to guard the river between New Orleans and Vicksburg until November 1, 1864, then he was sent to Mobile Bay, in the vicinity of which he spent the following winter. From there he was sent to Florida, thence to the siege of Fort Blakely in Alabama, after which he returned to Mobile, where he spent the summer. Mr. Middleton was a crackshot and served as a sharpshooter in a faithful manner. At the battle of Chickasaw Bluff he was disabled, his gun broken and his blanket cut from his shoulders, and his comrades on either side killed, but he remained on the field. He was honorably discharged and mustered out of service July 5, 1865.

He returned home immediately after his discharge from the army and settled on the old homestead, and, with the exception of one year he farmed thereon with much success until 1911 when he retired and is now living quietly in his cozy home in Spartanburg. When his father retired from active life he purchased the home place, and he added to it as he prospered until he became owner of a valuable farm of one hundred and sixty acres which he keeps highly improved.

Politically, Mr. Middleton is a Republican. In 1880 he was elected trustee of his township and served two terms satisfactorily. He subsequently served five years as township assessor, and also two years as county assessor, giving eminent satisfaction to all concerned. He also served three terms as member of the county council, a period of twelve years. He has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for a period of forty-five years, and has passed all the chairs. He was one of the first members initiated in the local lodge. He is also a member of the Encampment in which he has held a number of officers. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, a charter member, in fact, of the post at Spartanburg, and has filled all the offices in the same. He and his wife are members of the Christian church and have long been active in the work of the same. In view of the fact that he was a strong man, prior to the war, and that he contracted an ailment which has ever since left him somewhat disabled, he is remembered by the government with a substantial monthly pension. He comes of a fighting stock, and it might not be amiss to mention here that his maternal grandfather, Christopher Borders, who was a native of Germany, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, fighting on the side of the Colonists, and two of his sons served in the War of 1812. His wife was known in her maidenhood as Sarah Blizzard.

Mr. Middleton was married August 20, 1865, to Serena Alexander, who was born in Preble county, Ohio, April 21, 1847, near the city of New Paris. She is a daughter of Clement F. and Rebecca (Parks) Alexander, the former born in Ohio, May 2, 1817, and the latter in Indiana, December 18, 1816. They moved to Randolph county, Indiana in 1849, locating near Spartanburg, where he became a successful farmer; at one time owning two hundred and seventy-five acres of land. The latter part of his life was spent in retirement in Spartanburg, dying in October, 1892. His widow survived until October 19, 1900. She was a daughter of George and Catherine (Reed) Parks. Her father was a native of Virginia and in early life emigrated to North Carolina and from there to Indiana and lived to a very old age. Her brother, James Parks, lived to the great age of one hundred and one and one-half years and was an active man until the very end of his life. Mrs. Alexander was reared in the earliest days of Indiana and was one of the pioneer women of the state and in her early life passed through the struggles and hardships of the backwoods days of Indiana. She and Mr. Alexander were married September 10, 1840, and to them six daughters, all of whom grew to womanhood, were born, namely: Mary, born in 1842, married A. M. Rubey; Martha J., born October 29, 1843, married John Kelly; Nancy A., born April 25, 1845, married Pat Trammel; Serena who is the wife of our subject; Sarah J., born June 11, 1850; Lizzie, born May 7, 1855, married Ambrose Rubey. Mrs. Kelley and Mrs. Trammel died many years ago. From the date of their marriage, the parents of the above named children, resided near New Paris, Preble county, Ohio, until 1848 when they moved to Randolph county, Indiana, to the farm near Spartanburg where they lived until 1890 when they located in Spartanburg, there they lived until the death of Mr. Alexander, October 27th, two years after his retirement. Then for about two years his widow lived in Lynn then came back to the old homestead where she remained with her daughter, Mrs. Ambrose Rubey and her daughter, Julietta, until death. She joined the Christian church in her earlier years and with her husband remained faithful to its precepts until the end of life. Her field of labor was her home where she exemplified all the sweet Christian graces for which she was noted, being always active in her labors of love and tenderness, never sparing herself when she could do something to assist her family. She was a model housewife as well as mother, and her home was a typical house of the olden days when hospitality was the crowning virtue of the Christian home. Her fifty-two years of married life were passed in harmony, no discord ever marring the joy of their long union. After she became a widow her life and love were devoted to her children. She was patient in all her sufferings and when the time came for her to cease from earthly labors she was fully prepared for the change, and left behind her an example worthy of emulation. Clement F. Alexander was county commissioner for six years, was a notary public for two terms, was an elder, deacon and trustee in the Christian church and was a good and useful man.

To Mr. and Mrs. John F. Middleton were born two children, namely: Ida May, who married Ephraim Anderson, was born May 18, 1866, and they live in Hagerstown, Indiana. By this marriage two children have been born, Effie R., born August 15, 1886, and Earnest, born April 10, 1891; Thomas A., born February 14, 1871, married Elnora Hunt, who died October 23, 1893, leaving one child, Frances Edna, who died November 29, 1911. Mr. Middleton's second marriage occurred March 30, 1895, with Miss Emma Goudy. They have four children: Harold, born March 12, 1886; Maurine, born March 21, 1898; and Albert and Alma, twins, born December 22, 1900. He is operating the home farm, since the retirement of the subject of this sketch, and is one of the progressive and up-to-date farmers. Socially, he and his wife stand in the front rank.

Mr. Middleton is a pleasant gentleman to all whom he meets, his word is that of a man of a high sense of honor and he is worthy in every respect of the esteem of his fellow citizens.

CURTIS K. WRIGHT.

By a life consistent in motive and action and because of his many fine personal qualities, Curtis K. Wright of Union City, Randolph county, has earned the confidence and respect of the people of this locality, and in his home, which is the center of a large social circle, there is always in evidence a spirit of generosity. He was in his earlier years engaged in various pursuits, but the latter years have found him one of the leading undertakers of this section of the state. He has been content to maintain his home here most of his life, where he has not only attained a high degree of success in his business ventures but also established a reputation for uprightness in all the relations of life.

Mr. Wright was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, December 4, 1850. He is a son of William Wright, a contractor, and during the last year of his business life he was engaged in the furniture business in Union City. His death occurred in 1909 at the age of seventy-seven years. He married Margaret Jane Kerlinger, who was born in Maryland, and her death occurred in March, 1905, at the age of seventy-six years. These parents were members of the Disciple church and were loyal to its teachings. John Wright, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Pennsylvania. In early life he followed farming, later conducting a hotel. His death occurred in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1874, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife was Elizabeth Stewart. She was a Disciple and she died in the early eighties. The maternal great-grandfather was James Stewart, who was born in northern Ireland, from which country he came to America when a young man and settled in Pennsylvania. The mother of our subject was known in her maidenhood as Margaret Jane Kerlinger, and was of German ancestry; she was but three years old when her parents both died, and she was brought up in the home of an uncle who lived in Baltimore, Maryland. When she was about eighteen years old she came to Wayne county, Indiana, where she met William Wright and they were afterwards married.

Curtis K. Wright was educated in the common and high schools, graduating from the latter at Union City in 1868. When a boy he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until he went into the grocery business as a clerk with B. F. Stewart, continuing in the same ten years, enjoying a good trade and then returned to carpentering. In 1883 he went to Muncie, Indiana, and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, which he continued there with very gratifying results for a period of nine years, then sold out and removed to Union City and again followed the grocery business for two years, then formed a company, under the firm name of Wright & Snell, in the undertaking business, which they conducted four years, then our subject resumed carpentering for eighteen months, then bought out the undertaking firm of J. M. Campbell, changing the name to C. K. Wright & Worth, and for a period of sixteen years they continued doing a large business in Union City, Mr. Worth selling his interest in 1911 to Gerald S. Van Dyke, and the firm is now Wright & Van Dyke. They are modernly equipped in every respect for their work and have well-kept parlors, and high grade and prompt service is their aim. This is one of the most popular and best firms of its kind in this section of the state.

Politically, Mr. Wright is a Republican. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Improved Order of Red Men and Rebekahs.

Mr. Wright was married March 23, 1871, to Sarah M. Polly, who was born in South Salem, Indiana, January 9, 1849. She is a daughter of David Polly, who died several years ago. His wife, Anna Spencer, is also deceased. Mr. Wright has one brother, John T. Wright, a merchant in Kansas City, Kansas, and a sister, Mrs. Katherine O. Headington, died in Toledo, Ohio, in 1904.

Mr. Wright was graduated July 1, 1901, from the Indiana State Board of Embalmers. He took a post-graduate course October 17, 1900, at the Chicago College of Embalming; also received diploma from Clark's School of Embalming at Cincinnati, Ohio, March 24, 1899, also received diplomas signed by Auguste Renouard March 18, 1897, at the Renouard Training School of Embalming, also a diploma from the Indianapolis School of Embalming, in May, 1892. He is thus exceptionally well qualified for the successful carrying on of his chosen business. He is a close student and is constantly on the research for improved methods in this field.

To Curtis K. Wright and wife one child has been born: Harry H., born January 26, 1873, in Union City and was educated in the schools of Muncie, finishing in the high school in Union City; he married Emily Grooms, who was born in Flint, Michigan, in 1881, and was graduated from the high school there; three sons have been born to them, namely, Curtis G., was born in Pontiac, Michigan, July 5, 1903; Frederick, born in Flint, Michigan, April 5, 1906; William J., born April 5, 1911, at Orellia, Ontario, Canada. Harry H. Wright had full charge of the painting department of the Standard Vehicle Company, of Pontiac, Michigan, from 1902 to 1906, and in 1907 he had charge of the body department there, where automobiles are finished, and one hundred men under his direction. From 1907 to 1909 he had charge of the Buick painting department, and from 1909 to 1913 he had full charge of the painting department for the Tudhope Carriage and Automobile factory at Orellia, Ontario, Canada. He is regarded as being one of the best in his line of business and is known in every important factory of automobiles and vehicles in the Union and Canada and his services are in great demand. He has a method of preparing paints which is superior to any yet devised and it is known only to himself and many factories are offering him handsome sums for it, but he prefers to keep the same under his own control.

ELMER E. FRANKLIN.

Elmer E. Franklin, is one of Randolph county's prosperous farmers who has become so by close application and the exercise of sound judgment, rather than by inheritance and by depending upon others to do what he deemed best for him to do with his own hands and brain. While each succeeding year has found him further advanced in a business way it also has found him a better and more public-spirited citizen, for he takes an abiding interest in the general progress of Winchester and Randolph county.

Mr. Franklin was born December 6, 1862, on a farm two and one-half miles south of Sulphur Springs, Henry county, Indiana. He is a son of John M. and Elizabeth (Denny) Franklin, both parents having been natives of Henry county, this state. They grew to maturity there, were educated and married, and there the father became a well-known miller, and also farmed some. It was in 1868 that the family removed to Richland county, Illinois, where the father followed his trade of miller, with the exception of the first year, which he devoted to farming. The family remained in the Prairie state for about fifteen years, when they returned to Indiana, locating at Newcastle, Henry county, in which city John M. Franklin soon devoted himself to milling, and there the family continued to reside. The death of his wife occurred in the spring of 1882. He then removed to Montpelier, Blackford county, Indiana, where he continued his trade for three years, then followed it two years in Pennville. We next find him in Yorktown, Delaware county, where he built a mill, then in partnership with a Mr. Maloney, continuing to engage in the milling business there until his death in July, 1906.

Elmer E. Franklin left home when ten years old and came to Randolph county, making his home with his half-brother, William H. Snyder. During his boyhood he attended the public schools in the various localities, where the family lived. After coming to this county he attended school during the winters, for two or three years. During this time he was employed at farm work, continuing thus until he was married, July 29, 1887, to Ada Ruble, daughter of Walter and Catherine (Harmon) Ruble, of this county. Mr. Ruble was born in Randolph county, Indiana, but his wife was a native of Ohio. To our subject and wife was born one daughter, Lola, a graduate of the Winchester high school with the class of 1909; she also attended the State Normal at Terre Haute, completing the training course preparatory to teaching; however, desiring to further equip herself she then went to the Valparaiso University for five months. She has since been a successful teacher in the primary grade at the Lincoln school in White River township. She attended the summer school at Winona, Indiana, in 1913.

MR. AND MRS. E. E. FRANKLIN.

After his marriage Mr. Franklin settled on the Steven Moorman farm, just south of where he now lives, remaining there four years, during which time he got a good start; then he moved to a farm near Maxville cemetery, where he lived for four years. In 1895 the family moved to their present fine farm, four miles west of Winchester, on the Muncie road, the place consisting of sixty acres. On it stands one of the most modern country homes in the county. It is equipped with electric lights, telephone, etc., and an interurban line is at the door, a stop being just in front of the house. Mr. Franklin has always followed farming, with the exception of two years, being engaged in the farm implement business in 1909 and 1910, in Winchester. He returned to the farm in 1911, preferring the country life to that of town, although he was making a success as a merchant. At present he is not as active as formerly, gradually retiring from active life. His farm is well improved and he keeps a good grade of livestock.

Mr. Franklin has always been a Republican and he says he always will be, and he has been deeply interested in public matters. He takes an especial interest in educational affairs. He is a well read man, familiar with the world's best literature in all branches, having a large and well selected library, where he spends a great deal of time. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment and his wife and daughter belong to the Rebeccas; the two latter also are members of the Economics Club, an organization of White River township for the study of economic questions. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and are prominent in the social life of the community.

JOHN HAWKINS.

Standing for upright manhood and progressive citizenship, John Hawkins, long one of Randolph county's active agriculturists has been an influential factor not only in the material welfare of his community but also the moral welfare of the same. He is one of the gallant "boys in blue," having fought for his country's honor in its hours of direst need in the great rebellion of the sixties. He comes of an old and highly esteemed Hoosier family, the genealogy of which is traceable to the earliest period in the history of this section of the Middle West, the Hawkinses having braved the wilds of the same a decade before the commonwealth was organized, for it was over a century ago that our subject's grandfather established his log cabin home in the wilderness here, amid wild beasts and scarcely less wild men, this country still being the undisputed domain of the Indians.

John Hawkins was born near Richmond, Indiana, September 18, 1836, and is thus past seventy-seven years of age. He is a son of Nathan and Sarah Hawkins. Nathan Hawkins was born in Wayne county, Indiana, April 15, 1808, and was a son of John and Lydia (Comer) Hawkins, who emigrated to Indiana in 1806. John Hawkins entered three hundred and twenty acres of land in Wayne county, and began the development of a farm. He also engaged in the saw mill business, and there he prospered and was a prominent man among the first settlers. His death occurred in 1859, at the age of eighty-two years. He at one time owned a large tract of land which he divided up among his children. He was a member of the Society of Friends, was an Abolitionist, afterwards a Whig and later a Republican. His children were Tamar, Sarah, Nathan and John.

Nathan Hawkins was reared in the usual manner of pioneer farmer lads and like his father followed agricultural pursuits in connection with the operation of a saw mill. He was successful in a business way, and the last years of his life were spent in retirement in the city of Richmond, where his death occurred July 14, 1890. He was married in 1829 to Sarah Wright, who was born in Wayne county, this state, in 1811, and was a daughter of Elijah and Susanna (Hoover) Wright, natives of North Carolina. The family numbered ten children, named as follows: William established his home on a farm in Illinois; Eliza, who married Daniel Comer, is deceased; Lydia married C. Terpening, of Arkansas; John, of this review, was next in order of birth; Henry became a leading citizen of Lynn, this county; Eli is deceased; Jennie married J. Burgoyne; Allen remained in Randolph county; Charles is deceased; George became a citizen of Richmond, Indiana. The mother of the above named children died October 10, 1867, and in 1873, Nathan Hawkins married Minnie Long, by whom he had two children, Belle, who married O. Quigg, of Lynn, Indiana; and Omer, of Richmond. The second wife died in 1884. Nathan Hawkins became owner of two hundred and fifty acres of land in this county and other valuable property. Politically, he was a Republican and he was a member of the Society of Friends.

John Hawkins grew up in his native community on his father's farm, and he received a meager education in the old-time schools. He enlisted in January, 1862 in Company I, Fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he saw much hard service and proved to be a faithful defender of the Union. He fought in the great battles of Shiloh, Stone River, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. In the last named battle he was wounded in the right arm and side and in the left breast by bullets and on top of the left foot by a shell. He was in the hospital two months, and was honorably discharged from the service in September, 1864. He returned home and took up general farming and stock raising in which he was very successful and which he followed until he retired from active life in 1901. He lived many years in Darke county, Ohio where he still owns a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, and he also owns forty acres in Randolph county, Indiana.

Mr. Hawkins is a Republican. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Religiously, he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. He has filled all the offices in the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Hawkins was married in January, 1865, to Martha Jessup, whose death occurred May 3, 1913. She was a woman of beautiful Christian character and proved to be a most faithful helpmeet. Five children were born to our subject and wife, named as follows: William H., of Bradford, Ohio; Sarah B. is at home; Charles N. lives on the home farm; John E. lives at Ashtabula, Ohio; and Oliver N. who lives in Lynn, this county.

ALVAH C. HINDSLEY.

Among the pioneer families of Randolph county, who, by act and deed have made for themselves a prominent place in the county's history is the Hindsley family. While not among the earliest settlers of this section, this family located in Jackson township in the early eighteen forties. They are of North Carolina stock, migrating from that state in the early part of the last century, and settling at New Madison, Darke county, Ohio, where many of them now reside. Some twenty years later several members of the family located in Jackson township, this county where they have since lived, and are well and favorably known.

Alvah C. Hindsley, the subject of this sketch, son of Rufus and Malinda Hindsley, was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, December 24, 1872, and is the oldest of a family of seven children. After acquiring the usual common school education, he took up the vocation of teaching. While following that vocation, he added to his educational training by taking a course of study in the Central Normal College, at Danville, Indiana, where he also began the study of law. He was admitted to the Randolph county bar in 1893, when but twenty-one years of age. After teaching school for several years he retired, to take up the practice of law, which profession he followed for a short period.

In 1898 Mr. Hindsley purchased The Winchester Democrat, at Winchester, Indiana and most successfully published that paper for nearly thirteen years. By his tireless energy and aggressive policies, he made it not only a political organ of power and influence, but a newspaper second to none in the county. He was for years a member of the Indiana Democratic Editorial Association, and at the time of his retirement from newspaper work, was treasurer of that association.

Mr. Hindsley is by nature, aggressively inclined in his political affiliations, and by reason of such has been often called by his party into positions of leadership. In 1896 and again in 1898, he was the candidate of his party for prosecuting attorney of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit. In 1904 he was nominated for joint representative for the counties of Randolph, Jay and Blackford, but his party being then hopelessly in the minority, was defeated as a matter of course. From 1900 to 1904 he was secretary of the Randolph County Democratic Central Committee, and in 1904 was made chairman, which position he continued to hold for a period of eight years.

In December, 1910, Mr. Hindsley was tendered the position of second assistant Secretary of State of the state of Indiana and accepted the appointment, which position he yet holds. In April, 1911, he sold his newspaper and soon thereafter, with his family, moved from Winchester to Indianapolis, where they now reside.

Mr. Hindsley was married in November, 1898 to Gracie Simmons, and they have one child, Forrest Hindsley, a boy now past ten years of age.

Mr. Hindsley has proven to be a most faithful and trustworthy public servant, uniformly courteous and affable and is popular with all with whom he comes in contact.

DANIEL E. HOFFMAN.

The fifty-five years which Daniel E. Hoffman, widely known marble worker of Winchester, has spent in Randolph county have brought to him not only proper financial rewards, but also the esteem of a very wide acquaintance. During that long period he has seen wonderful changes take place here and has not been by any means an idle spectator, doing a good citizen's part in it all, for he was impressed from the first with the future possibilities of the city and county and has manifested a heart-felt interest in them. He has led a life that might well be studied by the young man just starting on his career, for it has resulted in a comfortable living for himself and family, gained entirely by honorable means and in a way that has won and retained a host of friends and given offense to few.

Mr. Hoffman was born in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, November 2, D. E. HOFFMAN.

1838, and is a son of John S. and Kate (Iba) Hoffman. The father died when our subject was ten years of age, and the latter was reared for the most part by strangers. After attending school until he was fourteen years of age he began learning his trade of marble cutting at Lebanon, but later moved to Philadelphia and thence to Baltimore, finally to Buffalo, New York. By the time he was twenty years old he was a most skilful workman. He came to Fort Wayne, Indiana, in 1857, passing through Winchester, with which town he was so favorably impressed he returned a year later and established his permanent home, thus having lived here since 1858. He had but a little over one hundred dollars when he began business here, and soon after his arrival bought out his only business competitor in town, and in due course of time was doing an extensive and rapidly growing business, maintaining one of the finest, best equipped and largest yards in eastern Indiana and enjoying a reputation for high-grade work second to none. He manufactures marble, granite and all kinds of stone for structural purposes, or chisels them into objects of beauty for monuments and ornamental purposes in general. He has managed to keep out all competition, his being the only establishment of its kind in this section of the state, and by close application, strict attention, high-class workmanship and honest dealings, Mr. Hoffman has long enjoyed a prosperous business, amassing a handsome competency for his old age, and owns besides his valuable plant a splendid farm and attractive residence. All of this he has purchased with the proceeds of his own hands since coming to Winchester.

For many years Mr. Hoffman has manifested an abiding interest in the agricultural and horticultural development of Randolph county. For several years he served as secretary of the Agricultural Society of this county, and he has attended several meetings of the State Horticultural Society, as a delegate. He was a member of the executive committee of the society for several years, and one of its vice-presidents. He is an enthusiastic horticulturist, and has done as much perhaps, as any one in Randolph county to encourage improvement in orchards and awaken an interest in modern methods of this vocation.

Although active in the affairs of the Republican party he has preferred to devote his attention to his individual affairs rather than seek political preferment, however, he served as marshall of Winchester many years ago, to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

Mr. Hoffman was married in Winchester, December 4, 1862, to Angie Carter, who was born in Randolph county in 1843, and is a daughter of Edmund and Polly (Diltz) Carter, a sterling pioneer family of this county.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman, named as follows: Riley, formerly of Union City, is now connected with his father in the marble works at Winchester; Dora N., Katie and Abbie are all deceased; Nellie married Grant Clevenger and they live in Muncie, Indiana.

Mr. Hoffman is a member of the Knights of the Golden Eagle and the Improved Order of Red Men, and he has filled all the chairs in both orders. He is a man of wonderful information on a wide range of topics and is a lover of good books, having a large collection of the best in his library. He is one of the best authorities on fruit growing in the county, and he is one of our most extensive fruit growers, his orchards being among the largest and most carefully selected varieties in the state. He is not only an enthusiastic horticulturist, but also a lover of fine livestock, a number of good horses and large herds of cattle and hogs being found on his fine farm at all seasons. It would be hard to find a better judge of livestock. His residence on South Meridian street is one of the interesting places in Winchester, the commodious, rambling, picturesque house being surrounded by a broad, shady, well-kept lawn, on which shrubbery, flowers and fruits grow in abundance. And in the grounds a fountain plays around which many varieties of birds gather, which are carefully guarded.

Personally, Mr. Hoffman is a gentleman of the old school and a pleasant man to meet, plain, unassuming, obliging and courteous, a Nature lover, something of a naturalist, a strong-minded, clean-living high-thinking man, whose example is worthy of emulation.

F MARION HARTER.

This gentleman is another of the old soldiers whom it is a delight to honor. They are getting fewer and fewer in number and their march is not as quick and full of meaning and fire as it was fifty years ago when they were fighting for the perpetuity of the Union. But it thrills one to see them in their old uniforms, with their tattered flags flying and their forms bent as they hobble along on their canes at reunions or on Memorial day or the Fourth of July. And how interesting it is to hear them tell the story of the dreadful hardships they endured in the hospitals or on the harassing marches, or in the battles and skirmishes, or in the prison hells of the Southern Confederacy. But their time is short now, so all persons should join in honoring them for the sacrifices they made when they were young and full of the love of life, but which was offered free and gladly on the altar of their country.

F. Marion Harter, for many years one of the successful agriculturists of Randolph county, who is spending his old age in quiet retirement in his cozy home in Winchester, was born in Union county, Indiana, near College Corner, Ohio, on May 20, 1833. He is a son of Joseph and Catherine (Adams) Harter. The father was born in Pennsylvania and the mother was a native of Butler county, Ohio. They grew up in their respective communities and received meager educations in the old-time schools. The father came to Ohio when a boy and there married and he and his wife came to Union county, Indiana with the early pioneers and traded a horse, saddle and bridle for one hundred and sixty acres of land in the woods. They were courageous and set to work with determination, clearing the land and erected thereon a log cabin. Their possessions increased with the years and they had a good home and farm there. In this log cabin the subject of this sketch was born, and, being a pioneer child, he found plenty of hard work to do when growing up. He received only a meager schooling, attending schools in his neighborhood for only three months a year for a few years. The parents spent the rest of their lives on this farm, the mother dying in 1837 when our subject was four years old. The father survived some twenty-six years, dying in 1863.

F. Marion Harter was married on September 3, 1857 to Mary Ellen Murphy, daughter of Eli J. and Mary (Booth) Murphy, both natives of Hamilton, Butler county, Ohio, and there also occurred the birth of Mrs. Harter. She received the usual common school training.

On August 13, 1862 Mr. Harter enlisted in Company H, Eighty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served very faithfully until August 12, 1865. He was never at home from the day of his enlistment until he was mustered out of the service. He was in the army in the Southwest and fought in twenty different battles, including the last battle of the war, some of which were among the most important of the war. He was under General Grant at the siege of Vicksburg. At Carion Crow, Louisiana, September 3, 1863, he was taken prisoner and confined in a prison camp on Red River at Alexandria not far from New Orleans. He was confined for six months and then exchanged and rejoined his regiment at Pensacola, Florida. With all his active service he was never wounded. His regiment traveled by rail over six hundred miles, by steamboat over seven thousand miles and marched over eighteen hundred miles before its mustering out at Galveston, Texas, on August 12, 1865. Mr. Harter immediately returned home and rejoined his family in Oxford, Ohio, to which place his wife and two children had removed, and soon thereafter he removed with his family to Greensfork township, Randolph county, Indiana, and here engaged in farming until 1878 when he moved to White River township, near Winchester, and continued farming with his usual success, also was engineer at the pumping station of the Big Four Railroad until 1888. He continued general farming and stock raising until 1904, when, having accumulated a sufficient competency to insure his declining years from want, he retired from the active duties of life and moved to Winchester where he has since resided.

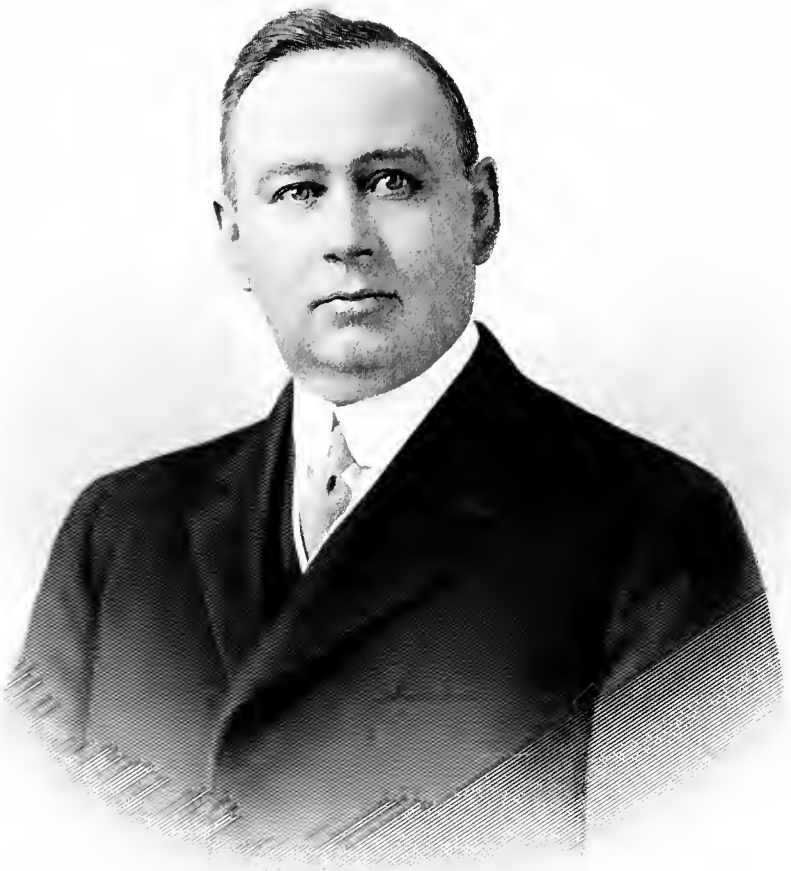
Four sons have been born to our subject and wife, also four daughters, named as follows: Joseph P., of Oklahoma; Sarah C., deceased; Franklin, deceased; Mary is at home; Emma is deceased; Catherine who married Lawrence Myers, lives in Texas; Howard lives in Wayne county, Indiana; Edward is deceased.

For many years Mr. Harter voted the Republican ticket, but in 1896 he turned Democrat and has since been loyal in the support of that party. He has always been active in public matters. He is a member of the Nelson Trusler Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Winchester. He has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1856. He and his family affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal church. He is now eighty-one years of age, but is as well preserved as many men ten or fifteen years younger, having been a man of good habits all his life. He is widely known in Randolph county and highly respected.

HARRY E. BARRETT.

One of the best known business men of the younger generation in Union City, Randolph county is Harry E. Barrett, druggist and banker, a man who is deserving of the large success that he has achieved in view of the fact that his life has been above all idle cavil, both from a business and social viewpoint. He is a man of persistent industry, sound judgment and wise foresight and would have no doubt made a success wherever he might have desired to have cast his lot. He is a man of proper public spirit and has done much for the general upbuilding of the city of his residence, being a leader in all movements calculated to result in the general good.

Mr. Barrett hails from the great Prairie state, his birth having occurred in Hillsborough, Illinois, December 28, 1875. He is a son of Charles E.



Harry E Barrett

Barrett, who was born in 1848. He spent his early life in farming and is now living retired in Union City, having accumulated a handsome competency for his old age. He married Elmaretta S. Sipe, who was born in 1847. The paternal great grandfather, Elisha Barrett, was a pioneer farmer and a neighborhood preacher, going about among the frontiersmen doing such good as he could without thought of compensation. The maternal great grandfather was Henry Sipe, whose wife was Jane Nickey. The maternal grandparents were Alfred J. and Nancy Sipe.

Two children were born to Charles E. Barrett and wife, namely: Harry E., of this sketch; and Pearl, who married Robert Hill, at Saratoga, Indiana, and he is interested with his father in business.

Harry E. Barrett was educated in the high school at Ridgeville, Randolph county, Indiana, the family having moved from Illinois to this locality when he was young. After graduating from the high school he attended the Ridgeville College for three years, making a special study of languages and literature, also mathematics. After leaving college he entered the Atlas Bank of Union City as assistant cashier, and he has virtually spent his active life in the banking business, becoming one of the best known and most influential financiers in this section of the county. On January 1, 1913 he purchased the drug store of G. Adolph Rosenbush, who met his death in an automobile accident. Since taking over the drug store, he has devoted the major part of his attention to the same with the result that the business doubled the first six months, and he is enjoying a very large trade. He has a neatly kept and well stocked store that would be a credit to any city much larger than Union City. However, he still owns stock in the Atlas Bank and is director in the Permanent Savings & Loan Association of Union City, being treasurer of the same, and is also treasurer of the Federal Club, of which he is a member. He also belongs to the Hoosier Club, of Union City. Fraternally, he is a Mason and also holds membership with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically, he is a Democrat. He owns a fine and valuable farm in Wayne township.

Mr. Barrett was married December 12, 1900 to Myrtle S. Skiver, who was born in Winchester, Indiana, February 28, 1878. She is a daughter of David S. Skiver, an extensive farmer, who makes a specialty of feeding cattle.

To our subject and wife one child has been born, Richard A. Barrett, whose birth occurred September 6, 1906.

OZZIE O. FRAZE.

The essential conditions of human life are ever the same; the surroundings of individuals differ but slightly, and when one man passes another on the highway of life to reach the goal of prosperity before others who perhaps started out in their careers before him, it is because he has the power to use advantages which probably encompass the whole human race. One of the leading business men of Union City, Randolph county, who seems to have had the sagacity to see readily and grasp instantly opportunities that led to success is Ozzie O. Fraze, widely known embalmer and funeral director, he having been engaged in this line of endeavor for a number of years.

Mr. Fraze was born in Randolph county, October 20, 1874. He is a son of W. H. and Etta (Fields) Fraze, for many years residents of this county, later moving to Van Buren county, Michigan, where the father was engaged in general agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in 1899. The mother is now living in Benton Harbor, Michigan. The paternal grandfather, John Fraze, was also a farmer all his life. He died at an advanced age in 1908. His widow, known in her maidenhood as Nancy Lasley, is now past eight-six years old.

Ozzie O. Fraze was reared on the farm and educated at Benton Harbor, Michigan. He was graduated from the Benton Harbor College with the class of 1896. He took up the study of embalming and received his Indiana license in 1908 and his Ohio license in 1911. He began life as a farmer, which he continued until he was was twenty-one years old, and after leaving the farm he engaged in the hotel business until 1902, when he moved to Winchester, Indiana, and entered the employ of S. E. Fraze in the undertaking business, remaining with him until 1909, when our subject moved to Lynn and established an undertaking business on his own account, conducting the same successfully until 1910, when he sold out and removed to Union City and bought out the business of D. W. Bickel, undertaker, and in July, 1911, he formed a partnership with his uncle, S. E. Fraze, under the firm name of S. E. & O. O. Fraze, and this is one of the best and busiest firms of funeral directors in Randolph county, enjoying a lucrative and rapidly increasing business. They are well equipped in every respect and maintain a neat and modernly appointed office and parlors. They understand every phase of the embalming and undertaking business. S. E. Fraze has been in the undertaking business about twenty-five years.

Ozzie O. Fraze was married June 8, 1904, to Floy Watts, a daughter of Joseph Watts, of Winchester, Indiana. He is in the postal mail service. Mrs. Fraze grew to womanhood at Winchester and was educated in the common schools there. To our subject and wife one child has been born, Harry Watts Fraze, whose birth occurred in Winchester, March 16, 1909. The wife and mother was born in that city April 14, 1880.

Politically, Mr. Fraze is a Republican, and religiously he is a member of the Christian church. He belongs to the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Owls.

BERT E. WOODBURY.

While yet a young man Bert E. Woodbury, of the firm of Dunn & Woodbury, well known attorneys of Union City, has shown how energy, persistency and lofty aims win a definite degree of success early in one's career, and, judging from what he has already accomplished and from his evident innate ability, we predict for him a future replete with much larger things and fully gratified ambition. He seems to have inherited many of the attributes that win from his worthy progenitors, he being a scion of an excellent pioneer family of Randolph county. He is the present able and popular prosecuting attorney of the county.

Mr. Woodbury was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, Indiana, December 19, 1881, and is a fine example of the self-educated and self-made man. Early in life he worked on a farm and taught school one term in the country, and four terms in Union City, and by hard work, economy and self-denial he acquired means whereby he was enabled to get the professional education which he so ardently desired when a boy, and thus is deserving of much credit for making himself one of the leading lawyers of Randolph county while still quite young. He received his early education in the common schools of his native community and in 1907 attended the Indiana Normal School at Muncie, Indiana, and in 1908 commenced the study of law with Shockney Brothers. He took a three years' correspondence course in law, and was graduated from that school in 1910. He had been admitted to the bar in 1909, and began practicing his profession in 1910 in Union City, he and Ernest M. Dunn, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work, formed a partnership on August 1, 1911, under the firm name of Dunn & Woodbury which still continues, having been very successful from the first, and these bright, determined young men are rapidly forging to the front rank of Randolph county lawyers, enjoying a lucrative and constantly growing practice. Mr. Woodbury is a safe and earnest attorney as well as a forceful, logical speaker.

Mr. Woodbury is a loyal Democrat and active in the ranks of his party. He was elected prosecuting attorney of the twenty-fifth judicial circuit, which comprises Randolph county, in the fall of 1912. He won in the face of a large Republican majority, and has the distinction of being the only Democratic prosecuting attorney ever elected in Randolph county. This indicates that he is a man of exceptionally high standing among his constituents who place much faith in his ability and integrity. He is discharging the duties of this important office, with the assistance of Mr. Dunn, in a highly creditable manner and is winning just praise from all classes. He is not only profoundly versed in the basic principles of law and the statutes of Indiana but is stickler for rigid law enforcement.

He was married February 29, 1908 to Ethyl Belle Ward, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, December 26, 1885. She is a young lady of education and affable disposition which makes her a favorite with her many friends. They have one child, James Eugene Woodbury, born May 23, 1914.

JOSEPH M. SNODGRASS.

One of Randolph county's most scientific and progressive agriculturists, dairymen and stock raisers is Joseph M. Snodgrass whose fine farm lies near the city of Winchester. He is a man deserving much credit for what he has accomplished in a business way, having started in life under none too favorable auspices, and he has gained a position of comparative ease and prominence in his community through his own unaided efforts, by hard work, good management and sound common sense which always brings tangible results when properly exercised. Because of his industry, honesty of purpose and his public-spirit, coupled with his loyalty to all movements looking to the good of the locality where he lives, he is highly respected by all who know him.

Mr. Snodgrass was born in Clinton county, Indiana, on a farm. He is a son of Thomas and Anna (Coffman) Snodgrass. The father was born in Bartholomew county, Indiana and the mother was a native of Tennessee. She died when our subject was three years old, and the following year the father passed away, so Joseph M. was brought up by an aunt until he was twelve years of age when he began the battle of life for himself. He managed to get some education in the country schools, which has been greatly supplemented in after life by wide and miscellaneous home reading and study. He worked as a farm hand until he was twenty-one years old, when he was married, November 11, 1886 to Josephine Holmes, a daughter of John W. and Rosanna (Calanbaugh) Holmes, of Franklin county, Indiana. To this union two sons and three daughters have been born, namely: Mary, Verne, Waldo, Carrie and May who are all at home.

After his marriage Mr. Snodgrass engaged in farming in Clinton county, Indiana for a period of eighteen years, then engaged in the nursery business in Clinton county for a period of ten years, building up a large and remunerative business. Meanwhile he gave his closest attention to the study of horticulture. While farming he experimented raising sugar beets and enjoys the distinction of being the first man in Indiana to make a successful demonstration of the practicability of the sugar beet. These experiments were under the instructions of the agricultural department of Purdue University. Mr. Snodgrass also experimented along horticultural lines while in the nursery business, especially in small fruits, berries and potatoes. His home and grounds near Kirklin, Indiana, were a delight to visitors, and were regarded as constituting the most beautiful country home in the state. It was visited by large numbers of people because of its combined natural and artificial beauty, the tastily kept grounds, artistically appointed residence and the panorama of the surrounding landscape being truly inspiring. While in the nursery business he also made a specialty of the hardy catalpa tree, and grew them by the millions, shipping them all over the United States. He carried a full and finely assorted line of all kinds of nursery stock, and became one of the most widely known men in this line of endeavor in the state.

In March, 1910, Mr. Snodgrass left Clinton county and bought a farm in Green township, Randolph county, where he lived one year, sold out and purchased his present valuable farm two miles south of Winchester. It consists of one hundred and sixty-six acres of well located and productive land, and it is Mr. Snodgrass' ambition to make this one of the model farms of this section of the state, and, judging from its present well-kept and attractive appearance and his past record there is no doubt but that he will succeed. It is his aim to specialize in dairy products. He has at this writing a fine herd of Jersey cows, one of the few registered herds in Randolph county. General farming will also claim much of his attention. He has long been regarded as one of the most influential and learned contributors to the agricultural and horticultural press of Indiana. His papers are always of high class workmanship from a literary standpoint and what he says on any subject is regarded as authority and his articles have been watched for and eagerly read for years. He was formerly a member of the Indiana Horticultural Society, and is a regular correspondent of the Farmer's Guide, published at Huntington, Indiana, recognized as being one of the best agricultural papers in the country.

Politically, Mr. Snodgrass is a Prohibitionist and has long been active in the affairs of the party, and while a resident of Clinton county he was a candidate for county offices. He is a member of the Masonic Order, also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Randolph County Corn Growers' Association, and is secretary of the County Farmers' Institute and is doing much to arouse general interest in better methods of agriculture in this county. Religiously he is a member of the Church of God. His wife and members of his family are affiliated with the Missionary Baptist church.

JOHN H. LEE.

An illustration of skill as a farmer as well as of the ability to concentrate efforts along some special line until success is achieved in that undertaking is found in the case of John H. Lee, one of the progressive citizens of Randolph county, who is not only a successful tiller of the soil as the term is usually understood but has proven himself to be a standard authority on live-stock, giving special attention to that department of his work from which no small part of his annual income is derived. He has spent most of his life in this locality, well knowing that no better place could be found in this or any other state for general agricultural purposes, not only on account of good soil, but proper climatic conditions, easy access to large market centers and other minor reasons.

Mr. Lee was born in West River township, Randolph county, April 3, 1859, on a farm. He is a son of Ephraim and Elizabeth Jane (Ledbetter) Lee, both natives of Wayne county, Indiana, where they grew to maturity, were educated and married and from which locality they eventually moved to Randolph county, locating on a farm in West River township in the latter fifties, and here the father prospered, becoming one of the extensive land owners of this township.

John Lee, the great grandfather of our subject was a native of England where he spent his early life, finally emigrating to the United States, being shipwrecked when crossing the Atlantic, he and only two others escaping with their lives. He established a home in the east, and his son, Samuel Lee, grandfather of our subject, finally settled in Wayne county, Indiana, and there his death occurred when his son Ephraim Lee, father of the gentleman whose name initiates this review, was only four years of age. Politically, Ephraim Lee was a Republican and was for many years active in public matters, but was never an office seeker. He and his family were members of the Friends church. His death occurred in 1906, his wife having preceded him to the grave in August, 1899. They were the parents of nine children, namely: Riley is a retired farmer of Modoc; Phoebe is deceased; Edward is a farmer of West River township; Minus lives in Muncie; Arminta is deceased; John H., of this review; Ruth is the wife of John Jones, of Modoc; Samuel is a carpenter and lives at Modoc; Liverna is the wife of Jacob Ross, a farmer and they live in Iowa.

John H. Lee was reared on the home farm and he attended the rural schools in his district, and he remained with his parents until his marriage on November 28, 1880, to Ellen Keever. She is a daughter of Solomon and Mary (Barner) Keever, of Randolph county, the father now deceased, but the mother is living in Modoc. Mrs. Lee grew to womanhood in her native community and received a common school education. To our subject and wife one son has been born, Boyden, whose marriage took place March 22, 1902, when he espoused Emma Miller, a daughter of Isaac and Margaret (Roadcapp) Miller, of White River township, and they have two children, Lura and Willard Woodrow.

When John H. Lee was first married he began farming for himself on a farm near Modoc. In the fall of 1891 he moved to Wells county, Indiana, where he lived five years engaged successfully in general farming, but in the fall of 1896 he returned to Randolph county and settled in White River township. In the fall of 1903 he moved to his present farm four miles southwest of Winchester, which place consists of eighty acres, well improved and under a high state of cultivation, and on which stands one of the most attractive and modern rural homes in the county. He also has substantial and convenient outbuildings, and he devotes much of his attention to stock raising and feeding for the markets. Mrs. Lee is a lady of decided artistic temperament, a lover of nature, especially flowers, and the spacious, shady and well-kept lawn bears evidence of her taste and work as a floriculturist.

Politically, Mr. Lee is a Democrat, having been loyal to the principles of this party since 1892, and has been an active party man. He has been precinct committeeman several years, but he has never been an office seeker.

He and his family are members of the German Baptist church and are active church workers, and influential in the various affairs of the community whether religious, educational, civic or material.

ALLEN R. HIATT.

One of the notable institutions of Randolph county is the James Moorman Orphans' Home, situated two miles west of Winchester in the midst of a beautiful tract of 174 acres. The institution was endowed by James Moorman October 8, 1888, and is in charge of Allen R. Hiatt, of Winchester. No better choice, it seems, could have been made of a superintendent, for under the fostering care of Mr. and Mrs. Hiatt the home has become everything that such a home should be. The children are healthy and happy, and that is the best evidence of the ability and devotion of the superintendent and his wife. The little orphans under their charge are treated as carefully and tenderly as they ever treated their own children. The home has become famous throughout the state, and that which has given it its reputation is the character of the children taken from it. The labors of Mr. and Mrs. Hiatt here proceed equally from the head and heart, and that is why they are so eminently successful.

Allen R. Hiatt, the son of Amos and Martha (Robertson) Hiatt, was born in Randolph county, April 30, 1860, and is therefore fifty-four years of age, just in the prime of his mature manhood. He is one of a family of seven children, the names of whom are Hannah C., the wife of William T. Roszell, a Randolph county farmer; James C., a builder of Winchester, who married Lizzie Ferman; Charles, a Minnesota farmer, who married Mary Cox; Rosa Elmeda, the wife of Nelson Culbertson, of Albany; Mary Elizabeth, who died at the age of eight years: our subject, Allen R.; and Ella, who died at thirty-seven. The latter was the wife of James Reitnour and left three children.

The ancestors of the Hiatt family in Indiana were the Van Hiatts of Wales. Four brothers came together to this country and from these the present family sprang. In the course of time the Van was dropped, the name assuming the simple form of Hiatt. The name is now quite common in the nomenclature of American cognomens. Amos Hiatt, the father of the subject of this review, was born on a farm in Guilford county, North Carolina, and has been a farmer all his life. He was married twice, and by his first wife, nee Bales, he had five children—John Wesley, who died in the army; Samuel Martin, Louisa, Melissa and Evaline.

MR. AND MRS. ALLEN R. HIATT.

February 10, 1883, Allen R. Hiatt was married to Emma E. Trueblood, daughter of Jonathan Trueblood, a farmer of Blackford county. Six children were born to them, only two of whom are living. The eldest, Edith May, married Ottis Hoskinson, an Adams county farmer, and has one child, Helen Louise, born May 16, 1913; the son, Lawrence Douglas, born ni October, 1892, is with his father on the farm. The other children died in infancy.

Mr. Hiatt took up the business of farming equipped with a liberal education of the local schools, and this he has enlarged by application in various branches of information. Anything pertaining to the advancement or more scientific treatment of his business he is especially interested in. It is by adopting the methods of such advanced farmers as Mr. Hiatt that farming has been brought up to its present great productive capacity. He believes in the application of scientific methods, making of farming a more intellectual occupation. To him it is something of an ideal, presenting equal advantages for both mental and physical culture. Mr. Hiatt is a member of the Christian church and is a Progressive in politics. And in both church and political matters he takes a deep interest. All beneficent and charitable enterprises of the church receive his hearty approval and assistance. He is not one of those confirmed pessimists who believe that the church has lost its spirituality and has declined into a mere practical and material organization, but that it has all the vigor of its palmy days and is growing in potentiality. The Progressive movement, Mr. Hiatt considers essential to the development of political and social conditions.

OLIVER PERRY MOTE.

The gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph is one of the worthy native sons of Randolph county and we are glad to give our readers a brief outline of his life record, for he is deemed eminently worthy of representation along with the industrious citizens of the locality embraced by this work, owing to the fact that he belongs to the energetic class that has contributed to the later-day progress of this favored section of the great Hoosier commonwealth. He enjoys the respect of all who know him for he has led an honorable life, and he is known to be a man of practical intelligence and mature judgment.

Oliver Perry Mote was born in Wayne township, Randolph county,

June 1, 1860. He is a son of Henry and Emilla (Mikesell) Mote. The father was born near New Madison, Ohio, June 7, 1816. He was a son of Jonathan and Mary Mote. Jonathan Mote was born in Georgia in January, 1788, and in 1810 he emigrated north to Ohio, and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he cleared and farmed until 1860 when he sought another new country, removing to the state of Iowa where he bought six hundred acres of land, which he farmed on an extensive scale until his death in 1873. His wife died in early life in 1835. Henry Mote, our subject's father, grew to manhood amid pioneer conditions and assisted his father with the work on the farm. Owing to the newness of the locality where he lived when a boy he had little opportunity to obtain an education. In 1856 he moved to Randolph county, Indiana and located in Wayne township, where he purchased one hundred and seventy-six acres, which he cleared and farmed practically until his death on November 28, 1878. Politically, he was a Republican, and he was justice of the peace for a number of years. He was an influential man in his neighborhood and was respected by all who knew him. Fraternally, he belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and Emilla Mikesell were married in 1836. She was born February 14, 1818, near New Madison, Ohio, and her death occurred July 3, 1911, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. To the parents of our subject thirteen children were born.

Oliver P. Mote grew up on the home farm and received a common school education. In 1878 he began farming for himself on the home place. In 1892 he moved near the village of Crete. In 1902 he purchased seventy-five acres there which he has since farmed, making a specialty of tobacco raising.

Politically, Mr. Mote is a Progressive. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and religiously he belongs to the Christian church. He was township trustee from 1904 to 1908, filling this office to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Mote was married September 29, 1883 to Emma A. Thomas, who was born October 16, 1864 on the farm where she now lives. She is a daughter of Henry and Mary A. Thomas.

Nine children, one of whom is deceased, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mote, named as follows: Carl H. lives in Indianapolis; Grace L. is the wife of Roy H. Starbuck, of Winchester; Cleo is at home; Mary is the wife of O. L. Spahr, of Portland; Nellie is teaching school in Greensfork township; Rufus, Donald and Ray Dean are all at home.

JOHN WILLIAM CRIST.

It is the custom with many farmers, even in this day of known advantage of putting all corn and hay raised on a farm into stock, to sell the grain which they raise and only deal to a limited extent in livestock. Time has shown that this course is unwise, and those farmers who still stick to that obsolete custom are the losers. It is found that the best results are obtained from making the sale of live stock the first consideration, and it is not necessary to point out that most of the successful farmers have adopted long ago this practice. Aside from the improvement of the farm and perhaps the dealings in farms, it is probably the fact that the great majority of the wealthiest farmers have obtained the major portion of their wealth in the judicious handling of live stock.

One of the successful farmers and stock raisers of Randolph county is John William Crist, who was born near Spartanburg, Indiana, February 2, 1868. He is a son of Sanford and Mary A. (Corbett) Crist. The father was born in Hancock county, Ohio, November 17, 1842, and was a son of Charles and Mary (Flatter) Crist. Mary A. Corbett was born near Spartanburg, October 9, 1849. Charles Crist was born in Pennsylvania in 1809, where he lived until he came to Ohio and from that state he removed to Randolph county, Indiana in 1856, locating near Spartanburg, where he bought seventy acres of land, which he operated until his death in 1889. Politically, he was a Democrat, and in religious matters was a Universalist. Sanford Crist grew up on the home farm and received his education in the rural schools. He devoted most of his active life to farming, retiring in 1909 and moved to Spartanburg where his death occurred in June, 1913. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in August, 1863, in Company B, Seventh Indiana Cavalry, One Hundred and Nineteenth Regiment. He did guard duty at Indianapolis, where, six months later he took typhoid fever and was discharged. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, belonged to the Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His widow is still living, making her home with their son, John W. Crist, of this sketch, their only child.

John W. Crist grew up on the home farm and received a common school education. He has remained on the home place and has followed farming and stock raising all his life. Being the only child he inherited the homestead of seventy-five acres which he has kept well improved and well cultivated. The farm is all tillable and it has a good set of buildings. He makes a specialty of raising Poland-China hogs.

Mr. Crist was married May 19, 1888 to Pearl Hill, and to them four children have been born, namely: Fae is the wife of Wendell Middleton, of Spartanburg; Roy is at home; Thomas died December 29, 1911 at the age of twelve years; Russell is at home.

Politically, Mr. Crist is a Democrat. He belongs to the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment, having passed all the chairs in both local lodges, and is now secretary of the Odd Fellows and recorder of the Encampment. He is also a member of the Grand Lodge of Indiana. Religiously, he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church.

WILLIAM H. MOTE.

The people who constitute the bone and sinew of this country are certainly not those who are unsettled and unstable; who change from one occupation to another; who take no interest in public affairs, never assist in establishing schools, churches and in encouraging the enforcement of laws. The backbone of this country is made up of the families who have made their homes; who are alive to the best interests of the community in which they reside; who are so honest that it is no trouble for their neighbors to know it; who attend to their own business and are too busy to attend to that of others; who work on steadily from day to day, taking the sunshine with the storm and who rear a family to a comfortable home and an honest life. Such people are always welcome in any community. They are wealth producers. Randolph county has been blessed with a goodly number of such, among whom is the subject of this sketch.

William H. Mote, the present popular and efficient postmaster at Union City was born June 7, 1869, in Wayne township, Randolph county. He is a son of Rufus G. and Elmira (Turner) Mote. The father was born in Darke county, Ohio, and is still living. The mother was born near Winchester, Indiana, and is also still living. Rufus G. Mote was a soldier in Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Neff, having enlisted in 1863, from Randolph county, serving until the close of the war in a most creditable manner. He was with Sherman in the Atlanta compaign and was with Thomas at Nashville. He thus took part in many important battles and campaigns. He has devoted his active life to general farming but is now living retired in Union City.

W. H. MOTE.

His family consisted of only two children, William H., of this sketch, and Olive V., now deceased.

William H. Mote grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked hard when a boy and received a good education in the common schools, later was graduated from the Eastern Indiana Normal at Portland, also was graduated from Valparaiso College. He was clerk in the county treasurer's office under Turner and Harland Ruby. He then returned to the farm and successfully engaged in tilling the soil in this county until 1899, in which year he organized a business at Bartonia, now known as the Farm Supply Company, dealing in farm implements, hardware and a number of things used by all farmers. He got a very good start, but discontinued the business there in 1901, and moved the same to Union City. Mr. Mote was at that time head of the concern and his energy, sound judgment and honest dealings made it a pronounced success and it has steadily grown to the present time. He is now a stockholder in the same.

Mr. Mote has ever taken an abiding interest in public affairs. He served four years in the common council of Union City to which he was elected in 1906, his term expiring in 1910, and during that period he did much for the permanent good of the city. He is a loyal Republican and has been influential in local political affairs for some time. He was appointed postmaster at Union City February 16, 1911, under President Taft. His term expires in February, 1915. He is discharging the duties of the same in a highly acceptable manner to the people and the administration. He owns a pleasant home in Union City. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of the Golden Eagle at Bartonia, also is a member of the Masonic Order at Union City. He is a member of the Christian church and is chairman of the official board of the same.

Mr. Mote was married October 12, 1892, to Florence E. Woodbury, who was born south of Union City in Randolph county, June 18, 1874. She is a daughter of Samuel C. and Alice (Galloway) Woodbury, the father a native of Indiana and the mother of Ohio. Mrs. Mote received a common school education, was also graduated from the high school at Union City (on the Ohio side). She taught one term of school before her marriage.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mote, namely: Harriet A., born September 8, 1893, is now a student in Northwestern University; she is a talented musician and is studying both vocal and instrumental music. Seibert W., the son, was born July 1, 1898, and is now attending high school in Union City.

ALBERT C. HINSHAW.

It is a good sign when so many of the residents of a county are found to have been born within her borders. It indicates that they have found right at home all the opportunities necessary for the gratification of their ambitions in a business, political and social way, and it also indicates stability. One is reminded that "A rolling stone gathers no moss." That young man is evidently the wisest who, when conditions will permit, remains in his native locality and addresses himself to the improvement of conditions he finds there and to his personal advancement along such lines as he may choose, selecting those things for which he is best fitted by nature. One such is Albert C. Hinshaw, the present able superintendent of Fountain Park cemetery, at Winchester, Randolph county.

Mr. Hinshaw was born at Lynn, Randolph county, October 28, 1873. He is a son of Rev. Simpson S. and Rachael (Peele) Hinshaw. The father was born near Lynn, this county, but the mother was a native of North Carolina, from which state she came to Randolph county, Indiana, with her parents when about three years old. The father was an earnest minister in the Friends church and served various charges in Randolph county with much satisfaction to his congregations, and was pastor of the Winchester church of this denomination for about seven years. His death occurred June 26, 1901, in Winchester, in which city his widow still resides. To these parents three daughters and two sons were born who are still living and three children died in infancy, namely: Millie A., formerly Mrs. Grant Ward, of Muncie, Indiana, married second to John Best; Albert C., of this review; Myrtle, now Mrs. Charles Albright, of Winchester; Lillie is the wife of Porter Chenoweth, of Lynn, Indiana; and Dr. H. E., of Richmond, this state.

Albert C. Hinshaw was nine years old when he came with his parents to Winchester and here he has remained to the present time. He received a public school education. He began life for himself as clerk which occupation he followed several years. On November 21, 1893, he married Mary Weaver, who was born September 16, 1873. She is a daughter of John and Caroline (Henizer) Weaver, of Winchester, both parents still living here.

Three children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Merle R., Thelma C., and Ralph C., all at home with their parents.

Mr. Hinshaw learned the painter's trade, becoming quite an expert and for a period of ten years he was in the employ as painter of Knecht and Thomas, pump manufacturers, then became a house painter with the firm of Coats & Kem, of Winchester, with whom he remained for several years, giving eminent satisfaction as he had his former employers. For awhile he was in business for himself, then, in 1912 he was elected superintendent of Fountain Park cemetery at Winchester and has since devoted his attention to this with fidelity and energy which have proven him to be a good man for the position. This cemetery is one of the most artistically platted and beautifully kept of all the cemeteries in the Middle West, and Mr. Hinshaw has a just pride in the tasty appearance of his charge.

Politically, he is a Republican, and while interested in public matters is not especially active. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Modern Woodmen of America. He and his family are members of the Friends church and are active in church and Sunday school work.

UNION B. HUNT.

No one perhaps in Randolph county is more widely known than Union B. Hunt, who was born in Nettle Creek township, September 2, 1864. He is a son of Joshua P. and Rachel Howell Hunt. Having been born during the Civil war and his father being a loyal supporter of the Federal Government, he was christened "Union". His paternal grandfather, John Hunt, was a native of Kentucky and was colonel of a regiment in the war of 1812.

The greater part of the life of Mr. Hunt has been spent in Randolph county, the early years of his boyhood having been spent in Vermilion county, Illinois. During his boyhood days, he worked on a farm, later clerked in a store and engaged in other occupations. He studied law in the office of Watson and Watson and was admitted to practice in 1889, forming a partnership with John R. Wright under the firm name of Wright and Hunt. This partnership continued for a number of years, when a new partnership was formed with C. L. and T. W. Hutchens under the firm name of Hutchens, Hunt and Hutchens, the latter partnership continuing up to 1898, when he was nominated by the Republican party for secretary of state of Indiana, to which position he was elected and re-elected in 1900. In 1892 he engaged in the newspaper business, buying a half interest in the Winchester Herald, one of the leading Republican newspapers in the state, assuming practically the entire editorial charge of the paper and continued in that work for about four years, in the meantime keeping in close touch with his law practice. At the expiration of his term as secretary of state, Mr. Hunt returned to Winchester and re-engaged in the practice of law with Hon. Enos L. Watson under the firm name of Watson and Hunt. This partnership continued until 1903, when he was appointed a member of the Indiana Railroad Commission and was by his colleagues elected chairman of that Commission, which position he filled until December 1, 1908, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias Insurance Department, which position he now holds. This position is one of importance in the business world, as the institution of which he is president has a membership of 71,000, representing one hundred million dollars of insurance, the society having assets of more than six million dollars.

Mr. Hunt has occupied many prominent positions in the Order of Knights of Pythias, having served in various grand lodge offices in Indiana, first being appointed Grand Instructor, following which he was elected Grand Vice Chancellor and elected Grand Chancellor in 1897. He was chosen as Supreme Representative in 1901 and continued as such representative for ten years.

While Mr. Hunt does not at this time take an active part in politics, he is a Republican and was for many years active and influential in the work of that party, having made speeches in every county in the state except one and has spoken several times in a number of counties; not only has he addressed audiences in behalf of the political party he represents, but since he became identified with the Knights of Pythias, he has spoken before the grand lodges in every state in the Union and in many of the Canadian provinces in behalf of fraternal organizations and especially in behalf of the Insurance Department of which he is the president.

On November 1, 1891, he married Mary M. Hinshaw, who was the daughter of Absalom and Eliza Hinshaw. To them was born one child, Ethel, who is now the wife of K. R. Davis, of Indianapolis.

JAMES M. HAMILTON.

One of the best-known and highly respected citizens of Randolph county is James M. Hamilton, who, for over three continuous decades has been employed as railway mail clerk, his long retention being a criterion of his faithful and able service. He is a scion of one of our best old families, but he has attained his present high standing among his fellow-men almost solely through the impelling force of his personality. He possesses not only those powers which render men efficient in the material affairs of life, but also the gentler traits that mark genial and correct social intercourse. In his daily affairs he manifests a generous regard for his fellows, actuated by principles of altruism and honesty and no man in the county commands and merits more fully the good will of the people.

Mr. Hamilton was born at Waterloo, Fayette county, Indiana, September 2, 1845, and is the third son of Captain Robert Washington Hamilton and Malinda (Matthews) Hamilton. Captain Hamilton was a prominent man in his day and generation, one of the leading physicians and surgeons of this section of the state. He was born in Montgomery county, West Virginia, March 4, 1818. He was a son of J. S. and Eliza (Courtney) Hamilton, and the third of a family of twelve children. His father was born in Baltimore, Maryland, November 5, 1792, and his mother in Castle Dawson, Ireland, in 1796. When twelve years of age, she came with her parents to America, the family locating in Montgomery county, in what was then Virginia, and there she grew to womanhood, met and married Mr. Hamilton, and in that locality they resided until 1832 when they came west to Fayette county, Indiana, where they bought a farm on which they spent the rest of their lives, his death occurring in 1879, she having preceded him to the grave in 1875.

Robert W. Hamilton was fourteen years old when he accompanied his parents to the Hoosier state and here he grew to manhood, helping his father clear and develop the homestead, remaining there until he was eighteen years of age. He received his early education in the common schools of his native state and in Fayette county, this state. In 1837 he went to Richmond, Coles county, Illinois, and began life for himself by engaging in the grocery business which he conducted but a short time. While there he married, February 13, 1839, Mrs. Malinda Matthews, nee Lowell. Soon thereafter they came to Waterloo, Fayette county, Indiana, and there located. Four years later they removed to Hillsboro, Wayne county, Indiana; his wife's death occurring in Richmond on August 15, 1854. He subsequently married Mrs. Sarah (Stetler) Bascom, and they located in Lynn, Randolph county, 1855, and here Captain Hamilton engaged in the practice of medicine until his death, August 3, 1891. He was a successful and popular general family doctor, one of the leaders of his profession in his day and generation in this section of the state. His second wife had preceded him to the grave on May 1, 1881, and on May 4, 1882, he married Mrs. Eliza Laison. As before intimated, his union with his first wife resulted in the birth of three sons, viz.: James Alexander, died in infancy; Wm. A., was a graduate of Ann Arbor. He was rapidly becoming a popular physician at Lynn, but died on October 13, 1874. He was also a soldier in Company C, Nineteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving three full years in the army of the Potomac; James M., subject.

Dr. Robert W. Hamilton began the study of medicine when seventeen years of age at Brownsville, Indiana, and he completed his studies at Waterloo. He began practice at Hillsboro, in 1848, and from that time until the end of his life, a period of forty-three years, he enjoyed an ever growing and lucrative practice, with the exception of a year and a half spent in the army during the Civil war. He had the remarkable record of never losing a case of diphtheria or scarlet fever. In July, 1861, he enlisted as a recruit in Company C, Nineteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was chosen captain of the same, being the first commissioned officer from Randolph county in the three years' service. Hon. W. E. Murray was the first man enlisted in the company. The doctor proved to be a gallant and efficient soldier for the Union, but after eighteen months he was compelled to resign on account of ill health, receiving a paralytic stroke in September, 1861, from which he never fully recovered. In addition to his duties of commanding officer he was registered as acting surgeon, and rendered a great deal of splendid service in that capacity. After resigning from the army he returned home and resumed practice. He also successfully engaged in the real estate and mercantile business and was a very busy man. He accumulated a handsome competency by his ability and industry. He was first a Whig, then a Republican and was active in public matters. Fraternally, he belonged to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and for nearly a quarter of a century was honored by the position of worshipful master. He was a public-spirited man and assisted in every way possible in the general improvement of his county and was one of the most influential and popular men in this locality.

James M. Hamilton was ten years of age when, in 1855, he came with his parents to Lynn, Randolph county, and here he has since made his home, his residence of fifty-eight years bringing to him ever greater esteem from his contemporaries. During that period he has seen great changes and has aided in many of them for the permanent improvement of the town and county. Since 1882 he has been connected with the railway mail service. He received a common school education in the rural schools and in the city of Winchester. When a boy he learned the printer's trade in the office of The Randolph County Journal and followed the same until July 15, 1861, when, although but sixteen years of age, he proved his courage by enlisting in Company C, Nineteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, but was rejected owing to his youth. Nothing daunted, however, he went to the front as an officer's servant where he remained nineteen months and was in the battle of Lewisville, Virginia, September 11, 1861. Returning home he went to Vicksburg, Mississippi with the state sanitary committee, to look after the sick and wounded soldiers of Indiana. November 3, 1863, he again enlisted, this time becoming a private in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Asa Teal, and served the union faithfully until the close of the struggle, seeing much hard service, including the battles of Dalton, Resaca, Altoona, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattanooga, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Columbia, Franklin, Goldsboro and Wise's Fork, North Carolina. He received a furlough at Raleigh, North Carolina, August 31, 1865, and started home. On going to Indianapolis to to be mustered out he was again called to Greensboro, North Carolina. He still has in his possession his description roll and marks thereon made by his captain, which contain the following: Sergeant James M. Hamilton took an active part in the Georgia campaign from Dalton to Jonesboro, was in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and took a very conspicuous part in the battle of Wise's Fork, North Carolina, March 8, 9, and 10, 1865. He possesses all the qualities of a good soldier. He also has a furlough pass in his possession, given May 3, until June 3, 1865. He was at the organization of the regiment, was commissioned orderly sergeant and held the commission all through his term of service.

After his military career, Mr. Hamilton worked at the printer's trade at Union City, Indiana, and read medicine in the office of Dr. Jayne, until December, 1866, when he came to Lynn, Randolph county, and engaged in reading medicine with his father. Although he would doubtless have made a successful and prominent physician, he finally abandoned the study of medicine and worked at various employments until November, 1884, when he took charge of The Decatur Eagle, at Decatur, Indiana, and continued as foreman of that paper until 1876. He was then variously employed until 1882, when he was given a position in the railway mail service, through the recommendation of General Thomas M. Browne, by Postmaster General Maynard, under President Arthur, on the Indiana Bloomington and Western railroad, now a branch of the Big Four. He has always been on this line and has been promoted from the probationary degree to the highest post in this branch of the service, in consequence has long received the highest salary. His continued retention in this service is evidence of his faithfulness to duty and promptness.

Mr. Hamilton was married in Union City, Indiana, November 11, 1866, to Catherine N. Ennis, who was born in Winchester, May 25, 1842, and is a daughter of James C. and Isabel (Page) Ennis. To this union four children were born, namely: Malinda I., who was married to Charles L. Heichert, November 30, 1893; Alpheus O., Robert C., and Edward G. These children were given good educational advantages and are well situated in life.

Politically, Mr. Hamilton raised the first pole and hoisted the first flag, bearing the names of Fremont and Dayton, in Randolph county, in 1856. He has ever been active and influential in public affairs. He served as president of the town board of Lynn one term, and took the census of Washington township in 1880. He was an active member of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and led in the Murphy temperance movement in 1876, the organization numbering over three hundred members at Lynn. He became a member of Lynn Lodge, No. 223, Free and Accepted Masons, in November, 1867, and served two years as worshipful master. Also member of Randolph Chapter No. 35, and Council No. 20, at Winchester, Indiana. He joined Lynn Lodge No. 294, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at its organization in November, 1887, and served one year as noble grand of that lodge. He was a member of the original organization of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served three years as post commander of Joe Cook Post, No. 296. He was a charter member of Lynn Lodge, No. 119, Knights of Pythias, at its organization in 1884, and is also a member of the Captain R. W. Hamilton Camp, No. 292, Sons of Veterans. He has been an active and faithful member of all these organizations. He and his wife belong to the Methodist church.

Besides his valuable home property, Mr. Hamilton is owner of eighty acres of well improved and productive farming land in Randolph county. From 1870 to 1872, inclusive, he was engaged in the flouring mill, saw mill and planing mill business, and in 1876, in connection with J. L. P. Frist he established a tile factory, which they operated for two years. He has been very successful in a business way and is one of the substantial and public-spirited men of Lynn. He is kind, neighborly and charitably inclined. He enjoys the unqualified confidence and esteem of all who know him as a result of his exemplary life, and in every way he merits the high regard in which he is universally held.

FRANK B. PORTER.

This biographical memoir has to do with a character of unusual force, for Frank B. Porter, whose life chapter has been closed by the fate that awaits us all, was for a number of years one of the popular and successful business men of Parker, Randolph county. While he carried on a special line of business in such a manner as to gain a comfortable competency for himself, he also belonged to that class of representative citizens who promote the public welfare while advancing individual success. There were in him sterling traits which commanded uniform confidence and regard, and his memory is today honored by all who knew him and is enshrined in the hearts of his many friends.

Frank B. Porter, well-known druggist, was born in Decatur, Indiana, December 7, 1879. He was a son of John R. and Sarah I. (Davis) Porter, whose family consisted of seven children, namely: Frank B., subject of this sketch; Curtis died in infancy; Velma married H. H. McGill, a machinist, and they live in Ohio; Gertrude died in infancy; Chalmer O.; Leah Viola; Thurman E., born February 7, 1888, on the homestead where all the children were born; he was educated in the local schools and the high school, after which he taught school for two years, then entered the drug business in which he has remained.

Frank B. Porter grew to manhood on the home farm and worked there when a boy, and received a good public school education. He and Thurman E. took the prescribed drug course and became registered pharmacists. Our subject taught school very acceptably for three years, then turned his attention to the drug business which he followed the rest of his life. He and his brother Thurman E. worked in the same drug store for a period of four years. In 1906 Frank B. came to the town of Parker and purchased a drug store in partnership with M. T. Atwood, which continued for one year, when Mr. Porter bought his partner out. Then Thurman E. Porter purchased a half interest on January 1, 1910, and the brothers enjoyed a large and rapidly growing trade with the town and surrounding country, carrying a large and carefully selected stock of drugs and drug sundries—everything to be found in an up-to-date drug store, and, being honest and courteous in their treatment of their hundreds of customers, enjoyed the confidence and good will of every one. Their store was always a credit to the community and would have, in fact, been a credit to a much larger place. Thurman E. Porter still runs the business in the interest of himself and our subject's widow, who was known in her maidenhood as Lillian D. Blacka-more and to whom he was married on July 20, 1905. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Blackamore.

Frank B. Porter was married first on December 25, 1899, to Miss Flora Frazier, of Decatur, Indiana. One child was born to them, Leah. Mrs. Porter died January, 1902.

Thurman E. Porter married Lettie Gates, a daughter of John Gates, the prominent stock buyer of this locality, Mrs. Porter being one of four children.

Frank B. Porter was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically, he was a Democrat. Thurman E. Porter is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic Order, being master of the Lodge No. 2, Free and Accepted Masons.

The death of Frank B. Porter occurred on June 11, 1912, caused by a runaway accident, and his untimely taking off was deeply deplored by the entire community where he was very popular and greatly beloved by all classes.

SIMON B. KECKLER.

Lumbering has been one of the chief industries of the section of the Middle West with which this history deals for many decades and the vast forests found here by the pioneers have furnished lumber for many states, employment for thousands of men and made a vast number of people wealthy. It has always been regarded as one of the most desirable lines of business, yet not everyone has succeeded who has essayed this precarious field of endeavor. Many things are necessary to insure success, not the least of which is perseverance, courage, keen foresight and indomitable industry. These and other necessary characteristics seem to be possessed by Simon B. Keckler, proprietor of the most extensive lumber yard in Randolph county, his place of business and residence being at the town of Parker.

Mr. Keckler was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, May 29, 1860. He is a son of John and Julia Ann (Dunaway) Keckler, and is one of a family of eight children, five sons and three daughters, namely: Ephraim who died at the age of forty-three years, married Fannie McCarthy; he was a commercial traveler, and his family consisted of four children; Elizabeth, of Weaver Station, Ohio, married David Dull, and they have two children, both grown and married; Marie A. is the wife of W. H. Scofield, of Eaton, Ohio, whose union has been without issue; Simon B., of this review; William H., who died in 1906, was a lumber dealer, married Mary E. Lambertson and they had one child; John W., of Yorkshire, Ohio, married Emma Hall, of Pickaway county, that state, and they have one child, Cyril C.; Emma who married Wills E. Ayers, a school teacher and farmer, died some time ago and left nine children; James D., a farmer of Angola, Indiana, married Nora Rupel, and they have three children.

John Keckler, father of the above named children, was born July 11, 1826, near Bremen, Ohio, was a blacksmith by trade in his earlier years, but devoted most of his life to farming. He moved to Darke county, Ohio, in 1861, buying a farm near Greenville, on which he spent the rest of his life. His death occurred August 1, 1897. His wife was a native of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, born there January 1, 1828, and she was brought to Ohio when an infant by her parents who settled in Fairfield county. She was nine years old when her parents moved to Wells county, Indiana, where they purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, all timber, so heavy that the father was compelled to clear a place before he could erect his log cabin. By hard work he cleared his land and established a good home there. Our subject's mother was twice married. First to George Reynolds, and after his death married on May 26, 1859 to John Keckler, our subject's father. Her death occurred June 15, 1900, at the age of nearly seventy-three years.

James Keckler, grandfather of our subject, was a cooper by trade, and he lived in Fairfield county, Ohio. Jacob Keckler, the great grandfather, was a Revolutionary soldier under George Washington. The Dunaways, the mother's people, were of English descent and lived in Pennsylvania before coming to Ohio. The father of the subject of this sketch was left an orphan when four years old.

Simon B. Keckler was reared on the home farm and there he worked when a boy. He received his education in the public schools. On March 21, 1882, he married Susanna May Mote, a daughter of Elias Mote, a farmer of Ansonia, Ohio. To our subject and wife three sons were born, namely: Cleo Earl, who married Margaret Vineyard, of Eaton, Indiana, on August 24, 1910, is with his father in the lumber business, and owns a fine home opposite their yards in Parker; William Gale, born December 2, 1886, is connected with a house furnishing store in St. Paul, Minnesota; Paul E., born October 20, 1895, is also with his father in the lumber business. He is a graduate of the Parker High School with the class of 1914.

Simon B. Keckler came to Parker, Indiana, in October, 1904, and purchased the lumber yard here of A. Fletcher, which he has conducted to the present time with great and ever increasing success, carrying one of the largest, most complete and carefully selected stocks of lumber at all seasons to be found in this section of the state, and he does a very extensive business over a large territory. He has a fine home in Parker and is one of the town's most substantial and popular citizens.

Mr. Keckler is a Democrat politically, and he belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Methodist church.

FRANK E. WRIGHT.

One of the enterprising young publicists of northeastern Indiana who is deserving of commendation for what he is accomplishing in his special sphere of endeavor is Frank E. Wright, of The Lynn Herald. He has made good in the field of journalism because he has worked hard and persistently and because he has not permitted the usual obstacles that beset the lives of all who enter on the thorny path of the "wielder of the quill" to down him.

Mr. Wright was born in Lynn, Indiana, November 19, 1877. He is a son of H. T. and Mary E. Wright, the father born in Bethel, Indiana, in 1853, and the mother born in Arba, Indiana, in 1854. He was reared on the old home farm and was graduated from the Lynn common schools, leading his class, at the age of fourteen years. He subsequently attended Lynn high school and then took a two years' Normal course, expecting to teach, but after securing his license changed his plans and attended the Cincinnati Mohler Barber College and after graduating opened up a barber shop in his home town, enjoying an extensive trade for four years. Not seeing an advancement and a chance for intellectual growth in the business he sold out in the spring of 1902 and purchased a one-half interest in The Lynn Herald, which had been started in 1898 by S. H. Light & Son. In the short time of ten months Mr. Wright mastered the business sufficiently to warrant his purchasing the entire business, becoming sole proprietor, publisher and editor, on March 1, 1903.

The paper which had had a hard struggle to live underwent decided changes, becoming a strong factor in the community and county. The subscription list soon quadrupled itself, and the plant became a lucrative business, enabling the proprietor to bring to Lynn the first slug type casting machine ever brought into Randolph county, the first cylinder press ever run in Lynn, and also to purchase a substantial business home for the plant and one of the best residences on South Garfield street of his home town.

FRANK E. WRIGHT.

Mr. Wright was married January 14, 1903, to Lillian L. Fudge, who passed away in the year 1910, leaving two little sons, one of which was less than a week old at the time of his mother's death.

Mr. Wright was again married on May 16, 1912, his last wife being known in her maidenhood as Mabel R. Riddlebarger, an accomplished musician and talented school teacher of Ridgeville, Indiana. She has done much to aid in the success of the newspaper work of her husband, besides becoming a mother to the two little sons, J. Harold and Donald Lee.

Mr. Wright is a prominent member of the Friends church, and politically, is a loyal Republican, which party has honored him on various occasions as a delegate to Congressional conventions and a place on local tickets.

Mr. Wright has done considerable work on the lecture platform, receiving especially high press comment on his lecture, "Anchored to a Dead-head." As a speaker he is forceful, earnest and at times truly eloquent and never fails to both instruct and entertain his audience.

CLIFFORD C. FISHER.

Among the progressive and prominent business men of Randolph county is Clifford C. Fisher, of Union City, formerly cashier and now president of the Atlas State Bank, and is also engaged in the fire insurance business and is one of the best known men in this field of endeavor in this section of the state. The qualities of keen discrimination, sound judgment and executive ability enter very largely into his makeup and have been contributing elements to the material success which has come to him.

Mr. Fisher was born in the city and county named in the preceding paragraph, on October 21, 1874. He is a son of Robert S. Fisher, who was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1835. He was a banker during his business life, was cashier of the Commercial Bank, of Union City, and was the organizer of that bank, which was first known as the First National Bank, later being changed to the Commercial Bank. He was a well known financier and successful business man. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1880, he owned quite a little real estate. He married Rosalie A. Cottom, who was born in Williamsburg, Indiana, and she is still living, making her home in Union City, being now advanced in years. Our subject has a half-sister, Mrs. Cora F. McMaster, who is making her home in Chicago.

Clifford C. Fisher was educated in the public schools of Union City, later finishing his schooling at the Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois. He first commenced his business career in 1906 as cashier of the Atlas State Bank, of Union City, which position he held for two years. Upon severing his connection with the bank in 1908 he engaged in the fire insurance business which he still continues with ever increasing success, having now the largest agency in the county by far. However, he is still connected with the Atlas State Bank, being president, and a director and stockholder in the same. He also owns an interest in the Pierce elevator, besides other outside investments, including the Randolph County Bank of Winchester and the Peoples Bank of Portland. He is also owner of two well-improved and valuable farms in Ohio, containing in all four hundred and seventeen acres. On these places general farming and stock raising are carried on extensively, a specialty being made of raising and feeding cattle in large numbers. At this writing there are one hundred and sixty-two head of principally high-grade cattle, many being registered thoroughbreds. Mr. Fisher has spent much time and money during the past year building up-to-date and adequate stock barns and sheds, his barns being of large dimensions, and he has also built convenient shelters for his hogs and other livestock. He is an excellent judge of all kinds of stock, especially cattle. He has been very successful in a business way through the exercise of sound judgment, persistent industry, honorable dealings and a close adherence to the Golden Rule.

Politically, Mr. Fisher is a Republican, but he has never made any efforts to become a leader in political affairs, preferring to devote his attention exclusively to his large business interests. Religiously, he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and a liberal supporter of the same.

Mr. Fisher was married November 19, 1896, to Ada L. Lewis, who was born in Union City, Indiana, July 20, 1876. She is daughter of Oliver L. and Jessie F. Lewis, a highly esteemed family of Union City, for many years, but the mother died in 1911, and the father is now living at Springfield, Missouri, and is a conductor on the Frisco railroad. Mrs. Fisher grew to womanhood in Union City and here she received her education, being a graduate of the local high school. To the union of our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Alice L., born September 27, 1906; and Robert L., born April 16, 1910.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have a pleasant home in Union City which is the mecca for their many friends who always find there genuine hospitality and good cheer.

GEORGE VANPELT.

The beginning of the career of the late George VanPelt, for many years one of the progressive farmers of Monroe township, Randolph county, was characterized by hard work and conscientious endeavor, and he owed his rise to no train of fortunate circumstances or fortuitous incidents. It was the reward of application of mental qualifications of a high order to the affairs of business, the combining with keen, mental activity that enabled him to grasp the opportunities that presented themselves. This he did with success and, what is more important, with honor. His integrity was ever unassailable, his honor unimpeachable, and he stood high with all who knew him.

George VanPelt was born in Highland county, Ohio, December 7, 1864. He was a son of John and Millicent (Morris) VanPelt. The great grandfather removed from Virginia to Belmont county, Ohio, where he engaged in farming and lived and died. The grandparents grew to maturity in Belmont county and remained there some time after their marriage, then moved to Clinton county, Ohio, and remained there until 1868, when they emigrated to Randolph county, Indiana, locating near Farmland, where the elder VanPelt purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty-eight acres. He had owned two farms in Ohio aggregating two hundred and twenty acres. John VanPelt remained on his farm in this county until 1880 at which time he purchased a farm of one hundred and fifty-five acres near the city of Winchester, later purchasing forty acres more. He was very successful in a business way, and his dealings were always characterized by honesty and a high sense of justice. His death occurred in 1884, his wife surviving several years.

Our subject was one of four children, all boys, namely: William A., who is farming in Monroe township, married Elizabeth A. Wood, and they have one daughter living, Mabel, and Carrie, who married C. L. Shaffer, died April 14, 1914; David is farming near Winchester, is married and has two sons; George, subject of this memoir; James died at the age of sixteen years.

George VanPelt was three years old when brought by his parents to Randolph county. He grew up on the farm and received a common school education. On July 16,1887, he married Mary C. Kaugher, a daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Oswalt) Kaugher. Mr. Kaugher had been a prominent farmer in Stark county, Ohio, finally moving to Randolph county, Indiana, where he continued the same business. His family consisted of five children, namely: John, Sherman, Joseph, Angeline and Mary C. The mother died in 1881, after which the father removed to Winchester.

To George VanPelt and wife eight children were born, namely: Charles who died in infancy; James Orley, born November 10, 1889, is operating the home farm with his brother John, who was born April 20, 1893; Cressie, born August 23, 1891, is at home; Hazel died in infancy; Ruby, born March 1, 1897; Harry, born May 2, 1899; Ira, born May 14, 1902.

After George VanPelt's marriage he moved to a farm of one hundred acres in Monroe township where he spent the rest of his life, this fine land being a legacy of his father. He placed the farm under an excellent state of improvement, erecting, at considerable expense, a convenient and comfortable dwelling.

Politically, Mr. VanPelt was a Republican and took an abiding interest in public affairs. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was summoned to close his eyes on earthly scenes on December 1, 1910, and the community felt a distinct loss, for he was a good and useful man.

IRA C. PENERY.

In requires a peculiar combination of attributes to become a successful newspaper man. It is by no means everyone who can win his spurs in this precarious field, no matter how much courage and perseverance one may have. True, these are characteristics which are indispensible, but there must also be others of more importance, such as the indefinable "nose for news," the ability to discriminate clearly and quickly between local and general news, or what is and what is not news of any kind, the tact to understand the proper treatment of news when it is obtained, the knowledge of how to make a newspaper that will be pleasing to all classes of readers. These things seem to be clearly understood by Ira C. Penery, editor and publisher of The Randolph County Enterprise of Farmland, and The Losantville Independent of Losantville. Although a young man he stands in the front rank of journalists in this section of the Hoosier state and his paper is among the best of its type in the state.

Mr. Penery was born in Monroe township, Randolph county, May 1, 1880. He is a son of Hamilton L. and Sylvera B. (Shaw) Penery, whose family consisted of five children, three sons and two daughters, namely: Nellie G., who lives near Farmland, is the wife of Samuel G. Goddard, a farmer, and they have two children, Jewell and Samuel Allen; Ira C., of this sketch; Ervin R., a farmer living near Farmland, married Minnie Dull, and they have two children, Lester and Mabel; Emory, a marble-worker of

I. C. PENERY.

Knoxville, Tennessee, married Mamie Presley and they have one child, Carl; Cora B., of Newark, Ohio, married Guy M. Taylor, a machinist.

Hamilton L. Penery is a native of Virginia, where he grew to manhood and was educated and from which state he emigrated to Indiana, when a young man, locating in Randolph county where he has continued to reside to the present time. He operated a saw mill, becoming one of the best known men in that line of business in the county, remaining in the same up to 1897, since which time he has owned and operated a good farm in the vicinity of Farmland, where he still lives, carrying on general farming and stock raising.

Our subject's mother, Sylvera B. Shaw, is the daughter of Reuben C. and Rebecca P. (Smith) Shaw. The father was a native of Massachusetts, son of David E. Shaw, who was born in Maine in 1801, to which state Reuben C. Shaw was taken when six years old, by his parents where he spent eight years. He received part of his education in Boston, and when a boy took a position as salesman in a china and glassware house in that city. Later he began working at the carpenter's trade which he followed about three years. Then he crossed the continent overland with the "forty-niners" to the gold fields of California where he mined for a time, returning to Boston in 1851, by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and resumed his trade. He came to Ross county, Ohio, in 1852, where he remained until 1861, when he moved to Farmland, Randolph county, Indiana, and here established his permanent home, purchasing a farm, and became one of the successful agriculturists of the county, dividing most of his large farm among his children in 1890. He and Rebecca P. Smith were married in May, 1847. She was also a native of Massachusetts. To this union five children were born, namely: Walter C., who became a carpenter and established his home in Tennessee; Mrs. Sylvera B. Penery, mother of our subject; Josephine W., who married Oliver H. Warren; Frank L. and Fred P., both became prominent citizens of Monroe township, Randolph county. Besides farming Reuben C. Shaw became prominently identified with numerous business enterprises, such as an extensive poultry business which was started in 1873 and continued for many years; also he assisted in organizing the bank at Farmland in 1887, of which he was made vice-president and director. He filled the office of drainage commissioner for over three years. He was always a Republican, and he was active in the field of archaeological research, securing a valuable collection of historic relics, Indian curios, etc., regarded as one of the largest and most valuable of its kind in the Middle West He also gave much attention to taxidermy, in which he was exceptionally skilful.

Ira C. Penery, of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm and he received a common school education and in the Tri-State Normal at Angola. He farmed for some time when starting out in life for himself, but determined to enter the newspaper field, so he purchased The Randolph County Enterprise in 1905, which he has since conducted most successfully, building up its circulation and rendering it a valuable advertising medium. Its mechanical appearance is all that could be desired and its columns teem with the latest and best news. Its editorials are convincing and it wields a potent influence in this locality.

Politically, Mr. Penery is a Republican and loyal in his support of the party. He attends the Friends church.

AMOS F. MEEKS.

It is a pleasure to anyone, whether a farmer or not, to look over a well improved and finely kept landed estate like that of Amos F. Meeks, of Monroe township, Randolph county, for he is a man who believes in keeping abreast of the times, in adopting, so far as practicable, the most approved twentieth century methods in general farming and stock raising. As a result of his long years of husbandry here he has about solved the question of scientific farming as we know and understand it today. He has always stood for progressiveness, not only in material things, but political, educational and moral matters, being always an advocate of wholesome living both in private and public life, and while laboring for his individual advancement he has never been found neglectful of his duties to his neighbors and the general public.

Mr. Meeks was born in Delaware county, Indiana, December 9, 1856. He is a son of Amos and Levina (Thomas) Meeks, and is one of a large family of seventeen children, only four of whom survive at this writing, namely: Jacob, who is farming near Parker; Matilda married Henry Wright, a farmer of near Paris, Illinois, and they have ten children; Isadore married John C. Huffman, a farmer of Delaware county, Indiana, and they have two sons; Amos F., of this sketch.

Amos Meeks, father of the gentleman whose name heads this sketch, was born in Virginia where he grew to manhood and received his education in the schools of the early days. His father lived and died in the Old Dominion. Amos Meeks and Levina Thomas were married in Virginia, she being from an old family of that state also, and there she spent her girlhood and received a similar education to that of her husband. He was a great student in his early life and prepared himself for a teacher which profession he followed successfully for a number of years. He finally brought his wife to Delaware county, Indiana, and later moved just across the line to Randolph county where his son, Amos F., now resides, his farm lying partly in each county, and here he became a substantial general farmer and stock raiser and spent the rest of his life, dying in 1877. Our subject who has always followed farming, has kept the home place well improved and well tilled and is carrying on general agricultural pursuits and stock raising successfully. He grew to manhood on the farm and received a common school education.

Mr. Meeks was married June 10, 1880, to Flora Minton, a lady of many commendable attributes of head and heart, who has been of great assistance to her husband in his life work, for she possesses rare business judgment and is talented along many lines, highly educated and keeps fully abreast of the times in all current matters. She is a wide reader of the world's best literature and is an excellent conversationalist. She often appears at public functions, and is a lecturer for Purdue, doing farmer's institute work, and has spoken at DePauw University and before other learned bodies, her addresses always being entertaining and instructive, forcefully and gracefully delivered, and her themes always vital and timely. She is a daughter of Harley C. Minton, a popular commercial traveler, and whose family consisted of but two daughters, Mrs. Flora Meeks, and Mrs. C. H. Mason, of Columbus, Ohio.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Meeks has been blessed by the birth of one child, Flora Ethel Meeks, born May 21, 1891. She is a young lady of culture, refinement and pleasing personality, a favorite with the best social circles wherever she is known. She was graduated from the Winchester High School, also DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, having made brilliant records in both for scholarship. She is at this writing teaching mathematics and English in Lincoln school, West Winchester, and is giving eminent satisfaction. Mrs. Meeks was reared in her native community and received excellent educational advantages, and she taught for a period of fifteen years in the schools of Randolph and Delaware counties with much success. She is now engaged in Purdue extension work—agricultural. Her great grandfather was a captain in the Revolutionary war, in the cavalry service and was a gallant fighter for the liberty of the colonists. He was a minister in the Methodist church and under his ministry the late Bishop McCabe was converted. Two uncles of Mrs. Meeks were soldiers in the Civil war.

Mr. Meeks is a Republican, but has never been especially active in public affairs. He and his family are members of the Methodist church, and stand high in the local congregation.

NORMAN ANDERSON.

Among the men of sterling attributes of character who have impressed their personality upon the community of their residence and have borne their full share in the upbuilding and development of the locality, mention must not be omitted of Norman Anderson, successful grain and flour dealer of Lynn, and formerly one of Randolph county's enterprising agriculturists. He is not only industrious but a man of upright principles, and aids in the advancement of his town and county in every way possible.

Mr. Anderson was born at Bethel, Wayne county, Indiana, November 25, 1857. He is a son of Wilson and Ann (Ellis) Anderson. The father was also born in Wayne county, January 13, 1836. He was a son of Jonathan and Catherine (Hiatt) Anderson. Jonathan Anderson was born in Kentucky in 1796 and there he spent his boyhood, removing to Indiana when only seventeen years of age and entering a large tract of land from the government in Wayne county, which he cleared and developed and there spent the rest of his life, dying in 1868. His wife died in 1865. They were a fine old pioneer couple, hard working and hospitable. Wilson Anderson was brought up on the old homestead, and in 1860 he moved to Greensfork township, Randolph county where he lived and farmed until 1874, when he purchased one hundred and eighteen acres. As he prospered he added to his original holdings until he owned a fine farm of nearly two hundred and forty acres. He carried on general farming on an extensive scale and also dealt extensively in live stock. He was one of the leading farmers and stock men of his township for a number of years and was also influential in public matters. He was county commissioner for two terms from 1878 to 1884, and was also at one time township assessor. He gave eminent satisfaction in each office. He was a loyal Republican until 1884 when he turned Prohibitionist and did much thereafter for the cause of temperance. Wilson Anderson and Ann Ellis were married January 10, 1857. She was born in Wayne county, Indiana, October 4, 1840, and was a daughter of Peter M. and Lucinda (White) Ellis, who were pioneer settlers of Wayne county. The death of Mrs. Ann Anderson occurred November 1, 1898.

Norman Anderson

Norman Anderson grew up on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools and then spent one term in the Valparaiso Normal. He worked on the home farm until 1887 when he went to the village of Crete where he engaged in the grain business until 1901, when he purchased a farm of two hundred and seventy acres in Greensfork township and there carried on general farming and stock raising successfully until 1907 when he moved to Lynn where he resumed the grain business which he has continued to the present time, in partnership with his son-in-law, O. M. Downard. They operate a large elevator and mill, the capacity of the former being ten thousand bushels, and the mill has a capacity of six thousand bushels. They have built up a large, rapidly-growing and lucrative business. All grain except wheat is shipped. They handle the famous brand of "Bob White" flour, which is a great seller owing to its superior quality. They turn out sixty barrels daily and find a very ready market for the same. It is shipped all over the country.

Politically, Mr. Anderson is a Republican. He is a member of the Christian church, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand; and also belongs to the Encampment of which he is past chief patriarch.

Mr. Anderson was married October 4, 1879, to Belle Chenoweth. She was born in Randolph county, September 19, 1858, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of E. M. and Ruth (Bowen) Chenoweth. To our subject and wife five children have been born, namely: Ethel is the wife of O. M. Downard; Noral is on the home farm; Nione is the wife of Harry Johnson; Denzil M. is engaged in the shoe business in Lynn; Ruth is at home.

Mr. Anderson is at this writing a member of the town council, and was township trustee of Greensfork township for a period of five years.

DENZIL MERLE ANDERSON.

One must not expect to succeed in the mercantile business in a short time, neither do rewards come in this field of endeavor to the indolent and careless, but to those who plan well and are honest and persistent in the execution of their tasks neither can large returns be expected with no reverses. It takes years, as a rule, to do big things in any line, and one cannot build up an extensive and lucrative business in a few months. Realizing that it meant hard and consecutive endeavor to become a successful shoe dealer, Denzil Merle Anderson, of Lynn, Randolph county, has sought to utilize every moment and every opportunity in his chosen vocation and is therefore succeeding admirably and ranks among our most progressive young business men, and, judging from his splendid success so early, one must necessarily predict for him a bright future in the world of industry.

Mr. Anderson was born at Crete, Randolph county, October 18, 1892. He is a son of Norman and Belle (Chenoweth) Anderson, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

Denzil M. Anderson received a common school education and spent one year in the Valparaiso Normal, after which he formed a partnership with E. M. Clark in the shoe business in Lynn, January 15, 1911. He bought his partner out and has since been conducting the store alone, enjoying a constantly growing and extensive business. He has the only exclusive shoe store in Lynn, and carries a large and up-to-date stock of footwear at all seasons; in fact, his store would be a credit to towns larger than Lynn. He draws his many customers from all over this section of the county, many coming from remote parts of the same, for they know that here they will receive fair and courteous treatment.

Politically, Mr. Anderson is a Progressive, and in religious matters is a member of the Christian church.

Mr. Anderson was married December 31, 1910, to Marie Hopkins, who was partly reared and educated at Lynn, and is a daughter of a highly respected family here. She was born at Portland, Indiana, October 8, 1891. She is a young lady of many charming characteristics.

NELSON B. HIATT.

It can not be other than interesting to note in the series of personal sketches appearing in this memorial and biographical history and varying conditions that have compassed those whose careers are outlined, and the effort has been made in each case to throw well-focused light onto the individuality and to bring into proper perspective the scheme of each character under consideration. Each man who strives to fulfill his part in connection with human life and human activities is deserving of recognition, whatever may be or have been the field of his endeavor, and it is the function of works of this nature to perpetuate for future generations an authentic record concerning those represented in its pages, and the value of such publication is certain to be cumulative for all time to come, showing forth the individual and specific accomplishments of which generic history is ever engendered.

One of the citizens of a past generation in Randolph county who is eminently deserving of a conspicuous place in the pages of the present work was the late Nelson B. Hiatt, for more than three decades a well known and successful merchant and business man of Ridgeville, and a citizen of honor and public-spirit who was highly esteemed by a vast acquaintance. He was born in Jay county, Indiana, July 19, 1848, and was a son of Jonathan and Ruth Hiatt, whose family consisted of fifteen children. The mother of our subject died when he was seven years old and the father married a second time, but the last union was without issue. Of the large family only one son and two daughters survive, namely: Lavina, wife of Hamilton Heller, of Pennville, Jay county; he is a retired farmer; twelve children were born to them: Ruth Anna married Charles Briggs, a farmer in Jay county, and they have four children; Jasper C., of Indianapolis, is a widower and has four children.

Jonathan Hiatt, mentioned above, devoted his life to farming. He was a native of North Carolina from which state he came to Jay county, Indiana, when a young man and there located on a farm. His death occurred at the age of seventy-two years.

Nelson B. Hiatt grew up on the home farm in Jay county and there assisted with the general work when a boy. He received his education in the common schools of that community, also passing through Ridgeville college. When but a boy he determined upon a career as merchant and he began in that field of endeavor at Pennville, in his native county, where he remained four years, then moved to Ridgeville, and there continued to operate a general store for a period of thirty-four years, or up to the time of his death. He enjoyed a large and lucrative business with the town and surrounding country, always carrying a well-selected stock of goods which he sold at reasonable prices, and his honesty and courtesy won him the good will and friendship of his hundreds of customers.

Mr. Hiatt was married June 28, 1875, to Rebecca Janney, a daughter of Mahlon and Frances S. (Taylor) Janney, whose family consisted of eleven children, five of whom survive. Mr. Janney devoted his life to farming.

One daughter was born to our subject and wife, Irma Frances, who married John McFarland, of Ridgeville, who was a teacher for sixteen years, and who at this writing is in charge of the store left by our subject. He has three children, Frances E., born in 1902; Portia, born in 1905, and Joseph Howard, born October, 1907. Our subject and wife also reared and educated Lillian Smithson, daughter of Michael and Lavina Smithson. She was born in 1886. Her parents died when she was three and one-half years of age and she was taken by subject and wife. She taught school up to the time of her marriage to Frank Mitchell, manager of the Ridgeville Telephone Co.

Mr. Hiatt was a charter member of the Congregational church at Ridgeville. Politically, he was a Prohibitionist, and was active in temperance work. He was city treasurer of Ridgeville four years, discharging the duties of the office in a highly acceptable manner. He was one of the leading business men in this section of Randolph county. He was vice-president of the First National Bank of Ridgeville, which position he held from the time of its charter until his death. He was perhaps at that time the oldest business man in Ridgeville. He had a large, commodious home where his widow still lives. She holds a large share of the stock in the above named bank and is a woman of no mean business ability and has many winning characteristics which have made her popular with a wide circle of friends.

Nelson B. Hiatt was summoned to his eternal rest on January 27, 1912, at the age of sixty-four years.

AARON G. ROGERS, M. D.

The name of Rogers carries a burden of sentiment to the reader of United States history. It is a name that is distinctly American. Dr. Aaron G. Rogers, one of the most prominent physicians of Randolph county, is descended from a family which played its part well in the shaping of the first United States; a family which has literally been in the vortex of human events and activities; and which has been represented in nearly every place where human passions have clashed, or civil and moral questions have been settled in "the court of blood." In the dubious years at the close of the eighteenth century there were Rogers, of the same family of our subject, who performed their duty heroically and faithfully; in 1812, in the '60's, and in the intervening years when smaller strifes and Indian wars troubled the land, our subject's people have won their spurs in every sense of the word. Dr. Rogers, of this sketch, has not had the opportunity for military glory, but in a profession that requires the stamina and nerve of the battlefield he has been a commander; his work has been characterized by that conscientious devotion to duty, that disregard for self in the interest of others, which mark one as a man among men. It is for such men as Dr. Rogers that biography is intended, and so in this volume of Randolph county, it is highly appropriate that he should be given conspicuous mention, for it is to such as he that future generations point to in extolling the generations and years of the past.

Aaron G. Rogers was born in Henry county, Indiana, on August 18, 1849, and was the son of Thornton and Eliza (Luellen) Rogers. Thornton Rogers was born in the state of Virginia, and came overland to Henry county, Indiana, when just a youth, with the intention of farming in the "new country," a task worthy of his fibre. Not only did he work in the interests of agriculture, but also served his brethren as a minister of the gospel, preaching in the Christian church of his community. He lived to reach the age of seventy-four years, his death being the result of an injury and not from any bodily weakness.

Thornton Rogers was twice married, first to Sarah Massy, and to this union were born the following children: John, deceased, a farmer and survived by a widow and two children; James, deceased, who was a soldier in the Civil war, and is survived by a widow; Malinda, deceased; and Elizabeth, who is also deceased. Thornton Roger's second wife was the mother of eight children, and they were: David, deceased, who was a member of the Union army during the Civil war, and who is survived by a widow and three children; Aaron G., our subject; Abigail, who married S. G. Hays, now a widow, living on the old homestead; French, died at the age of two years; Mary, the wife of Amos Leeka, a Randolph county farmer, and the mother of two children, one of whom is dead; Amelia Jane, deceased, was the wife of Christian Richardson, a stock man, and is survived by two children; Benjamin died at the age of ten years; Priscilla Sarah, deceased, married George Hodson, and was the mother of three children.

Our subject's grandfather, Aaron G. Rogers, was a farmer, and the father of six children, five boys and one girl. He was a native of Virginia, and died in Missouri at the age of eighty-six years. Besides his farming activities he preached in the Methodist Episcopal church. His military record is interesting and notable. In 1794, when General "Mad Anthony" Wayne, the hero of Stony Point, New York, was sent into Ohio to quell the hostile Indian tribes there, Aaron Rogers was a soldier in the small army of rangers and riflemen. He braved the hardships along with the rest of that courageous company, and wielded his flintlock as effectively as any. Again, in 1812, he saw hard service under command of William Henry Harrison, after "Old Hickory" had made his name famous at Tippecanoe. The campaign against hostile Indians was practicallly ended for an interval by the defeat of the Shawnees at the above mentioned place, and consequently Aaron Roger's service was, for the most part, directed against the British, who were then in the process of being "licked" the second time. The military career of Aaron Rogers was replete with interesting events and it is our regret that more space cannot be afforded for a complete account of them. His life was inspiring, as was the life of Joseph Rogers, our subject's great-grandfather, whom we narrate of in the following paragraph.

Joseph Rogers was probably a native of Virginia, as the Old Dominion was; acording to historical account, the home of the Rogers family, from the time of their voyage from the shores of the mother-country, Wales. Joseph Rogers was one of the first patriots who rallied to the flag when the Revolutionary war was declared. On that historic date of June 17, 1775, when the British troops around the town of Charleston, Massachusetts, stormed the Americans, fortified on Bunker Hill, Joseph Rogers was one of the noble hundreds who time after time drove the "red coats" back, and fought stubbornly until lack of ammunition lost the patriots the redoubt at the summit. He suffered a bullet wound in this engagement, but was not incapacitated for further service in the colonial army. John Rogers, Joseph's brother, was also a soldier in the American army. On September 11, 1777, at the battle of Brandywine, or Chad's Ford, Pennsylvania, he was killed by an English bullet. Joseph Rogers died after the war in Virginia.

Our subject's grandmother on his mother's side was Abigail Jones, and she was born in Virginia. She married a Virginia farmer and then they came to the Hoosier state, where she died at the age of eighty-nine years. Our subject's family, both paternal and maternal, are of Welsh descent.

Dr. Aaron G. Rogers was educated in the common schools of Middletown, Henry county, Indiana, and also graduated from the high school there. Having a strong ambition to enter into the profession of medicine, he matriculated at the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1879, and in 1881 was graduated with high honors from that institution. In 1896-7 he took a second course in the same school. For one year he practiced successfully in Farmland, this county, then located at Parker in 1880, and here he has practiced ever since, with the exception of three years spent in Terre Haute, Indiana. In the practice of his profession, Dr. Rogers has always kept abreast of the times, and no physician of the county stands higher in the faith and confidence of the people. He is a doctor living in the age of antitoxins and serums, and despite the opposition to the use of specifics from certain quarters, has unbounded faith and dependence in their use. Perhaps no profession is open and possesses so much fraud and misrepresentation as that of medicine. For such defamations of a trade that is almost sacred, Dr. Rogers is a merciless antagonist, and he employs every resource at his command to thwart the operation of deceit. For the medical "quack" he is a stumbling block, and for the so-called "specialists" he is an avowed enemy. Dr. Rogers was the first doctor in Randolph county to administer the diphtheria antitoxin, which is now universally used by the doctors of the country.

On February 15, 1879, Dr. Rogers was married to Mary E. Carter, a daughter of William B. Carter, a merchant of Farmland, this county, but now deceased. Dr. Rogers suffered the misfortune of losing his wife by death in 1889, leaving one daughter, Sylvia May, who was born November 22, 1882, who now lives with her father.

In religious matters, Dr. Rogers attends the Friends church. His mother-in-law was a preacher in this denomination. Fraternally, he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Knights of Pythias, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically, he is a Republican, and takes a great interest in the affairs of the party. At one time Dr. Rogers served well as a member of the county board of charity.

DAVID HUBER.

In the communities where David Huber has spent his life he has maintained a very high place in the confidence and esteem of his neighbors, being regarded as a representative citizen in every relation of life, discharging every duty devolving upon him with commendable fidelity and proving himself worthy the respect with which he is treated by all who know him. He is an excellent example of the progressive modern farmer and his place is one of the best kept and best improved in the neighborhood of Deerfield.

Mr. Huber was born in Darke county, Ohio, July 20, 1863. He is a son of John H. and Catherine (Coleman) Huber, whose family consisted of three children, namely: Jacob who was a school teacher for twenty years is now farming near Randolph Station, this county, married Annetta Somers and they have two children, Celia and Dolly; Sarah married N. W. Fields, of Deerfield, and they have two children, John and Weldon; David, of this sketch is the youngest of the trio.

John H. Huber, father of the subject of this review, was born in Nuremberg, Germany, in 1835, and there he spent his early boyhood, emigrating to the United States in 1846, first locating in Dayton, Ohio, then removed to Indiana. He located in Ward township, Randolph county in 1879 and located on a farm where he still resides. He has worked hard and managed well and good has come to him by his efforts in the New World. He has been twice married, first, in 1858, to Catherine Coleman, with whom he lived happily for a period of thirty-eight years. She was born on October 3, 1838, in Darke county, Ohio. Her death occurred on November 2, 1896. In 1900 Mr. Huber married Annetta Beisel, nee Ganger. He is owner of a fine farm of three hundred and sixty-five acres, and is a stockholder and director in the State Bank of Ridgeville, and was vice-president of the same for a number of years. His father was a brewer in Germany where he spent his life.

David Huber grew to manhood on the farm and assisted his father with the general work about the place when a boy. He received a good education in the common schools. On November 25, 1893, he married Lou Brown, a daughter of W. S. Brown, a well-known carpenter and builder, who married Evaline Simmons. Mrs. Huber was reared to womanhood in her native community and received a common school education. Her parents formerly lived in Jackson township.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Huber: John Weldon, born October 19, 1894, is a successful teacher in Ward township, although but nineteen years of age; William Renney, born January 21, 1896, is studying for a teacher's career; Ara, born January 22, 1898, is also preparing to be a teacher; Owna, born May 30, 1901; Mamie, born April 18, 1905; Downa, born April 5, 1907.

Mr. Huber has been very successful as a general farmer and stock raiser and has followed these pursuits since boyhood. He is now owner of a fine and productive farm of one hundred and ninety acres and has a good dwelling and outbuildings. Politically, he is independent, and he attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

MICHAEL LAHEY.

Diversified farming is essential to profitable production and maintenance of soil fertility, but it is necessary to specialize on something to secure a superior standard of excellence. A well diversified farm will have the customary crops that are grown in the locality, together with the usual farm animals, and some one crop or some one animal should be singled out as a specialty. The farmer may take good care of all his crops and animals and conduct his business at a profit, but he will find an added enjoyment and an increased profit by giving special attention to some one crop or special kind of live stock. Suppose a farmer's specialty is corn. If he does his duty by his pet crop he will raise some of the best, if not the best, corn in the neighborhood. He will not only have greater profits in the ordinary use of the crop, but the demand for his seed corn will enable him to dispose of a large amount of it at better than the average price for seed corn. The necessity of using only the best seed is yearly becoming more appreciated and the man who has the reputation for growing the best corn is the one that seed buyers will hunt out. The reputation is the reward for building up a specialty.

One of the leading farmers of Randolph county is Michael Lahey who has from time to time specialized in various things and has made general farming and stock raising not only profitable but pleasant. He was born September 9, 1857, in New York City, and is a son of Martin and Hennora Lahey, both natives of Ireland where they were reared, educated and married and from which country they emigrated to America shortly before our subject was born. He was small when his parents died and thus grew up an orphan. He was one of five children, only two of whom are now living, himself and James A. Lahey.

Michael Lahey remained in New York City until he was about eleven years of age, then came west to Greenville, Ohio, later locating in Union City, Indiana, growing to manhood at the home of William Macy, a farmer just south of Union City. He worked on the farm during the crop seasons and received a limited education in the common schools.

Mr. Lahey was married December 25, 1880, to Elnora Wise, who was born in Randolph county, Indiana, November 22, 1861, and is a daughter of Henry and Hannah (Bowen) Wise. The father was born in Germany, May 5, 1838, and is now living in Spartanburg, Randolph county, where he has long made his home, having emigrated to this country when a young man. His wife was born in this county, January 27, 1843, and she is still living. Mr. Wise has been successfully engaged in farming all his life, but is now living retired. His family consisted of seven children, only four of whom survive, namely: Elnora, wife of Mr. Lahey of this sketch is the eldest; John O. is deceased; Elizabeth A. is living; Hattie R. and Ulrich are also living; Florence and Rosa are both deceased. Mrs. Lahey grew to womanhood on the home farm and she received a common school education.

To our subject and wife seven children have been born, all except one still living, namely: Leona, born September 21, 1881, married Orlie Coleman and they live in Richmond, Indiana; Charles W., born January 28, 1884, married Grace Paris, and they live east of Winchester, Indiana; Florence E., born December 25, 1886, married Harry Oxley and they are living south of Farmland, this county; Iva Viola, born October 9, 1889, married Alva Murrell, and they are living in White River township, this county; Hannah Elverna, born February 25, 1893, married Elmer Hiatt of Monroe township, Randolph county, she died February 25, 1914; James Henry, born March 2, 1896; Harold M., born April 11, 1903, is the youngest.

Mr. Lahey has devoted his life to general farming and he has lived on his present fine farm for a period of fourteen years. It consists of one hundred and forty acres, all tillable but about twenty acres. It is fairly well tiled and is under a high state of cultivation. He has made many up-to-date improvements, such as remodeling his dwelling, in which he has installed a furnace and other modern appliances. In connection with general agricultural pursuits he raises a general breed of cows and horses and Duroc hogs.

Politically, Mr. Lahey is a Prohibitionist, and religiously is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in which he is a trustee. His wife's father, Henry Wise, was a soldier in the Civil war, seeing three years of hard service, having enlisted at Richmond, Indiana, August 19, 1862, in Company F, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Osterhouse and he proved to be a gallant defender of his adopted country's flag.

JOHN E. RICKERT.

In these days of large commercial transactions, when credits cut a large factor in the daily round of business, the province of the banker is very wide and very important. The excellence of the banks of the present as compared with those of the past gives to all classes of business men first-class security for their deposits, assistance when they are in need of ready money to facilitate business matters in various ways, and a means of exchanging credits that could be accomplished in safety no other way. In a large measure the success at the present time of all branches of business is largely the result of present banking methods. It is quite common for the stockholders of the banks to be business men of prominence in the community—farmers, merchants, manufacturers and professional men—all of whom are known to the depositors and their standing well established. This gives stability to the bank and confidence to the community. Such is the confidence in the State Bank of Ridgeville, Randolph county, of which John E. Rickert is the popular and able cashier, in fact, is the maker of it, and one of the substantial and influential men of the locality of which this history deals.

Mr. Rickert was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, February 19, 1878. He is a son of George and Jane (Stuck) Rickert, whose family consists of three children, our subject, and William A., who lives on the home farm, married Daisy Kemp, a daughter of Rev. B. F. Kemp, and they have four children, Noel, Cecil, Mary and Elizabeth. Mary Rickert married Andrew P. Linn, a farmer and stock raiser, and to them three children have been born, namely: Charles, Carrie and Helen, all married except the last named.

The subject of this sketch is of German descent, and he seems to have inherited the characteristic thrift and industry of his progenitors. His father was a native of Indiana, who devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, became the owner of a valuable farm in Randolph county, and here he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1905 at the age of sixty-five years. The paternal grandparents of our subject were both born in Germany, from which country they emigrated to the United States when young. Grandfather Stuck was an able minister in the German Reformed church. The mother of our subject is living, hale and hearty at the age of sixty-five years.

John E. Rickert grew to manhood on his father's farm where he worked until reaching his majority. He received meanwhile his early education in the common schools, and in the State Normal at Terre Haute, which in after life has been greatly supplemented by actual contact with the business world and by wide and miscellaneous home reading. He began life for himself by teaching school in Jackson township for a period of five years, and one year in the graded schools of Saratoga. Although he gave eminent satisfaction as a teacher and was fast taking his place in the front rank of educators in Randolph county, he resigned his position at Saratoga and entered a business career, accepting a position as assistant cashier of the Ridgeville State Bank, in February, 1902, which position he held until in May, 1906, since which time he has been cashier, discharging his duties in a manner that reflects much credit upon himself and to the entire satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons of the bank. His personal popularity, his able counsel and wise foresight have been the principal factors in the upbuilding of this popular and ever-growing institution, which ranks among the sound and safe banks of this section of the state. He is by nature a financier, and he has kept well abreast of the times in all matters pertaining to the banking business.

Mr. Rickert was married June 16, 1899 to Eva L. Hill, a daughter of William Hill, an artisan of Randolph county, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a lady of culture and many admirable characteristics which have won her a host of warm friends.

To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Wayne, born October 3, 1900; and Dale, whose birth occurred February 5, 1904. They are both very bright lads and promising; the elder is a pupil of the Ridgeville High School at the early age of thirteen years.

Politically, Mr. Rickert is a Democrat. He has been a member of the local school board for the past twelve years during which he has done much to strengthen the Ridgeville school system, in fact, no man has done more for the general upbuilding of this city than he, for he has ever had its interests at heart since locating here. The town owes him a debt of gratitude which it can not repay. He is a member of the building committee for the erection of the new hall of the local lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a member. He and his family belong to the Congregational church and are faithful in the work and support of the same.

JOHN COLUMBUS BUNCH.

Success in agriculture does not come to the indolent or careless, but to those who plan well and are persistent in the execution of their tasks; neither can large returns be expected in a short time, it takes years to do big things in any line, and one cannot develop a modern farm in a few months. Realizing that it meant hard and consecutive endeavor to become successful as a husbandman, John Columbus Bunch, of Greensfork township, Randolph county, sought to utilize every moment and every opportunity in his chosen vocation of farming and has therefore succeeded.

Mr. Bunch was born on the farm where he resides at this writing, January 17, 1868. He is a son of Richard G. and Mary J. (Bowen) Bunch. The father was born February 6, 1831, near Whitewater, Wayne county, Indiana, and was a son of Richard and Ann (Pierson) Bunch. Richard Bunch, Sr., was a native of South Carolina, where he spent his boyhood, but in a very early day emigrated overland to Indiana and settled in Wayne county, where he developed a farm from the forest. There his son, Richard G. Bunch, grew up amid pioneer environment and worked hard on the farm when a boy, receiving a meager education the meanwhile in the rural schools, and there he remained until 1854, when he came to Randolph county and purchased the forty acres, where the present Bunch home stands. He subsequently added to his original purchase until he became owner of one hundred and twenty acres in this county, besides land in Ohio. He devoted his entire life to farming and was successful. His death occurred May 15, 1900. He ran a sorghum molasses mill for about forty years and his products were eagerly sought after owing to their superior quality. He was one of the first to engage in that line of business in this locality. Politically he was a Republican, and religiously belonged to the Methodist church, and was licensed to exhort in the same. He was an active worker in the church. He belonged to the Masonic order. He and Mary J. Bowen were married May 13, 1852. She was born September 15, 1830, and was a daughter of Squire Bowen and wife, a well-known pioneer family of this county, mention of whom is made elsewhere in these pages. Seven children were born to Richard G. Bunch and wife, four of whom are still living, namely: Angeline M. is the wife of W. T. Hart, a farmer of Greensfork township; Florence A. is the wife of Foster A. Tillson, a farmer of Wayne county, Indiana; Nancy C. is the wife of Thomas Donahue, a farmer of Greensfork township, this county, and John C., of this review. The death of Mrs. Mary J. Bunch occurred August 15, 1905.

John C. Bunch grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked hard when a boy, and he received his education in the common schools, with four terms in the Danville Normal School. He began farming when a young man and this has continued to be his vocation until the present time. He has prospered through close application and good management until he is now owner of two hundred acres in Randolph county and twelve acres in Ohio. He carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, feeding large numbers of various kinds of stock for the market. He has kept his land well improved and well cultivated and he has a pleasant home and good outbuildings for his stock, grains and machinery.

Politically, Mr. Bunch is a Republican and he was elected township trustee in 1908 and is still incumbent of this office, the duties of which he is discharging satisfactorily. Religiously he belongs to the Methodist church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand, also belongs to the Encampment, of which he is past chief patriarch. He is a member of the National Horse Thief Detective Association.

Mr. Bunch was married, first, to Anna Dempsey, November 18, 1892. She was born in Preble county, Ohio, and her death occurred in November, 1895. On January 16, 1904, he married his second wife, Della J. Kinsey, a daughter of William Kinsey and wife, a highly respected family of this county, a complete sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume. Mrs. Bunch grew to womanhood in Randolph county and received a common school education.

Mr. Bunch is the father of three children, named as follows: Mary A., born August, 1895, died November 3, 1903; John K., born November 17, 1908; and Bernice C., born June 25, 1910.

FRANK L. SHAW.

One of the best known poultry dealers in the section of the Hoosier state of which this volume treats is Frank L. Shaw, also a successful farmer in Monroe township, a man who would doubtless have succeeded in any line of endeavor, for he is a persistent and careful worker and exercises sound judgment, and at the same time deals honestly with his fellowmen, so that he enjoys their confidence and good will. He is a man of proper ideas regarding citizenship and is helpful in all movements that have for their object the betterment of his township and county in any way.

Mr. Shaw was born in Kossuth county, Iowa, July 26, 1858. He is a son of Reuben and Rebecca (Smith) Shaw, and is one of a family of five children, namely: Walter C., a bookkeeper, of Harriman, Tennessee; Silvery married Hamilton Penery, died and left five children; Josephine, who married Oliver H. Warren, a farmer of Monroe township, has four children; Frank L., of this sketch; Fred C., who died at the age of forty-six years, married Ella Friar, who lives on the old home place, and is the mother of six children.

Reuben Shaw, the father, was born and brought up in Boston, Massachusetts. He was a builder by trade, and he went to California in the gold fever days of 1849, later returning to Boston and in a short time moved to Ohio where he lived six years, then went to Iowa and lived there five years, after which he brought his family to Indiana and spent his last days here, dying on the old homestead in Randolph county, February 21, 1903, at the age of seventy-seven years. His wife was born at Cape Cod, Massachusetts, August 27, 1824, married Mr. Shaw in Boston and followed his fortunes through Ohio, Iowa and Indiana, proving to be a most faithful helpmeet. Her death occurred January 24, 1904, on the home place in this township. She was one of a family of five children, two girls and three boys.

Frank L. Shaw grew up on the farm and worked with his father with the crops. He received a good common school education. He began farming for himself early in life and has continued this vocation to the present time with more than ordinary success, and now runs a valuable and well-kept place in Monroe township. He has devoted a great deal of attention to the poultry business, every phase of which he seems to have mastered when a young man, for his extensive buying and shipping of poultry for a period of thirty-three years has been uniformly successful and he has accumulated a comfortable competency in this manner, his operations covering a wide territory and he has a wide reputation as a well posted, active and uniformly honest and considerate dealer in this line.

Mr. Shaw was married September 20, 1880 to Emma V. Macy, daughter of William P. Macy, a farmer in Monroe township, whose family consisted of nine children, and here she grew up and was educated.

To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Della, the eldest daughter, married Albert Courtner, a farmer in Monroe township, and they have ten children having lost two; Mabel married Charles Daugherty, a farmer and merchant of Farmland, and they have four children, two sons and two daughters; William, who is operating his father's fine farm in Monroe township, married Olive Watson, and they have two children, Thelma, born February 21, 1909; and Marion, born June 22, 1910; Ada died at the age of five years.

Politically, Mr. Shaw is a Republican, and he attends the Friends church.

JAMES A. LAMB.

Nothing is more important to a nation than to have its people well fed, and especially is this true of a nation like ours, which must depend on the wisdom, patriotism and good judgment of its people for the administration of its government and its perpetuity. We of the cities should be most intensely interested in the best methods of production, because these things determine the volume of food which we will have to eat, and eating ever remains the primal necessity of man, with the field as the great source of supply. The brown stone palaces, the sky-scrapers, the great white thoroughfares of our cities cannot feed the mass of humanity struggling within their confines. These must look back to the land for sustenance. Those who eat should be more deeply concerned about better methods of farming than those who produce crops merely for the money that comes from their sale.

One of the citizens of West River township, Randolph county, who seems to clearly understand the relation of farming with other industries is James A. Lamb, who was born in Washington township, this county, July 25, 1853. He is a son of William A. and Jane E. (Harris) Lamb, and he was one of seven children, six sons and one daughter, all now deceased but James A., of this sketch, who was the youngest; the other children were named William P., Benjamin C., Henry C., Anna E., Jerry E. and Levi O. The father was a native of Virginia, from which state he removed with his family to Indiana and settled in West River township, later removing to Washington township, Randolph county. He devoted his life to farming, and his death occurred April 28, 1868, at the age of sixty-five years. The mother of our subject was born in Campbell county, Virginia, and her death occurred November 22, 1901, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, on the old homestead in Washington township.

James A. Lamb grew to manhood on the home farm and he received a common school education. He has been twice married, first to Josephine White, March 1, 1891. Her death occurred October 13, 1893, leaving a son, Fred, who is now living in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and is connected with the Bowser Oil Company. Our subject's second marriage was to Sarah Cox, a daughter of Joseph Cox, whose family consisted of thirteen children, ten of whom survive. One child has been born to this second union, Ream Elizabeth, born April 26, 1897. The date of the son's birth, mentioned above, was December 30, 1892. He was graduated from the Winchester high school.

Mr. Lamb has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, and he is now owner of a valuable farm of one hundred acres on which stands a fine residence and large outbuildings. He manages well and has a very gratifying income from year to year. Politically, he is a Progressive, and religiously, is a member of the Methodist church.

AUGUSTUS CLELAND WILMORE, D. D.

That life is the most useful and desirable that results in the greatest good to the greatest number, and, whatever may be the aspirations of men, yet in some measure each can win success and make life a blessing to his fellow men. It is not necessary for one to occupy eminent secular positions to do so, for in the field of righteous activity there is great good to be accomplished and many opportunities for the exercise of talents and influence, that will touch the lives of those with whom we come in contact, making them better and brighter. In the list of Randolph county's useful, successful and honored citizens, Rev. Augustus Cleland Wilmore, of Winchester, has long occupied a prominent place, in whose record there is naught that is not commendable, and his career forcibly illustrates what a life of energy can accomplish when plans are wisely laid and actions are governed by right principles, noble aims, and high ideals; for his actions have ever been the result of careful and conscientious thought, and when once convinced that he is right, no suggestion of policy or personal profit can swerve him from the course he has decided upon. Thus doing his full duty in all the relations of life, his worthy career is rounding out in beautiful simplicity. It is always a delight of the biographer to revert to the life of such a man, one who has spent his active years in the service of his fellow men, who, unselfishly, has sought to minister to those in need of spiritual and mental guidance or physical succor, who, unmindful of the praise or blame of his fellow men, goes forward from day to day in the performance of his humble duty, content to know that he is honestly following the dictates of his own conscience and meekly walking in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene, finding joy enough in doing the Master's will. Such a man is the noted divine and educator whose name graces the caption of this review, who for a number of decades has performed a grand work among the people whom he has elected to serve, training plastic minds of the oncoming generation, engendering in them a desire to walk only in the light of the highest spiritual ideals, burying the friends who pass over the mystic river, marrying the young, beginning life's more serious paths, and in many ways assisting in ameliorating the condition of humanity. His character from his youth up, according to those who know him best, has been unblemished by even the shadow of wrong, so that this section of the state regards him as one of its most valued citizens.

Augustus Cleland Wilmore was born in Jackson, Jackson county, Ohio, June 2, 1849. He is a scion of sterling old English stock on his paternal side and of Scotch-Irish on his maternal side. The earliest ancestor of record was our subject's great-great-grandfather, Daniel Wilmore, who emigrated from England to America in 1725, and located in Virginia, where he entered from the government four hundred acres of land, in Goochland county, on September 27, 1729. At that time he was a resident of New Kent county, Virginia. His son, John Wilmore, our subject's great-grandfather, according to the records in the War Department at Washington, served in the Revolutionary war as a private in Captain Van Swearingen's Company, Colonel Daniel Morgan's Rifle Regiment, which was organized about June, 1777. His name appears on the pay-rolls of the company from July, 1777, to March, 1778, inclusive. He was one of the five hundred sharp-shooters of Morgan's regiment, that took part in the battle of Saratoga on October 7, 1777, and was present at Burgoyne's surrender. On the maternal side our subject is also descended from a Revolutionary hero, his great-great-grandfather, William Jones, having taken part in the war for Independence as a private soldier in Williams' Regiment, Maryland Troops.

John Wilmore, mentioned above, married Mary Clayton, also a native of Virginia. Their son, William Wilmore, our subject's grandfather, was born in King and Queen county, that state, in 1774, and in 1795 he moved to Amherst county, Virginia. In 1823 he came to Gallia county, Ohio, later located in Jackson county, that state, where he spent the rest of his life engaged in farming, dying in 1856. In June 1798, he married Nancy Harrison and to them three children were born, named as follows: John Harrison, Willis Clayton, and James. His wife dying in 1803 he married in September, 1805, Susanna Gresham, and to this union the following children were born: Hezekiah, Mary Anne, Rosaline, Elizabeth, Thomas, Rebecca, William Rodney, Robert, Nancy, Levi (father of our subject), and Stephen Noah. His last wife died in Jackson county, Ohio, in 1862, at the age of eighty-one years.

Levi Wilmore was born in Gallia county, Ohio, July 13, 1824. In infancy he removed with his parents to Jackson county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood and was educated in the old-time schools. He devoted his life to school teaching and agricultural pursuits. In September, 1849, he moved to Jay county, Indiana, and in August, 1860, went on to Huntington county, this state, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying September 13, 1877. He was a courageous, honest, hospitable and industrious man, who won the highest respect of all who knew him. He was married April 6, 1848, to Nancy J. Golden, daughter of James Golden and Anne Adair Golden, the latter being the daughter of James Cleland Adair and Belinda Jones Adair, and the granddaughter of Sir William Adair and Lady Esther Smilie Adair, and great-granddaughter of Sir James Adair and Lady Anne Cleland Adair, the last named being the daughter of Lord Cleland, a Scotch nobleman. Sir William Adair and family emigrated from Ireland to America in 1798. Nancy Golden Wilmore was a native of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, the date of her birth being December 15, 1830. To these parents the following children were born: Augustus Cleland, of this review; Mary Anne, born May 2, 1851, is deceased; John Elmer, born June 25, 1853, lives in Eaton county, Michigan; Lavina Elizabeth, born March 7, 1856; Sarah Susanna, born September 5, 1858; Oscar Shepherd, born January 4, 1861; Emma Amanda, born September 25, 1863, are all four deceased; Florence Ellen, born September 16, 1866, lives in Fort Wayne, Indiana; Lawrence Eugene, born April 22, 1869, is deceased, and Frank Edson, born December 10, 1871, lives in Fort Wayne. The mother of the above named children, a woman of beautiful Christian character, passed to her eternal rest on February 4, 1890. She was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The father, Levi Wilmore, was a worthy member of the Baptist church, and politically he was a life-long Democrat.

Doctor Wilmore, of this sketch, was an infant when his parents brought him to Jay county, Indiana, from Ohio. At the age of eleven years he moved with his parents to Huntington county, Indiana. He attended the common schools until he was sixteen years of age, then entered the academy at Warren, Indiana, where he spent two years. He was an ardent student and made rapid progress, and when eighteen years of age he began teaching school in Huntington county, teaching five months each year and taking a college course the balance of the year, continuing thus for three years, during which time he attended DePauw University, Liber and Ridgeville Colleges, making excellent records in all these, and lacking but one year of graduation. He continued teaching until 1877, a total of ten years, eight of which were spent in Huntington county, the other two in Wabash county. He taught both common and high school studies. He gave eminent satisfaction as a teacher, being a man of progressive ideas and painstaking in his work.

Turning his attention to the ministry he took a four-years' theological course in the White River Conference Institute, where he was regarded as a brilliant pupil by the faculty and student body. He became a teacher in that institution, which position he has continued to hold for a period of thirty-one years, filling the chair of Systematic Theology during the past twenty-five years. His long retention in this important position is sufficient evidence that he has ably and conscientiously discharged his duties, in fact, he has won a wide reputation as one of the leading instructors in theology in the state. He has kept fully abreast of the times, having remained a student all his life. In his youth he accepted labor as the motive duty and destiny of man and never has been known timidly to shrink from its mandate or injunction. Labor to him has always been a joy and pleasure, and his purpose to excel in the noble field of endeavor to which his talents have been so largely devoted soon became the predominant incentive of his life. That he has risen to a high and honored position among the educators of his day has been due to his determination to succeed, and in the broadest and best sense of the term he is the architect of his own fortune and eminently worthy to wear the proud American title of "A self-made man." Having descended from English Puritians on the paternal side, and from Scotch-Irish Puritans on the maternal side, his heredity and early training was of a high order leading to excellent habits and exalted ideals. Following the historic example of the Wilmore ancestors back to the great-grandfather, he never used liquor, tobacco, nor vile language.

Doctor Wilmore was converted at the age of eleven years and united with the church two years later. He entered White River Conference, Church of the United Brethren in Christ, August 17, 1877, and was ordained August 22, 1880. His work as pastor began in 1877 at Montpelier, Indiana, where he remained three years, and something of his success in that charge will be gained from the fact that during that time he built two churches and received three hundred and forty-three members into the church. He also did a great work in building up the churches in his other charges. His subsequent appointments are as follows: In 1880, Wabash charge, where he organized Wabash church, serving one year as pastor. In 1881, First church at Indianapolis, two years, where he increased the membership three-fold and erected a church; 1883, Blue River circuit; 1884, Hartsville, two years, preaching in the chapel at Hartsville College; in 1886, he was elected presiding elder and appointed to the Indianapolis district, serving two years. In 1888, he was appointed presiding elder of the Marion district which he served two years. In 1890 he was appointed to the First church in Anderson, and there he organized the church and erected a new church edifice; he was appointed presiding elder of the Marion district in 1892, serving two years; in 1894 he was appointed to the Noblesville charge, where he erected a church building; in 1896 he was appointed to the charge at Montpelier which he served three years and erected one church; in 1899 he was elected presiding elder and appointed to the Indianapolis district, serving three years. In 1902 he again entered the pastorate and served the following charges: Markleville, two years; 1904, New Castle; 1905, St. Paul, where he erected a church; 1906, Cowan, where he completed the erection of a church; 1907, Hagerstown; 1908, Saratoga, two years, where he built an extension to the church; 1910, Collett, two years; 1912, Selma, two years. Thus he has served a total period of thirty-seven years as an active itinerant minister and now enjoys the distinction of being the oldest active itinerant in the White River Conference. During his pastorate he has preached five thousand and two hundred sermons and received into the church a grand total of fourteen hundred members and superintended the erection of eight churches. His annual reports to Conference all show an increase in membership and full collections of assessments. He was also a delegate to five quadrennial General Conferences, which convened in session the years of 1889, 1893, 1897, 1901, and 1905, in all of which he took a prominent part and made his influence felt for the general good. He is a trustee of the Indiana Central University of Indianapolis. He is the Registrar of White River Conference and is serving his twenty-eighth year on the Conference Finance Committee. He served eight years as Conference Secretary and also served four years as trustee of the United Brethren Publishing House at Dayton, Ohio. In 1900, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Harriman University, in Tennessee.

As a pulpit orator, Doctor Wilmore has few peers in the state, being a forcible, earnest, instructive, and at times a truly eloquent speaker, never failing to command the attention of his audience and, being a profound scholar and deeply versed in the Bible his arguments always carry the weight of conviction to his hearers.

As a writer and author, Doctor Wilmore possesses unusual qualifications. He wields a facile and forceful pen and his articles are clear and convincing. He writes extensively for the newspapers and other periodicals. He is the author of the "Constitution of the Preacher's Aid Society" and the "History of White River Conference."

The domestic life of Doctor Wilmore began on August 14, 1870, when he led to the hymeneal altar Julia A. Trammel. She was a faithful helpmeet for a period of twenty years, and on May 14, 1890, she was called to her reward in the Silent Land. This union was without issue. On March 9, 1892, our subject was married to Minnie Alice Rice, of Anderson, Indiana. She was born in Marion county, near Indianapolis, November 8, 1870, and is a daughter of Rev. Archibald Carrolton Rice, a native of Maryland. She removed with her parents to Madison county, Indiana, in 1889, and in 1908 she removed with her husband to Randolph county, Indiana, she and our subject having lived in Winchester since 1910. She is a descendant of the noted Lamar family. William Lamar, her greatgrandfather, was an ensign and first lieutenant in Capt. John C. Jones' Company, Seventh Maryland Regiment, in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Wilmore is a charter member and is Registrar of the Winchester Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She is active in church work, a lady of education and refinement, and a favorite with a large circle of friends.

Politically, Doctor Wilmore has been a life-long Republican. Fraternally, he is a member of the Orders of Knights of Pythias and the Free and Accepted Masons. He owns a fine farm of eighty acres in Washington township, seventy acres of which is under a high state of cultivation, the balance being woodland. He also is the owner of valuable real estate in the cities of Winchester and Anderson, Indiana, all of which he has accumulated by thrift and business foresight.

Personally, Doctor Wilmore is one of the most affable and companionable of men, possessing to a marked degree the qualities that win and retain strong friendships, and his high standing as a citizen with the best interests of his fellow men at heart gives him influence such as few in this section of the state can exercise. A gentleman of commanding and pleasing presence, of calm and dignified demeanor, with the manners of the genteel gentleman, he moves among his fellows as one born to leadership, and yet he is easily approached, plain and unassuming in his relations with the world, and a man who makes every other consideration subordinate to duty, regardless of consequences, and who lives in harmony with his highest ideals of manhood and citizenship.

WILLIAM A. WILMORE.

One of the leading citizens and representative business men of Saratoga and that section of Randolph county is William A. Wilmore, who is extensively engaged in the general mercantile business. His has been an active and useful life, but the limited space at the disposal of the biographer forbids more than a casual mention of the leading events of his career, which will suffice to show what earnest endeavor and honesty of purpose rightly applied and persistently followed will lead to—ultimate success. He has ever manifested an abiding interest in the upbuilding of his community in every way, and, having lead an exemplary life, he enjoys the utmost respect and the universal good will of all who know him.

Mr. Wilmore was born in Adams county, Indiana, May 10, 1864. He is a son of Addison G. and Elenor (Adamson) Wilmore, and was one of five children, namely: Elsa married Adam Kabel, a merchant and farmer of Weatherford, Oklahoma; Sarah E. married John L. Edwards, a farmer of Randolph county, and they have three children; John A., a farmer of Van Wert county, Ohio, married Retta Snyder, and they have four children; Ella died when eighteen years of age; William A., of this sketch, is the youngest of the family.

Addison G. Wilmore, the father of our subject, was born in Virginia, from which state he came to Indiana in young manhood and here established the future home of the family, engaging in general farming, owning a valuable farm of four hundred acres in Adams county. He was one of the hardy band that crossed the trackless plains of the west to California in the gold fever days of 1849, being accompanied by two brothers. His death occurred in October, 1863.

William A. Wilmore was reared by his grandmother, Nancy Adamson, in Randolph county, and he received his early education in the common schools, later studied at the State Normal School and also at the Eastman Business College, of Poughkeepsie, New York, from which he was graduated in 1888, having made an excellent record there. He began life for himself by teaching, which he continued successfully for two years, then, deciding that his true bent lay along business lines, he launched into the mercantile field, in which he has been a pronounced success, having conducted a general store at Saratoga for a period of twenty-five years with an ever-increasing patronage. He carries at all seasons a large and carefully selected stock of goods, which he sells at prices that are always right, according to his many customers, whom he treats with such uniform courtesy and honesty that they have remained his friends from the first. His trade covers a wide territory and he has laid by a comfortable competence for his declining years, being now one of the substantial and influential citizens of this part of the county. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the United Brethren church, and politically, he is a Democrat and is influential in public matters.

Mr. Wilmore has been three times married, first, to Flora L. Mitchem, a teacher, who was born in southern Indiana, and to this union one child was born, Mabel, whose birth occurred February 22, 1895. After six years of married life his wife died. Mabel Wilmore married Otis E. Love on July 20, 1913. Our subject's second wife was Caroline Stockum, a native of Coshocton, Ohio, and to this union one daughter was born, Ruth S., whose birth occurred September 18, 1899. She is preparing herself for a teacher. Mr. Wilmore's last wife was Ella Remmel, a native of Illinois, who was brought to Winchester, Indiana, when three years old, in 1874, by her parents. She and Mr. Wilmore were married June 11, 1905. She is a daughter of Samuel T. Remmel, who is still living in Winchester. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served gallantly in the Seventy-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His father was a member of the same company and regiment. The mother of Mrs. Wilmore died in 1873. Our subject's last wife was graduated from the Winchester high school in 1890, and later was a student in the Indiana State Normal, also the National Normal at Lebanon, Ohio. She also studied at the University of Indiana. She is exceptionally well educated, is a lady of culture and a splendid conversationalist. She was a highly successful teacher for ten years in the Winchester public schools, also taught in a district school one year. She is a member of the United Brethren church.

THOMAS WILDEY MORGAN, M. D.

The men most influential in promoting the advancement of society and in giving character to the times in which they live are two classes—the men of study and the men of action. Whether we are more indebted for the improvement of the age to the one class or the other is a question of honest difference of opinion; neither can be spared and both should be encouraged to occupy their several spheres of labor and influence. In the following paragraphs are briefly outlined the leading facts and characteristics in the career of a gentleman who combines in his makeup the elements of the scholar and the energy of the public-spirited man of affairs. Devoted to the noble and humane work of alleviating the multiform ills to which human flesh is heir, Dr. Thomas Wildey Morgan, of Spartanburg, Randolph county, has long been doing a commendable work in the locality of which this history treats and in every respect richly deserves the high esteem in which he is held.

Dr. Morgan, who is indeed a worthy son of a worthy sire, his father having been a prominent physician in the pioneer day until his death in 1884, was born in northern Illinois, January 3, 1859. He is a son of Dr. Robert H. and Rebecca (Small) Morgan, who were pioneers and prominent people of their day.

Dr. Thomas W. Morgan received excellent educational advantages. After attending the common schools he was a student in the normals of Valparaiso, Indiana; Lebanon, Ohio; Danville, Indiana, and Mitchell, Indiana. Thus exceptionally well equipped for a teacher's profession he began teaching and taught in the high school at Spartanburg for five years, having taught four years previously in country schools. He was regarded as one of the able educators of the county and his services were in great demand, but he decided that his true bent lay along another line and he began studying medicine while teaching, reading under his father, then attended the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, for one year, later entered the Ohio College of Physicians and Surgeons, now known as the Western Reserve, where he made an excellent record, and from which he was graduated with the class of 1893. Soon thereafter he began practicing his profession at Spartanburg, where he has remained to the present time and has built up a large and lucrative patronage, which is constantly growing, and has taken his place in the front rank of his professional brethren in a community long noted for the high order of its medical talent. He has remained a close student and has kept fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to his science.

Dr. Morgan is a Progressive in his political affiliations, and has taken more or less interest in local public affairs. He was a member of the township advisory board at the time the high school was built and was an ardent advocate of the same. He is a Universalist in his religious belief. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand. He also belongs to the Encampment of which he is past chief patriarch. He is a member of the Randolph County Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Dr. Morgan was married December 31, 1889, to Sarah L. Horn, who was born in Randolph county, Indiana, in December, 1858, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Silas and Charlotte (Knox) Horn, an excellent old family of this locality. Three children, one of whom died in infancy, were born to the Doctor and wife; the two surviving are Rexford H. and Lucile, both of whom are attending school at this writing.

JESSE E. McCOLLUM.

One of the most active, thorough-going and enterprising farmers of Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, is Jesse E. McCollum, whose success lies very largely in the fact that he has always advocated doing well whatever task presented itself and in not permitting the numerous paltry obstacles met in the pathway of everyone to annoy or thwart him. He believes in pushing ahead, employing twentieth century ideas and methods in all phases of agricultural work and in dealing with his neighbors and acquaintances in a manner that will inspire confidence. He does not want a man's dollar if thereby he makes an enemy. Such men are always good citizens, good neighbors and good friends and are indispensable to any community.

Mr. McCollum was born in Wayne county, Indiana, October 20, 1856. He is a son of William and Diana (Gillaspie) McCollum. He comes of an exceptionally long-lived race. His paternal great-grandparents were natives of Scotland. Mr. McCollum's death occurred at the age of ninety years, and that of his wife at the age of ninety-four years. Our subject's father and mother were both natives of North Carolina, where they grew up and were married in 1847. In the fall of 1852 they came to Wayne county, Indiana, where they lived on a farm a year. William McCollum was a blacksmith by trade and in 1854 opened up a shop at Dalton, later one at Cross Roads, east of Dalton, and it was there that our subject was born. In 1858 the family moved to Franklin, Indiana, where the father continued blacksmithing until 1862, when he moved to Losantville, Randolph county, where he continued blacksmithing until June 16th of that year, when he enlisted in Company E, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years, being mustered out June 16, 1865. While shoeing a mule during the service his spine was injured, from which he still suffers. In 1874 the family moved to Hagerstown, where the father secured the contract for carrying the mail for two years, then moved back to Losantville, where he still retained property and there went into the grocery business, remaining in the same until November, 1884, when he was burned out. He had a small amount of insurance on his store, which he invested in ten acres, which he sold and bought six acres adjoining his son's property. In 1896 his wife died and he sold his land and went to live with his son, where he still lives. His family consisted of five children, namely: Sarah Ann, Andrew Warren, Celia Francis, Phoebe Jane and Jesse E., all now deceased but the subject of this sketch.

Jesse E. McCollum received a common school education and remained with his parents until he was of age. While at Hagerstown he learned the carriage maker's trade, at which he worked until 1887, then bought forty acres in Nettle Creek township, later selling same and bought sixty acres adjoining; twenty acres of the latter was in timber; this he subsequently cleared. On this sixty acres was a four-room cottage and a small barn. He paid forty dollars an acre for this land. He has improved it in every way, drains, ditches, tiling, good fences, and has built a modern home, barn, cribs, granaries, hog houses, etc. He has two driven wells, and today his property is well worth one hundred and fifty dollars per acre. He carries on general farming and stock raising, making a specialty of raising pure-bred Duroc-Jersey hogs for the market and has quite a reputation for his fine stock, and his hogs find a very ready sale owing to their superior quality. Politically, he is a Republican, and in religious matters is a Methodist.

Mr. McCollum was married on January 1, 1889, to Sarah Catherine Routh, a daughter of Joseph and Mary Routh, the mother a native of Randolph county, Mr. Routh having been among the early settlers here. They spent their lives on a farm and are now both deceased.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McCollum, Lona Cleo, whose birth occurred May 20, 1892, is teaching school in Losantsville and is making her home with her parents; Frank Lincoln, born on February 12, 1901, is attending school and works on the home farm in summer.

Mr. and Mrs. McCollum have accumulated sufficient means through their former industry to be enabled now to take life easy, and they take pleasure in ministering to our subject's father's every want; he is now ninety-three years old and is one of our grand old men, beloved by all who know him.

EDWARD A. EVANS.

Success is achieved only by the exercise of certain distinguishing qualities and it can not be retained without effort. Those by whom great epoch changes have been made in any field of endeavor began early in life to prepare themselves for their chosen arena of activity, and it was only by the most strenuous and persistent application that they were enabled to surmount the usual obstacles on life's highway and attain the heights aspired to by many but reached by few. Such lives are always an inspiration to others who are less courageous and prone to permit discouraging situations thwart them in their attempts to reach the goal of their ambitions. One of the men of Randolph county who has forged ahead despite obstacles and is accomplishing good both for himself and others is Edward A. Evans, popular school teacher, at this writing in charge of the Deerfield schools.

Mr. Evans was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, near Arlington, May 26, 1878. He is a son of Samuel and Amanda (Beachler) Evans, whose family consisted of four children, namely: Edward A., of this review, is the eldest; Ward, a merchant at Deerfield Station, this county, and who formerly engaged in farming in Ward township, married Goldie Jelleson, and they have two children; Emma, of Ridgeville, Randolph county, married Warren Crumb, who is engaged in merchandising; Albert, who was born in 1897, lives at home in Saratoga, this county. Samuel Evans, the father, was born in the famous Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, where he spent his earlier years and was educated in the common schools. He came to Ohio October 15, 1866, and engaged in farming in Montgomery county a number of years, finally coming to Randolph county, Indiana, where he continued farming successfully until some time ago, when he retired from active life, and is now living quietly in his pleasant home in Saratoga. During the Civil war he cast his fortunes with the Confederacy and served galiantly as a soldier under Gen. Jubal Early, seeing much hard service. His father was also a native of Virginia and his death occurred in 1862. The Beachlers were a Pennsylvania family, but the mother of our subject was born in Ohio.

Edward A. Evans was young in years when he accompanied his parents from Ohio to Randolph county, Indiana, and here he grew to manhood on the home farm, where he worked when not a student in the common schools. Later he attended the Normal at Ridgeville, also the State Normal schools at Danville and Terre Haute. When but a boy he decided upon a teacher's career and thus well qualified himself for same. He began teaching in Ward township, Randolph county, in 1900, and has been teaching in the grades in this county ever since and is now one of our best known and and most successful educators, his services being in great demand. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Evans married on July 19, 1913, Mrs. Della Gault, a daughter of William Jennings, a farmer of Randolph county, where Mrs. Evans grew to womanhood and was educated. She first married Milton Gault, by which union one child was born, Delbert Gault, a very promising youth.

CHRISTOPHER EBY CHENOWETH.

Longfellow, one of America's wisest men, said, "The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well and doing well whatever you do, without any thought of fame." Illustrative of this sentiment has been the life of Christopher Eby Chenoweth, formerly a grain dealer, but now an enterprising merchant of Spartanburg, Randolph county. It is evident that he has done well whatever he has turned his attention to and therefore success has attended his efforts all through his career.

Mr. Chenoweth was born in Greensfork township, this county, December 23, 1854. He is a son of William Columbus Chenoweth and Hannah (Bowen) Chenoweth. The father was born in Carroll county, Maryland, April 11, 1829, and was a son of William and Ketura (Murray) Chenoweth. The birth of William Chenoweth occurred in October, 1802, also in Carroll county, Maryland. There he grew up and engaged in farming until the fall of 1838 when he removed to Darke county, Ohio, and in 1840 came on to Randolph county, Indiana, and located in Greensfork township, where he bought land. He had previously been in the county and had entered about three hundred and fifteen acres of land. Here he spent the remainder of his life engaged in general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. Politically he was first a Whig then a Republican. His death occurred in the autumn of 1876. His wife was born in 1806, in Carroll county, Maryland, where she grew to womanhood and there married. Her death occurred in 1893 at the advanced age of eighty-seven years.

William C. Chenoweth, father of our subject, grew up on the farm and he received such educational advantages as the schools of those early days offered. He has devoted his life to farming and stock raising, but retired from active work in 1895. Politically he is a Republican, fraternally a Mason, and religiously a member of the Christian church. He and Hannah Bowen were married in December, 1849. She was a daughter of Squire Bowen aand her death occurred in January, 1855. In 1856 Mr. Chenoweth married Mary Jane Sater, whose death occurred in September, 1903. To his second union the following children were born: Julia is the wife of J. I. Thomas, of Lynn; Emma is the wife of Fred Horn, of Washington township; Sadie is the wife of Elmer Hodgins, of Wayne county; Laura is the wife of Charles Skinner, of Modoc, Indiana; Bertha is the wife of Prof. Charles Mann, of Lynn.

To the first marriage of William C. Chenoweth were born besides the immediate subject of this sketch, William Henry and James B., both of whom live in Lynn, this county, and Hannah, whose death occurred January 6, 1855.

Christopher E. Chenoweth was but two weeks old when his mother died and his grandparents took him to raise. He received a common school education and spent two summers in the Valparaiso Normal School. He then took charge of the books and clerked for John Hill, a merchant of Spartanburg, with whom he remained eight years, giving his employer eminent satisfaction, in the meantime learning the ins and outs of the mercantile business which stood him well in hand later in life. After leaving the store of Mr. Hill, our subject, in company with N. Anderson, built an elevator at Crete and was in the grain business there four years, meeting with a large measure of success. He gave up this line of endeavor on account of failing health and worked at carpentering for two years, his health being restored the meantime. In 1893 he opened a general store in Spartanburg, which he has continued to conduct to the present time with ever increasing success, enjoying a large trade with the surrounding country, and always carrying a large and carefully selected stock of goods, and his honest and courteous dealings with his hundreds of customers has won their confidence and good will.

Politically Mr. Chenoweth is a Republican and religiously is a Methodist. In 1910 he was appointed county commissioner to fill out a term of office vacated by Charles C. Bowen, and in the autumn of that year he was elected to this office, the duties of which he discharged to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Chenoweth was married in September, 1883, to Margaret Buckley, who was born in Preble county, Ohio, December 25, 1861. She is a daughter of Cornelius and Sarah Buckley. Five children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Sylvia died when seven and one-half years old; Edwin, born August 5, 1885, is in the store with his father; Leo, born July 28, 1889, is also in his father's store; Glen, born August 8, 1894, is teaching school in Greensfork township, this county; Gail, born September 2, 1897, is attending school at this writing.

WILLIAM L. CHENOWETH.

No state in the Union can boast of a more heroic band of pioneers than Indiana. In their courage, intelligence, capacity and loyalty to the right they had no superiors. Most of them came from that portion of the original Colonial states lying on a parallel with her, and in their daring and heroism they were equal to the Missouri and California argonauts. Their privations, hardships and earnest labors have resulted in establishing one of the foremost commonwealths in America, and one which still has great possibilities before it. Members of this worthy band were the Chenoweths, William L. Chenoweth, agriculturist of Wayne township, Randolph county, being one of the best known of the present generation.

Mr. Chenoweth was born in Greensfork township, Randolph county, April 26, 1867. He is a son of John T. Chenoweth, who was born in 1826 in Maryland, where he spent his boyhood and was educated, and from which state he removed to Randolph county, Indiana, with his parents in 1840, and here he spent the rest of his life engaged in farming. He was three times married, first, to Rhoda Parker, in 1847, and they had one son, Samuel J., of Martinsville, Indiana; second, to Hester Ramsey, in 1852, and they had one daughter, Clara, now deceased; and third, to Emily S. Lawrence, in 1859. He was the father of eleven children. He was a Republican and a Methodist. He was one of the most successful men of affairs in his locality and was highly respected by all who knew him. He was assessor of both Greensfork and Wayne townships, and also served three years as commissioner of Randolph county. Three of his brothers were soldiers in the Union army, Benjamin F., who served in the Fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, had a finger shot off, and was discharged June 22, 1863; George W., who was a member of the Fifth-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was taken prisoner, but released on parole at Richmond, Kentucky, August 20, 1862; he was wounded at Thompson's Hill, near Grand Gulf, Mississippi, May 1, 1863, and died May 14, 1863, of his wounds; Joshua B. joined the Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, as a recruit.

The Chenoweth family held a large and interesting reunion August 26, 1882, at the old homestead, near Arba, Randolph county, Indiana. The family are numerous and widespread, and wherever they have dispersed they are known as enterprising, honest and capable people. The mother of the subject of this sketch was Emily S. Lawrence before her marriage. She was born near Columbus, Ohio, in 1832, and she is still living, making her home with her daughter in Winchester, being now eighty-two years old. Three of her sons and one daughter are living, namely: William L., of this sketch; John F., of Nebraska; Edwin G., of Blue Island, Illinois; Mrs. Nora Rowe, of Winchester. William Chenoweth, our subject's paternal grandfather, was born in Maryland, and he died in 1876, at the age of seventy-four years, in Randolph county, Indiana, where he had lived and farmed since 1840. He entered land from the government here, which he improved and established the future home of the family. Here he endured the usual privations and hardships of those who first braved the frontier, was accustomed to the toils and labors of the backwoods. His wife was Keturah Murray, and she died on the old homestead here in June, 1893. They were buried in Arba cemetery. They were worthy Christian people. Abram I. Chenoweth, the first known of this family, emigrated from England to America in 1720.

William L. Chenoweth grew to manhood on the home farm and received his education in the common schools, and he began life for himself when only seventeen years of age, and has followed general farming ever since. He first rented his father's farm, and in 1895 purchased the farm of one hundred and thirty-four acres, which he now owns and which he has kept in splendid shape and on which he is making a good living. Politically, he is a Republican, and he belongs to the Society of Friends. He was road supervisor one term.

Mr. Chenoweth was married February 23, 1891, to Lilly A. Cox, who was born in White River township, Randolph county, April 17, 1869, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the public schools. She is a daughter of William M. Cox, a farmer and also a minister in the Friends church, and did a great deal of good, holding meetings at different places. His death occurred in 1901. The mother is still living in White River township. She was known in her maidenhood as Mary Woodard.

To Mr. and Mrs. William L. Chenoweth these children have been born: Ethelyn M., born January 7, 1892, was educated in the Winchester high school and two years in DePauw University, and is now teaching in Wayne township; Carl W., born October 4, 1894, was educated in the Winchester high school and attended Purdue University at Lafayette two years; he is also teaching in Wayne township; Esther M., born February 2, 1897, is attending school in her home community.

JAMES C. KNOX.

The life history of James C. Knox, farmer, painter, stone mason, one of Randolph county's honored pioneer citizens, would indicate that he is the possessor of sterling qualities that cannot help winning in any vocation, if back of them is an indomitable courage, as seems to have been the case in this instance, and he has labored to goodly ends, ever keeping the interests of his neighbors and the locality in general before him while working to advance himself; therefore, he has played well his role in the local drama of civilization. He is one of the gallant veterans of the Union army, having gladly sacrificed much, like many legions of brave comrades, "in order that the nation might live." Thus many reasons might be advanced why Mr. Knox is justly entitled to mention in the history of this, one of the most thriving of the counties of the commonwealth of Indiana.

Mr. Knox was born on a farm in Pitt county, North Carolina, May 7, 1833, and he is therefore nearing his eighty-first birthday, but is exceptionally strong for one so advanced in years. He is a son of Hosea and Clementine (Evans) Knox. Hosea Knox was born in Pitt county, North Carolina, also, and there he grew to manhood and married Clementine Evans, also a native of that section of Dixie land, and there they established their home, but emigrated overland about 1838 to Randolph county, Indiana, and here purchased eighty acres of land on which he farmed nearly until his death. On this place James C. Knox grew to manhood, he having been five years old when brought here by his parents. He helped reclaim the virgin soil from the wild state in which most of the land hereabout was at that early day, some seventy years ago, and he received a meager education in the old-time schools. When the Civil war began he enlisted in Company I, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, but a spell of fever prevented his being sworn in and upon his recovery he found that the company was full and he was sworn in as a member of Company I, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Volunteer Infantry. This Indiana regiment, as a whole, did garrison and guard duty and helped repel Morgan's raid. While in the service he was again attacked by fever and spent some time in a hospital. He was honorably discharged July 17, 1865.

After his return from the army Mr. Knox took up farming, later house painting which he followed for a period of twenty-two years, was for a long time a contractor in brick mason work and also did stone masonry, and he made a success of all three vocations and finally retired practically from active life some ten years ago. From early manhood Mr. Knox was a teacher of vocal music, which he followed a great many years, and was very successful in his work.

Politically he is Independent, and is also liberal in his religious views. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he has been past grand, and is also a member of the Encampment, and the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Knox was married on February 15, 1855, to Catherine Armstrong, a native of Ireland, born June 8, 1835, and she is a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Valentine) Armstrong. She was four years old when she was brought by her parents to the United States in 1839. The family first settled in Pennsylvania, where they remained until 1850 when they came on to Randolph county, located on a farm and here the parents spent the rest of their lives. To Mr. and Mrs. Knox only one child was born, Columbus C. Knox, who died when five years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Knox are among our best known and most highly esteemed pioneer citizens, for they are honest, neighborly and hospitable.

AUGUSTUS R. BUTLER.

One of the most enterprising of the present generation of farmers of Randolph county is Augustus R. Butler, of West River township. He has believed from the outset of his career that "The wisdom of yesterday is sometimes the folly of today," and that while the methods of our grandfathers in tilling the soil were all right in their day, yet in the twentieth century we are compelled to adopt new methods and farm along different lines, in view of the fact that conditions of climate, soil, grains; in fact, many things have changed since the days of the first settlers. Mr. Butler has been a close observer of modern methods and is a student at all times of whatever pertains to his chosen life work, and he has therefore met with encouraging success all along the line, and, judging from his past record, he will undoubtedly yet achieve much in future years, taking his place among the leading agriculturists in a county noted for its fine farms and adroit husbandmen.

Mr. Butler was born on the old homestead in the above named township and county, August 3, 1852, and he has had the privilege of spending his life "under the roof that heard his earliest cry." He is a son of William and Thirza (Rosser) Butler, and was one of four children, namely: John W. died when eighteen years old; Elizabeth, widow of Levi Johnson, is living with our subject; Docia C. is the widow of William M. Botkin, is now sixty-eight years old, and is the mother of three children; Augustus R., of this sketch, is the youngest of the family. The father was born in Campbell county, Virginia, where he spent his earlier years, and removed with his family to West River township, Randolph county, Indiana, in 1847, and here he established himself on a farm and became an influential citizen, and here he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1885. The mother of our subject was a native of Virginia. Her father was Capt. John Rosser, and her brother, Thomas L. Rosser, was a general in the Confederate army. The death of the mother of our subject occurred in December, 1898.

Augustus R. Butler grew up on the home farm and he received his education in the rural district schools. He was married on December 3, 1874, to Flora C. Hunt, a daughter of William S. Hunt, of West River township, where Mrs. Butler grew to womanhood and was educated. She was one of twelve children.

Two children have been born to our subject and wife, Cecil A., who died at the age of thirty years, left a widow, Mrs. Lelah (Bedford) Butler; Docia E. married John C. Hardwick, and they have two children, Ruby Marie and Ralph Butler.

Mr. Butler has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising on the old home place, which consists of one hundred and sixty acres and which is one of the most productive farms in the township and which he has kept well improved and well cultivated, and he has also kept the buildings in good repair. He keeps an excellent grade of live stock and is one of our most energetic farmers.

Politically, Mr. Butler is a Republican, and in religious matters is a member of the Methodist church.

HEZEKIAH FOWLER.

The Fowlers have borne splendid reputations in both Randolph county, Indiana, and Darke county, Ohio, being well and favorably known in each, for they have not only been industrious and honorable in their every-day lives but have been public-spirited and have done what they could in furthering the interests of their respective communities. One of the best known members of the family is Hezekiah Fowler, a farmer of Wayne township.

Mr. Fowler was born in Darke county, Ohio, June 10, 1853. He is a son of Hanson Fowler, who was also born in Darke county, December 14, 1823, and there he grew to manhood, received his education and taught several terms of school in the pioneer days of that county, in the days when the teachers "boarded around" with the patrons of the school. He was quite a hunter and killed many a deer. He eventually moved to Jackson township, Randolph county, and was trustee of the township for several terms. He is still living at the advanced age of ninety years. He has a good memory and talks most interestingly of the early days. He married Sarah Livengood, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry; her death occurred in 1859. His father, Hezekiah Fowler, was a native of Maryland, from which state he moved to Darke county, Ohio, among the first settlers and there spent the rest of his life, his death resulting from an injury received by falling from a building. He was sixty-four years old. He entered land from the government, a part of his land now being within the city limits of Union City. The origin of the name Fowler is traced back to the days of the old Norman kings when they guarded jealously their deer in their private game preserves, and those appointed to watch their game were known as fowlers, hence the surname Fowler, Fugelere in the Anglo-Saxon and Vogeler in German, vogel being the German for bird. The surname has been variously spelled Fowlere, Foweler, Fowilar, Fowlar, Fowieler and Fowiler. Fowler has been the common orthography since about the middle of the seventeenth century. The first of the name of whom there is any authentic record is Sir Richard Fowelere or le Fowlere of Foxley. He accompanied Richard Coeur de Leon to the Holy Land on one of the crusades. Henry Fowlere, of Foxley, was in the retinue of Henry V, at Agincourt, and his son William married the daughter of the "clerk of the Green Cloth," of one of the English kings. Edward Fowlere, who was gentleman of the bed chamber to Edward VI, entertained Queen Katherine of Aragon at his castle. The wife of Roger Fowlere was Cecelia, sister of Rowland Reed, chaplain to Henry VIII, who performed the marriage ceremony between the king and Anne Boleyn. William Fowler, of the Willshire family, who is sometimes called Sir William, although there seems to be no authority for the title, was one of the poets of the court of James VI of Scotland, before his accession to the throne of England as James I. He became private secretary and "master of requests" to the Queen. When Prince Henry was baptized, the pageants exhibited were by the king committed to the Lord of Findores, and to "Mr. William Fowler," and a description of "these rare shows and singlar inventions" was published. William's sister, Susanna, married Sir John Drummond, gentleman usher of Black Rod. They were the parents of the celebrated poet Drummond. William Fowler, one colonist, had the honor of being designated "Mr.," a great mark of distinction in olden days, and he was also one of the church at New Haven in 1637 and the first magistrate of the town. Phillip of Ipswich, Massachusetts, 1634, is another early settler, and Henry Fowler was a Rhode Island pioneer. A scion of the Fowler family whose muscle brought him fame which has lasted to this day, was Sergeant Jonathan Fowler, of Connecticut. He was a giant in size, seven feet tall, and wonderful are the stories told of his contests with the beasts of the forests, and with wrestlers from different parts of the country who tested his strength and always to their discomfiture. His fame was spread abroad, and so pleased was George II, that one of his subjects had performed such remarkable feats of valor that he had a painting made of him in the act of killing a bear. This painting, the skin of the animal and the pine knot with which the beast was slain, are said to be preserved in the British museum. Whether this is fact or fiction, stories of Jonathan Fowler's wonderful achievements are still told in the Connecticut valley. His son, Israel, inherited his great strength. Once, when on picket guard during the Revolutionary war, Israel Fowler was surprised by two British soldiers. He grasped them about the waist, one in each hand, and carried them to General Putnam's headquarters. "They scratched and bit and pulled my hair but they had to come," he remarked.

One branch of the Fowler family settled in Virginia, and for military service in the war for independence, William Fowler received a grant of forty thousand acres of land in the Old Dominion. The blazon of the arms is asure on a chevron between three lions, passant quadrant or as many crosses, formes sable; crest, an owl argent ducella gorged. This is the coat armor of Phillip of Ipswich, Colonist, and may indicate that he was a descent of the Crusader who was with Coeur de Leon, for these were the arms granted him. As Sir Richard's vigilance at the siege of Acre defeated nocturnal attempts of the infidels, the owl seemed a most appropriate cognizance. "Sapiens qui vigilat" is the motto used by one branch of the family, and an appropriate one for this coat-of-arms.

Hezekiah Fowler, the immediate subject of this sketch, grew to manhood in Darke county, Ohio, and there received a common school education, also attended the Normal at Ada, Hardin county, that state, two terms, and he began life for himself at a teacher, which he followed seven years in the district schools of his native county, farming in the summer months in the meantime. He remained on the home farm until he was married, then commenced farming for himself, although as a teacher he had been most successful, but finally tired of the confinement of the school room. He rented land for seven years after his marriage, and in 1890 bought the farm of eighty-five acres where he now resides in Wayne township, Randolph county, Indiana, and is successfully engaged in general farming, keeping a good grade of live stock and his land well cultivated. Politically, he is a Republican, and is a member of the advisory board of his township. He belongs to the National Horse Thief Detective Association.

Mr. Fowler was married on September 20, 1883, to Margaret Jennie Wilson, who was born in Warren county, Ohio, February 14, 1861. She is a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Davis) Wilson, farmers of Greene county, Ohio, during the generation that is past, the death of Mr. Wilson having occurred September 18, 1904, the mother of Mrs. Fowler surviving until January 29, 1905. Mrs. Fowler was educated in the district schools of Greene and Montgomery counties, Ohio, and finished at the Normal at Lebanon, that state. She taught school two terms.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fowler: Margaret Gertrude, born in Darke county, Ohio, September 24, 1884, was educated in the common schools and graduated at the high school in Union City, later from the Normal State College, at Oxford, Ohio, in 1908, received subsequently the degree of Bachelor of Arts from Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, in 1912, having made an excellent record in all the above named institutions. She has taught three terms of school, and since her graduation has taught two years in Hartwell school, fifth grade, taught one year in Wayne township, Central school, the first term of school in the new building in 1912. She taught mathematics and botany. Mary Mildred, second daughter of our subject, was born in Randolph county, Indiana, October 26, 1888, was educated in the district schools, and was graduated from the high school at Union City. She taught three terms of school, and at this writing is in her last year in Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, specializing in the liberal arts. Ethel May, third of our subject's children, was born in Randolph county May 18, 1892, was educated in the home schools and was graduated from the high school at Union City in 1911; she then took a normal course in Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, and also studied at the Angola Tri-State College of Indiana. She has taught two years in the schools of Wayne township. Opal Agnes, youngest of our subject's children, was born in Randolph county May 7, 1902, and is in her seventh grade in school. These children were given every advantage possible, and, being good students and talented, have become highly educated and cultured and are popular with a wide circle of friends of the best class of people in the county.

THOMAS C. PEACOCK.

Fame may look to the clash of resounding arms for its heroes; history's pages may be filled with the record of the deeds of the so-called great who have deluged the world with blood, destroyed kingdoms, created dynasties and left their names as plague spots upon civilization's escutcheon; the poet may embalm in deathless song the short and simple annals of the poor; but there have been comparatively few to sound the praise of the brave and sturdy pioneer who, among the truly great and noble is certainly among the deserving of at least a little space on the category of the immortals. To him more than to any other is civilization indebted for the brightest jewel in its diadem, for it was he that blazed the way and acted as vanguard for the mighty army of progress that within the past three-quarters of a century has conquered Indiana's wilderness and transformed it into one of the best and most enlightened of the commonwealths of America's domain.

The Peacocks are a pioneer family, and the name has stood for progress in Randolph county for many decades, one of the well known members being Thomas C. Peacock, a farmer of Wayne township. He was born in this township and county April 13, 1851. He is a son of William Peacock, who was born October 10, 1818, and spent his life engaged in farming, and died January 3, 1907. He married Mary Thomas, who was born August 22, 1817, and died March 8, 1903. They were born in Wayne county, and both represented frontier families. Here they grew to maturity, received such educational advantages as the old-time schools afforded, and were married in 1840, and at once took up their abode in Randolph county, locating in the wilderness. Mr. Peacock followed teaming for several years in his earlier life, hauling produce to Cincinnati and bringing goods back with him, thus being away from home a great deal, and in the nights that he was absent the young wife would barricade the door of her lonely cabin as best she could against the wolves and other wild beasts. The paternal grandfather, Amos Peacock, was born in 1787. He married Hannah Hill, who was born in 1793, both being natives of Randolph county, North Carolina. Owing to the large number of early settlers from that county to this section of Indiana, Randolph county, this state was named for the one in the old Tar state of the same name. Amos Peacock was one of these early emigrants, making the long journey from the far southland here in 1831, finding here only a vast wilderness, with no clearings. Elijah Peacock, a twin brother of Elisha Peacock, is the younger of nine children and the only survivor. He owns and occupies the old homestead, where he was born, and which has been in the family since 1818. Elijah Peacock was born January 28, 1831. He married Agnes S. Brown, who was born in Cheltman, England, January 16, 1837. Seven children were born to them, six of whom are living. The death of the mother occurred April 1, 1911. The children are: Amos H., born September 1, 1854; Frances Eleanor, born October 28, 1857; Charlton Alva, born December 15, 1862; Joseph C., born October 20, 1864; Charlotte Eudora, born December 12, 1868; Corella Belle, born February 1, 1872; Lilla Alta, born February 14, 1876. Charlotte Eudora married Lilburn Stanley, and her death occurred in 1902. She had no children. The father of Amos Peacock was Abram Peacock. He was twice married, his second wife being Anna Joy.

Thomas C. Peacock grew to manhood in his native locality and received a common school education. He has always followed farming, and at the age of twenty-one began life for himself. His noble wife has been of great assistance to him. They have reared and educated their children in good shape, and have a fine farm of one hundred acres, which, with the exception of a small competence from their parents, our subject and wife have made themselves. They have a comfortable home and are highly respected in the community. Politically, our subject is Independent, and he is a Quaker in his religious faith.

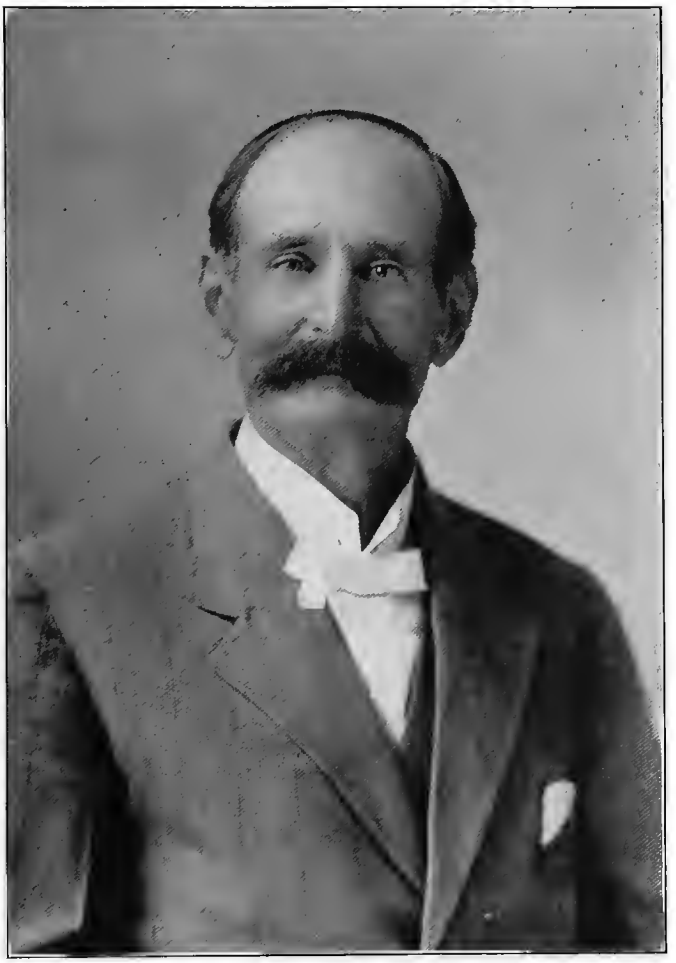
Thomas C. Peacock was married October 19, 1872, to Martha Alice Shultz, who was born in Spartanburg, Indiana, August 16, 1854. She was reared and educated in Randolph county, where her people have long been well and favorably known. A record of the Shultz family is found on another page of this volume.

To Mr. and Mrs. Peacock the following children have been born: Harry, born September 18, 1873, married Sarah Alice Brumfield in 1897; he was educated in the common schools of his township and was graduated from the Winchester high school, later taking a business course at Richmond, Indiana; he had five children, Pauline died at the age of four years; Frances W., Ruth Olive, Ralph C. and Virgil Eugene. Indianola, the second child of our subject, was born June 14, 1875, was educated in the common schools and graduated from the Winchester high school, also went nearly three years to the State Normal at Terre Haute, when her health failed and she was obliged to give up her work, but later she taught school three years in Jackson and Wayne townships; on November 16, 1898, she married J. W. Harris, and in November, 1907, they removed to Kings county, California, where he is engaged in the contracting business, and is also township judge; they have no children. Ethel Peacock, born September 6, 1880, was educated in the common schools and the Harrisville high school; she married Harry G. Kemp, May 3, 1906, and they have one child, Ronald C., who was born February 23, 1908. Elsie Peacock, born July 17, 1883, was educated in the common schools, and then attended Deaconess Hospital in Indianapolis for three years, preparing to be a trained nurse, and was graduated in 1909; she is single and is making her home in Indianapolis. Bernice May Peacock, born May 21, 1892, was educated in the common schools and the Winchester high school, but was compelled to give up schooling on account of failing health; she married James Blaine Clark June 26, 1912.

JOHN D. MARKER.

The veterans of the great Union army that saved the nation from disruption during its darkest period should be justly proud of what they have done for succeeding generations, having left an inheritance of which we should be very grateful; indeed, we owe them a debt of gratitude which we can never repay. Now that "the sunset of life" is upon them, and the "grand army of the republic" is continually marching across the "great divide" to join the phantom army in the Silent Land, let us of the aftermath accord them every courtesy and honor, and prove our gratitude for what they have achieved while we have the opportunity. One of this worthy number is John D. Marker, of Randolph county, a farmer and gardener of Spartanburg.

Mr. Marker was born in Preble county, Ohio, on a farm, May 14, 1843.



JOHN D. MARKER.

He is a son of Paul and Isabelle (West) Marker. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1804 and when a boy he came with his parents to Ohio, the father, Lewis Marker, entering one hundred and sixty acres of land in Darke county. The elder Marker was a soldier in the war of 1812. Paul Marker devoted his active life to farming and gunsmithing, having had a natural mechanical gift which he developed until he was quite a skilled workman. His death occurred in 1897.

John D. Marker spent his early life in Ohio and there received a fairly good education in the common schools. He proved his patriotism by enlisting in the Federal army shortly after the commencement of the great war of the Rebellion as a member of Company C, Thirteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, which he joined in May, 1861. He was sent at once to the front and was in several minor engagements in Virginia, later fighting at Perryville, Kentucky, and in the great battles of Shiloh, Stone River, Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, also those in the Atlanta campaign under Sherman. He then went with the army to Nashville, Tennessee, under Thomas and helped repulse Hood. After serving for some time in eastern Tennessee he was sent to Texas, and was mustered out of the service and honorably discharged on December 5, 1865. He veteranized at Chattanooga in 1863. He was wounded at Shiloh when a Minie ball struck him on the right cheek, coming out near the neck. He was also wounded at Stone River, a bullet striking him in the left leg, and the same kind of a missile struck him in the left shoulder at Chickamauga. The last wound has given him more or less trouble ever since.

After his career as a soldier, which was a most faithful and gallant one, Mr. Marker returned home. He spent one year in school, then took up the lightning rod business which he followed for five years. For many years he has followed gardening in the summer and selling trees in the winter. He has been very successful and owns three farms east of Spartanburg, one of forty acres, another of eighty acres and a third of three acres. His land is well-improved, properly fertilized and very productive.

Politically Mr. Marker is a Democrat, and in religious matters is a member of the Christian church. He belongs to the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic in which he has held all the offices.

Mr. Marker was married in 1869 to Martha Nail, a native of Shelbyville, Indiana, and to this union one child was born, a daughter, June Marker, who married a Mr. Blackman and they live in Oklahoma. The wife and mother passed to her rest in 1873, after four years of married life, she being then a young woman. Our subject was again married in 1897 to Sarah J.

Moore, who was born in Randolph county, in July, 1840. By a previous marriage to Wm. Moore, Mrs. Marker became the mother of two children, viz.: John, deceased, and Dora Moore, who married J. O. Wise, he being now deceased.

JOHN BURROUGHS.

The early pioneers of Randolph county, having blazed the path of civilization to this part of the state, finished their labors and passed from the scene, leaving the country in possession of their descendants and to others who came at a later period and builded on the foundation which they laid so broad and deep. Among the former class was the well-remembered farmer and influential citizen whose name forms the caption of this biographical memoir and also his worthy father before him. The name of John Burroughs ever stood for industry in connection with general farming and for good conduct in all the relations of life, and is deserving of a place in the history of the locality where he so long lived and for the general upbuilding of which he always did what he could.

Mr. Burroughs was born in Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, in 1838. He was a son of John and Martha (Chambers) Burroughs. The father was born on February 9, 1793, in Virginia. The mother was born on May 8, 1799, in North Carolina. They left their homes in Dixieland in a very early day and came to Indiana, locating in Randolph county in the early thirties, and here they spent the rest of their lives on a farm. They were the parents of twelve children, all of whom grew to maturity except one, John, of this memoir, being next to the youngest.

John Burroughs was reared on the home farm and he worked hard when a boy. He received his education in the rural schools of those early days. He remained on the home farm until his father's death, then bought a farm in Wayne county, Indiana, later removing to the state of Kansas, where he remained two years, then came back to Randolph county, Indiana, where he bought eighty acres, later buying forty acres more, and this land he farmed successfully as long as he was physically able, but finally his health failed, but he remained on the farm until the fall of 1909, when he bought a home in Losantville, this county, and removed thereto, but lived only a short time thereafter, his death occurring December 14, 1909.

Politically, Mr. Burroughs was a Republican, and for a number of years served his township as supervisor in a very able manner.

Mr. Burroughs was married on March 25, 1858, to Sarah J. Pollard, a daughter of Stephen and Rachel (Jordan) Pollard. The father was a native of Kentucky, but the mother was born in Wayne county, Indiana. The parents of both were early pioneer farmers. Mr. Pollard farmed all his life. He and his wife are both deceased. Their family consisted of twelve children, five sons and seven daughters, Mrs. Burroughs and her youngest sister are the only two living at this writing.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Burroughs, namely: Lilie B., born on October 9, 1861, died on October 21, 1880. She married J. N. Johnson, who is now residing on the farm of our subject's widow. One daughter was born, November 25, 1878, to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, whom they named Bessie May; she married Dr. F. E. McKinnon, a dentist of Losantville, and they have two children, Ruth and Maurice. The second child of our subject and wife, Jesse P. Burroughs, was born August 9, 1867, and he died August 22, 1892. He married Alice Hunt and to them one child was born, Cornelius Carl, whose birth occurred July 6, 1886; he married Hazel I. Burroughs (no relation), and to them two children have been born, Gladys Irene and Altie.

Mrs. Sarah J. Burroughs lives alone. She still owns the excellent farm of one hundred and twenty acres which her late husband brought up to such a high state of improvement and cultivation. She is an active worker in the Methodist church, of which she has long been a member. She is a well preserved woman, appearing much younger than her years, is cheerful and kindly and therefore has a host of warm friends. She is charitably inclined and sympathizes in a substantial manner with the needy and distressed.

JOHN R. PRICE.

Although no section of the great Hoosier state is richer in opportunities or offers greater advantages to its citizens than does Randolph county, success is not here to be obtained through desire alone, but is to be persistently worked for, there being various obstacles to be overcome just as in every country, so the idler knows nothing of the rich rewards that come to the toilers in the locality of which this history deals. John R. Price, farmer of the vicinity of Union City, is evidently entitled to rank with that class of hard-working citizens who prefer to follow the old maxim of "go it alone," rather than depend upon others to contribute to his support and progress. Having spent his entire life in this county, it is evident that he has preferred to remain at home rather than seek some mythical "better country," and here he has not only reaped the fruitage of a well-directed energy, but has so ordered his course in all the relations of life as to command the respect of all his neighbors and acquaintances.

Mr. Price was born in Randolph county, Indiana, January 3, 1869. He is a son of John Price, who was born January 5, 1826. The latter was a son of Solomon and Barbara Price, who located in Darke county, Ohio, in 1834, and from there came to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1837. They were the parents of fourteen children, seven of whom are now living. The elder Price was treasurer of the Union City and White River Turnpike Company, of which he was a heavy stockholder. He was a good business man, was highly respected by all who knew him and was one of the influential men of his day in this locality. His wife was a daughter of John Dixon.

The subject of this sketch has three brothers and three sisters, namely: Mrs. Barbara Burk, Mrs. Martha Harrison, and Mrs. Sadie Wilson; Samuel H., Robert L., and George E. Robert L. Price was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, December 25, 1859, and here he grew to manhood and received a common school education. He has been twice married, his first wife, Aseneth E. Frazier, died in 1879, leaving one son, Charles Loring Price, who has remained single, and is now living in Cincinnati, Ohio. Robert L. Price was married in January, 1886, to Constance May Euott, of French ancestry. When eighteen years old Robert L. Price left home and began life for himself. He spent twenty years in St. Louis, Missouri. He has traveled all through the southern and western states. He took his family to California and there spent about a year. He has seen a large portion of the United States and a great deal of Canada. He is a farmer, owner of a good farm of a little over one hundred and forty-six acres. He has two children by his second marriage, namely: Walter Robert, who married Edna Poffenbarger, residing in Muncie, Indiana; and Oliver Harold, who is single and living at home.

John Price, father of our subject, was born in Maryland, and he was eight years old when he came with his parents to Indiana. When but a boy he began buying unimproved land, which he would clear and trade for more land, and at his death he had accumulated six hundred and forty acres of valuable land, all improved and under cultivation. He not only farmed on an extensive scale but also dealt in livestock of all kinds and became very prosperous. His death occurred in 1898. His wife, known in her maidenhood as Sarah Dixon, died June 20, 1897.

John R. Price, our subject, grew to manhood on the home farm and received his education in the public schools of his locality. When a young man he took up farming for a livelihood and this has continued to be his vocation. He has been very successful, having worked hard and managed well. He was twenty years old when he began life for himself by operating one of his father's farms, which he continued to do until his father's death, whereupon he purchased the immediate interest of the estate, and has now a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres, which he has placed under a high state of improvement and cultivation and on which he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. He has an attractive residence and good outbuildings.

Mr. Price was married on October 2, 1887, to Nellie E. Jeffers, who was born in Danville, Hendricks county, Indiana, September 12, 1868, the daughter of E. Jeffers, who died when Mrs. Price was sixteen years old. To the union of our subject and wife the following children have been born: Clarence E., born July 4, 1888, married Ada Moore, daughter of Henan Moore, of Winchester, and they have one child, Ronald Dolphin Price, born March 1, 1912; Lottie Blanche married Daniel Clark, and to them two children were born, Bertha May, born in 1910, and Lorin, born March 25, 1912; Bertha Irene, who is a graduate of Harrisville high school of the class of 1912, married Murrell Rowe, a son of Frank Rowe; Opal Marie, born March 25, 1898; and Anna Ethel, born August 3, 1900. Leander J. Price married Ethel Welch, a daughter of Jacob Welch, and they have one child, John J., born February 2, 1913.

Politically, Mr. Price is a Republican. He belongs to the Christian church. He has been a member of the advisory board of his township for the past eight years, and his long retention would indicate satisfactory service on his part. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

CLYDE E. SHULTZ.

Among the younger generation of farmers of Wayne township, Randolph county, who is deserving of the large degree of success which has come to him is Clyde E. Shultz. He finds himself the owner of a valuable farm at an age when most tillers of the soil are just getting well started, and he is doubly entitled to congratulations when we learn that he has acquired his own property. Judging from his splendid success so early it is reasonable to predict a time when he will stand in the forefront of the agriculturists of the locality of which this history deals.

Mr. Shultz was born near Harrisville, Randolph county, November 10, 1883. He is a son of Charles F. Shultz, of Wayne township, a well known farmer, who was born in Spartanburg, Indiana, in 1858, and whose death occurred October 24, 1909. He was a man of thrift, public spirit and excellent character and popular in his community. The mother of our subject was known in her maidenhood as Orabell Kayler, who was born in Preble county, Ohio, in 1861, and her death occurred November 20, 1895. Peter M. Shultz, the paternal grandfather, was born in Highland county, Kentucky, August 16, 1833. He came to Randolph county many years ago and is at present living in Union City, at the advanced age of eighty years. He has devoted principally all his life to general farming. He is a man of fine character and worthy of the high regard in which he is held by all who know him. His wife, Julia Ann Moore, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, from which state she came with her parents when a child to Randolph county, Indiana, the long journey being made in a one-horse wagon. The family settled one mile east of what is now the village of Spartanburg, and there developed a good farm from the wilderness. The death of Mrs. Peter M. Shultz occurred in September, 1902. George W. Shultz, the paternal great-grandfather, lived in Boone county, Indiana, and was a well known pioneer citizen there. His wife was Martha Alice Shultz.

Clyde E. Shultz grew to manhood on the home farm in this county and there he assisted with the general work, and he received his education in the common schools of Wayne township, and at the tender age of sixteen years he began life for himself, farming, and he has continued this line of endeavor to the present time with ever-increasing success until he is now the owner of a valuable and well-improved farm of one hundred and sixty-eight acres in Wayne township, which is well cultivated and well stocked. He has a good dwelling and outbuildings and is carrying on the various departments of his work like an old-timer, each year finding him further advanced than the preceding.

Mr. Shultz is also engaged in operating a saw mill and devotes the greater portion of his time to this business. The mill has a capacity of about eight thousand feet per day.

Mr. Shultz was married February 27, 1902, to Blanche D. Fortenbaugh, who was born in Harrisville, Indiana, and here she grew to womanhood and received a common school education. She is a daughter of John B. and Naoma Fortenbaugh, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume.

To our subject and wife the following children have been born: Mary Agnes, born November 15, 1907; Ethel Adene, born May 15, 1910; Leah Alice, born March 7, 1913; Fred Calvin died in infancy.

Mr. Shultz is a Republican in politics. He is a member of the Masonic Order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of the Golden Eagle.

CURTIS M. SHIERLING.

In the life history of Curtis M. Shierling, farmer, of Randolph county, the gentleman whose name forms the caption of this article, we find evidence of peculiar characteristics that always make for achievement, persistency, coupled with fortitude and honorable traits, and as a result of such a life, he stands today one of the representative citizens of his township, well-known and highly respected by all.

Mr. Shierling was born in Ward township, Randolph county, November 7, 1865, and he has been content to spend his life in his native locality. He is a son of Philip and Emeline (Ford) Shierling, whose family consisted of four children, namely: Francis, who died at the age of thirty-four years, married Dora Nickey, and to them two children were born, Rosco and Almira; he was engaged in general farming in this county; Curtis M., our subject, was second in order of birth; Ida has been twice married, first to Marion Nickey, then to Richard Milo Fraze, a farmer of Ward township, and she has five sons and one daughter; Perl, who is engaged in farming in Ward township, married Stella Harshman, and to them three children have been born.

The father of the above named children was born in the state of Ohio, and the paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, born in Baden-Baden. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and there she and Mr. Shierling grew to maturity, were educated in the public schools and were married and from there they finally moved to Indiana and established the future home of the family in Randolph county.

Curtis M. Shierling grew to manhood on the home farm in this county and there he assisted with the general work during the crop seasons and he received his education in the schools of Saratoga and the high school at Winchester. He began life for himself as a general farmer and this he has continued successfully to the present time, being now owner of a finely improved and valuable farm, of one hundred and twenty-eight acres, on which is always to be seen an excellent grade of livestock and a good set of buildings.

Mr. Shierling was married April 20, 1887, to Sally Florence Crum, a daughter of John and Catherine (Brenaman) Crum, both natives of Virginia. They came to Randolph county in 1883, locating near Stone Station in Ward township, and later moved to Saratoga, where he died. He followed farming through life. They were the parents of five living children, namely: Martha Angeline; Frances Elizabeth; J. L.; Mary Ella; and Sally Florence, our subject's wife.

To Mr. and Mrs. Shierling three children have been born, namely: Roy, born November 15, 1888, lives in Bloomington, Indiana, where he is attending the State University, preparing to become a teacher, he taught two years in the Saratoga High School; Marjorie, born May 21, 1896; Reva, born December 8, 1906.

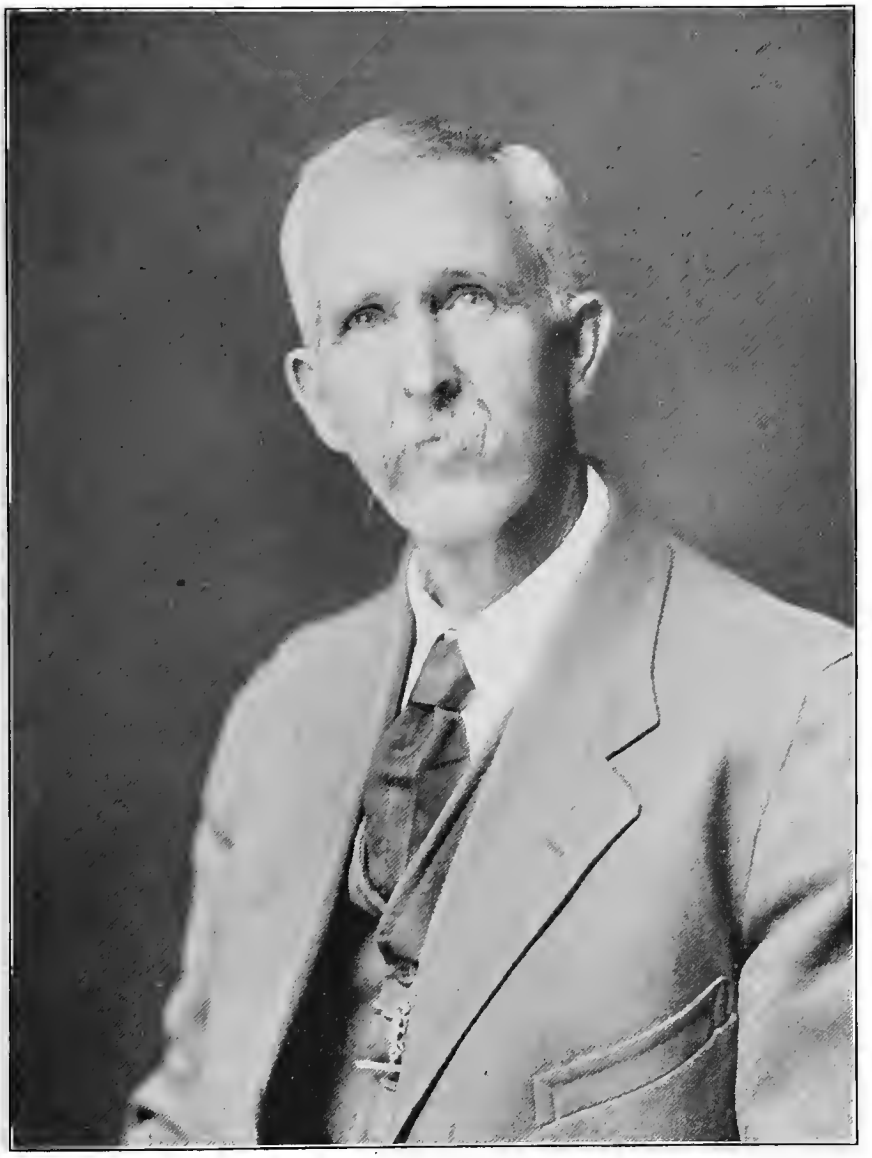
Politically Mr. Shierling is a Republican and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the United Brethren church.

JOHN WESLEY STARBUCK.

Many of the choice farms of Randolph county were made wholly by the owners thereof, not a cent having been inherited. It is also true that many of the best farms were almost wholly inherited from the parents of the present holders. It would seem at first glance that the latter owners were the ones to be congratulated, but this is not always the case, for very often in their youth they did not receive the proper training as to thrift and industry that would enable them to save and manage their large inheritance. On the contrary it may be set down as an unqualified truth that the man who by hard knocks made all his property, beginning as a poor boy, learned at the same time how to take care of it. To know how to save money, as well as to know how to make it, is of the greatest importance, in the rearing of a boy. Such training was received by John Wesley Starbuck, farmer, of Washington township. He was thrown on his own resources when of tender age and has had to "hoe his own row" through life, but he has succeeded nicely.

Mr. Starbuck was born in White River township, this county, April 2, 1855. He is a son of Cyrus and Elizabeth (Jones) Starbuck. The father was born in South Carolina, March 16, 1807. The mother was a daughter of Michael and Nancy Jones and was born near Winchester, Indiana, where she was reared. The father left the sunny South when a young man and located in Randolph county, this state, and here he met and married our subject's mother and they established their home on a farm in White River township.

MRS. JOHN W. STARBUCK.



JOHN W. STARBUCK.

John W. Starbuck had very little opportunity to attend school. When only nine years old he left home to work for his uncles, with whom he remained until he was twenty-one years of age, then began life for himself, engaging in farming which he has continued to the present time with success, being now owner of a valuable and well-kept farm of one hundred and twenty acres in Washington township. It is all under cultivation. He has a good grade of livestock and on his place is to be seen a comfortable home and convenient outbuildings. He makes a specialty of shorthorn cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs.

Mr. Starbuck was married August 2, 1879, to Sarah E. Jackson, who was born in White River township, Randolph county, October 3, 1862, and there she was reared and received a common school education. To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Robert died in infancy; Elizabeth M., born February 22, 1880, is the wife of W. Longenecker; Hattie is the wife of Clarence Engle; Roy H., born September 6, 1888, married Grace Mote of Greensfork township, and is working the home farm with his father.

Politically, Mr. Starbuck is a Republican, and he belongs to the Friends church, and is also recognized as one of the leading and progressive citizens of the county.

ALDEN J. EDWARDS.

The farms of the United States produce an annual farm value greater than any other agricultural country on the globe. The American farm is the largest, it is true, but the final test of a successful producer is net receipts per farmer, and that is in favor of the American plowman. In this class must consistently be mentioned the name of Alden J. Edwards, one of the most painstaking and therefore, most successful farmers of West River township, Randolph county, a man, now just in the prime of middle life, but who has already accomplished more than many of our farmers of much more extensive experience.

Mr. Edwards was born in the above named township and county, April 5, 1870. He is a son of G. W. and Victoria (Harris) Edwards, a well known family of this locality, which is given a separate sketch elsewhere in this volume. Our subject has one brother and one sister, the former, William Edwards, operates his father's farm; the latter, Ida, is the wife of Cliff Gordon, of West River township.

Mr. Edwards of this review was reared on the home farm where he worked hard when a boy, and he received his early education in the common schools. He began farming when a young man and this has continued to be his chief life work, and he has made a success as a general farmer and stock raiser, keeping his land well improved and well tilled. He raises a good grade of livestock and has a comfortable home. His farm is comprised of one hundred and twenty-two acres and is well located.

Mr. Edwards was married December 20, 1893, to Carrie Adamson, a native of West River township, where she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. She is a daughter of William L. Adamson, a well known farmer of West River township, who was born in this community, February 5, 1837, a son of one of our oldest settlers, Abraham and Nancy (Botkin) Adamson. William L. Adamson married Mary Stanley in 1867, a daughter of James Stanley, a farmer and merchant of Wayne county, and to these parents four children were born, namely: Willie Edgar, deceased; Carrie, wife of Mr. Edwards, of this sketch; Orrie B., a farmer of West River township; India M., wife of Charles Bales, of West River township. The father, William L. Adamson, was a soldier in the Civil War for three years and saw a great deal of hard service in the far South. He is engaged in farming in this township, owning a valuable farm of one hundred and twenty-four acres. A complete sketch of him appears on another page of this volume.

To Alden J. Edwards and wife one child has been born, Garver Hobart, born July 27, 1896.

Politically Mr. Edwards is a Republican, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

ALEN B. SLUSHER.

Alen B. Slusher was born in Randolph county, January 31, 1851, and is the son of George and Sarah (Hogston) Slusher. November 29, 1873, he was married to Sarah Wright, daughter of Isaac Wright, of White River township, and to them have been born seven children, six boys and one girl. George died in infancy as did also Joseph; John lives at Muncie and conducts a garage, his wife was Jessie Brubaker; they have no children. Will, of Montpelier, married Cora Martin and has two children, Kenneth and Lela. Francis, of Traverse City, Michigan, is successful as a beekeeper, his wife was Blanche North, and they have one child, Donald. Ambrose died at the age of three years.

The youngest of Mr. Slusher's children, Ethel Maria, was born October 10, 1897, and has begun a musical career that promises to be of remarkable brilliancy. Already she has a grasp of the most difficult compositions that indicates a profound and subtle genius at maturity. It is from such precocious people as Miss Slusher that the text books are written. She seems to grasp the range of music intuitively. Compositions embracing melody and form and the intricacies of phrasing, including motives, phrases, sections, periods and the larger divisions of subjects and episodes, are executed by her with the utmost ease and facility. And in harmony and tone coloring her execution is quite as facile as in phrasing. Miss Slusher should be one of the greatest virtuosos known in this county and doubtless will be. She has the faculties that have made such artists as Bertha Frielling, Fannie Zeisler, Katherine Goodson, Mathilde Verne and Helen Hopekirk famous. And she has the advantage of beginning at a time when the flexibility of muscle and mind is in its early stages of development. Miss Slusher is just such a prodigy as Joe Hoffman was in his boyhood days. Her intellect predominates. Her felicitous rendition of the nocturnes and dance themes of Chopin, the sonatas of Beethoven, the operas of Mozart and Donizetti and the rhapsodies of Liszt give one an idea of the scope of her powers. Even at so young an age they embrace the most difficult and beautiful in musical composition.

Six of the brothers and sisters of Alen B. Slusher are dead. Their names were William, Polly, Eliza, Anderson, Martha and Sarah. Those living are Leon, of Blackford county, a farmer; Amanda, wife of Joseph Wiest, of Peru, Indiana, a brick mason, and Henry of Randolph county, a farmer, who married Beulah Hoffman. The father and mother of Mr. Slusher came from Virginia to Indiana when this part of the country was a wilderness. Mrs. Slusher's father was a Virginian, but came here from Pennsylvania. He was married twice, and Mrs. Slusher has seven half-brothers and sisters living.

The subject of this review is a member of the Catholic church, was educated in the public schools and is a Democrat in politics. And he is true to his educational training and religious and political affiliations. Any movement pertaining to education, religion or politics excites his sincere interest. He is one of the men well up in the leadership of his party that have made Indiana a Democratic State.

WILLIAM ALBERT HERNLEY.

A painstaking twentieth century farmer of Greensfork township, Randolph county, is William Albert Hernley, a native of this locality, which may account for his ability to demonstrate to all spectators his skill in husbandry. He was reared upon the farm and from his earliest years the sight of herds of cattle, sheep, horses and other domestic animals was a daily occurrence. Youthful experiences are the most stringent, and accordingly the lessons thus taught of general farming from infancy found a secure lodgment in his understanding. No young man could have better equipment for the duties of the farm than he received. There were not only the sleek herds and the beautiful fields of growing grain but also the sound judgment and able training of his father, so it is no wonder that he has made a success of his chosen vocation and that the future promises still larger emoluments for the care and toil he is expending.

Mr. Hernley was born near the village of Farmland, Randolph county, July 22, 1881. He is a son of Amos H. and Mary C. (Griffis) Hernley, a well known family of West River township, a complete sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume, to which the reader is respectfully referred.

William A. Hernley grew to manhood on the home farm and, being a sturdy lad and having a natural bent toward husbandry, he did full share of the work about the place when growing to manhood, finding time the meanwhile to receive a practical education in the common schools of his neighborhood. He remained on the homestead until the year 1901, when on June 19th he purchased forty acres of the J. D. Bowen farm, which he operated three years, during which he got a good start, then purchased eighty acres two and one-half miles west of Spartanburg, to which he removed in August, 1906, then purchased forty acres adjoining on the west, which he owned two months, then bought six acres east and owned that two months. His next purchase was fifty acres east of the village of Crete, in August, 1911, which he owned two years, then sold out and purchased his present place of fifteen acres. He recently purchased thirty-seven acres east of his present place and now owns a total of 120 acres. He makes a specialty of raising tobacco and has a large shed in which to properly care for the same. This was erected in 1909. He has eight acres in tobacco which nets him a good annual income. He also makes a specialty of raising Duroc-Jersey and Poland-China hogs. He has kept all the land that he has owned well improved, and has done a great deal of ditching. His cozy cottage which stands on the main road was built in 1910. Politically he votes independently, and in religious matters is a member of the Christian church.

Mr. Hernley was married November 16, 1900, to Garcie M. Martin, who was born in Randolph county, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. To this union three children have been born, namely: Emma Opal, Orla Kenneth, and Olva.

CURTIS M. SPERA.

It is noticeable in all communities that some men talk a great deal while others have little to say. Curtis M. Spera, farmer, of Randolph county, is able to express himself clearly and forcefully when it is necessary to talk, and is also well qualified to carry into execution his thoughts, and he is regarded as one of the strong factors in a community where there are many men of sound sense and ripe judgment. He has devoted his life to farming and has met with encouraging success all along the line as a result of his ability to see quickly what was needed and to do the right thing at the right time. He believes in adopting the latest and most approved methods in farming, believing it just as necessary as in any other line of business.

Mr. Spera was born in Portage county, Indiana, April 21, 1857. He is a son of George and Elizabeth (Shook) Spera, and was one of a family of four children, namely: Frank is deceased; Wilson, who is a carpenter and builder of Winchester, married Ella Brouse, and they have five children; Martha, who married B. F. Boltz, employed at the novelty works, in Winchester, has five children; Curtis M., of this sketch.

George Spera, father of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania where he spent his earlier years, and from which state he removed with his father to Ohio in an early day, and in 1859 he came to Indiana where he established his future home. During the Civil War he served gallantly for the Union, in the Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, remaining at the front three years. He saw much hard service and was once wounded. After the war he returned to Indiana and resumed farming. Both the Speras and Shooks are of German descent. The mother's family also removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio and later to Indiana. The death of the father occurred at the advanced age of eighty-seven years.

Curtis M. Spera grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools. He began farming early in life and this has continued to be his vocation. He is now owner of a finely improved and productive farm of one hundred acres on which he carries on general farming and stock raising. He has a good home and convenient outbuildings.

Mr. Spera was married May 23, 1878, to Samantha Mullen, a daughter of Thomas Mullen, who died in July, 1911. He was a farmer by occupation and spent the latter years of his life in Winchester. He was twice married and had four children by his first wife; his union with his second wife resulted in the birth of eight children, an equal number of sons and daughters.

To Mr. and Mrs. Spera three children have been born, namely: Frank, born March 3, 1879, died October 13, 1898; Blanch married Reed DeVoss, a farmer near Fairview, Indiana, and they have two sons, Paul, born October 9, 1901, and Joseph, born October 31, 1907. Gladys, the youngest child of our subject and wife, married Carl Warren, a farmer near Saratoga, this county; their union has been without issue.

Mr. Spera attends the Christian church. Politically he is a Republican.

JOHN C. RUBEY.

John C. Rubey, of Scotch descent, was born December 14, 1843, in Randolph county, the son of Dr. Samuel and Jane (McNulty) Rubey, who are natives of Ohio. After serving through the war in the Union army, Mr. Rubey took up farming for his life work and has heroically stuck to it unremittingly ever since. His achievements in the pursuits of agriculture are evidences of what a man can do in that line who gives his mind and time to them. He is a veteran and typical farmer, and for intelligent or scientific cultivation of the land, stands second to no one of similar calling in his county. He is one of those exceptional men who dignify a profession by adopting and pursuing it. The occupation of farming in Randolph county has been very greatly advanced by the fidelity and intelligence with which Mr. Rubey has followed it. His idea is that a man should give his time and talent to his profession, and acting upon this conviction he has demonstrated the value of it by the success he has achieved.

Mr. Rubey is one of seven children. His brothers and sister were as follows: Celestina, of Lynn, Ind., married Marcellus Brown, a farmer. They have three children. William died at the age of fifteen, and James, who farmed in Nebraska, is also dead. Joseph, of Winchester, married three times, has two children and is a retired farmer. Ambrose, of Spartanburg, is also a retired farmer with two children. Daniel, of Kansas, is a farmer and has a wife and two children.

Mr. Rubey was married in 1866 to Mary Jane Jackson, daughter of James M. Jackson. One child, Arabell, was born to them, who married I. R. Thomas, a farmer of Spartanburg, and has two children. The second wife of Mr. Rubey was Flora McClure, whom he married in 1901, she dying in 1903. April 25, 1909, he married Mrs. M. H. Rubey, nee Houghtby; she having at the time five boys and one girl. The eldest child, Hazel, was born February 10, 1887; James, a civil engineer in Duluth, was born September 2, 1889; the date of Harold's birth, a graduate of Wabash College, was July 23, 1891, and that of Reed, December 16, 1893; John, of Duluth, with the Mesaba Railroad, was born July 30, 1895, and Charles, March 31, 1897.

Mr. Rubey attends the Methodist church and is a Progressive in politics. He believes in the old religion of John and Charles Wesley but in new methods of political procedure. In the Civil War, he served in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry for one year and in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry till the close of the war. He was at Vicksburg, Black River Bridge, Thompson's Hill, Mobile and Blakely.

The father of John C. Rubey was a practicing physician in Randolph county up to the time of his death, December 30, 1857, aged forty-five years. He came to this state from Harrison county, Kentucky, when a boy. The parents of the mother of Mr. Rubey came to Indiana from Pennsylvania when she was a child and settled on the site where the village of Hill Grove, in Darke county, Ohio, was afterward built. They were pioneers and dealt with the Indians. Her grandfather was a blacksmith with Gen. Wayne when he went through this section. Mr. Rubey's ancestry on his father's side was Scotch. Two of his uncles were physicians. His mother died February 5, 1893, aged seventy-five years.

The occupations successively of soldier and farmer have the elements in them that immortalize men. When armies were needed for the defense of the republic and constitutional government, Mr. Rubey voluntarily went to the front and stayed there till the last shot was fired. That is a great record. The supreme crisis in popular government was at the time of our Civil war, and the men who responded to the call for the defense of the constitution have a more brilliant fame than the soldiers of any other nation or time. As a soldier, Mr. Rubey participated in the heroic action that preserved constitutional liberty, and in his vocation of farmer his labor is a part of the great productive energy that feeds the nation he risked his life to save.

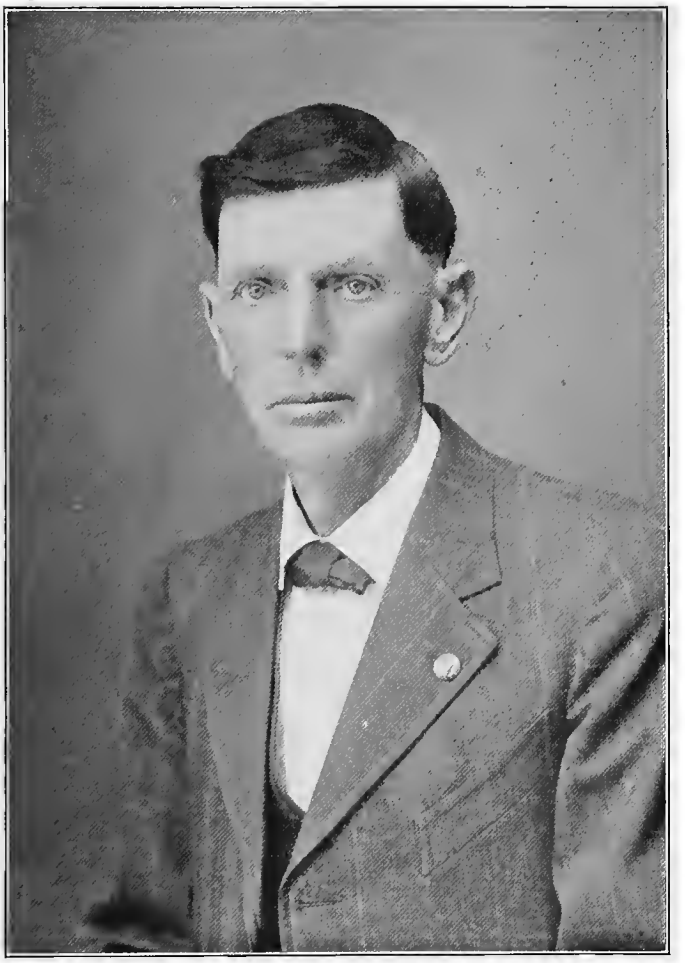
JAMES BUCHANAN JORDAN.

Few of the present day farmers of Randolph county had better equipment for their vocations than James B. Jordan received, for he had a natural liking for general husbandry to begin with and this was carefully developed by his father, one of the successful early-day tillers of the soil here. In addition to all this he received a good practical education in the common schools and in every way fitted for his future successful life upon the farm.

Mr. Jordan was born in Randolph county, Indiana, October 21, 1856. He is a son of the late Jesse Jordan, who was born in Wayne county, North Carolina, September 21, 1814. The latter was a son of Stephen and Sallie (Farmer) Jordan, and was one of the old families of the Tar state. Jesse Jordan left his native community in Dixie land when a young man and came to Randolph county, Indiana, where he bought land which he cleared and farmed the rest of his life. He was one of our early settlers and never left the farm. He prospered in the new country and at the time of his death owned a valuable farm of two hundred and forty acres. He died February 20, 1871. Politically he was a Democrat, and he belonged to the Baptist church. On July 16, 1845, he married Peninah Horn, who was born July 1, 1822. She was a daughter of Henry and Miriam (Wood) Horn. Her death occurred March 1, 1898. Seven children were born to these parents, named as follows: Sarah Elizabeth, born May 11, 1846; Isaac F., November 3, 1847, died May 23, 1913; Marcella C., October 31, 1851, died January 26, 1900; Texanna B., November 25, 1854, died February 27, 1898; James B., subject of this sketch; Dollie P., February 26, 1859; Miriam, October 16, 1862, died August 26, 1870.

Jesse, the father, having died when our subject was fourteen years of age, James B. Jordan grew up on the homestead and worked there when a boy in the summertime, attending the neighboring schools in the winter months, gaining an education by his own efforts. He began farming when a young man and this has continued to be his life work. He has always made a comfortable living and is now owner of about eighty acres of productive land, which he has cleared, ditched and developed into one of the choice farms of his neighborhood. Here he carries on general farming and raises considerable livestock for the market from year to year.



JAMES B. JORDAN.

Politically Mr. Jordan is a Democrat but he has never been very active in political affairs. He is a member of the Friends church.

Mr. Jordan was married to Ida M. Bowen, December 20, 1884. She was born in July, 1860, and is a daughter of James D. and Mary E. (Chenoweth) Bowen, an old family of this locality, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools.

Six children have been born to our subject and wife, named as follows: Jessie B. is the wife of E. H. Coffin and they live in Henry county, Indiana; James H. is farming in Greensfork township, this county; Gerald R. is at home; Henry W. is teaching school in Greensfork township; Sol B. is at home; Ralph M. is attending school at this writing.

FREDERIC KABEL.

Our attention has frequently been called of late to the alarming decrease of farm products in the United States while its population is steadily increasing. We are told that our most priceless treasure, the fertility of our soil, has been so dissipated by slipshod methods in tilling it that we are now face to face with the necessity of increasing its power to produce or else go hungry in the near future. We who would eat must get in touch with the things of earth once more as consumers if not as producers. One of the energetic farmers who seems to clearly understand present day conditions is Frederic Kabel, of West River township, Randolph county, a man who has devoted his life to a study of general farming in all its phases and who is therefore an authority on the same.

Mr. Kabel was born in White River township, this county, July 15, 1853. He is a son of Philip and Mary (Getz) Kabel, and was one of ten children, namely: Peter and Philip are both deceased; Mary Adam and John are all living; Lizzie and Barbara are both deceased; Frederic, of this review; Nicholas is living; Charley died in youth. The parents of these children were both born in Germany, but they came to the United States when young and were married in Cincinnati, Ohio. The father was a wool carder by profession. He moved with his family to Richmond, Indiana, then to Hagerstown, finally to White River township, Randolph county, where his death occurred in March, 1898, at the advanced age of eighty-four years; his wife died on the homestead on February 10, 1902.

Frederic Kabel was reared on the home farm and educated in the district schools. He was married December 21, 1879, to Florence Mercer, a daughter of John Mercer, a cooper by trade, who lived in West River township, and whose family consisted of ten children, eight daughters and two sons.

Seven children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Herbert, who lives in Winchester, taught school for a period of fourteen years, married Alma Gwin and they have two children; Florence, who is living near Fountain City, has been twice married, first to Bruce Keever, by whom she had one child, Dallas K.; her second marriage was to Clyde Miller, and to this union one child was born, Olive. Iva married Percy Stump, a farmer of White River township, and they have two sons, Corwin and Virgil; Ray died at the age of sixteen years; Clara is the widow of Henry Johnson, who was a farmer near Lynn; Ella, who was for four years primary teacher at Huntsville, was born February 17, 1892; Elfie, the youngest, was born February 12, 1899. These children were given excellent educational advantages. Ella was educated at the State University, at Bloomington, Herbert in the Normal, at Danville, and Clara in Marion.

Mr. Kabel has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising and has lived on his present finely improved and valuable farm for thirty-three years. His place consists of one hundred and forty acres and on it stand a good group of buildings, everything denoting excellent taste.

Politically, Mr. Kabel is a Democrat, and he is a member of the Lutheran church.

PLINY C. BARNARD, M. D.

Proper intellectual discipline, through professional knowledge and the possession and utilization of the qualities and attributes essential to success, has made Dr. Pliny C. Barnard, of Parker, Randolph county, eminent in his chosen calling, and for many years he has stood among the scholarly, enterprising and successful physicians and surgeons in a community long distinguished for the high order of its medical talent. Since coming here he has shown himself to be a high-minded, obliging, honorable and courteous gentleman who has the best interests of his town and county at heart and he has won the good will and confidence of the people throughout the locality of which this history treats.

Dr. Barnard was born July 12, 1868, in Henry county, Indiana. He is a son of Sylvester and Lavina (Myer) Barnard, and is one of a family of six children, namely: Edna, who died at the age of forty-five years, was the wife of John Meckel, an architect, and she left four children; Hon. William O., a lawyer of New Castle, Indiana, was elected to Congress in 1908 and has a brilliant reputation as a politician; he married Mary Ballinger, of Spiceland, and they have four children; he was judge of the circuit court for six years and was prosecuting attorney for six years; Isaac M., who is farming in Rush county, married Emma Williams, and to them three children were born, one of whom is deceased; Jacob N., a banker at Daleville, Delaware county, married Carrie Nipp, and they have adopted two children; Lawrence Carl, a merchant of Winfield, Kansas, married Myrtle Nichols, of Middletown, Indiana, and they have two children; Dr. Pliny C., of this review. The father of the above named children spent his active life engaged in general farming and stock raising, in Fayette and Henry counties. He died January 27, 1914, at the age of eighty-five years. He grew up amid pioneer conditions and talked most interestingly of early-day conditions. His father came from North Carolina through the wilderness roads to Indiana in the year 1818 when the state was in its infancy and little improved. The Doctor's maternal grandparents were natives of Pennsylvania from which state they came to Indiana also in pioneer times. The mother of our subject died in 1908 at an advanced age.

Dr. Barnard grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his early education in the public schools, later attending the Normals at Spiceland and Terre Haute. In 1897 he entered the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons at Indianapolis where he made a splendid record and from which he was graduated with the class of 1901. He began practicing at Oakville, Delaware county, Indiana, where he remained ten years, enjoying a large practice, then practiced two years at Hamilton, and has since been located at Parker, Randolph county, where he has built up a large and constantly growing practice.

Dr. Barnard was married April 5, 1901, to Agatha Leslie, of Tipton county, Indiana, where she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of S. Parker Leslie and wife, and to this union three children have been born, namely: Harry Leslie, who died when nine months old; Mary L., born May 9, 1907, and Edna Lucille, born January 1, 1910.

Dr. Barnard is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a Republican.

ORVILLE E. AUKERMAN.

Many families throughout the United States during the past few decades have gone to much trouble and expense to collect their records back to the first settlement of their ancestral emigrant, thus laying the foundation of a permanent family tree in this country for the benefit and pleasure of all descendants. There can be no doubt of the importance of this step. One of these days, in the entailment of estates, such a record will be invaluable to descendants. It will be found that those who do not have such a record will not be able to prove their right to inherit valuable property. The saving of such a record is simply a matter of self-preservation for the descendants. The Aukerman family, represented by Orville E., cashier of the Greensfork Township Bank, of Spartanburg, Randolph county, has preserved a fair record, good enough, no doubt, to make the claim certain in case of a misunderstanding over an estate, and this sketch will, to a certain extent, prove this claim.

Mr. Aukerman was born in German township, Darke county, Ohio, September 19, 1874. He is a son of James K. and Jennie (Cloyd) Aukerman. The father was born in the same locality as was our subject, on May 5, 1844. He is a son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Brower) Aukerman. Lewis Aukerman was born in Preble county, Ohio, September 24, 1802, and was of German descent. He grew up in his native state and devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits. His death occurred on October 16, 1854. His wife was also of German descent, and was born in Virginia, March 22, 1812, and died February 17, 1895. They became the parents of thirteen children. James K. Aukerman grew up on his father's farm in the old Buckeye state and he received the usual educational advantages of those early days in the rural districts. He turned his attention to farming when a young man and has followed this vocation all his life with the exception of a few years when he operated a threshing machine. He now owns a sixty-acre farm in German township, Darke county, Ohio. Politically he is a Democrat and in religious matters a Universalist. He and Jennie Cloyd were married in December, 1873. She was born December 28, 1854, in the township and county where she and her husband now reside. She is a daughter of Allen and Catherine (Leslie) Cloyd. To the parents of our subject five children were born, all living.

Orville E. Aukerman grew up on the home farm in Ohio and he received a good practical education in the common schools of his community, which has been greatly supplemented in later years by wide reading and actual contact with the business world. He spent one year in the Ohio Normal at Ada, Ohio, and two years at the National Normal at Lebanon, Ohio. He began life for himself by teaching, which he followed with much success for a period of eight years in Darke county, Ohio, and was fast winning a reputation as one of the leading educators of that county, but believing that a business career was more to his liking he abandoned the school room and took up the grain business in Lewisburg, Ohio, which he followed one year, then came to Crete, Indiana, and continued in the same line of endeavor for five years, building up the meanwhile a lucrative business. Returning to Ohio he located at New Madison and in 1910 came back to Randolph county, Indiana, this time taking up his residence at Spartanburg, and assisted in organizing the Greensfork Township Bank, and was elected cashier of the same, which position he has continued to hold to the present time in a manner that has reflected much credit on his ability and to the eminent satisfaction of the stockholders and patrons of the bank.

Politically, Mr. Aukerman is a Democrat and religiously he is a Universalist. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, in which lodge he has held high office and is also a member of the Indiana Grand Lodge of this order. He also belongs to the Masonic order.

Mr. Aukerman was married September 3, 1902, to Ora Pickens, who was born in German township, Darke county, Ohio, and there grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. Three children have been born to this union, namely: James R., born May 12, 1906; Ralph O., born January 1, 1910, and Myron O., born July 21, 1911.

RALPH V. MURRAY.

Washington township has among its citizens some of the leading farmers of Randolph county. The Murray family, of which Ralph V., is a most creditable representative, has been, it would seem, especially favored by Ceres, supposed to be, according to the ancient mythologies, the goddess of husbandry, having charge of crops, especially grains, for the Murrays have for many decades been known among the most successful agriculturists of the locality of which this history treats.

Ralph V. Murray was born December 4, 1841, in Henry county, Indiana. He is a son of Cornelius B. and Lucinda (Burroughs) Murray, who were of Irish and German descent. The birth of the father occurred in 1812, in Ohio, from which state he removed with his parents when a lad, to Indiana. They were William and Martha Murray, who settled on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Henry county, and there spent the rest of their lives. Cornelius Murray, great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Dublin, Ireland, and when a young man he emigrated to the United States and fought in our Revolutionary War, being about twenty-seven years of age when he enlisted. After the close of the struggle, he married Elizabeth McFadden, and they settled in New Jersey, later removing to Butler county, Pennsylvania, in which state William Murray, grandfather of our subject, was born. The latter married Mary Boal in 1804 and to them ten children were born. Leaving the Keystone state they removed to Butler county, Ohio, in 1813, where they remained until 1834, when they came to Wayne county, Indiana, and for six years William Murray was keeper of the county infirmary there. He subsequently removed with his family to a farm in Henry county, where he spent the rest of his days, dying when about eighty years of age. Cornelius B. Murray, father of our subject, came to Indiana in 1833 and was one of the early school teachers in Wayne, Delaware and Henry counties, dying when about eighty-two years of age.

Ralph V Murray received a common school education and he remained on the home farm until in August, 1861, when he proved his patriotism by enlisting in Company D, Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he saw much hard service and fought in a number of the leading battles, including Pittsburg Landing, Corinth and Chickamauga, being wounded in the latter, and for two months he was confined in the hospital, and it was nine months before he could rejoin his company. He was discharged November 1, 1864, having proved a most gallant defender of the Union. Returning to his home community he operated his father's farm for some time, then worked in a woolen factory for six months. He first settled on a place south of Farmland, where he remained two years, then spent a year in Wayne county. He afterwards operated the homestead and finally purchased one hundred and four acres where he still resides in Washington township. He has brought his place up to a high state of improvement and cultivation and carries on general farming and stock raising successfully. He keeps a good grade of livestock and he has a pleasant home and good outbuildings and many kinds of modern farming implements. He owns a threshing machine, in fact has been engaged in threshing for a period of over thirty-five years and is one of the best known men in this line of business in the county. He also owns a clover hulling outfit and has threshed and hulled all over this section of the state.

Mr. Murray was married March 8, 1866, to Frances J. Boyden, a daughter of Orville and Bethia (Miller) Boyden. Her father was a minister in the Methodist church and his death occurred at Angola, Indiana, in 1865. His widow survived him ten years, dying in Muncie. They were the parents of the following children: Frances J., wife of Mr. Murray; Dr. Wilbur J., of Muncie, and Linnie, who married Charles Linn. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Murray are John, an engineer of New Castle, who died October 20, 1904, at the age of sixty-seven years; William H., ex-auditor of Delaware county; Martha E., who died March 21, 1914, married John Beeson, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Orilla married L. Gerome Wiggins, of Randolph county; Oren, deceased, who married a daughter of Nathan Stutsman; Marcus L., a rural mail carrier in Farmland, who married a daughter of Mahlon Beeson; Julia A., deceased, married Samuel Beeson of Buffalo, N. Y.; Dr. Albert P., of Albany, deceased, married daughter of Samuel Orr, and Charles C., a blacksmith. The mother was called to her rest in 1871, after which the father established his home in Hagerstown, Indiana.

Eight children have been born to Ralph V. Murray and wife, namely: Nora was born July 26, 1869, and was united in marriage with Oliver Lambert, December 30, 1886, who died December 16, 1891. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lambert, Henry Harrison and Mary Frances. On July 30, 1894, she was again married to S. A. Phillips and three children have been born, Naomi M., Esther M. and Lydia E.: Boyden, who was born December 26, 1872, was united in marriage to Effie L. Addington, April 4, 1896, and she died April 28, 1897 He was again married to Cora Thornburg, nee Jackson, April 23, 1914; Hubert A., born February 6, 1875, married Julia A. Addington September 26, 1896, and to this union three children were born, Pauline A., Albert R., and Glen C. She died July 17, 1905; Gilbert M., who was born November 12, 1877, was united in marriage with Opal E. Holliday, January 31, 1900, and they have three children, Clarence R., Mary D., and Oma E.; Gusta I., who was born August 24, 1879, was married to W A. Stanton, April 4, 1896, and to this union four children were born, Minnie, Lucile, Charles V. and Helen M. Gusta I. died November 17, 1911; Maudie V., who was born April 26, 1886, died July 30, 1886; two children died in infancy.

Mrs. Murray died October 7, 1913. She was a member of the Christian church; he is a Progressive in politics. In 1881 he was elected sheriff of Randolph county and served one term with much satisfaction to all concerned. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic.

JOHN M. TURNER.

This brief biography has to do with a character of unusual force and eminence, for John M. Turner has been for a long lapse of years one of the leading agriculturists and prominent citizens of Wayne township, Randolph county, having grown up in this locality amid pioneer environment, and here he has been content to spend his life and assist in every way possible in bringing about the transformation of the country from the wild condition found by the early settlers to its later day progress and improvement, and all who know him well will readily agree that his more than three-score and ten years have not been spent in vain.

Mr. Turner was born near Winchester, Randolph county, September 14, 1840. He is a son of William Turner, a native of Virginia, from which state he came to Randolph county when a young man and bought a farm and became one of the prosperous general farmers and stock raisers of his community. He also dealt quite heavily in real estate. He built many business blocks and residences in Union City, and here he erected the first opera house at the corner of Oak and Howard streets. He was an influential man in the city and township in his day and generation and did much for the general upbuilding of the same. Politically he was a Republican and in religious matters belonged to the Christian church.

John M. Turner grew to manhood on the home farm and there worked when a boy. He attended the common schools in his neighborhood. He remained with his parents on the farm until he was twenty-one years of age, then began working on the home farm with an interest in the crops, remaining there until 1861 when he proved his patriotism and courage by enlisting for service in the Federal army, Company H, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served one year, then returned home and resumed farming on the home place, with an interest in the crops there, and he also looked after a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of his own, on which, after his marriage, he made a home for himself and wife. He has continued general agricultural and stock raising pursuits and by his good management, thrift and persistency he has become one of the substantial men of his township and the owner of about seven hundred acres of valuable land which he has placed under modern improvements and a high state of cultivation, farming on a very extensive scale. He is a heavy stockholder in the Union Loan & Trust Company of Union City and is a director in the same. He was elected president of this company May 1, 1913, and is discharging the important duties of the same in a manner that reflects much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the stockholders and all concerned and is making a great success. He is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished, having begun at the bottom of the industrial ladder and worked his way upward without assistance, making his fortune himself and by honorable methods. He is a man of progressive ideas, rare business acumen and sound judgment. He is charitably inclined and has been of great assistance to many poor people of his community, helping young men to get properly started in business, but being conservative no one ever hears him tell of such deeds.

Mr. Turner was married, first, in June, 1864, to Mary Jane Hartman, who was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, January 13, 1844. She was a daughter of John Hartman, whose death occurred many years ago. To our subject and his first wife the following children were born: Effie B. first married a Mr. Armacost, later John M. Shockney; Loftus Orville married Mollie Smith; Minnie Alta married and died some time ago; Margaret Irene married Ernest Thornburg. The mother of the above named children passed to her eternal rest March 9, 1879. Mr. Turner married Nancy Eveline Hinshaw in 1881. She was born August 25, 1856. She is a daughter of Silas Hinshaw, long since deceased. To our subject and his last wife these children have been born: Mary Jane married Stanley Bortner; John W. married Garnett Watson; Ada Garfield; Goldie and Silas Lester are at home, also Walter McKinley, the youngest of the children.

Mr. Turner has always been an ardent Republican, and has been more or less active in party affairs. In the election of 1912 he was committeeman of Bartonia, a precinct which remained loyal to the "grand old party," standing forty-one to fourteen for Taft. Mr. Turner has been township trustee for two years. He was elected county treasurer of Randolph county in 1887, serving one term. As a public servant he has ever been most faithful and given satisfaction to his constituents. He is a quiet, unpretentious gentleman, kind and generous to the poor and needy, not forgetting the time when he was one of their number himself, and he has every sympathy for the worthy of that class.

THOMAS W. GADDIS.

Human life is made up of two elements, power and form, and the proportion must be invariably kept if we would have it sweet and sound. Each of these elements in excess makes a mischief as hurtful as would be its deficiency. Everything turns to excess; every good quality is noxious if unmixed, and to carry the danger to the edge of ruin Nature causes each man's peculiarity to superabound. One speaking from the standpoint of a farmer would adduce the learned professions as good examples of this treachery. They are Nature's victims of expression. You study the artist, the orator, statesman and inventor to find their lives no more excellent than that of mechanics or farmers. While the farmer stands at the head of art as found in Nature, the others get but glimpses of the delight of nature in its various elements and moods. Thomas W. Gaddis, now living in retirement in Huntsville, West River township, Randolph county, is a man who has ever taken a delight in nature and existence, because he has ever been in touch with the springs of life, having spent his days on the farm.

Mr. Gaddis was born in the above named township and county, July 16, 1841. He is a son of Elisha P. and Lydia (Macy) Gaddis, whose family consisted of eleven children. The father was born in Pennsylvania and there spent his younger days, later moving to Ohio, where he lived until he was twenty-eight years old, then moved to Indiana where he married and here spent the rest of his life, dying at the age of seventy-six years. The mother of our subject was born in West River township and was eighty-six years old at the time of her death. She was among the earliest white children born in this locality. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Scotland, from which country he emigrated to Virginia in a very early day.

Thomas W. Gaddis was reared on the home farm and educated in the rural schools. On December 10, 1865 he married Lucy A. Harris, a daughter of Patrick Harris, a farmer of West River township, whose family consisted of six children, and here Mrs. Gaddis grew to womanhood and was educated in the country schools.

To our subject and wife eight children have been born, namely: Ella May, married Sam Johnson, a farmer in Iowa and they have five children; Elisha P., who is farming near Griswold, Iowa, married Mamie Campbell, and they have five sons and one daughter; Lena is the wife of Charles Harvey, a farmer near Kokomo, Indiana, and they have three children; Levi L., who is farming in West River township, married Gertrude Howell, and they have ten children; Salina married W. Z. Sheppard, a farmer of West River township, and they have four children; Thomas G., of Winchester, married Blanche Botkin, and they have four children; Lydia L., who married Roy Shreeves, is farming in Randolph county, and they have two children; James B., residing with subject, married Cecil Coulter, and they have two children; Elsie died in infancy; Celia also died in infancy.

Thomas W. Gaddis has spent his life engaged in general farming and has met with encouraging success all along the line. He went to Iowa in 1869 where he resided twenty-five years, and during that period most of his family was born. He now owns a valuable and highly productive farm of forty acres near Huntsville, and has a good home and is well fixed in every respect.

Mr. Gaddis is one of our honored veterans, having enlisted for service against the hosts of treason in 1862 in the famous Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving faithfully as a private in Company D, taking part at the battles of Richmond, Kentucky; Champion Hill, Mississippi, where he was captured, and was a prisoner for some time until he was exchanged. He fought in all the principal battles of the West, and was honorably discharged and mustered out on July 5, 1865, at Mobile, Alabama.

Politically, Mr. Gaddis is a Republican and he has always been interested in the upbuilding of his community. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and is known as a good and useful man.

OSCAR E. ABEL, M. D.

It is not always easy to discover and define the hidden forces that move a life of ceaseless activity and large professional success; little more can be done than to note their manifestations in the career of the individual under consideration. In view of this fact the life of the successful and popular physician whose name appears above affords an excellent example of well defined purpose with the ability to make that purpose subserve not only his own ends but the good of his fellow-men as well. Dr. Abel has long held distinctive prestige in a calling which requires for its basis sound mentality and intellectual discipline of a high order, supplemented by rigid professional training and thorough mastery of technical knowledge with the skill to apply the same, without which one cannot hope to rise above mediocrity in ministering to human ills. In his chosen field of endeavor Dr. Abel has achieved success such as is not attained by all and his present eminent standing among the progressive medical men of this section of Indiana is duly recognized and appreciated throughout Randolph county.

Dr. Abel was born in Jay county, Indiana, April 16, 1860. He is a son of George W. and Esther (Reed) Abel. The father was born in Clark county, Ohio, in 1820, and his death occurred in 1865, in Union City, Indiana. The paternal grandfather was one of the pioneers of Jay county, locating in the woods there in 1838, and he built the first brick house in that county. The Doctor's father was postmaster at the town of Salamonia, in 1852, and there he conducted a general store which he sold out in 1864 and removed to Union City, Randolph county, where he bought a store which he conducted until his death, which occurred at the early age of forty-five years. Grandfather Abel was born in Virginia and there grew to manhood and married Elizabeth Franklin, also a native of the Old Dominion. Her father was a slave holder. Grandfather Abel was an Abolitionist of pronounced views. The Doctor's mother was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, from which county her family removed to Indiana, in 1840, when she was thirteen years of age. She is still living at the advanced age of eighty-six years. Seven children were born to George W Abel and wife, namely: Mary died in infancy; William H. died when twenty-three years of age; Loretta married J. W. Miller, a farmer of Bloomington, Indiana, and they have six children; Martha married D. G. Heister, of the Ridgeville Tile Works, and they have four children; Josephine married Henry E. Castor, a farmer of Portland, Indiana, and they have four children; Dr. Oscar E., of this sketch; Albert Reed, an attorney of Sioux City, Iowa, served as judge in Kingsbury county, South Dakota.

Dr. Abel grew to manhood in Jay county and there attended the common schools. He began life for himself by teaching which he followed four years, then attended the Ridgeville College four years, also studied at Valparaiso one term, later studied two years at the University of Michigan, leaving that institution in 1884, then entered the Indiana Medical College, at Indianapolis, from which he was graduated. He began the practice of his profession at Bryant, Jay county, where he remained four years, being successful from the first, then removed to Winchester, Randolph county, and practiced there five years with ever-increasing success. He has been engaged in the practice at Huntsville since 1895 and has a large and lucrative practice throughout this part of the county. He has remained a close student of all that pertains to his profession and has kept fully abreast of the times.

Dr. Abel was married May 14, 1885, to Ada G. Miller, of Portland, Indiana, a daughter of Daniel and Mary (Whipple) Miller, an excellent family of that place. Mrs. Abel was one of four children, two sons and two daughters. She was reared in her native county and received a good education, and has proven to be a faithful helpmeet in every respect.

To Dr. Abel and wife six children have been born, an equal number of sons and daughters, namely: Claude M., who is farming in this county, married Nettie Hartzell and they have one child, Elizabeth, born July 7, 1913; E. Reed, who is farming in West River township, married Lucille Haynes, and they have one child, Paul, born December 22, 1912; George, born November 29, 1890, was graduated from the Winchester High School, is now attending Purdue University; Ruth, born September 9, 1895; Esther, born August 15, 1898; Doris, born August 19, 1902, are all three at home.

Dr. Abel is a Progressive in politics, a member of the M. E. church over twenty years and at one time a member of the Knights of Pythias, Red Cross Lodge No. 88, and now a member of the Modoc Lodge, also a Mason. He served as secretary of the Randolph county medical society.

JOSEPH E. FREIDLINE.

Farming is the biggest business in the world, and constructive work that will permanently benefit agriculture must be planned on a big, broad, comprehensive basis. Co-operating with the farmer as an individual is not sufficient and will not reach the heart of the problem. The heavy and more important work can be done only through organization. There must be a partnership between industries and each line of organized industry within its own orbit. Many changes have been brought about during the career of Joseph E. Freidline, one of the honored retired farmers of West River township, Randolph county, but he has been a man who was quick to see changing conditions and has not been slow to adapt himself to the vicissitudes of time, therefore, has succeeded admirably at his chosen life work.

Mr. Freidline was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, January 29, 1849. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Neff) Freidline, and was one of family of ten children, seven of whom survive, six sons and one daughter.

John Freidline, father of our subject, was a native of Pennsylvania and there grew to manhood, and after a service of five years in the regular United States army he came to Ohio, where he joined his father's family, who had moved to the Buckeye state the meanwhile. He devoted his life successfully to general farming and his death occurred at the age of seventy-six years. The mother of our subject was a native of Ohio, and her death occurred at the old homestead in 1908, at the advanced age of eighty years. The paternal grandparents who were natives of Pennsylvania, were of German descent.

Joseph E. Freidline was reared on the home farm and he worked hard when a boy, receiving his education in the rural district schools during the brief winter months between crop seasons. Toward the close of the Civil war, he enlisted in February, 1865, in the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Pedon, in Company E, with Capt. Dillon Hiatt. He was at this time only sixteen years of age, and he regretted that he was not old enough to serve throughout the war. He was mustered in at Richmond, Indiana, and was mustered out at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, the following August 4th, having seen active service in the army of the Potomac.

Mr. Freidline was married March 25, 1871, to Sarah Rust, a daughter of Jacob and Mavy Rust, of Monroe township, and whose family consisted of three sons and two daughters; the parents are both deceased.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Freidline, namely: Minor J., born January 28, 1872, lives in Wisconsin, and is superintendent of the Brook Hill dairy farm; he married Edna Aldstadt, of Muncie, Indiana, and they have three sons, Max Rudolph, Joseph Warren and Ralph. Bertha, married John Stoneman, and she died at the age of thirty years, leaving five children, Leland, Hovey, Geneva, Chelsea and Hubert. Myrtle, third child of our subject, is the wife of Edwin Dickson, a minister in the Methodist church, at present in charge of the church at Etna Green, Indiana; they became the parents of three children, Hubert Devoe, Georgia and Margaret.

Mr. Freidline has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising and has been very successful all along the line, so that he is now enabled to retire from active work and is taking life easy in the midst of comfortable surroundings. He owns a valuable and attractive farm of ninety-three acres in West River township, and he has a commodious home, and everything denotes thrift and good management thereabout. Politically, he is a Progressive, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church and are well thought of throughout the community for they are neighborly, hospitable and honest in all their relations with other people.

JULIAN SHEPPARD.

Farming in the United States compares favorably with other lines of endeavor from the standpoint of success. It is said that ninety per cent. of the merchants fail and sixty per cent. of the manufacturers, but there are very few farmers that make an assignment. It is true no great riches are acquired by the individual farmer, but at the big feat of making both ends meet the record of the farmer is good, and they seem to have fewer skeletons in their closets than those who follow any other industry. One of the most painstaking and intelligent farmers of West River township, Randolph county who has succeeded all along the line in his chosen life work is Julian Sheppard.

Mr. Sheppard was born in the above named township and county, April 9, 1853. He is a son of Joshua J. and Martha J. (Paschall) Sheppard, and is one of a family of seven children, only two of whom survive at this writing, a brother, Marcellus C., lives on a farm near Julian's. The latter grew to manhood in his native community and received his education in the common schools. He has been twice married, first to Mary E. Rogers, a native of Washington township Randolph county. To this union three children were born, namely; William Z., a farmer near Huntsville, Indiana, married Salina Gaddis, and they have four children; Arley G., who works our subject's farm, married Anna Bogue, and they have one child, Ruth; Emma Gertrude is the wife of Fred Whitehead, a farmer, and they have one child, Helen. The wife and mother was born in 1854 and her death occurred in 1894. Our subject's second wife was Mrs. Amy Keppler, who was a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Parrent) Bowers. This latter union was without issue.

Mrs. Sheppard's first marriage was with John Keppler who was born May 31, 1838, and was a native of Wittenburg, Germany. He was a soldier in the Civil war, having come to America a short time before and enlisted in Company D, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, serving all through the war. After the war, he followed farming through life. They were the parents of four children; Sarah Elizabeth married Walter Bowers, and they have two children, Harry and Everett; Margery Ann; Margaret Ann married Ernest Hunt and have three children, Nellie, John Richard and Leal Russell; Locia May married George Rowe and they have two children, Harold Keppler and Doris Amy. Mr. Keppler died July 20, 1892. Mrs. Sheppard's children were educated in the local schools, in which they made good records.

The father of our subject was born in Virginia, from which state the family eventually removed to Indiana and established their future home. One of his sons, Marcellus C., mentioned above, lives on the old home place. The death of Joshua J. Sheppard occurred in 1904, after a useful and industrious life. His wife preceded him to the grave in 1902. The Paschall family came to Indiana from Clinton county, Ohio, and were highly respected.

Julian Sheppard has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising with very gratifying results, and he is now owner of a valuable and well-tilled farm of one hundred and twenty acres in West River township, where he has a substantial group of buildings and in every way well prepared to spend his declining years in comfort. Politically, he is a Republican. He was trustee of West River township for a period of four years.

B. V. M. BROUSE.

The world owes much to the plain, courageous and hardy old pioneers, and this is as it should be, for they are deserving of every consideration; they have done so much for us of this generation that we can not begin to repay them, even in gratitude; in fact, we often lose sight of the great sacrifices they made for us, their descendants, and of the hardships they endured that the bounds of civilization might be placed farther westward and outward. They had a hard time, and no mistake, combating the root-interlaced soil, the quick-growing underbrush and weeds; combating the wild folk of the woods and the air, that sought to destroy their crops, domestic animals and sometimes even themselves; combating the skulking, treacherous red men who claimed the domain on which the pale face settled. It is doubtful if we of today, many of us at least, would be willing to brave the wilds as did our progenitors, and wrest from a resisting nature and blood-thirsty race the fair realms now to be seen dotted with happy homes, thriving cities, comfortable school houses and church spires pointing skyward.

B. V. M. Brouse, a substantial farmer and influential citizen of Randolph county, himself a product of the pioneer period, is a scion of sterling pioneer ancestry. He was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, November 30, 1838. He is a son of John A. and Mary M. (Bright) Brouse, whose family consisted of ten children, four sons and six daughters, namely: Mary M., who died in 1896, was the wife of James H. Nickey, a farmer, and they were the parents of seven children; B. V. M., of this sketch was second in order of birth; Hansel Peter, deceased; Elizabeth Esther is the wife of William D. Anderson, a retired farmer near Urbana, Illinois; Sarah Catherine died in infancy in July, 1848; Priscella H. died in 1888 at the age of fourteen years; John Daniel died in 1858 at the age of twelve years; Amanda A. Virginia died at the age of sixteen years; Salena Amazetta is the wife of Robert Jackson, of Ward township, and they have two children; Laura Almeda, wife of J. C. Michael, of Winchester, has two children.

John A. Brouse, father of our subject, was born in Stark county, Ohio, in 1812, and his death occurred in Randolph county, Indiana, in 1872, whither he had removed in 1845. He was a cooper by trade, which he followed in Ohio until he came to Indiana. Here he bought a farm which claimed his close attention the rest of his life, together with saw milling, he having established a saw mill here. He also did some coopering. He was a successful man financially and highly respected in his community. The mother of our subject and her parents came from Virginia in the early thirties and located in Montgomery county, Ohio, coming to Randolph county in 1845. Grandfather Bright was a teacher by profession, while Grandfather Brouse was a potter by trade.

B. V. M. Brouse grew to manhood on the home farm and he worked hard when a boy assisting to develop the place from the virgin soil and establish a comfortable home in the new country. He was educated in an old log school house, but most of his information in a general way has since been gained through contact with the world and by wide home reading. Early in life he took up farming for a livelihood and this has continued to be his chief life work. He is now owner of a valuable and well improved farm of eighty acres where he carries on general farming and stock raising, and he has a pleasant home and a good set of outbuildings.

Mr. Brouse was married November 30, 1859, to Ann Eliza Clark, a daughter of Thomas Clark, who is mentioned elsewhere in these pages. The Clarks have long been a prominent family in Randolph county, and here Mrs. Brouse grew to womanhood and received her education. To our subject and wife eight children have been born, named as follows: Anna Ella Frances is the wife of Wilson Sperry, a carpenter of Winchester, and they are the parents of five children, one of their sons having been in the navy twelve years; Mary Elizabeth, who is an invalid, is at home with her parents; John T., who is employed by the National Cash Register Company in Dayton, Ohio, married Maude Brouse, and they have five children; Clara Cecilia married William Redmond, of Dayton, Ohio; Laura Amelia, who died in 1903, married William Reitenour, a farmer, and to them five children were born; Sarah Catherine died in infancy; Peter L., a farmer in Ward township, married Callie Shafer, and eight children have been born to them; Susie married Jacob Hollowell, and to them one child was born, Opal, who married John W. Shierling, a farmer.

In 1882, Mr. Brouse was nominated for trustee of Ward township but was defeated by a small number of votes. Mr. Brouse was the organizer of the American Society of Equity in Randolph county. He is president of the Reitenour Cemetery Association and was the originator of the movement in 1902. He was behind the successful movement to build the Christion church at Clear Creek, and was secretary and treasurer of the same, also a trustee. He has been a member of the Christian church since 1880. He has been writing for The Winchester Journal for fifty years, and for The Winchester Democrat ever since it was established, also for the Herald of the Gospel of Liberty of Dayton, Ohio, and is a popular writer. In 1912 the first reunion of the Brouse family was held at Glen Miller Park. Mr. Brouse was elected the historian and authorized to write and publish the family history, which he has done, in a most creditable way, furnishing a work that has given general satisfaction.

ALBERT KING.

The record of a life well spent, of triumphs over obstacles, of perseverance under difficulties and steady advancement from a modest beginning to a place of distinction in the world of affairs, when imprinted on the pages of a history, present to the youth of a rising generation a worthy example. Such a life is that of the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review, well-known coal dealer of the city of Winchester and ex-sheriff of Randolph county, and the able and conscientious manner in which he has ever looked after the interests of this, his native locality has called forth much praise for Mr. King from his fellow citizens.

Albert King was born August 27, 1865, in Maxville, Randolph county, Indiana. He is a son of Bennett and Jane (Davis) King.

The father was born in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and the mother was a native of Randolph county, Indiana. They grew up in their respective localities and received such educational advantages as the early school afforded. When a young man Bennett King came to Randolph county, this state, about 1855, believing that better opportunities existed in the newer country than in the old Keystone state, and, being impressed favorably with the Hoosierdom he decided to cast his lot permanently here. When a young man he learned the miller's trade, which he followed with much success for a number of years, then turned his attention to general agricultural pursuits with gratifying results, becoming, in due course of time, owner of one of the best farms in Randolph county, and he is still living on the farm, which lies in Stoney Creek township, and which is well improved and well kept. His wife is also still living and they are both highly respected in this county, where they are well known. They are the parents of three sons and two daughters, of whom Albert, of this sketch, is the oldest. The others are Emma, who married Fred Dick, and they live in Stoney Creek township, this county; Harvey lives in Delaware county, Indiana; Rose is with her parents on the home farm, and Taylor, who has also remained in Stoney Creek township, is engaged in farming.

Albert King was reared on the home farm in his native community and when a boy he did his full share of the work there. During the winter months he attended the district schools. He was married on August 30, 1890, to Ada Thorn, daughter of David and Lucy (Keever) Thorn, of Randolph county, a highly respected old family here. The father is now deceased but the mother is residing at the town of Lynn, this county. Here Mrs. King grew to womanhood and received a practical public school education.

The union of our subject and wife has resulted in the birth of three children, namely: Walter, an office man with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and is regarded by his superiors as a most efficient and trustworthy employee; Marie, who was a member of the graduating class of the Windsor High School, in 1913, is at home with her parents; Byron, who is also with his parents, is assisting his father in business.

Following his marriage Albert King engaged in general farming in White River River township, this county, and, being a hard worker, and a good manager he soon had a good start. He continued thus until 1897 when he became deputy sheriff of Randolph county, under Thomas J. Overman, which position he held for a period of four years in an eminently satisfactory manner, learning thoroughly every phase of the work of the sheriff's office. We next find him engaged in the restaurant business in Winchester where he remained three years, his place becoming popular with the public during that period. In the fall of 1906 he was elected sheriff of his county, and assumed his official duties the following January, serving four years, in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constitutents, proving to be one of the best officials the county has ever had. After his term of office had expired, Mr. King returned to his farm, in White River township, where he continued with his usual success until the fall of 1911, when he began in the coal business, in Winchester, where he has since remained, building up a large and constantly growing business as a result of his energy, foresight and honest and courteous dealings with his many patrons. He carries a large and well selected lot of coal, all kinds and grades, in fact, and all kinds of building material, drain tile, sewer piping, lime, cement and plaster.

Fraternally, Mr. King is a member of the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a Republican and has long been active in the ranks of his party, in fact, active and influential in general public matters. He has served frequently as a member of the Republican county committee. He and his family are members of the Church of Christ and he is a deacon in the same.

Mr. King's business office is at 244 West North street, and his pleasant home is at 446 South Main street, in one of the best residence sections in the city.

JOHN CHRISTOPHER.

The true western spirit of progress and enterprise is strikingly exemplified in the lives of such men as John Christopher, one of Randolph county's honored native sons, whose energetic nature and laudable ambition have enabled him to conquer many adverse circumstances and advance steadily until he is today one of the financially strong men of his community, influential banker and leading agriculturist. He has met and overcome obstacles that would have discouraged men of less courage and fortitude and earned for himself not only a handsome competency but also a prominent place among the enterprising men of this section of the great Hoosier commonwealth. Such a man is a credit to any community and his life forcibly illustrates what energy and consecutive effort can accomplish when directed and controlled by correct principles and high moral resolves, and no man is worthier of conspicuous mention in a volume of the province of the one in hand.

Mr. Christopher was born on the old homestead in section 32, West River township, Randolph county, January 20, 1866. He is a son of Addison G. and Sarah A. (Lamb) Christopher, a highly esteemed old family of this locality. Addison G. Christopher was born in Claiborne county, Tennessee, November 28, 1829, and was a son of Garrett and Elizabeth (Walls) Christopher, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of North Carolina, where they were married and where they lived several years, then removed to Tennessee. To them three children were born, J. M., Addison G., and Minza. The grandfather of our subject died in 1833 and was buried in Tennessee. The mother removed with her children in 1835 to Wayne county, Indiana, and bound them out. The following year she married Isaac Fisher, who later moved to Iowa and located on a farm, and to them were born William, who became a farmer; Susan, who married Elwood Tiffany, of Chicago; Mary, married Jacob Wittenmire, of Iowa, and Hannah, who married Simeon Wittenmire, of Iowa. Mr. Fisher died in 1873, and his widow later went to Kansas to live with her son, and there her death occurred July 31, 1890. Addison G. Christopher remained fourteen years with Albert Macy, or until he had attained his majority, having been bound out to Mr. Macy after his father's death. He then clerked in Huntsville, Indiana, three years, and while there he married, in 1851, Sarah A. Lamb, who was a daughter of David and Delilah (Butler) Lamb, who came to Indiana from Campbell county, Virginia, their marriage having occurred in the latter state December 6, 1827. Mrs. Christopher was three years old when the family located in Wayne county, Indiana, but the following year they came on to Randolph county, where the father died August 26, 1838, and the mother passed away a few days later, September 2d. They had three children: Elizabeth H., who married Allison Andrew, a farmer of Randolph county; Charles B., who became a harness maker, and located in Iowa, and Sarah A., mother of the subject of this sketch. For about three years after his marriage Addison G. Christopher continued clerking, then moved to a farm which he operated until 1855, then embarked in merchandising in Huntsville, selling out a year and a half later, and in the fall of 1856, purchased a fine farm of two hundred and twenty acres in West River township, Randolph county, one of the best improved and most desirable farms in the county. He has been a very successful business man and laid by an ample competency, and he gave his children forty acres of land each, of whom there were eight in number, four of whom are deceased, namely: Charles M., a lumber man of New Castle, Indiana, died at the age of fifty-seven years, leaving a widow and one child; David O., a merchant at Greenville, Ohio, married Ida Eikenbery, and they have one child, Zerlina Ella died in youth: Ida O. also died young; Elmer E., a carpenter and builder, of Richmond, Indiana, married Mary L. Brown, and they have three children; Edwin R. died when three years old; Celia E., who married Oliver Botkin, a farmer, and they had eight children, one of whom is deceased; John, of this sketch is the youngest.

The death of Mrs. Addison G. Christopher occurred February 11, 1904, when well advanced in years. Mr. Christopher is an industrious, public-spirited, honorable and useful man, and he is now spending his old age quietly, surrounded by all the comforts of life as a result of his earlier years of industry and good management.

John Christopher was reared to manhood in the usual manner of farmers' boys in his day, aiding in the labors of the field during the summer months and attending the district schools in the wintertime, his early education later being greatly supplemented by wide home reading and by contact with the business world. He began life for himself as a teacher, which he continued successfully for five years, then turned his attention to farming for two years, next we find him launching out in the mercantile life, and in 1892 he formed a partnership with his brother, Elmer E. Christopher, at Modoc, and they soon built up a large trade as general merchants, and, dealing uniformly in an honest and courteous manner with their customers they became the leading merchants of this part of the county. Mr. Christopher has proven himself to be a man of exceptional business ability and foresight and he has acquired considerable valuable property. He is also heavily interested in the Citizens Banking Company of Modoc, of which he has been president for the past eight years, the pronounced success of the same having been due for the most part to his able management and popularity as a man and citizen, the people of this community reposing the utmost confidence in both his ability and integrity.

Mr. Christopher was married in Nettle Creek township, July 19, 1890, to Ida E. Wright, who was born, reared and educated in that township, and is a daughter of Hicks K. Wright, a prosperous farmer and stock man, now living in Winchester. Mrs. Christopher is one of five children. To our subject and wife one child has been born, Jean W., whose birth occurred October 28, 1897.

Fraternally, Mr. Christopher is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Masons. He and his family attend the Methodist church, and politically he is a Republican, but while he takes an abiding interest in public affairs, always ready to assist any movement looking to the general good of his community, he prefers to devote his attention exclusively to his large business interests and his home, rather than be an office holder or a political leader.

JOHN CHARLES BRICKLEY.

During the past decade or two an irresistible force has been working for the improvement of general farming conditions, the agricultural colleges. the farmers' institutes, farm publications and manufacturers. All have foreseen all along the need of labor-saving equipment, also understood the necessity of so constructing outbuildings that livestock could have comfort, and the buildings be kept in sanitary condition, also how the largest results from the minimum amount of labor. Necessity has proven to be the mother of invention in respect to the husbandman and stock man as well as in other fields of human endeavor. The architect has given his thought to convenient, economical and sanitary construction and ventilation and the manufacturer has produced the needed equipment, while the progressive farmer has adopted them. So, gradually a great change is being brought about. The labor of the architects, the manufacturers and teachers has been far-reaching and much good is being accomplished.

One of the farmers of Randolph county who has proven to be wide-awake and ready to adopt new methods and modes of agriculture is John Charles Brickley, who was born on the old homestead in White River township, this county, April 25, 1856, on land which his grandfather, John Brickley entered from the government in the days of the first settlers here, and from that early time to the present the members of this family have been noted for their skill as farmers. Our subject is a son of Simeon and Eliza Ellen (McIntire) Brickley, both natives of this county, born in White River township, and here they grew to maturity, were married and spent their lives successfully engaged in farming, and here the father died January 19, 1913, and is buried in Maxville cemetery. His family consisted of four children, namely: Thursa died in infancy; Angeline, married R. C. Addington, a farmer of Randolph county; Louisa married Ira Branson, banker, of Farmland, and they have three children: John Charles, of this sketch. R. C. Addington and wife, Angeline, reared an adopted daughter, Mamie Porter.

John C. Brickley grew to manhood on the home place and there did his full share of the general work when a boy. He attended the rural schools in his native community and received a very practical education. He began farming when young and this has continued to occupy his entire attention. He owns eighty acres which he has well improved and on which he makes a good living as a general farmer and stock raiser.

On December 25, 1887, Mr. Brickley was married to Belle Bower, a daughter of Joseph Bower, of Ohio, whose family consisted of three children. Mrs. Brickley received a common school education. To our subject and wife one child has been born, Joseph, whose birth occurred May 18, 1890. He was educated in Farmland and was graduated from the high school there.

Mr. Brickley is a Progressive politically, however, still is inclined to Republicanism, but of the old-time brand. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

ELI WRIGHT KEYS.

The old-fashioned notion that hard work, patient industry and far-sightedness make for success in the various avenues of life, does not seem to be accepted so universally in our day. The spread of pessimism engendered by many phases of our complex life is in a great measure responsible for lack of faith in the old idea. However, if we observe conditions closely, we will find that the intelligent individual who leads a practical and industrious life, will reach a point of success commensurate with his efforts. The life of Eli Wright Keys, one of the leading agriculturists and stock men of Randolph county, will afford us an instance of this, for he is an advocate of persistency, honesty and the adoption of modern methods in his vocation, the economy of labor, and he therefore gets the largest results possible from the minimum amount of labor and expense. It is a delight to look over his well-cared-for acres, his sleek, well-bred livestock, and to visit his modernly appointed home; for he believes in having system about everything he does, and this is perhaps very largely due to his large success in his chosen field of endeavor.

Mr. Keys was born October 22, 1855, on a farm, three and one-half miles east of Winchester, where he now lives. He is the oldest of seven children, five sons and two daughters, born to Joseph and Betsie (Coats) Keys, one of our best known and most influential pioneer families, who spent their lives engaged successfully in general farming. The death of Joseph Keys occurred February 18, 1906, at the age of seventy-five years, ten months and fifteen days. His wife preceded him to the grave on May 8, 1901, at the age of sixty-seven years, eleven months and twenty-two days. They were a fine old couple and highly esteemed by all who knew them.

Eli W. Keys was reared on the home farm and was educated in the old log school house which stood near his father's farm. He remained at home, assisting with the general farm work, until his marriage, which took place October 22, 1881, when he espoused Martha J. Davis, a daughter of Benjamin and Margaret (Chambness) Davis, a highly respected family of Randolph county, both the Davis and Chambness families, like that of our subject, having been prominent early settlers here. Benjamin Davis engaged in farming near the town of Lynn, and William Chambness, father of Margaret Chambness, was one of the pioneer millwrights of this locality. The death of Benjamin Davis occurred October 30, 1905, at the advanced age of eighty years, and his wife died April 24, 1869, at the early age of thirty-four years. They are buried in Cherry Grove cemtery, while Mr. Keys' parents lie in Jericho cemetery.

Two children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Artie V., is married to Minnie Hodgin and is operating one of his father's farms in White River township; Ira J. is married to Hazel Ross and lives at home, assisting his father in the management of the home place.

Eli W. Keys first began farming on the place where his oldest son now lives, and there he remained until April 25, 1907, when he removed to the old home farm the year following his father's death, and here he has lived ever since, three and one-half miles east of Winchester. He has always been a farmer and extensive stock raiser and feeder of great droves of hogs annually, preparing the best grades for the markets and no small portion of his competency has been derived from this source. His two farms consist of eighty acres each. They are both well improved and under a high state of cultivation. He has himself retired from active life, merely overseeing his farms in a general way, leaving the actual operating of them to his sons.

Mr. Keys is a staunch Progressive, and while interested in public affairs has never been an office seeker. He and his family are members of the Jericho Friends church, a church which his father and grandfather helped to found. The latter, Benjamin Keys, came to this country from North Carolina and his old flint-lock musket is owned by Ira J. Keys, his great grandson. The weapon was brought along from the old Tar state for defense while threading the great wildernesses of those primitive days.

WILLIAM W. SMULLEN.

One of the twentieth century agriculturists and stock men of Randolph county who has shown himself to be decidedly progressive in his ideas is William W. Smullen, and it is a pleasure to visit his tastily kept and productive farm. He has been a close student of everything that pertains to his vocation, realizing that farming is as complicated a business as any other and that one must be alert, far-seeing and energetic to make the most of his opportunity, realizing the value of labor-saving equipment because of shortage of help, the necessity of preventing the waste of labor and time and of making the most of every day, striving for the largest rewards by the minimum amount of labor, looking out for improved methods and labor-saving applicances. Such a citizen as Mr. Smullen not only succeeds in a material way but his example to the community results in incalculable good.

Mr. Smullen was born in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, April 27, 1853. He is a son of Smith and Margaret (Reed) Smullen, and is one of three children, having two sisters, Mary J., who lives in Medina county, Ohio, married J. L. Offterdinger, a farmer, and they have three children; Alice married Austin Freidline, a real estate dealer of Farmland, and they have one child. Smith Smullen was born in Stoney Creek township, this county, on the old home place and there he spent his life, successfully engaged in general farming and there his death occurred August 19, 1900. His wife was a native of Kentucky. Her death occurred in 1905 at the age of seventy-four years. They were an honest, hospitable and hard-working couple who were highly esteemed by their neighbors and acquaintances. Randolph Smullen, our subject's grandfather, came from Highland county, Ohio, to Randolph county in pioneer days and entered eighty acres in what is now Stoney Creek township, the patent being signed by President John Quincy Adams in 1826, which patent is now in possession of the subject of this review. The country was a wilderness indeed at that time and the elder Smullen endured the usual hardships and privations of those who braved the wilds where settlers were very few and far between. Later he entered another eighty, in 1837, the patent being signed by President Martin Van Buren. This land Mr. Smullen cleared and improved into a farm and spent his last days thereon, dying in 1851.

William W. Smullen grew to manhood on the old home place and he received a good practical education in the common schools of Stoney Creek township. He has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising on the homestead, with the exception of a few years when he was engaged in the mercantile business in Muncie. He has kept the farm well improved and carefully tilled so that it has retained its original fertility, and the buildings are in good repair. He has been successful above the average farmer and is one of the substantial men of his township. He is a stockholder and a director in the State Bank at Farmland.

Mr. Smullen was married July 23, 1876, to Nancy Gilmore, and to this union two children were born: Tessie S., a son, who died at the age of twenty-six years, and Margaret, who was born February 7, 1896. Mr. Smullen subsequently married, on September 21, 1906, Sarah Vance, of Davies county, Indiana, and to this union one child has been born, Winifred, born May 8, 1907.

Politically, Mr. Smullen is a Democrat and has been something of a local party leader for many years. In 1912 he was elected county commissioner for a term of three years, the first Democrat elected to this office for a period of fifty years. This would indicate the popularity of the man and the fact that the people have implicit confidence in him. Personally, he is a gentleman of pleasing address, friendly, capable, public-spirited and of honest convictions, enjoying the respect and good will of all.

SAMUEL C. PUCKETT.

The inclination to study the soils and the planting of crops suitable to their peculiar composition; the ever-increasing clover and grass acreage, the adoption of the silo, which not only conserves but tremendously expands the feeding value of the acres represented in its contents, are among the things which have not only greatly increased the actual profits of the farm but have safeguarded the farm operations and increased many-fold the attractions of farm life. One does not have to spend much time in looking over the well kept and productive farm of Samuel C. Puckett of Stoney Creek township to realize the fact that he deserves to rank among our up-to-date Randolph county farmers.

Here Mr. Puckett has spent his life, having been born on the old homestead, August 1, 1860. He is a son of Nathaniel and Sarah J. (Spray) Puckett. The father was born also in the above named township and county, the date of his birth being February 28, 1825. He was one of the early pioneer children here, his father having braved the wilds of this locality when settlers were very few and the principal occupants of the land were wild beasts. Nathaniel Puckett was a son of Zachariah and Edith Puckett, the father a native of North Carolina. His death occurred in 1865. The early life of Nathaniel Puckett was passed on the home farm which he helped clear and develop, there acquiring that courage, industry and thrift which stood him in good stead in later life. He began farming for himself early in life and soon had a good start and purchased a farm of his own, becoming one of the leading farmers and respected ctizens of his community. He came into possession of the place upon which he remained until his death March 18, 1880. The home farm which was in White River township and consisted of one hundred and six acres, remained in possession of the family nearly a century. He was married April 11, 1864, to Sarah Adamson, daughter of John and Phoebe Adamson, natives of Randolph county and descendants of early pioneer families of northeastern Indiana. Abraham Adamson, father of John, was one of the first settlers of Randolph county; Mrs. Phoebe Adamson was the daughter of Samuel Spray, also a pioneer of Randolph county, having moved here from South Carolina at an early period of the county's history. These children were born to Nathaniel Puckett and wife, Zachary Taylor, a farmer near Winchester; Samuel C., of this review; James, a farmer of White River township; Elmer, also a farmer of White River township; Elizabeth is living in this township; Chester has a farm in the same township; Phoebe died in youth; Mary E. died in infancy. Nathaniel Puckett was a birthright member of the Friends church, the pure, simple faith of which he exemplified in his daily walk and conversation and was a good citizen in every respect.

Samuel C. Puckett was reared on the home farm and there worked when a boy. He received a good education in the common schools, and he began life for himself as a teacher, but followed this vocation only eighteen months. After his father's death he took charge of the home farm which he operated successfully until his brothers were old enough to take the work in hand. He then farmed with John Clayton for nine years, then purchased his present fine farm of eighty acres, two and one-fourth miles from Farmland, which place he has now under excellent improvements and cultivation, has a pleasant home, convenient outbuildings and keeps a good grade of livestock.

Mr. Puckett was married October 15, 1887, to Minnie A. Cheesman, a daughter of Davidson and Ann Cheesman, of Wayne county, Indiana. To this union two children have been born, Ina J., born Christmas day, 1891, was educated in the local schools and in DePauw University; she is a teacher in English history and Latin, and is at this writing principal of the Modoc High School, and is giving much promise of a prominent educator; Anna Frances, the second daughter, was born December 15, 1909.

Mr. Puckett and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has been trustee for a period of six years. In politics he is a Republican. In 1908 he was elected trustee of Stoney Creek township.

JOHN W. SIPE.

One of the best farmers of the vicinity of Saratoga, Randolph county, is John W. Sipe, who never was lured away from the pleasant hills and vales of his native locality by the wanderlust spirit, has been content to spend his life here at home, and he has succeeded because he early grew familiar with the local conditions governing soils, crops and the various phases of the calling which he has been pleased to follow.

Mr. Sipe was born in Randolph county, Indiana, March 15, 1860. He is a son of Henry and Elizabeth Sipe, who had a large family, eleven sons and two daughters, named as follows: Irvin, of Muncie, married M. Mansfield, and they have six children; George died at the age of twenty-one years; Allen who married Catherine Limbert, is living retired at Saratoga; Samuel makes his home at Gas City; Frank is farming in Jackson township, this county; Lorenzo died when twenty-five years of age; Mary lives in Saratoga; William died when forty-five years old, leaving a widow; John W., of this review; Elliott is farming in Ward township, married Etta Shireling, and they have eleven children; Laura lives in Pennsylvania; James, of Saratoga, married twice, had five children by his first wife, three of whom are deceased, and three children were born of his second union; Daniel died in infancy.

Henry Sipe, father of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania where he spent his earlier years and received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded. He eventually removed to Indiana, locating in Randolph county where he engaged in general farming until his death which occurred June 29, 1890, at the age of seventy-two years. His wife was born March 22, 1824, and died at the age of sixty-seven years.

John W. Sipe grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked when a boy and he received his education in the common rural schools of his neighborhood. On September 8, 1888, he married Emma Fields, a daughter of Harrison Fields, a farmer in Ward township, Randolph county. Here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the rural schools.

To our subject and wife four children have been born, named as follows: Lorenzo, who married Carrie Coby, is engaged in the butcher business at Saratoga; Earl is teaching school in Ward township, this being his second year; he was educated in the local schools of Saratoga and at the State Normal in Terre Haute and is making a success as an educator; Herschel was born in 1894 and is at home; Murrill was born in 1901, is also with his parents.

Mr. Sipe began farming for himself when a young man and this has continued to be his life work. He is owner of a finely improved and well cultivated farm of fifty acres two miles from Saratoga, where he has a good home and is engaged in general farming and stock raising. Politically, he is a Democrat. He has been township supervisor for the past eight years and has discharged the duties of this office in a manner that reflects much credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the people in general. He attends the Methodist church.

JOHN E. ORR.

One of the families of Randolph county who have lived to pass through the various gradations of things and who can witness the fact that "the old order changeth," is the Orr family who located in the locality of which this history deals in the pioneer epoch when there were few of the conveniences of the present time, at a time when they were compelled to be self-sustaining for the most part and to undergo, like all new-comers to an unimproved and sparsely settled country, many hardships and inconveniences; but being people of sterling fibre and indomitable fortitude and courage they were not given to backing out or even to complaining and they, in due course of time, became comfortably situated and wielded no small amount of influence in their community and from that early day to this the various members of the family have been useful and highly respected citizens.

One of the best known of the present generation is John E. Orr, now a successful general farmer and stock raiser, but formerly one of our most noted local educators, having devoted a quarter of a century to that field of endeavor here with continued success. He was born in Randolph county, December 8, 1862, and is a son of Darius and Louisa (Jenkins) Orr, whose family consisted of three children, namely: Josephine, who married John Vanasdal, a lineman who fell from a pole and was killed in 1901, leaving two children, Murley and Walter, both now living in Indianapolis; John E., of this sketch, was second in order of birth; William is employed by the Citizens Telephone Company, at Holland, Michigan, married Retta Kinnear, and they have two children, Harry and Gladys.

Darius Orr, father of our subject, was born in Fayette county, Ohio, and he came to Indiana in young manhood with his parents who settled in Green township, Randolph county. Darius Orr spent the rest of his life successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits and merchandising, in Green township and later at Powers Station and at Deerfield where he had moved in November, 1876, his death occurring there in 1906. The mother of the subject was also born in Fayette county, Ohio and when quite young she was brought to Randolph county, Indiana, where she grew to womanhood and married Mr. Orr. She is still living, being now seventy-two years old.

John E. Orr grew to manhood on the home farm in this county and there he assisted with the general work during crop seasons, and he received his education in rural schools of his community and the high school at Ridgeville, later attending the Central Normal school of Indiana, and also the University of Chicago. Thus exceptionally well equipped for his chosen life work he began teaching in Ward township, this county, later teaching in Green and Jackson townships for a period of four years, then taught at Geneva, Indiana, three years, also at Fortville in high school work, then taught at Albany two years, and four years at Redkey, about twenty-five years in all. He gave eminent satisfaction in all those places, being popular with both pupils and patrons and, keeping well abreast of the times in all educational matters he did much to build up the work wherever he was employed. In the school room he was regarded as both an instructor and an entertainer and his services were always in great demand. He became one of the best known educators in this section of the state. Finally tiring of the school room he took up farming, moving in 1904 to the place where he now lives in Ward township, which consists of two hundred and fifteen acres, which he has brought up to a high state of improvement and cultivation and on which he is carrying on general farming and stock raising successfully. He has a pleasant home and a good group of outbuildings.

Politically, Mr. Orr is a Democrat and while he has always been interested in public matters he has never sought public office or leadership. Fraternally, he belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons at Redkey, Indiana. He is a member of the board of advisors of his township. He attends the United Brethren church.

Mr. Orr was married December 25, 1888 to Minnie Lollar, a daughter of Elisha Lollar, a farmer of Ward township where she was reared and educated. Her father on whose homestead our subject lives, was a soldier during the Civil war, serving in the Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He saw much hard service and was dangerously wounded at the battle of Chickamauga. His death occurred in 1885.

To Mr. and Mrs. Orr three children have been born, named as follows: Jessie, born October 1, 1889, was educated in the State Universities of Indiana and Ohio; Ruth, born September 2, 1891, and Mary Louisa, born August 27, 1899.

LEE L. DRIVER.

Among Indiana educators, Lee L. Driver, superintendent of the schools of Randolph county occupies a place in the front rank. He was born February 22, 1867, in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, Indiana. His father was Joab Driver, son of Jacob Driver, an early pioneer of the county; his mother was Mary (Burres) Driver, daughter of Samuel C. Burres. Both antecedent families have been well-known and highly esteemed throughout the county. Mr. Driver has three brothers, Alton D., Elverson T. and Hal E., and one sister, Mrs. Myrtle Reece.

The subject of this sketch was reared to manhood in his native county and attended the country district school one winter, then the schools of Farmland and graduated from the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, in 1883. He then taught school a year in Stoney Creek township, four years in Monroe township and one year in Green township.

Mr. Driver was married April 15, 1886, to Carrie A. Wood, daughter of William H. and Margaret Wood, then in her twentieth year, having been born January 21, 1867. Oscar M. Wood and Mrs. Emma O. Reed, of near Parker, are brother and sister to Mrs. Driver. Four children have been born to this union, i. e.; Clarence W., born March 8, 1887, Herschel W., born March 10, 1892; Mary, born December 7, 1896 and died January 25, 1897, and Agnes, born January 22, 1904. Both Clarence and Herschel are graduates of the Winchester high school and also graduates of Purdue University, Clarence in the class of 1910 and Herschel in 1913.

Yours truly
Lee L. Driver.

In the fall of 1895 the family moved to Winchester and Mr. Driver began teaching in the city schools. For two years he was in charge of the eighth grade, and was teacher of mathematics and botany in 1897, and was then, for ten years, in the high school, seven years of which time he was principal. He attended the State Normal school two terms in 1895. He is also an under-graduate of the Indiana State University. He was elected superintendent of schools of Randolph county, June, 1907, and has continuously held that office until the present time.

Mr. Driver has proved himself a school man of marked ability. He has constantly raised the standard of teaching in his county year by year; is a fine organizer and has enlisted the aid of teachers and school trustees to that degree that great unanimity of action has resulted in building up a fine school spirit. Today no other county in the United States has so great a number of pupils in consolidated schools as has Randolph county. There are eighteen commissioned or certified high schools in the county. In ten out of twelve townships, agriculture is taught, likewise, manual training and domestic science. As a rule college graduates are in charge of the high school courses. The buildings are all modern in almost every respect, including toilets, pressure tanks, hot air or steam heat, engine and ventilation fans and libraries. More than three hundred thousand dollars have been expended in this splendid work and all the buildings, except one, have been erected since Mr. Driver became superintendent.

The name of superintendent Driver has been heralded throughout the State of Indiana and many demands have been made upon him for public addresses in all sections, upon the value of consolidation. For a number of years he has been active before the State Teachers' Association. In 1909 he was made a member of the Legislative Committee of County suprintendents, which had charge of Indiana school affairs, in General Assembly, and was chairman of the same committee in the sessions of 1911 and 1913. At the present time he is chairman of the Legislative Committee of the State Teachers' Association. He was vice-president of the Northern Indiana Teachers' Association for the years 1912-1913; and president of the State Association of County Superintendents in the years 1913-1914.

In an extended article contributed by Mr. Driver to the 1912 Report of State Superintendent Greathouse, he set forth the value of consolidation. The demands for this report have come from England, Germany and Canada. Last year Mr. A. E. Winship, editor of the Journal of Education, Boston, journeyed to Indiana solely to inspect the Randolph county system of consolidation. He visited all the townships and later published a glowing account of his observations in his Journal.

Our subject has been for many years active in church and fraternity circles. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and has been a teacher in the Sunday schools ever since his advent into Winchester. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen, Knights of Pythias and Masonic lodges and has served as the master of Summer's Lodge Free and Accepted Masons for a period of five years.

Mr. Driver is an entertaining speaker and writer, fluent, and forceful. For several years he has been giving an illustrated lecture recounting pioneer history of Randolph county, which has been heard, not only throughout this county, but in the many adjacent counties. He is also a welcome contributor to the leading educational journals of the country and keeps abreast with all the latest and best educational philosophy of the times. The person who peruses this history will readily discern Mr. Driver's ability as a historian.

In this community where he is best known he is highly esteemed as a man of fine ability in educational work, public-spirited as to all matters pertaining to his city, county and state, and ever alert to their best interests. He is a generous neighbor and a loyal friend, and it would be a source of great pleasure to a host of his fellow citizens to see him advance to higher stations of preferment in his chosen field of labor.

WILLIAM JULIAN LOSCH.

Some men speak loudest by talking volubly and frequently, while others speak loudest by their actions. It has been said that we should never form our opinions of men on what they say, but only on what they do. Talking, dreaming, planning amount to but little; it is what a man does that counts. Realizing this early in life William Julian Losch, farmer of Randolph county wisely decided to "saw wood but say nothing," and thus by the habit of keeping his well-laid plans and schemes to himself and keeping industriously engaged he has forged gradually to the front in his vocation and at the same time has established a reputation for good citizenship.

Mr. Losch was born in Jay county, Indiana, March 31, 1862. He is a son of Frederick Charles and Eliza (Stick) Losch, and is one of two children; his brother John lives in Bond county, Illinois, on a farm, he married Spicy Brown and they have six children.

Frederick C. Losch, father of our subject, was four years old when he was brought from Germany, where he was born, to the United States. The family settled in New Madison, Ohio, where they remained some time, then came on to Jay county, Indiana, where the paternal grandfather of our subject spent the rest of his life, dying at the age of sixty-nine years. He entered a farm from the government of four hundred and eighty acres, which he cleared and developed and became one of the leading farmers of his locality. The parents of the subject of this sketch were married in Jay county and there established their home.

William J. Losch grew to manhood in Jay county and worked on the farm when a boy. He received a common school education, and on December 24, 1884, he married Emma S. Iliff, a daughter of William T. Iliff, a farmer of Ward township, Randolph county, where she was born and grew to womanhood and she received her education in the public schools there. Mrs. Losch is one of ten children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Losch seven children have been born, namely: Hettie married Frederick Toumey, a farmer of Jay county, and they have three children, Mary Esther, Harriet Elizabeth and Frederick Losch; Lloyd M. died in infancy; Carrie L. married Chauncy V. Lindley, professor in a business college at Piqua, Ohio, and they have two children, Byron and Loren Lee; Rosa died when ten years of age; Gertie, born January 19, 1894; Mary, born December 1, 1897, is preparing herself for teaching; George Raymond, born January 5, 1900.

Mr. Losch is owner of a fine farm of one hundred acres, on which stand substantial and convenient buildings He makes a feature of fruit growing and is one of the best informed men on horticulture in the county. He is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished, having to start out empty-handed and forge to the front, entirely on his own account. He was two years old when his father died, his death having occurred from the effects of a disease contracted during the Civil war, while chasing Morgan the invader. Our subject was bound out when he was only six years of age to Henry Stick, with whom he remained until he was twenty years of age. After he regained his freedom he worked out seven years, and with the aid of a small legacy left him by his Grandfather Losch and what he had saved by economy he was enabled to begin farming for himself. He was to receive a horse, saddle and bridle at the termination of the period during which he was bound out, but he received only a colt of small value.

Mr. Losch is a Republican in politics. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Red Men and the Modern Woodmen of America.

D. E. BARBER.

To attain a worthy citizenship by a life that is always honored and respected, even from childhood, deserves more than a cursory glance by the biographer and a casual mention by the historian. All will agree that it takes a man of sterling mettle to successfully overcome the manifold temptations of youth and early manhood and establish a character in the minds and hearts of those with whom he is fated to associate that will remain an untarnished figure throughout the future years. But this is what D. E. Barber, well known citizen of the vicinity of Saratoga, Randolph county, has accomplished. Here his life has been spent and he has looked so well to his habits of living that no one speaks ill of him. He has become one of our leading farmers and contractors and is a splendid native-born citizen, a typical representative of this thriving community.

Mr. Barber was born in Saratoga, Indiana, September 11, 1867. He is a son of George W. and Amanda (Diehl) Barber and was one of five children, also had a half-brother: David died in infancy; Amy is the wife of C. A. Ballard, a railroad man of Springfield, Illinois, and they have four children, two boys and two girls; O. L., who is engaged in the fence manufacturing business at Muncie, Indiana, married Lilly M. Milliken and they have one child; D. E., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Rosa died when thirty-eight years old, leaving a husband and four children; Ora R., half-brother of our subject, is engaged in railroading at Amherst, Wisconsin.

George W. Barber, father of the above named children, was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, and when three years old his parents brought him to Randolph county, Indiana, locating at Saratoga and in that vicinity the parents established their home on a farm in the pioneer period and there George W. grew to manhood and spent his life successfully engaged in general farming. He was an honored and industrious citizen. His death occurred September 23, 1911. His wife, Amanda Diehl, was born in Jackson township, this county, and here grew to womanhood. She was a daughter of Ephraim Diehl and wife, and was one of eleven children. Her death occurred February 22, 1873.

D. E. Barber grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked when a boy and he received his education in the common schools at Saratoga. In early life he learned the painter's trade which he followed for some time, but he has devoted his attention to general farming and stock raising since he reached manhood. He has prospered through close application and good management and is now owner of two splendid farms of sixty-five acres near Saratoga, which he has brought up to a high state of improvement and cultivation and on which stand a commodious residence and substantial outbuildings. An excellent grade of live stock is to be found about his place at all times. Although a very busy man with his general farming and stock raising he finds time to do a great deal of contracting, doing a great deal of cement work and road building and turns out some large jobs annually. His work is always high-grade and is promptly done.

Mr. Barber was married February 4, 1890, to Sarah Almonrode, a daughter of Alexander Almonrode, a successful farmer, now deceased. Here Mrs. Barber grew to womanhood and was educated. Five children have been born to this union, namely: Dorothy, born January 2, 1891, married Charles Hesser, a farmer of Jackson township, and they have two children, Virginia and Norval Edgar; Tracy, born July 25, 1894; Noel A., born October 5, 1896; Juanita, born December 20, 1900; Cordelia, born July 7, 1904.

Mr. Barber is a Republican in politics. He attends the Methodist church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Encampment Red Men and Loyal Order of Moose.

ALBERT E. ZIMMERMAN.

Randolph county, Indiana, has furnished comfortable homes for many of the enterprising citizens hailing from the great German empire who have been settling within her borders since the pioneer epoch when the land was still the haunts of various tribes of Indians, the Weas, Kickapoos, Miamis and others, and also the haunts of many species of wild denizens of the northern woods. We have always welcomed those of Germanic blood, and this is as it should be, for they have been courageous and not afraid of hard work and have been of untold assistance to us in clearing the fertile soil of its heavy timber of beech, oak, ash and other wood common to this locality, and they, too, have helped build our substantial dwellings, comfortable public buildings and attractive business houses. Few of these visitors from that alien land had any capital when they arrived, at least, very little, not enough to be of much consequence; but they didn't need much, for they were strong in body and mind and did not hesitate at obstacles, and thus in due course of time they attained a competency and a position of influence in the locality in which they chose to reside.

Of this large band from the Fatherland should be mentioned Emanuel Zimmerman, father of Albert E. Zimmerman, well known hardware merchant of Ridgeville, Randolph county, Indiana, in which county the latter, our subject, was born May 22, 1874. Both the father and the mother, who was known in her maidenhood as Anna Wise, were born in Wittenburg, Germany and there they spent their earlier years, finally emigrating to America, the father landing in New York City with but seventy-nine cents, and he began work in that city at fifty cents a day, subsequently coming west and locating in Dayton, Ohio. He worked in a saw mill several years, during which he saved his money and was eventually enabled to buy a farm in Darke county, Ohio, where he lived for two years then came to Randolph county, Indiana, and purchased a farm in Green township where he prospered, becoming one of the leading general farmers and stock raisers in the county, and at his death in 1905 he left an estate valued at twenty thousand dollars, which he had made by his own persistency, good management and honest dealings. His wife preceded him to the grave in 1902. Their family consisted of ten children, two of whom, a son and daughter, died in infancy and eight grew to man and womanhood, namely: Jacob, an insurance man of Ridgeville, married Emma J. Jones, and they have two children; Emanuel was next in order of birth; John is engaged in the hardware business with our subject at Ridgeville, married Flora Mendenhall, which union has been without issue; George, a farmer of Green township, married Rosella Gantz, and they have two children, a boy and a girl; William, mail carrier out of Ridgeville married Flora Pace and they have two sons; Martin, J., a painter and paperhanger of Dayton, Ohio, married Cassie Heniser and they have six children; Philip, a farmer of Green township, married Della Boyer, and they have six children; Albert E., of this sketch is the youngest.

Albert E. Zimmerman grew to manhood on the home farm and he received a common school education. September 11, 1897, he married Eva Shoemaker, daughter of Charles W. and Sarah J. Shoemaker, whose family consisted of six children. Mr. Shoemaker was a progressive farmer. He and the family are members of the Evangelical church.

Mr. Zimmerman worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-three years old, then farmed for himself until he reached the age of twenty-nine. Although he was making splendid success as a farmer he decided to take up the merchandise business, and accordingly moved to Ridgeville where he went into the grocery business. He enjoyed a large trade, but finding a better opportunity in the hardware business with his brother John in Ridgeville he went into that three years ago, having remained in the grocery business five years with his brother Jacob. He now has a double store and carries a large stock of up-to-date and carefully selected goods and enjoys a large and rapidly growing trade with the surrounding country.

Mr. Zimmerman is a Republican in politics, and he has been township trustee for a period of six years, filling the office to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen.

OLLIE M. PAINTER.

One of the native-born sons of Randolph county who has been content to spend his life in his own locality, rather than seek uncertain fortunes in "the west," that vague yet facinating phrase which has lured many a lad from a good home in the Eastern states and then ruining him for his pains. Our subject was formerly in business in the county-seat, but having the love of the soil born in him he did not fit in exactly with the mercantile life in a city and returned to the farm where he is most successful and happiest, which indeed is not strange to us who love the country and have little use for the cramped and artificial life of the town.

Mr. Painter was born in Randolph county, February 25, 1864. He is a son of James K. and Margaret (Ellis) Painter, and he is one of two children, the other being Charles F. Painter, a carpenter and builder of Hartford City, Indiana; he married Lina Cox, and they have two children, Clarence and Harold; Cecil O. died when thirteen months old.

James K. Painter, the father, was a native of Ohio where he spent his boyhood years and received a common school education. When a young man he came to Monroe township, Randolph county, Indiana and here finally bought a farm, devoting his life to agricultural pursuits, although he was a mechanic by profession which he followed in early life for some time. He moved to Michigan but did not remain long in the Wolverine state, coming back to Randolph county and bought a farm in Franklin township, where he continued to reside until his death at the age of fifty-two years. The mother of our subject came from Pennsylvania, and the grandmother from England, having been abducted when a child, according to the tradition of her family. The parents of our subject were both of English descent. The mother is living in Ridgeville, Indiana at this writing. After the death of the father of our subject she married Rev. Thomas Addington, a minister in the Christian church.

Ollie M. Painter grew to manhood on the farm and assisted his father with the general farm work when a boy, and he received his education in the common schools of his locality. On October 24, 1887 he married Rosa B. Burton, a daughter of David Burton, a millwright by profession, but who is now engaged in farming in Franklin township. Mrs. Painter is one of a family of nine children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Painter one child has been born, Hermieone Goldie, whose birth occurred December 21, 1888; she received a good education in the local schools and married T. E. Driver, of Tampa, Florida.

Mr. Painter engaged in the shoe business at Winchester a short time, and although he was building up a good trade, he longed to get back to the soil and purchased a fine farm not far from Winchester. He lived on the homestead thirty-five years, and has lived on his present farm ten years. He carries on general farming and stock raising on a large scale, and he has a cozy home and good outbuildings. He takes a delight in keeping everything about his place in ship-shape.

Mr. Painter has been a life-long Republican. He is a member of the Christian church.

DANIEL BRAGG.

The gentleman to a review of whose life and characteristics the reader's attention is herewith directed is among the favorably known and representative citizens of Randolph county. Mr. Bragg has, by his indomitable energy and enterprise, contributed to the material, civic and moral advancement of his community during the course of an honorable career and he has ascended through his individual methods from the bottom of the ladder to a place of importance in his locality, being a man of decided progressive ideas, and ever known as a man of unswerving industry, sound judgment and honesty of purpose.

Daniel Bragg was born in Grant county, Indiana, May 11, 1858. He is a son of Wesley and Mary E. (Miller) Bragg and was one of twelve children, nine of whom survive, namely: Daniel, of this review, is the eldest; Austin, a farmer of Ward township, married Della Sarff, and to them nine children were born, six of whom survive; Lewis, a farmer of Ward township, married Jennie Simmons, and they have two children; Samantha, who married James H. Warren, a farmer in Ohio, has six children; Ephraim, who is farming in Ohio, married Mary O. Warren; Sarah married Alva Arnold, a farmer; John W., a real estate dealer of Winchester, married Alta Peacock, and they have two children; Charles, a farmer of Jackson township, married Ada Craig, and to them six children were born, four of whom are deceased; Theodore, who is engaged in the real estate business with his brother in Winchester, married Gertie Craig, and they have six children.

MR. AND MRS. DANIEL BRAGG.

Wesley Bragg, father of the above named children, was born in Ward township, this county, and here grew to manhood and was educated in the public schools; he has devoted his life successfully to general farming in Randolph and Grant counties. His wife was eleven years old when she came to Grant county, and there she married Mr. Bragg and they established their home there, but later removed to this county, and settled in Ward township. Our subject's paternal grandfather came from Tennessee in an early day and settled in Randolph county, Indiana, spending the rest of his life on a farm two miles north of Saratoga. He was three times married, and he was the father of eight children, all by his first wife; only one of the children survives at this writing.

Daniel Bragg grew to manhood on the home farm and there he worked when a boy. He received a good common school education. He has been twice married, first, on May 26, 1877, to Rhoda P. Hinkle, by which union the following children were born, namely: Henry D., a farmer near Winchester, married Almeda Gurton, and they have four children, Lola May, Albert, Orin and Pauline; Bessie married Charles Ditmer, a farmer of Arcanum, Ohio, and they have three children, Mildred, Blanch and Naoma; Elsie, of Eaton, Indiana, married Charles Steed, and they have four children, Marvin, Marjorie, Ruth and Jessie D.; Perrie A., a farmer near Winchester, married Maggie Courtner, and they have four children, Neva, Charlotte, Gladys and Edgar; Della May married Charles Owens, a farmer near Winchester, and they have three children, Pearl, Roy and Grace; H. E., a railroad man of Chicago, married Glee Collett, and they have one child; Kenneth Newton. The second marriage of Daniel Bragg, of this sketch, was to Mary (Adamson) Evans on June 1, 1904. She was born in Randolph county, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Ira Adamson, a farmer of White River township and a highly respected citizen. This second union has been without issue.

Mr. Bragg began farming for himself when a young man and he has continued with ever increasing success, until now he is deserving of a place in the foremost ranks of local agriculturists. He owns a well-kept and finely improved farm of sixty acres, on which he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale, and on which stand a neatly furnished residence and large outbuildings. He is a good judge of live stock and keeps a good grade at all seasons. Politically, he is a Democrat, and is influential in local party affairs. He was supervisor of his township for four terms, discharging his duties in a manner that met the hearty approval of all concerned, and doing a great deal toward the general improvement of the township. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen, being a charter member of the latter. He belongs to the United Brethren church at Saratoga, in which he is active. He is popular in his community and a pleasant gentleman to meet.

EMANUEL ZIMMERMAN.

Another of the enterprising farmers and public-spirited citizens of Randolph county who hails from the old Buckeye state and whom we take a delight in giving special notice in this volume is Emanuel Zimmerman, of Green township. He is a man who would have succeeded at his chosen life work in whatever locality he might have selected in view of the fact that he is a hard and persistent worker, a man of sound judgment and quick mind. He has never been content to live along the line of least resistance, but has tried in every possible manner to improve existing conditions, studying the soil, various fertilizers, seeds, climatic conditions and everything, in short, that he felt was necessary to insure a large measure of success as a general agriculturist.

Mr. Zimmerman was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, August 6, 1857. He is a son of Emanuel and Anna Elizabeth (Wise) Zimmerman, who were born and educated in Alsace-Lorraine and married there, and from that country came to Montgomery county, Ohio, later moving to Darke county, Ohio, and then to Randolph county, Indiana, when our subject was young and here he grew up and received a common school education, although he was not able to get any schooling after his twelfth year. He remained under his parental roof tree and assisted with the general work on the farm until reaching his majority.

On November 28, 1871, Mr. Zimmerman married Phoebe J. Gantz, whose father, James Gantz, was born in Germany where he spent his boyhood and received his education, and when a young man he left the Fatherland and emigrated to the United States, locating in Virginia. His wife, Elizabeth Ann French, was a native of New Jersey.. They finally removed to Indiana and established their future home.

Six children were born to Emanuel Zimmerman and wife, three sons and three daughters, namely: Anna E. married Garfield Carter, a farmer of Green township, and they have two daughters, Mildred Loretta and Olive Lucille; Delpha, a school teacher, lives at home; Everett Edward is superintendent of the Farmland schools; Harrison Joseph is cost accountant and secretary of the Muncie Wheel & Jobbing Company, which is the largest concern of its kind in the world; Dorsie Etta, born September 5, 1893, is at home; John Arthur, born November 25, 1896, is at home.

Mr. Zimmerman has devoted his attention to farming all his life and has been very successful as a general farmer and stock raiser, and is owner of a valuable and well-kept place of one hundred acres in Green township, on which stands a good set of outbuildings and where may be seen an excellent grade of livestock.

Mr. Zimmerman attends and supports the Methodist Protestant church. Politically, he is a Republican and has been active in local party affairs. He has been township trustee for a period of six years, proving to be a most faithful and able public servant. Green township is indeed fortunate in having a man for this office with the business capacity of Mr. Zimmerman. He has done much for the township since he became trustee, among the notable things being the erection of the Central school, the finest in the state of Indiana for the expense incurred. This he accomplished with the aid of his advisory board which consisted of Jas. H. Moore, now deceased, J. W. St. John and George Wise, Jr. He is a most popular public servant and has the good will and confidence of all the people, irrespective of party alignment. He is a member of the Masonic order and of the Red Men.

ARTHUR S. SLONAKER.

Among the thrifty and painstaking farmers and stock raisers of the vicinity of Farmland, Randolph county none are deserving of specific mention more than Arthur S. Slonaker, as he has one of the best kept, most productive and valuable farms in Monroe township. It has been his persistent work and good management that has made it so, for he is a man who has never depended upon others to do what he should do for himself, and he is not only a good farmer but a citizen in whom those who he has dealings with repose the utmost confidence, since he is unquestionably honest, charitable and neighborly.

Mr. Slonaker was born on March 27, 1864, in Randolph county. He is a son of Adam and Nancy (Morris) Slonaker. Adam Slonaker was born in what is now Hampshire county, West Virginia, in 1824, and when but an infant lost his father, the mother later marrying William Parish, and they settled in Frederick county, Virginia, where both spent the rest of their lives. When ten years old Adam began working out on a farm, which he continued to do until reaching his majority. Two years later he came to Ohio, in the fall of 1848 and continued working at farm work. In 1851 he married Nancy Morris, who was born in Highland county, Ohio, October 1, 1826, a daughter of Isaac and Maria (Cooper) Morris. Adam Slonaker resided in Highland county, Ohio, six years, and in 1855 came to Monroe township, Randolph county, Indiana, and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of wild land on which he resided until 1864, when he removed to a farm just east of Farmland, buying one hundred and eighty-eight acres and here spent the rest of his active life, dying in Farmland, November 26, 1899. The farm he owned then is now occupied by our subject. In politics he was a Republican. He was county commissioner for two terms and was trustee of his township for two terms. His father was a native of Holland. Nancy Morris, mother of our subject, is still living, making her home in Oregon. Her grandmother lived to the advanced age of ninety-eight years.

To Adam Slonaker and wife eight children were born, namely: Alice V., married Charles W. Paris, formerly superintendent of schools of Farmland; they now live in California, and have twelve children: William N. died in early childhood; Julia Emily died when three years old; Anna Marion died in infancy; Cornelia B., who lives in Mankato, Minnesota, married John A. Hancock, superintendent of schools, and they have two children, one having died; Charlotte E., who lives in the Hood River valley, Oregon, married James H. Jeffrey, a fruit grower, formerly of New Castle, Indiana; Arthur S., of this review; James Rowland is a professor in Leland-Stanford University, Palo Alto, California, married Marion Esta Stratton, of Worcester, Massachusetts, and they have three children.

Arthur S. Slonaker was reared on the home farm and received his education in the public schools. On September 29, 1885, he married Nettie Gray, of Farmland, a daughter of Nathan E. Gray, who was a furniture dealer in that town for some time, later making his home in Dayton, Ohio; he was a builder and contractor. His family consisted of eight children, four sons and four daughters, there being two pairs of twins. The mother was from Holmes county, Ohio.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Slonaker, namely: Mildred Virginia, a teacher in the Farmland schools, was born April 8, 1887; Myron G., an electrical engineer, was educated at Purdue University; he was born January 24, 1889; Richard L., who lives in Dayton, Ohio, where he has employment with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, was born December 28, 1891; Mary Lou, born June 5, 1896, is a graduate of Farmland high school.

Politically Mr. Slonaker is a Republican, and he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Our subject has devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising. He is now owner of a fine farm of one hundred and eighty-eight acres, pleasantly located one-half mile from Farmland, where he carries on farming according to advanced methods and handles an excellent grade of livestock. On his place stands a comfortable residence and good outbuildings.

SAMUEL M. COUGILL.

The name of Samuel Cougill, farmer and banker of Farmland is too well-known to the people of Randolph county to need any introduction by the biographer. He occupies a prominent place in the esteem of the people and is universally respected. He is a worthy representative of one of the excellent old pioneer Hoosier families, members of which have figured more or less prominently in the affairs of this section of the state for several generations, ever lending such aid as was their just due in futhering any movements having as their object the general upbuilding of their respective communities in a material, civic and moral way. They have not been neglectful of their duty in any of the avenues of life and they have long ranked among the best farmers, being advocates of progressive methods in order to get the largest results from the minimum expenditure of labor. There is much satisfaction in offering biographies of such people in a work of this nature.

Samuel M. Cougill was born in Wayne county, Indiana, February 15, 1846. He is a son of Robert and Eliza (Tunes) Cougill. He is of Scotch ancestry, seemingly inheriting many of the sterling traits of his forbears, and he is one of a family of nine children, namely: Asbury, deceased, left several children, only two of whom survive, Emily died at the age of sixteen years; George Wiley died in Missouri in 1910, leaving a widow and seven children, he was both a teacher and minister of the gospel; Samuel M., of this review; Filinda died at the age of fifteen years; Lewis, who is farming in Delaware county, is married and has four children; Cornelia, who married John Ralston, a carpenter and builder, is deceased, two children surviving; Martha, of Findlay, Ohio, married John Grooms, and they have six children, all boys; Albert, who conducts a hotel at Portland, married Nora Linstell, first, later married Cora McLaughlin, and he has three children. The father of our subject was three times married; his second wife was May Savage, by whom two sons and one daughter were born; his third wife was a Miss Hunt and to them one child was born, Lloyd.

Robert Cougill, father of our subject, was born in Ohio where he grew to manhood, received his education and married, soon after this event he brought his bride to Indiana. He engaged successfully in school teaching for a period of twenty-seven years, and three of his sons were school teachers. His father enlisted as a soldier in the war of 1812, from Pennsylvania, his native state, but he died in Indiana. Robert Cougill purchased a farm in Randolph county, consisting of two hundred acres. His death occurred in Missouri in 1897, after devoting the latter part of his life to general agricultural pursuits. The mother of our subject was one of nine children. Her parents were farmers and they came from Ohio to Indiana in an early day where the future home of the family was established.

Samuel M. Cougill grew to manhood on the home farm and he had the advantages of a good education and he began life as a school teacher which he followed for eight years, during which his services were in great demand. He has been twice married, first on April 29, 1869 to Eliza Meeks, by whom six children were born, one of whom died in infancy; Thomas Harvey died in 1903, he was a farmer and school teacher, he married Gertrude Bond, and to them one child was born, Thomas Harold; Lona, who married William Tharp, a farmer of Delaware county, has seven children; Robie married Irene Brewington, is a farmer and dairyman, and has two sons; Arthur lives near Lynn on a farm, married Anna Ross, and they have two daughters and one son; Myrtle married Earl Swander, a farmer and school teacher of Delaware county, and they have two children. Mr. Cougill married for his second wife Emma Learel-Brewington, which union has been without issue. She had three children by her former husband, namely: Glenn, who died when seven years old; Mary and Matilda, twins, born July 31, 1892; the former married John Strong, a farmer near Redkey; Matilda married Walter Hook, a farmer near Albany.

Mr. Cougill began life for himself as a farmer, and he is now owner of a finely improved and productive farm of one hundred and twenty acres. He was one of the organizers of the Farmland State Bank in 1887, was one of its first directors and is still one. He was at one time vice-president of this sound and popular institution, and is now president of the same. Its fine prestige and large success has been due for the most part to the management of its directors and cashier. A general banking business is carried on and this bank ranks with the best in the county and northern Indiana.

Fraternally, Mr. Cougill is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically he is a Republican, and is loyal in his support of the party. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, and is a liberal supporter of same.

DAVID EDGAR HILL.

The state of Ohio has sent large numbers of her best and most enterprising citizens into Randolph county, Indiana, where they have carried forward the good work of civilization, reclaimed the rich soil from the wilderness and so skillfully operated the farms that they have retained the original richness and productiveness of soil and they have built cities and towns, erected churches and school-houses and brought this locality up to an equality with any other in the Union. So we owe the old Buckeye state a great debt of gratitude, so great, indeed that we cannot hope to repay it in any way. One of the worthy families she has sent to us is the Hills, of the vicinity of Parker whose residence here of over forty years has been productive of much good to both themselves and the county.

David Edgar Hill, to whose life record we give briefly especial attention here, was born in Highland county, Ohio, May 22, 1869. but practically all of his life has been spent in Randolph county, he having been an infant when brought here by his parents, Benjamin and Sarah (Morris) Hill. He is one of five children, named as follows: Daniel, lumberman, of Colorado Springs, Colorado, married Etta Biser and they have five children: David Edgar, subject of this sketch; Sarah Alice, who became the wife of Oscar Tharp died at the age of thirty-four years; Marion, who is farming on the old homestead, married Belle Hinchman, and they have four children; Elizabeth lives with her parents in the village of Farmland.

Benjamin Hill was born, reared and educated in Ohio and there he and Sarah Morris were married. In 1870, when twenty-six years old, he removed with his family to Indiana, locating in Randolph county where he became a successful general farmer. He is owner of four large and valuable farms. He is now living retired in his pleasant modern home in Farmland, where he and his good wife are held in high esteem by a host of warm friends.

David E. Hill was reared on the old home place where he worked when a boy, and during the winter he attended the district schools in his neighborhood. He has been twice married, first, to Cora Thornburg, by which union five children were born, namely: Paul, Earl, Iris, Marcus and Marie. The wife and mother was called to her rest on November 16, 1905. In July, 1907, Mr. Hill married Eva McGunegill, of Monroe township, Randolph county. She is a daughter of John R. McGunegill and wife. This union has been without issue.

Mr. Hill has devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising, and is operating a well-managed and productive farm of three hundred acres.

Politically, Mr. Hill is a Republican. He has served his township as supervisor. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

MRS. MARY ADAMSON-EVANS BRAGG.

Words of praise cannot clearly convey the personal characteristics of the estimable lady whose name forms the caption of this article, for only those who have the good fortune to know her personally can see the true beauty of her character and individual traits, which have been the resultant, very largely, of an industrious and wholesome life spent in the devotion to duty, a life filled with good deeds to others and led along worthy planes, and as a result of her commendable characteristics she enjoys the friendship of a large circle of acquaintances in Randolph county.

Mrs. Mary (Adamson-Evans) Bragg, wife of Daniel Bragg, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume, was born in Randolph county, Indiana. She is a daughter of Ira and Nancy A. (Wilmore) Adamson. Mr. Adamson, a highly respected farmer of White River township, this county, came to this locality when it was little developed and here he became a successful agriculturist, bringing an excellent farm up from the wild state. When the subject of this sketch was nine months old he moved with his family to a farm a half mile west and two miles south of the town of Saratoga, and there Mrs. Bragg grew to womanhood. The place consisted of one hundred and sixty acres, only seven acres of which was at that time cleared. The land was originally owned by her maternal grandfather, Willis C. Wilmore, who gave his daughter, Mrs. Nancy A. Adamson, mother of Mrs. Bragg, eighty acres, Mr. Adamson purchasing the additional eighty. But Mr. Adamson was a man of industry and courage and he set to work with a will to clear and place all his land under cultivation, and it was not many years until he had one of the choice farms of the locality and a comfortable home. Jesse Adamson, brother of Mrs. Bragg, is living on the homestead at this writing. He was born and reared there; in fact, has never lived anywhere else. Ten children were born to Ira Adamson and wife, namely: Willis A. married Angeline Warren, and they live near Saratoga.

Randolph county; Mary, the immediate subject of this review; Sarah is living in Mason City, Illinois; Jesse, who lives on the home farm, married Etta McGraw, and they have one son, Ray; Mrs. Alice Leach lives in Muncie, Indiana, and has one child, Jesse Merril; John, deceased, was married and had two children, Paul and Loveday; James is married and has one child, Lois, and lives with his family in Westerville, Ohio; George, who is living in Everett, Washington, is married, but has no children; Mrs. Hannah Holloway, who lives near Lynn, Indiana, has two children, Ardath and Hubert; Mrs. Edith Culp, who lives in Mason City, Illinois, has one son, Ray.

Mrs. Bragg spent her girlhood days assisting with the household work on the home farm, and in the winter months she attended the district schools, first attending school in an old log house, a considerable distance from home, the path to which was through such heavily timbered country that her father found it necessary to blaze the trees along the path to keep his children from getting lost while going to and from school. It was known as the "lost school house," from the fact that a United Brethren minister got lost in the wilderness in attempting to go but a half mile to the little log school house, where he intended preaching. The country round about was low, and in the seasons of mud and ice, was difficult to travel over. A large pond came almost up to the door of the school house, and Mrs. Bragg recalls many a pleasant time spent in skating on this pond during her school days.

Mrs. Bragg remained at home on the farm until her marriage to Dr. G. S. Evans, of Saratoga, this county, and they lived in that town until his death, in 1891, after they had been married six years, and to this union two children were born, Harry A. Evans, who lives at Vancouver, British Columbia, married Maud V. Calliew, who was born in Sussex, England; Mabelle Evans married Raymond Lasley, and they live on a farm two miles southwest of Winchester, Indiana, and to this union one son has been born. Evan Arnold Lasley.

Dr. Evans was one of the successful doctors of Randolph county and a highly respected citizen. After his death, his widow removed, with her two small children, to Mason City, Illinois, where they resided from September, 1891, to March, 1901, when they moved back to the old home farm, Mrs. Evans keeping house for her brother and father, after the death of her mother. On June 1, 1904, she married Daniel Bragg, and they are living on a farm in this county. This second union has been without issue. Their place, known as the "Revenue farm," is located in pleasant surroundings, six miles north of Winchester.

The grandfather of Mrs. Bragg's mother was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and by virtue of this fact, Mrs. Bragg is now a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, her membership being accepted April 18, 1914. Mrs. Bragg's great-grandmother was a Harrison, a sister of President William Henry Harrison.

Mrs. Bragg is known among her friends as a neighborly, hospitable and genial lady, who takes a great pride in her home and the affairs that are of vital interest to the community.

OLIVER G. SMITH

One of the most conspicuous stock dealers and agriculturists in the present-day history of Randolph county is Oliver G. Smith, of near Farmland, a man actively identified with the business interests of this locality and for many years widely known as one of the representative men of this section of the great Hoosier commonwealth. Equally noted as a citizen whose useful career has conferred credit upon the community and whose marked abilities and stirring qualities have won for him much more than local repute, he holds today distinctive precedence as one of the most progressive and successful men that ever forged his way from an environment none too auspicious and that ever here inaugurated and carried to successful termination large and important undertakings. Strong mental endowment, invincible courage and a determined will, coupled with an honesty of purpose that hesitates at no opposition, have so entered into his composition as to render him a dominant factor in the business world and a leader of important local enterprises. He is essentially a man of affairs, sound of judgment and far-seeing in what he undertakes; and every enterprise to which he has addressed himself has resulted in liberal financial returns, while at the same time he has won and retained the confidence and esteem of all.

Mr. Smith was born in Highland county, Ohio, October 2, 1855. He is a son of Barclay and Sophia (Grove) Smith, and is one of a family of six children, he being the eldest, the others are Everett W., a farmer near Parker, married Nancy Dragoo, and they have four children; Edgar Oscar, a painter of Parker, married Alice Cultice, and they have a son and daughter; Charley, a machinist of Muncie, has remained single; Ida M. lives in Columbus, Ohio; Sadie, who lives on the old homestead near Parker, married William Morris, and they have eight children.

Barclay Smith, the father, was born in Highland county, Ohio, and there grew to manhood, was educated and married. His death occurred in 1909. The paternal grandfather came from Maryland to Ohio in an early day. The great grandfather was a native of Ireland, from which country he emigrated to America. The mother of our subject was born in Kentucky, but was reared, educated and married in Ohio. Her death occurred in 1913 at the advanced age of seventy-seven years. The maternal grandfather was a Virginian, a large plantation owner, and at one time he had one hundred and twenty slaves which he finally freed. He removed from Virginia to Kentucky, thence to Ohio, purchasing in the last named state two hundred acres on which he spent the rest of his life, dying at the age of eighty years. He was a philanthropist and among his innumerable charitable acts he fed scores of poor people during the Civil War. He was a prosperous farmer and an exceptionally strong business man and influential citizen.

Oliver G. Smith was educated in the common schools and was reared in the Quaker faith, much pains being taken in his early training. On January 26, 1877, he married Mary Etta Wood, a daughter of John F. Wood, of Farmland, whose family consisted of twelve children, eight of whom survive at this writing. To our subject and wife four children have been born, three daughters and one son, namely: Burley Beatrice, born in 1884, married Omar Bennett, a farmer in Randolph county; Stella married H. Hawkins of Farmland and they have two children; John B. who lives on the home farm, was born in 1892 and has just graduated from Purdue University where he spent four years; Flossie, born in 1894, married Oscar Hubbard, June 26, 1913; Mr. Hubbard is a machinist and lives in Farmland. All the above named children were well reared and all are graduates of the high school at Farmland.

Mr. Smith is deserving of a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished for he started at the bottom of the ladder, working by the month as a farm hand for seven years. He assisted with the work on his father's farm until he reached his majority. He now owns one of the finest farms in Randolph county, which is modernly improved and under a high state of cultivation. He is one of the most extensive buyers of live stock in northern Indiana or perhaps in the state. His start was made by buying a pig for which he paid with savings from wages at thirty-five cents a day. Something of the enormous growth of his business in this line of endeavor may be gained from the fact that during the year of 1912 he paid out to the farmers of Randolph county for livestock the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In the spring of 1913 he shipped from the state of Texas to this county forty-one car loads of young cattle, which he prepared for the market on his farm here. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Farmland. Besides buying all kinds of livestock for the market he breeds fancy hogs, Percheron horses and short horn cattle on an extensive scale, and his fine stock always find a ready sale at fancy prices, owing to their superior qualities. Personally he is a good mixer, genial, obliging and straightforward in all his relations with his fellow men.

MANFORD AUKERMAN.

The name of Aukerman has been an honored one in Randolph county for forty years, and the gentleman of that name who is the immediate subject of this sketch is richly deserving of the universal respect which is accorded him by all with whom he is acquainted. He is one of the painstaking and energetic farmers of Jackson township; still in the fulness of years, he is to be found at the helm of a large and growing agricultural business.

Manford Aukerman was born in German township, Darke county, Ohio, April 25, 1868. He is a son of Daniel Aukerman, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1834, there spent his early life, married Sarah Elizabeth Spencer, who was born in that county, September 5, 1838, a daughter of William and Margaret (Erwin) Spencer. The father of William Spencer was Frank Spencer. Daniel Aukerman finally moved with his family, in 1873, to Randolph county, Indiana, and located on a farm, now owned and occupied by his only child, Manford Aukerman. The father cleared and improved this farm and devoted his life to general farming. His death occurred in 1895. His wife died December 5, 1910. They both spent their last years with our subject. They were excellent people, honest, hard-working and hospitable. Lewis Aukerman, father of Daniel Aukerman, was an early pioneer of Germantown, Darke county, Ohio, and there he spent the rest of his life. He married Elizabeth Brower. The Aukerman family is of German origin.

Manford Aukerman was five years old when he moved with his parents from Ohio to Randolph county, Indiana, and here he grew to manhood on the homestead which he assisted his father to develop from the wilds. He received a common school education. He has remained on the home farm which consists of seventy acres, and is located in the northeastern corner of the county. He has kept the place well improved and well cultivated and has a good set of buildings.

Mr. Aukerman was married May 22, 1887, to Anna Jane Welburn, who was born in Mississinewa township, Darke county, Ohio, February 9, 1864. She is the daughter of George J. and Sarah Ann Welburn, who are still living on a farm in Ohio, of which state they were natives and in which they have always resided. They are of English ancestry.

To Mr. and Mrs. Aukerman the following children have been born: Bessie F., born May 28, 1888, married Wesley Whitacre, a brick mason by trade, and they reside in Chicago; Lewis C., born June 25, 1893, is attending Normal school at Muncie, preparing himself for a teacher; Oliver M., born May 28, 1896; Marshall G., born February 28, 1899. These children have received excellent educational advantages.

Mr. Aukerman and his three sons are members of the Mississinewa Valley band, which was organized four years ago and is regarded as one of the leading bands of the county. This family has much natural ability as musicians. Our subject has been leader of the choir in the local United Brethren church for the past fifteen years, and his sons are also members of this choir. He has attended this church since he was five years old or ever since the family came to this locality. His father was a leader in the Zion church choir for many years. Our subject has taught vocal music very successfully for several years. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically he is a Democrat. He is a member of the United Brethren church.

ELIJAH W. McFARLAND.

A man of unswerving industry, sound judgment and progressive methods is Elijah W. McFarland, farmer of Jackson township, Randolph county. His career may well be studied with profit by the youth whose fortunes are yet matters for future years to determine, for it shows what one may accomplish if one has courage, fortitude and energy, backed by right principles, although starting out under none too favorable an environment.

Mr. McFarland was born on the old homestead in Jackson township, this county, February 29, 1856. He is a son of Nimrod McFarland, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, in 1828, and there he grew to manhood, removing to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1850 and locating in Jackson township where his death occurred in 1856. In 1849 he married Jane Hendrix, a daughter of James Hendrix. She survived her husband thirty-eight years, dying in Darke county, Ohio, in 1894. She was twice married, her last husband being Robert Byram. The subject of this sketch has one brother living, William A. McFarland, a farmer of Jackson township, and he also has three half-brothers, Thomas W. Byram, Robert F. Byram and Eli M. Byram. The first named lives in Redkey, Indiana, and the two latter make their homes in Jackson township. The paternal grandfather, William McFarland, was born December 25, 1793. He spent the latter part of his life in Jackson township, this county, and here he laid out the town of Pittsburg. His death occurred in 1888 at the advanced age of ninety-five years, and he was buried in Pittsburg cemetery. His wife, Flora Tebo, was born December 17, 1793, there having been only eight days difference in their ages. They were born five hundred miles apart, he in Ohio and she in Virginia. The maternal grandfather, James Hendrix, was a soldier in the standing army. He disappeared about the year 1838 and nothing further of his whereabouts was ever learned.

Elijah W. McFarland grew to manhood on the home farm and there he worked when a boy. He attended the neighboring rural schools in the wintertime. On October 26, 1876, he married Melissa J. Hindsley, who was born in Jackson township, September 10, 1856, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. To our subject and wife three children have been born, namely: Olive A. married Henry Peden and they have two children, Clarence W. and Harold; and they reside on a farm in Jackson township; Anna P. married Troy Doherty and they are the parents of five children, Estel, Erma, Orville, Carl and Wilbur; Raymond G., born February 18, 1893, died October 15, 1900.

Mr. McFarland began farming for himself when a young man and this has continued to be his occupation. He occupies the old homestead, consisting of ninety-five acres, which his father purchased in 1850 of Demas Lindley. Our subject began earning his own money when but fourteen years of age, working on a farm at four dollars per month and his board, continuing three years at the same work and same wages, however he spent the last two winters of that period in school at the Lisbon school house, this township. In the spring of 1875 he came into possession of the home place by buying out the other heirs, and in 1895 built the house in which he now resides. He has kept the old farm well improved and well cultivated. He makes a specialty of raising tobacco and the raising and feeding of a good grade of hogs. He takes an abiding pleasure in his home and family. His wife is a daughter of Stephen and Anna Hindsley, a record of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Politically, Mr. McFarland is a Democrat, and he was road supervisor for a period of twelve years, during which he built a splendid system of roads in this locality and won the lasting gratitude of his neighbors. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious matters belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. McFarland's grandson, Clarence W. Peden, who is now fifteen years of age, is a natural musician of rare ability, in fact, is a boy of fine mental equipment, being now in his third year in high shool and is a brilliant student. He is proficient on the violin and clarinet. He will receive every advantage in music and general education and a bright future is predicted for him.

FRANK ARTHUR ZELLER, M. D.

In every life of honor and usefulness there is no dearth of incident and yet in summing up the career of any man the biographer needs touch only those salient points which give the keynote to his character. Thus in setting forth the life record of Dr. Frank Arthur Zeller, of Union City, and one of the most capable of the younger general physicians of Randolph county, sufficient will be said to show that all who know him will freely acquiesce in, that he is one of the worthy citizens and representative of a sterling old family.

Dr. Zeller was born in Darke county, Ohio, October 11, 1870. He is a son of Dr. B. F. Zeller, who was born in Pennsylvania, from which state he removed to Darke county, Ohio, where he lived many years and finally came to Randolph county, Indiana, and is now living practically retired in Union City, after a successful and honored career as a physician for over forty years. His father, a native of Pennsylvania also, spent a large portion of his life there, but eventually removed to Ohio where his death occurred. Dr. B. F. Zeller married Emily Bauder, a native of Fort Plain, Montgomery county, New York. These parents have three sons, all practicing physicians of prominence, namely: Dr. Frank A., of this sketch; Dr. Henry Rush, of Akron, Ohio; and Dr. Ward Clifton, of Union City, Indiana.

Dr. Frank A. Zeller spent his boyhood in Ohio and received his preparatory education in the high school at Greenville, from which he was graduated with the class of 1888. He began studying medicine when but a boy and entered the Ohio Medical University in 1894 and was graduated from that institution in 1898, later taking a post-graduate course in the Polyclinic Institute of New York City, also post-graduate courses in Chicago, Paris and Berlin. He commenced practice as a surgeon in 1898, in the Spanish-American war, and he came to Union City, Indiana, in March, 1899, where he opened an office which he has maintained to the present time, building up the meanwhile a large and lucrative practice and meeting with great success which has placed him in the front rank of his professional brethren. He established an emergency hospital in Union City in 1912, which was much appreciated by the people here, filling a long-felt want, but which was abandoned after the establishment of the Francis Ford Hospital in 1914.

Dr. Zeller is a member of the Randolph County Medical Society, the Indiana Medical Society and the American Medical Association, also the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America, and is a fellow of the College of Surgeons. Fraternally, he belongs to the Masonic Order and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is an independent voter in political affairs, and religiously is of the Lutheran faith.

Dr. Zeller was married in March, 1905, to Mabelle Rosenbush, who was born in Union City, Indiana, in 1885, and here grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of John A. Rosenbush, a druggist of Union City.

Personally Dr. Zeller is a gentleman of pleasing address and exemplary character and is popular with all classes.

ISAAC M. BORROR.

Few young men could study the life history of Isaac M. Borror, one of the substantial and progressive citizens of White River township, without experiencing a thrill of ambition well up within his breast, for it shows how one may succeed in the face of great obstacles and at last win the good things, the things worth while which the world has to offer, if one has perseverance, sound common sense, fortitude and is imbued with honest impulses. He started in life at the bottom of the ladder, having arrived in Randolph county not such a long time ago with nothing in the way of material wealth, and he gradually forged to the front as a business man and citizen, becoming one of our most extensive general farmers and stock raisers and feeders and accumulating an ample competency.

Mr. Borror was born September 22, 1863, in Pendleton county, West Virginia. He is a son of Isaac and Sarah (Carrier) Borror, both natives of West Virginia, where their families had long resided, which section, however, in their day was known as a part of old Virginia. They were honorable, hard-working people, but not of the thriftier classes. There the parents of our subject grew to maturity and were married and there continued to reside until 1889 when, with their large family, eight sons and three daughters, they left their native state and came to Randolph county, Indiana, and settled on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, four miles northwest of Winchester. Isaac M., of this review, did not accompany the rest of the family to their new home in Hoosierdom, remaining in his native state eighteen months after they left there, not following them here until July 4, 1890. When he left West Virginia he had nothing but a dog and gun, which he sold in order to get money to defray, in part, his expenses here. He had a wife and child. They traveled on foot, working a day here and a day there, using the money for food and such articles of clothing as they were compelled to buy. They walked the entire distance from West Virginia. They had nothing with which to begin life when they arrived here. Mr. Borror began working by the month for Sol Dull, living in a log cabin on his farm for a year and a half. He then moved to the farm of Frank Adams, in the same locality, renting a two-hundred acre place. Then went to work in earnest and managed so well that he soon had a fairly good start. He remained on this farm three years, during which time he bought forty acres of timbered land. He did not have any money beyond operating expenses, but he cleared his forty acres and paid for it. When he left the Adams farm he moved to the Gideon Shaw place of two hundred acres, which he rented from Mr. Shaw's widow, for a period of five years, for twenty-five hundred dollars cash rent. In four years he bought one hundred and sixty acres of the Shaw farm and on this he has made his home ever since. He prospered and from time to time purchased other land until he became owner of four hundred and fourteen acres, all of which advanced in value rapidly under his care and management and he has become one of the wealthy men of the county. In connection with his extensive general farming he has been a large stock raiser and feeder, especially of hogs, but has also raised and fed large numbers of cattle and horses. Some years he has fed and sold as high as three thousand hogs in a year. He has a commodious, pleasant home and numerous good outbuildings and his land is under modern improvements and a high state of cultivation.

J. M. Borror

When a boy Mr. Borror never had any school privileges and he could not read or write until after he came to Randolph county. He has become a well-read man and is an accurate and rapid calculator, in fact, one would think he was an expert accountant if one saw him doing sums in arithmetic or similar work.

Mr. Borror was married September 29, 1888, to Dolly Hedrick, a daughter of Sebual and Mollie (Dean) Hedrick, of Pendleton county, West Virginia. To this union four daughters and three sons have been born, namely: Millard, an automobile inspector of Cleveland, Ohio; Lydia, who married John Gray, of Jay county; Goldie, who married William Alexander, of Winchester; Rosie is the wife of Ralph Young, and they live on our subject's farm; Clarence, Estie and Oliver are all at home.

Politically Mr. Borror is a Republican and has always been very active in public matters, but never an office seeker. He is a strong factor in the local organization and he advocates all movements that have as their object the general upbuilding of his locality, and the proprietor of Grand View Farm is one of the most influential and highly esteemed men of his township.

EDAR SIMMONS.

Every human being either submits or rises above the controlling influence which touches, controls, guides or misdirects others. If he be honest and successful in his chosen field of endeavor, investigation will brighten his reputation and point the way along which others may follow with like success. The career of Edar Simmons, one of the most progressive of the younger generation of agriculturists of Jackson township, Randolph county, is one of that class of enterprising citizens whose example is calculated to be an incentive to others, for his efforts have met with a large degree of material success in life's affairs, and he has established a reputation for uprightness and honor.

Mr. Simmons was born in the above named township and county, September 15, 1879. He is a son of William K. Simmons who was born on the old homestead in Jackson township, which is now owned by our subject, August 31, 1841, he being a scion of one of our sterling old pioneer families, and here he grew to manhood, received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded, and here married, June 3, 1865, Malinda A. Sell, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, May 11, 1845. To this union three children were born, Edar, of this review; Dora, born March 29, 1868, married W. P. Noffsinger; and Esta, born November 11, 1871, married Melvin N. Rensberger; they reside at Redcliff, Alberta, Canada, and have one son, Gorman B., born March 27, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Simmons also took an orphan child to raise, Rachel Fidella Byrum, who was born June 1, 1881; they took her when less than two years old and cared for her as their own, and when twenty-two years old, she married on Thanksgiving day, 1903, Noah Onkst, a local engineer of Dayton, Ohio; to them one child has been born, James Taylor Onkst, whose birth occurred July 22, 1908. William K. Simmons has been very successful in a financial way, being a man of industry and good management. He is a stockholder in the Atlas Bank of Union City, and he has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising with a larger measure of success than falls to the average farmer. He at one time owned two hundred acres of choice farm land, but has sold and divided with his children until now his place consists of sixty acres. He and his wife have taken great pains in rearing their children of whom they may be justly proud. The parents are members of the Dunkard church, in which the father has been an earnest and popular minister for many years. His father, Aaron Simmons, located in Randolph county in 1838, having entered his land in 1837, and was always known as a thrifty and honorable citizen. He was born in Miami county, Ohio, February 1, 1810. In 1840 he married Rebecca Marquis, who was born in Ross county, Ohio, February 2, 1819. They established their home on what is now the Salem Pike, two and one-half miles northwest of Union City, at the old homestead, now owned and occupied by the subject of this sketch. On this place is a magnificent flowing well of water which W. K. Simmons put down in 1875 and has ever produced an abundance of fine water. The death of Aaron Simmons occurred March 6, 1884, at the age of seventy-four years, his widow surviving until November 26, 1895, dying at the age of seventy-six years. The father of Aaron Simmons was Adam Simmons, who was born March 25, 1786, and died June 16, 1866. He married Mary Heckman, who was born July 5, 1786, and died August 14. 1851. Their family consisted of thirteen children, Aaron having been the second son. The father of Adam Simmons was John Simmons, who was born February 11, 1761, married, but there is no record of his wife. The old home place mentioned repeatedly above was entered from the government by Aaron Simmons in 1837, and it has been in the possession of the family ever since. The Simmonses are of German descent, with a mixture also of French and Swedish blood. W. K. Marquis, father of Mrs. Rebecca (Marquis) Simmons, and great grandmother of Edar Simmons, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was stationed at Norfolk, Virginia.

Edar Simmons grew to manhood on the home farm and there worked hard when a boy. He received his education in the public schools of his locality, and when a young man took up general farming which he has followed ever since. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, then commenced for himself, renting land for two years, then purchased a farm of forty acres and remained on the same until 1903 when he exchanged it for the farm he now has, which is known in history as the old Indian boundary farm, consisting of one hundred acres. It is well improved in every respect and has a substantial group of buildings on it, in fact a new residence was recently erected, which is modernly equipped, having hot and cold water appliances, furnace, acetylene lights, in fact, is as desirable as any city home in its appointments. It is two and one-half miles north of Union City. Mr. Simmons takes a great pleasure in his home and family. He has been a highway superintendent for eight years, during which time he has done much to build good roads in this community. Politically, he is independent and religiously is a member of the German Baptist church.

Mr. Simmons was married February 28, 1891, to Effie M. Warner, a native of Jackson township, Randolph county, where she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of George W. Warner, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work.

To Mr. and Mrs. Simmons the following children have been born: Gleemer, born April 19, 1892, was graduated from the local high school, and is farming with his father on the home place; Glade, born July 29, 1897, is attending the Jackson township schools, and is at home with his parents.

CLARENCE MULLEN.

One can see the superior results obtained by scientific farming by looking over the splendidly cultivated and well kept farm of Clarence Mullen, in Ward township; for he has always made an effort to combine brain and brawn in his operations of husbandman, and, while clinging to some of the methods used by a former generation he has been ready to adopt such new ones as he deemed well adapted to present century conditions, realizing that time brings many changes in farming as well as other things and that one must keep vigilant and studious or be surpassed by his neighbors.

Mr. Mullen was born July 9, 1871 on a farm two miles northeast of Lynn, Randolph county. He is a son of Thomas G. and Elmina (Shaw) Mullen, the mother a daughter of Gideon Shaw, one of the early pioneers of this locality who became a successful and prominent citizen. He reached an advanced age, dying on July 3, 1911, honored and respected by all, for his life had been most exemplary and conducive of much good. His good wife preceded him to the grave many years.

Clarence Mullen was reared on the home farm where he worked when growing up, and he received a common school education, including one term in the Winchester high school. He remained at home until his marriage on February 6, 1891. He was then farming the old home farm in Ward township, four miles north of Winchester, where his parents had moved in 1876 from near Lynn.

Two sons have been born to our subject and wife, Thomas R., born September 6, 1892; and Claude D., born September 3, 1897. The oldest child is a graduate of the Winchester high school, after which he spent one year in Purdue University. He was married December 14, 1912 to Gertrude Hesser, daughter of Frank and Amelia (Weaner) Hesser, of Jackson township, Randolph county. Thomas R. is assisting his father with the work on the home farm, in fact, is now the manager of the place. The youngest son is a student in the high school at Winchester.

After the marriage of Clarence Mullen he continued to work on the home farm, and in due course of time had a good start. In the spring of 1912 he purchased the old homestead, and will hold same in the family. He has kept the land well tilled, crops properly rotated, fields well fertilized, so that the old place has retained its original fertility of soil and is today one of the best farms in the community. He has other landed interests and property in Winchester. He is a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of Ridgeville, Randolph county, and Mr. Mullen was one of the promoters of the Farmers Telephone Company, which was organized in the spring of 1910. He was its first president, which office he held for two years, discharging the duties of the same in a manner highly satisfactory to all concerned, in fact, he has been principally responsible for the large success of this company. He is still one of its largest stockholders, and is a director. He is an extensive stock feeder, and, his stock being always of the best grade, brings top prices on the market.

Mr. Mullen has always been a loyal Democrat, active in party affairs, and has frequently been a member of the County Democratic Central Committee, and a frequent delegate to district and state conventions, where he always made his influence felt for the general good of the party and the people: In the general election in the fall of 1912 he was elected one of the three county commissioners, and took office on January 1, 1913, for a term of three years, and he is proving to be a most faithful and conscientious public servant.

Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Encampment. He and his family belong to the Christian church, and he is a member of the official board of the same, and is teacher in the men's class in the Sunday school, and has long been active in all church and Sunday school work.

ISAAC NEWTON MANGAS.

The history of Randolph county is not a very old one, comparatively speaking. It is the record of the steady growth of a community planted in the wilderness three-quarters of a century ago and has reached its magnitude of today without other aids than those of industry. The people who redeemed it from its primitive wilds were strong-armed, hardy sons of the soil who hesitated at no difficulty and for whom hardships had little to appall. The Mangas family was of this courageous band, the name having been well known here for many decades, one of the best known of the present generation being Isaac Newton Mangas, one of our most progressive and successful general farmers and stock raisers.

Mr. Mangas was born in Jackson township, this county, September 12, 1873. He is a son of Emanuel Mangas, who was born in Pennsylvania, August 25, 1826. He attended the common schools of Ohio and Indiana, and on December 20, 1855, he married Catherine Ely, who was born April 12, 1838, which union resulted in the birth of two children, Jacob J., born December 21, 1859, died February 20. 1865; and Sarah B., born April 8, 1865, died August 13th of the same year. The wife and mother passed away also on that date. On October 15, 1868, Mr. Mangas married a second time, Caroline L. Castle, who was born July 14, 1834, and to this union two children were born, namely: Oliver M., born August 11, 1869, died January 3, 1873; and Isaac N., the subject of this sketch, who is the only surviving child. Emanuel Mangas was a prominent citizen here in the early days. He was a successful farmer, and he held the office of township assessor for several terms. He and his wife were members of the Disciple church. He was a staunch Democrat.

Isaac N. Mangas grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the rural schools of his township, from which he was graduated. He began working on the homestead early in life and has followed farming all the while. At the time of his father's death in 1897 he took up the work where the elder Mangas had left off, inheriting the old homestead of eighty acres, and he purchased an adjoining eighty in 1907. In 1913 he bought thirty-five acres adjoining, making in all a valuable and productive farm of one hundred and ninety-five acres, which he has brought up to a high state of improvement and cultivation. He built a fine home in 1898, and everything about his place denotes good management and thrift, in fact, he is one of the most prosperous young farmers of Jackson township. Politically, he is independent, and religiously he belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Mangas was married in December, 1898, to Maggie Warner, who was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, July 16, 1878, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the public schools. She is a daughter of George W. Warner, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume.

To Mr. and Mrs. Mangas three children have been born, named as follows: Claude Leon, whose birth occurred April 18, 1900; Gorman Nile died when three and one-half years of age; Stanley Warner, born March 14, 1907.

ISAAC W. WARREN.

Agriculture has been an honored vocation from the earliest ages and as a usual thing men of honorable and humane impulses, as well as those of energy and thrift, have been patrons of husbandry. The free out-of-door life known to the tiller of the soil has a decided tendency to foster and develop that independence of mind and self-reliance which characterizes true manhood, and no truer blessing can befall a boy than to be reared in close touch with nature in the healthful, life-inspiring labor of the fields. Isaac W. Warren one of the influential citizens of Jackson township, Randolph county, was fortunate in being born and reared on the farm and wise in deciding to spend his life tilling the soil. He has been privileged to spend the major portion of his life on the old home place, for all will agree that it is indeed a privilege to remain where we were born and reared, if it happens to be on a good farm, in a favored country like this. He has made a careful study of agricultural methods as they advance with the times and is one of our most progressive farmers.

Mr. Warren was born in Jackson township, this county, February 22, 1859. He is a son of Dolphin and Nancy (Taylor) Warren, a record of whom will be found on another page of this work, hence need not be reproduced here. Suffice it to say that they were among the worthy early families of this community and noted for their thrift and honesty. Here our subject grew to manhood and received a good practical education in the rural schools. Upon reaching manhood he was successfully engaged in operating the home place on which he remained until his father's death in 1907, receiving two-fifths profit of the annual sale of grains and livestock of the place, his father furnishing everything. He managed well and worked hard and laid by a comfortable competence, and is now owner of two valuable and productive farms, one consisting of one hundred and sixty acres of choice land in Jackson township, and another splendid place of one hundred and four acres in another location, both of which are improved in an up-to-date manner and under a high state of cultivation. He erected modern and substantial buildings on his home place and is well fixed in every way to enjoy life, everything about his farm denoting thrift and good management.

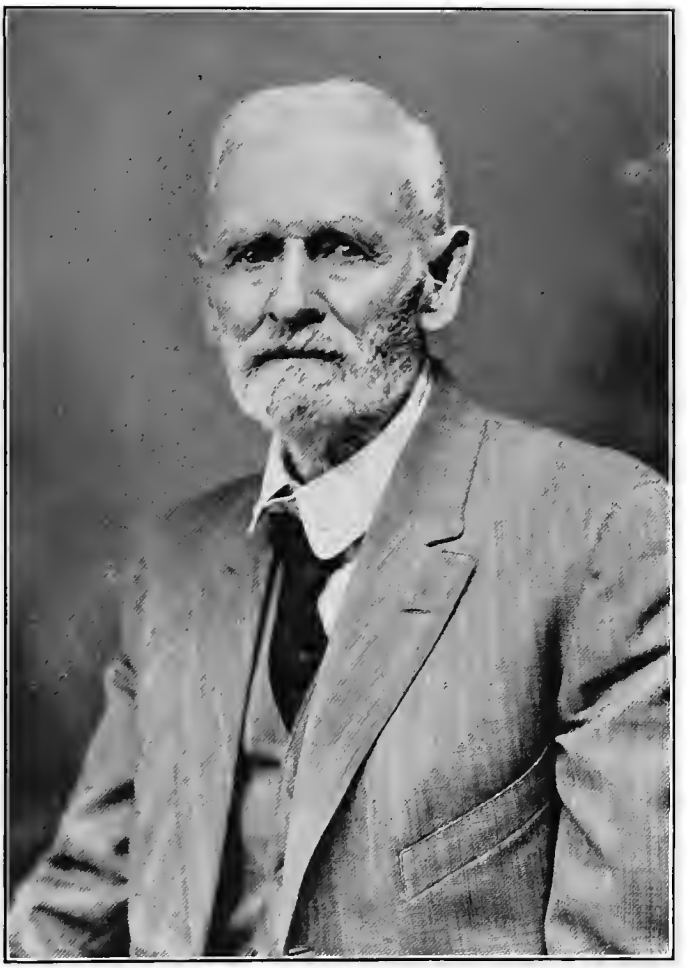
Mr. Warren was married in March, 1910, to Narcissus Sell, who was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, in 1878, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. She is a daughter of Jonathan Sell and wife, a highly respected family of this township. Politically, Mr. Warren is a Republican, but he has never been an aspirant for public office.

WILLIAM ADAMSON.

There has been a very steady increase in the value of products per farm in the United States during the past quarter of a century. Not as great an increase as in other lines of industry, perhaps, but in this respect American farmers compare favorably with farmers of other nations. Reliable statistics show that the record by decades is as follows: The average farm produced in 1890 five hundred and thirty-eight dollars; 1900, eight hundred and twenty-two dollars, and in 1910, thirteen hundred and thirty-six dollars. We also show during this period an increase of over two million farms. One of the citizens of West River township, Randolph county, who has progressed during the past thirty years as a general agriculturist is William Adamson, one of our venerable native born citizens, who was born in this township and county, February 5, 1837, and who has thus come down to us from the pioneer days, having lived to note and take part in the wonderful changes here, and he is not only widely known but is respected by all, as a result of his careful and well spent life.

Mr. Adamson is a son of Abraham and Nancy (Botkin) Adamson, very early settlers here, the father having come from Ohio to what is now West River township and entered land from the government, which he cleared and developed into a good farm and here reared his family of eight children, who were named as follows: Ira and Eleanor, both deceased; William, of this sketch; Susie is deceased; George is living in West River township; Ann and Martha are both deceased; Phoebe, the youngest, is living in West River township. The father, Abraham Adamson, was twice married; his first wife (nee Puckett) died leaving two children, a son and a daughter. The paternal grandfather, John Adamson, came from Kentucky. The death of Abraham



WILLIAM ADAMSON.

Adamson occurred in 1856 at the age of fifty-four years, his widow surviving until seventy-seven years of age.

William Adamson grew to manhood on the home farm, and he was educated in the rural district schools. On September 25, 1867, he married Mary Stanley, a daughter of James Stanley, a farmer and merchant. To this union four children were born, namely: Willie Edgar died in infancy; Carrie married Alden Edwards, a farmer of West River township, and they have one child, Garver; Orrie B., who married Ada Hutchins, is farming on a place adjoining the old homestead; India Myrl married Charles Bales, a farmer in West River township, and they have one child, Ruby.

Mr. Adamson engaged in farming until August 9, 1862, when he enlisted in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served very faithfully for a period of three years, taking part in a number of important battles in the South; in fact, was in every engagement of importance in the western army. He was taken prisoner at Richmond, Kentucky, but was paroled at once. He was in the memorable siege of Vicksburg. He was honorably discharged at Mobile, Alabama, July 5, 1865, after gallantly defending the flag. Returning home soon thereafter he resumed farming, which he has continued successfully to the present time. He pre-empted his farm from the government, the papers being signed by the great name of Andrew Jackson. He has one hundred twenty-four acres, which he has kept well improved and well tilled, and he has a good home and convenient outbuildings, and always keeps a splendid grade of livestock. He is one of the leading farmers of his township. Politically he is a Progressive and is influential in local public affairs.

JAMES B. SUTTON.

One of the progressive tillers of the soil in Jackson township, and a representative of a splendid old family of Randolph county is James B. Sutton, formerly in the mercantile business, but whose chief occupation through life has been general farming and stock raising, meeting with encouraging success all along the line, as a result of his perseverance and good management. He believes in doing well whatever he attempts and in dealing squarely with his fellow men, consequently he enjoys the confidence of all who know him.

Mr. Sutton was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, November 18, 1856. He is a son of Joseph H. Sutton, who was born in Greene county, Ohio, January 26, 1810, and there he spent his boyhood and was married to Martha Johnson. He came with his parents to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1840. His father, Cornelius Sutton, was born in New Jersey, June 20, 1780, and he entered in 1847 the farm which is now owned and occupied by James B. Sutton. He was one of the early pioneers of this locality. His wife was Judith Babcock, a native of Ohio. Her death occurred late in the forties. The death of Cornelius Sutton occurred at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. His family consisted of four sons and two daughters, namely: Amos, Joseph H., Thomas, Sampson; Sarah who married Ezekiel Davis; Martha, who married Daniel Coblentz. They are all now deceased. Cornelius Sutton was a native of England, who emigrated to America when young and settled in New Jersey, sometime about 1765. He reached the remarkable age of ninety-nine years, dying in Greenbriar county, Virginia, now a part of West Virginia, and was buried there. His wife, a Miss Aplecut, was a native of New Jersey. Their family consisted of three sons and four daughters, namely: John, Cornelius, Amos, Hanna married Joseph Davis; Nellie married William Stevenson; Sarah married Jesse Maxon; Jane married James Davis. The father, Joseph H. Sutton, devoted his life to farming, and his family numbered seventeen children, namely: Elizabeth married Isaac Hoover; Martha Jane married James Phillips; Jacob was next in order; Cornelius married Nancy E. Huffman, and they had three daughters and one son; Eva L. married A. M. Henderson; L. Ossa is single and is a stenographer; Martha E. married O. B. Taylor; R. H. married Etta Brubeck, a jeweler; Lewis, Thomas, Stephen A.; Mary married H. A. Bunger; Nancy married M. P. Hinckel; Isaac W.; and James B., subject of this sketch; four died in infancy.

James B. Sutton grew to manhood on the old homestead and was educated in the schools of Jackson township, and when twenty-one years of age began life for himself, farming the homeplace on the shares. In 1879 he engaged with his brother, Thomas C. Sutton, in the boot and shoe business, in Union City, continuing in that line for five years, and enjoying a very good trade, then sold out and returned to the home farm, buying out the heirs. The place consisted of seventy-eight acres, and he nearly paid for the same raising tobacco, in about ten years. He has kept the place well improved, and in 1904 built a model and attractive residence, the old home having been burned.

Politically, Mr. Sutton is a Democrat and he was a member of the advisory board for four years, and cast the deciding vote to bring about the Jackson township graded school, he and James W. Hindsley pushing the matter to a successful issue. He is a member of the Farmers' Co-operative Tobacco Association and belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Sutton was married December 25, 1884 to Nellie D. Johnson, who was born in Brookville, Montgomery county, Ohio, June 21, 1865. She is a daughter of John E. and Fannie Johnson, both of whom died many years ago.

To our subject and wife the following children have been born: Bessie F., born May 9, 1886, was graduated from the Jackson township schools, married June 24, 1905, Thomas C. Monks, an engineer of Muncie, Indiana, and they have one child, Cleo; Grace G., born September 3, 1887, was educated in the Jackson township schools and graduated therefrom, married Leroy Kemp, in November, 1906; they reside in Dayton, Ohio, and have one child, Arthur W.; Mr. Kemp is employed in an automobile generator factory. Claude J. Sutton, born February 27, 1893, was educated in the local schools and graduated from the same; he is a telegraph operator at Dunkirk, Indiana, for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; he has remained unmarried. Ralph Sutton, who also attended the Jackson township schools, was born November 25, 1902, is at home.

OLIVER J. SUTTON.

One of the most scientific general agriculturists of Jackson township is Oliver J. Sutton, a scion of one of Randolph county's sterling pioneer families, whose honored record he has sought to keep untarnished. He is a student-farmer, believing that since "the old order changeth" with advancing years, it is up to the tiller of the soil to study new conditions and labor under improved methods. He also delights in studying nature in her ever varying moods and is a broad-minded, far-seeing gentleman. For many years he was one of our most progressive school teachers and did much the meanwhile to establish a higher system of work in our public schools.

Mr. Sutton was born in Jackson township, this county, May 10, 1873, and here he has been content to spend his life, believing that as good, if not better, opportunities existed right at his own door as anywhere. He is a son of Thomas Sutton, Jr., also born in Jackson township, Randolph county, the date of his birth being April 29, 1849. He was a son of Thomas Sutton, Sr., who was a son of Cornelius Sutton, who was one of the early settlers of this county, he having entered the farm which our subject now owns from the government in 1837, the grant being signed by President Martin Van Buren, and from that early day to this the Suttons have been well and favorably known in Randolph county, playing a leading part in the general development of the same and ranking among our best citizens in every respect. Here Thomas Sutton, Jr., grew to manhood amid pioneer environment and assisted with the arduous work of developing the home place. He received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded and here devoted his life successfully to general farming. He married Martha Auker, a native of Preble county, Ohio, whose death occurred in 1889 at the early age of thirty-nine years. The father is still living.

Oliver J. Sutton grew to manhood on the old home place and he received his preparatory education in the rural district schools of Jackson township—the Mt. Holly school, later studied one term in the Normal at Winchester, under Denney, Caldwell and Bowers, then spent one term at the Central Normal College at Danville, Indiana, also was a student at the National Normal at Lebanon, Ohio. He also spent one year in the Indiana State Normal school at Terre Haute. Thus exceptionally well equipped for his life work he began teaching in the public schools and continued with great success for a period of thirteen years, during which he gave eminent satisfaction wherever he was employed and his services were in great demand. He kept abreast of the times in all that pertained to his chosen vocation and was regarded as both an instructor and entertainer in the school room and was popular with both students and patrons. Finally tiring of the school room he abandoned teaching and turned his attention to farming, in 1904, buying fifty-two acres of the old home place, which he has kept well improved and well cultivated and is making a comfortable living as a general farmer and stock raiser.

Politically, Mr. Sutton is a Democrat, and in 1910 he was elected a member of the advisory board of Jackson township and when his term expires in 1914 he will have served four years in this capacity. He is giving every degree of satisfaction to all concerned and is looking closely after the general good of the township. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Religiously, he is a member of the Disciple church.

Mr. Sutton was married June 28, 1899 to Daisy V. Evans, who was born in Jackson township, this county, May 7, 1881, and here she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of Mahlon O. and Lovina C. Evans, an excellent family of Jackson township. Mrs. Evans was born and reared here and has always lived on the same farm. She was known in her maidenhood as Lovina C. Shire. Mr. Evans has devoted his life to general farming.

To Mr. and Mrs. Sutton one child has been born, Acil Allen Sutton, whose birth occurred July 31, 1901. He is now in his sixth grade and fourth term in school and is making rapid advancement, giving promise of a brilliant scholar.

GEORGE A. ULLERY.

There can be no impropriety in scanning the acts of any man as they affect his public, social and business relations, so in this biographical work will be found mention of worthy citizens of all vocations, and at this juncture we are permitted to offer a resume of the career of George A. Ullery, one of the substantial representatives of the agricultural interests of Randolph county, where he has long maintained his home and where he has won a reputation for honesty, industry and public-spirit.

Mr. Ullery was born, like many other good citizens of this locality, in Darke county, Ohio, October 18, 1855. He is a son of George A. and Elizabeth (Sword) Ullery, the latter still living, making her home with our subject, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. Adam Ullery, the paternal grandfather, spent his life on the farm and died in the early seventies in Miami county, Ohio. His wife was Charlotte Ullery. Jonathan Sword, the maternal grandfather, married Hannah Kane, who was born December 28, 1807, and died October 30, 1894.

George A. Ullery was educated in the schools of Adams township, Darke county, Ohio. He was reared by his grandfather, his own father having been killed by a limb falling from a tree while he was working in the woods, which happened just previous to the birth of our subject. This grandfather, Jonathan Sword, died when our subject was seventeen years old, and the lad was left to take charge of the farm, which he operated successfully for a period of seventeen years, then moved to Randolph county, Indiana, and purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, where he now resides, also bought eighteen acres near Union City. He has been very successful as a general farmer and is also now engaged in a lucrative fire insurance business, representing the German Baptist Mutual, of Randolph, Henry and Delaware counties. Mr. Ullery being a director, adjuster and agent of the company, and this, in connection with his general farming makes a handsome annual income for him. He has a well kept and attractive place and always keeps some good livestock.

Politically, Mr. Ullery is a Democrat, and religiously is a staunch member of the German Baptist church. The Ullerys are of German ancestry, but have long been in America, and have been noted for their thrift and honesty wherever they have lived.

Mr. Ullery was married March 6, 1881 to Harriet Miller, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, October 15, 1861, and there she grew to womanhood and received a common school education. She is a daughter of Aaron K. Miller, who died February 9, 1899, after a successful life as farmer in Darke county, Ohio. His wife, Susan E. Miller, died October 14, 1904. To these parents three sons and six daughters were born, namely: Israel B., Noah D., Mary A., John, Sarah, Elizabeth, Ella, Anna and Harriet.

The following are Mr. Ullery's brothers and sisters: David J., Mary J., and these half brothers and sisters, Samuel Wise, William Wise, Hanna Wise and Martha Wise.

To Mr. and Mrs. Ullery the following children were born: Martha A., born in Darke county, Ohio, February 4, 1882, married Clyde Earl Hinshaw, December 24, 1911, and they have one child, Ruth Harriet, born in 1912; he is a farmer and lives in Randolph county. Bertha Ellen, second of Mr. Ullery's children, was born in Darke county, Ohio, March 8, 1886, married Herbert C. Slick in 1909, and they have one child, Crystal Ray, who was born in 1912; Mr. Slick is engaged in farming. Wilbert Ray Ullery, born in Randolph county, Indiana, December 11, 1894, lives at home; Laura Thelma, born in this county, August 28, 1896, died September 9, 1908. The above named children received good educational advantages attending the common schools, and Martha finished at the Union City high school, and taught a term in Washington township; Bertha finished at North Manchester College, and taught four terms in Greensfork township, Randolph county, also one term in Jackson township.

DANIEL WESLEY BROWN.

Having never been seized with the roaming desires that have led many of Randolph county's young men to other fields of endeavor and other states, where they have sought their fortunes, Daniel Wesley Brown, farmer of Jackson township, has been content to remain in his native community and here direct his efforts; and he has met with encouraging success in his chosen vocation and has at the same time so conducted himself before his fellow men as to gain their respect and confidence. He is a noted breeder of fancy Duroc-Jersey hogs.

Mr. Brown was born in this county, April 26, 1857. He is a son of Joseph Brown, who was born in Maryland. After spending his boyhood in the East he came west where he spent the rest of his life, being among the early settlers in Randolph county, Indiana, and here he developed a good farm and died in October, 1901; his wife, who was known in her maidenhood as Nancy Harshman, passing to the life beyond February 4, 1895. To these parents were born six sons and two daughters, namely: William S., whose death occurred in February, 1913; Mary A., who married Ira Porter, died in January, 1907; Lilly C. married Harvey Haley and they live at Ridgeville; Abraham, when last heard from, was living in Iowa; Isaac E. died October 13, 1885; Frank is a carpenter in Union City, this county; Albert died in 1895; and Daniel W., of this sketch.

Daniel W. Brown grew to manhood on the home farm, and he received his education in the common schools. He took up farming when but a boy and has always followed this line of work, commencing business for himself when twenty-five years of age, first buying the twenty acres where he now resides, and on this made good improvements, later buying ten acres more, then bought sixteen acres, finally secured fifty-one and one-half acres additional, and his father left him forty, making him in all one hundred and thirty-seven and one-half acres of fine land, all of which he has placed under a high state of cultivation and is carrying on general farming successfully, also is making a specialty of breeding thoroughbred hogs—Duroc Jerseys, which business he has carried on most successfully for a period of thirty-three years, and is regarded as one of the best hog raisers in the county, his fine stock finding a very ready market, owing to their superior quality. He has a good dwelling and numerous large outbuildings on his place. He has taken many premiums with his fine hogs at the Indiana state fair, at Indianapolis. At the fair of 1913 the following premiums were awarded his exhibits, he having very strong competition by the best breeders of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky: First premium on aged boar, first and third under one year boar, first on under year sow, first on under year herd, first on get of boar, first on produce of sow, champion on under year boar, champion on under year sow; American specials, first, under year herd; national special, first on under year herd, and silver trophy on under year herd. Mr. Brown has judged swine four times at the Indiana state fairs of the past, three times at the Ohio state fair, and once at the Kentucky state fair, also once at the International Live Stock Exhibition in Chicago, and many county fairs. No better judge of hogs is to be found in the middle west, and Mr. Brown is widely known among the leading stock men of the county. He and his son raise and sell about seventy-five head of hogs annually for breeding purposes, their shipments going to all parts of the United States and Canada, and one shipment went to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. They are in position to fill orders for their fine stock at all times, at prices and quality to suit the customers. Theirs is all registered stock. While a great deal of their attention is thus claimed by their hogs, they raise large numbers of fine draft horses and carry on a general farming business.

Mr. Brown was married October 18, 1881 to Ida Noffsinger, who was born in Bond county, Illinois, October 18, 1862. She is a daughter of Eli P. Noffsinger, whose death occurred August 6, 1910. Her mother, Mrs. Martha Noffsinger, lives with Dr. Noffsinger in Union City. Mrs. Brown had five brothers and three sisters, one of the brothers being now deceased. The Noffsinger children were named as follows: Henry is a practicing physician at Union City; Ida, wife of Mr. Brown; Elizabeth died when six years old; Noah lives in Union City; Joseph resides in Ohio; Edward died in 1893; Clara Jane died in 1908; Ora A. lives in Ohio.

To Mr. and Mrs. Brown the following children have been born: Glee, born July 13, 1884, was educated at North Manchester, Indiana, married Jessie M. Richer, and they reside in South Whitley, Indiana, where he is practicing dentistry; Joseph E., born July 27, 1887, also educated at North Manchester, is unmarried, and is at home, being a third partner with his father in the livestock and farming business; Vera, born December 28, 1888, a graduate at North Manchester, later spent one term at the State University at Bloomington; she married Elmer E. Jones, a professor in the University, and they reside in Bloomington. Mr. Brown has no grandchildren. Politically, he is a Democrat, but is no politician preferring to devote his attention exclusively to his large livestock and farming business. He is a man whose word is regarded by those who know him as being as good as the bond of most men, and he is a genial, obliging gentleman.

JOHN WILLIAM FARABEE.

From sterling old Pennsylvania stock comes John William Farabee, one of the most enterprising farmers of Randolph county, and, like the rest of the good citizens which the old Keystone state has sent within our borders, we have profited by his coming, for he has proven to be not only an enterprising agriculturist and stock man but a public-spirited citizen who is always willing and ready to do his full share in the work of promoting the best interests of his adopted county.

Mr. Farabee was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, October 25, 1865. He is a son of Stacy F. Farabee, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1837, where he spent his earlier years, was educated and married, and from there he moved with his family in 1870 to Darke county, Ohio, locating on a farm on which he remained about eleven years, then came on to Randolph county, Indiana, buying a farm here on which he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1890. He was a successful farmer and a good man in every respect. In 1861 he married Elizabeth Hickesenbaugh, and to this union eight children were born, John W., of this sketch being the oldest; the others are Frederick, who resides at Fort Wayne; Jane married Thomas Fields, and they live at Saratoga, this county; Eva married Wesley Warren and they also live in Randolph county, on a farm; James E. is deceased; Adeline married Arthur North and they live at Traverse City, Michigan, and are engaged in truck farming; Joseph lives in Randolph county; Ella married William H. Reitenhour, and they also reside in this county. The paternal grandfather, Edward Farabee, was a native of Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and there he engaged in farming, but late in life removed to Ohio, where his death occurred at the advanced age of ninety years. His wife, known in her maidenhood as Catherine Plants, died several years ago.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN W. FARABEE.

John W. Farabee was educated in the common schools of Darke county, Ohio, and Randolph county, Indiana, and early in life he began farming with his father in the former county, and when twenty-two years old commenced for himself and bought a farm in Ward township, Randolph county, Indiana, on which he remained a few years, getting a good start, then sold out and bought his present fine farm of two hundred acres. He continued to prosper through close application and hard work, good management and wise foresight, until he was enabled to buy another excellent farm of one hundred and twenty acres, which lies in Greensfork township, this county. Both farms are well improved and under a high state of cultivation and on them stand substantial and well arranged buildings. He carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. He spends his entire time looking after his farms. He lived one year in Union City, at which time he was a member of the city council. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religious matters belongs to the Baptist church.

Mr. Farabee was married September 21, 1889, to Lillie C. Warren, who was born in Randolph county on August 9, 1870. She is a daughter of Elihu Warren and wife. The father died in March, 1911, at the age of sixty-two years. Mr. Warren devoted his life to farming, always highly respected and well known in Randolph county.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Farabee: Frederick E., born December 1, 1893, was educated in the public schools of Randolph county, is living at home and assisting his father with the farm work; Homer C., born January 25, 1897; William Ralph, born December 14, 1898.

JAMES D. MONEY.

The march of improvement is accelerated day by day, and each successive moment seems to demand of men a broader intelligence and a greater discernment than did the preceding, showing that successful men must be live men in this age, bristling with activity. The purpose of biography is to preserve the records of such men for the edification of succeeding generations; thus the lesson of biography may be far-reaching to an extent not superficially evident. A man's reputation is the property of the world, for the laws of nature have forbidden isolation. One of the leading citizens of Jackson township, Randolph county whose reputation will bear the closest scrutiny is James D. Money, a progressive farmer and business man and a citizen who has done much to encourage the upbuilding of his community along all lines.

Mr. Money was born in Jay county, near Portland, Indiana, December 30, 1852. He is a son of Samuel Money, who was born in Virginia, in 1828, whose death occurred April 18, 1894. When only three years of age his parents brought him to Mercer county, Ohio, locating near the Wabash river, and there he grew to manhood and followed farming and preaching, first in the old Christian persuasion, later in the Disciple church. He married Susan Davis, who was born in Baltimore, Maryland, from which state she came to Indiana with her parents when young and settled in Jay county. She was born January 10, 1829, and died March 16, 1907. The paternal grandfather, William Money, was born in Virginia, and his death occurred in Mercer county, Ohio at the age of sixty-nine years. The grandmother was Martha Anderson, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. Samuel Money, mentioned above, was a first cousin of General Fernando De Soto Money, of the Confederate army. During the Civil war, Samuel Money served in Company K, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. William Money, the paternal great grandfather of our subject, was born in Ireland and in an early day he emigrated to America, locating in Virginia, near where were fought many years later the two battles of Bull Run. The maternal grandfather, James Davis, was born in Baltimore, Maryland. He was a tanner by trade and later followed farming. He came to Jay county, Indiana about 1833 with the early pioneers, and was a successful man of affairs. His wife was a Miss Zimmerman, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry.

James D. Money of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm, and received his education in the common schools, graduating from the high school at Fort Recovery, later from Liber College, and also Lebanon College, in Ohio. He began life for himself by teaching in the public schools of Jay county, which he followed for eight years. He taught in Noble township in 1873, then began farming in 1877, on the farm belonging to Henry Handschey. He cleared most of this place himself, the farm consisting of one hundred and twenty acres, and improved it in many ways. He has continued farming ever since with ever increasing success, now owning the above mentioned farm, which he has kept well improved and under a high state of cultivation, and he has an attractive dwelling and substantial outbuildings. He is a stockholder in the Atlas Bank of Union City, also vice-president and a stockholder in the Union Loan & Trust Company of Union City. He is vice-president and a stockholder in the Union City & Lightsville Telephone Company, the capital stock of which is fifty thousand dollars; he is also a stockholder in the Pierce Elevator Company. He has been very successful in a business way, being a man of keen discernment, untiring energy and honorable ideals. Politically, he is independent, and back in the early eighties he was trustee of Jackson township for two terms. Fraternally, he belongs to the Masonic order and religiously is a member of the Christian church.

Mr. Money was married September 8, 1877 to Amanda J. Handschey, who was born in Randolph county, September 9, 1858, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Henry and Sarah Handschey. Her father was born in Perry township, Muskingum county, Ohio in 1820, and his death occurred March 15, 1913. He married Sarah Smith, who was born in 1819, and whose death occurred September 8, 1894. Mr. Handschey was a millwright by trade and erected one of the first mills in Randolph county, and dug a race for the mill when a boy of nineteen years, about three-fourths of a mile in length, a depth of fifteen feet and through the woods in some places. Mrs. Money's grandfather, Henry Handschey, was born in Switzerland, and there his father, also Henry Handschey, was born and spent his life. The grandmother was Mary Ann Walters, a native of Pennsylvania.

To Mr. and Mrs. Money the following children were born: Charles H., born May 10, 1880, was educated in the Danville Normal, later graduated from the State Normal at Terre Haute; later entered the State University at Bloomington, from which he was graduated; he has followed teaching for a vocation and is at this writing superintendent of schools at Frankfort, Indiana. He married in September, 1901, Zelma Moore, and they have one child, Leonadas Wayne, born on Thanksgiving day, 1903. Mary E., our subject's second child, was born July 15, 1884, was educated in the schools of Randolph county, married Ralph C. Flory, August 14, 1900, and to them two sons have been born, Wilbur, born April 7, 1903; and David Lowell, born August 18, 1911; Mr. Flory is a farmer and resides in Jackson township, this county. Flora Alice, youngest of our subject's children, was born November 25, 1893, was graduated from the high school in Jackson township, and on September 28, 1912 she married George Clayton DeBolt, a mechanic of Union City.

JOHN W. MANGAS.

One of the careful agriculturists and respected citizens of Randolph county, is John W. Mangas, a man whose history furnishes a splendid example of what may be accomplished through determined purpose, laudable ambition and well directed efforts. Starting out in life a poor boy, he has steadily worked his way upward, winning success in his chosen field of endeavor and gaining the public confidence, which he has retained through careful "hewing to the line" in all the relations which he has sustained to his fellow men. He seems to have inherited some of the winning traits of his sterling father, one of the early settlers of this county, the name Mangas having been well known here for many decades, and it is a name of which any community might well be proud to include in its list of citizens.

Mr. Mangas was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, April 22, 1862. He is a grandson of Jacob Mangas, who was born in York county, Pennsylvania, November 25, 1800. On October 25, 1825, Mr. Mangas married Elizabeth Hoke, sister of Seth Hoke, of Union City, Indiana, and lived with her happily and peacefully until his death in Jackson township, August 8, 1883 when lacking two months and a half of his fifty-eighth birthday. His family consisted of eleven children, ten sons and one daughter, two of whom died in infancy, twins; eight sons and one daughter survive. Jacob Mangas moved from Pennsylvania to Richland county, Ohio, in 1832 and from there to Jackson township, Randolph county, Indiana in 1837, when this region was a vast wilderness, with but few white settlers and no modern conveniences. He was endowed with habits of frugality and industry, integrity and economy, so he succeeded in becoming an influential and substantial citizen. When he came to this county he possessed a fortune which the young men of today might well envy, an iron constitution, a steady nerve, a solid muscle, a brave heart, an honest purpose, an unswerving will, and a faithful, loving, working wife. He had but fifty dollars in money, one horse and a one-horse wagon into which he packed all his earthly goods, and his wife and babies and came overland from his home in the East. Here he and his industrious wife fought forest, wild beasts, inconvenience and hardships until a large measure of success crowned their efforts. They began with forty acres in the woods, and added to this until they possessed two hundred acres, and then divided and sub-divided with their children until they lived to see each child in possession of a home and in good circumstances and themselves a sufficiency for all probable needs while sojourning here. He joined the Christian church at Lisbon, October 1, 1870, his wife having joined the same September 29, 1868. They lived a quiet life and set a good example for correct Christian conduct before the world and their family. They lived to see all of their children and companions, and nearly all their grandchildren who were old enough in the Christian church with them. The following are the children: Emanuel, born in 1827, died in 1899; Mrs. Sarah Smiley, born in 1829, died in 1910; Casper, born in 1831; John, born in 1833; Jacob, Jr., born in 1836, died in 1901; Eli, born in 1839; Abraham, born in 1840; Absalom, born in 1843; Samuel, born in 1848; David and Saloma, twins died in infancy. At the time of Jacob Mangas' death there were thirty-five grandchildren, five great-grandchildren, and with his own children made a total of forty-nine. During his last illness he bore his suffering with great fortitude, never complaining.

Eli Mangas was the first born of the immediate generation in Randolph county, his birth occurring May 12, 1839. Here he grew to manhood and first married Jemima Smith in the early sixties and to them these children were born: John W., the immediate subject of this sketch; Hannah Samantha died in 1864 when about nine months old; Mary Elizabeth died in 1865 and was also about nine months old; William O., born June 3, 1866, married Minnie Coby of this county, and they live on a farm here; Rufus S., born in October, 1868, who married Cora Brewer, is engaged in farming and they have one daughter; Jason died in infancy; Cora B., born October, 1876, died in 1893; Dora died in 1894; Carrie married a Mr. Brooks and died March 7, 1904; Clinton F., born June 30, 1888, married Ida Whitesell, and they have one child, Carl born in March, 1912. The second marriage of Eli Mangas was to Ann Hawkins.

Eli Mangas had no educational advantages when a boy, but by the assistance of his good wife and by close home reading he became a well informed man. When nineteen years old he and his brother took a contract to cut one hundred cords of wood, for forty-five cents per cord, and he spent much time in the woods in his early life, getting out timber for many different purposes and making baskets. Immediately after his marriage he moved to his father's forty acre farm, which he cleared, and there set out an orchard, and later bought the place, and added another forty to it. He bought the old homestead in 1870 and at once commenced to remodel the same, built fences, a fine farm and other outbuildings. He also bought a tract of land in 1882 (the Catholic cemetery tract of seven and one-half acres), just south of the old home place. On this land is a valuable gravel pit. He put buildings on same in 1883 and moved thereto the following year and there he still resides. He was one of the first to agitate, help organize and lay out the Lisbon cemetery and he was one of the first trustees of the same and is now serving as trustee. At the start there was no money but now there is three thousand dollars on interest. The success of the proposition has been due very largely to Mr. Mangas. He has been appointed inspector of highways and is performing his duties very acceptably. He united with the Disciple church December 14, 1860, and has been an elder in the same for forty-three years. Since 1884 he has voted the Prohibition ticket, being one of the first to espouse the cause of temperance in this neighborhood.

John W. Magnas, of this sketch grew to manhood on the home farm and received his education in the common schools, and when only eighteen years old he commenced earning his own living, in different ways, and by industry and shrewdness he has accumulated a fine property, consisting of one hundred and eighty acres of choice, well improved and productive land, on which stand a substantial residence and good outbuildings. He carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. When a young man he did a good deal of contracting, such as ditching and wood cutting and other things and in this way got a good start. In January, 1890 he bought a tile factory which he operated successfully four years. In June, 1884 he took the first public contract in ditch work which he finished in a few months. In 1891 he took a contract to build the sewer for Union City school building, also one square on North Plum street. His next contract was in 1895 when he excavated the cellar for the Kuntz building and in 1904 he finished the north end of Plum street. In 1905 he managed a gang of hands for another contractor. In 1906 he excavated the cellar for the Ross Carriage works, built East Carter street and built a square of High street, and in 1907 he commenced stone road contract work, building the Carson road in Wayne and Jackson townships, also the Cox road in the latter township. In 1908 he built the Alexander road and the I. J. Hill road in Greenville township. In 1909 he built the Evans road in Green township, and in 1911 built the Gittenger road in Jackson township. In 1912 he built the D. Warn road in Jackson township, and in 1913 constructed the Thornburg road in Wayne and Greensfork townships and the Alexander road in Wayne and Jackson townships in 1914. He has been most successful as a road contractor, being the best known man in this field of endeavor in the county, and no small part of his competency has been secured in this manner. All the while he was conducting his tile factory and his farm, being thus a very busy man with his three departments of labor, but a good manager, energetic and persistent man of affairs, he made a great success of all and is one of the men of wealth of his section of the county. He has always been regarded as being in the progressive list, and he is public-spirited, doing his full share of promoting any movement that has for its object the public good. He was one of the organizers of the Union Loan & Trust Company of Union City and one of its directors and stockholders.

John W. Mangas was married March 8, 1885 to Wilda Gittenger, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, June 4, 1865. She received a good education and is a lady of many praiseworthy traits. She is a daughter of William P. Gittenger, who died in October, 1911 at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He followed farming during his active years, and came to Randolph county when his daughter, Mrs. Mangas was young. His wife was known in her maidenhood as Catherine Berkheimer, who died February 12, 1900 at the age of sixty-five years. Mrs. Mangas has four sisters and one brother, namely: Louisa, who married Haskell Rush; Malinda who married Dr. E. L. Welbourn; Minnie, a twin of Mrs. Mangas, married Daniel Lindley; Benjamin Gittenger married Mary Reynolds; Dora married Carl Thornburg. Ruby M. Brooks, niece of Mr. Mangas, was born December 22, 1902, a daughter of Augustus and Carrie Brooks. Carrie Brooks was the only living sister of Mr. Mangas. Her death occurred March 7, 1904, and Mr. and Mrs. Mangas have cared for little Ruby ever since as their own child.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mangas: Nova who married Harry L. Powers, has one child, Robert Wayne Powers, born September 20, 1909; Mrs. Powers was born December 23, 1885, was educated in the schools of Jackson township, from which she was graduated; she and her husband reside in Wayne township on a farm. Jesse G. Mangas, second child of our subject, was born December 25, 1887, was educated in Jackson and Wayne townships, lives at home and is operating his father's farm. Clarence B. Mangas, the youngest child, was born November 18, 1895, lives at home and is a graduate of Union City high school, class of 1914.

Mr. and Mrs. Mangas are pleasant people to meet, hospitable, genial and neighborly and they have a wide circle of friends throughout the county.

DANIEL WORTH OSBORN.

"Agriculture is the oldest alchemy," says a distinguished writer, "for it turns earth and even refuses into gold and confers upon its cultivator the additional reward of health." The oldest human vocation and noblest of them all has been honored by the successful career of Daniel Worth Osborn, for years one of the enterprising farmers of Washington township, and worthy native sons of Randolph county. His record shows few mistakes and abounds in much that is honorable and of good report, showing industrious habits and a character above reproach which is more to be desired according to the prophet of old, than great riches.

Mr. Osborn was born in West River township, this county, October 19, 1860, the son of Charles W and Asenath (Wood) Osborn. The father who was born near Economy, Indiana, lived many years on a farm in West River township, this county.

Charles W. Osborn was born in Perry township, Wayne county, Indiana, February 8, 1833. He was a son of Isaiah and Lydia (Worth) Osborn, the former a native of England, whose great, great grandfather, Mathew Osborn, was the founder of the family in America. The great grandparents were Daniel and Margaret (Stout) Osborn, the former a native of Sussex county, Delaware, and the latter of York county, Pennsylvania, where their marriage was celebrated. The grandfather, Charles Osborn, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, in 1775 and at the age of nineteen went to Tennessee. In 1798 he married Sarah Newman, daughter of John and Sarah (Fallowfield) Newman, natives of England. Charles was a farmer and a preacher of the Society of Friends. Removing to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, in 1816, he there published The Philanthropist, the first abolition paper ever published in the United States. In 1819 he went to Wayne county, Indiana, and laid out and his son Isaiah named the town of Economy; the name being suggestive of his economical habits. In 1842 he moved to Cass county, Michigan, where he spent much of his later life, but his death occurred in Porter county, Indiana, in 1850. He was twice married and was the father of seventeen children, all of whom reached mature years. He traveled extensively as a minister of the gospel, visiting every state where there were meetings of his denomination, much of the time riding on horseback and preaching two and three times a day. He spent 1832 and 1833 in Europe engaged in church work. He was a man of much more than ordinary ability, was prominent in abolition work and was a leading man in his church.

Isaiah Osborn was born in Knox county, Tennessee, November 25,

D. W. OSBORN AND FAMILY.

1803. He went from there to Jefferson county with his father, and thence to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, in 1816, where he was apprenticed to learn the printer's trade. In 1819 he went with his parents to Wayne county, Indiana, where he worked on a farm until 1822, when he went to Greenville, Tennessee, and worked there as a printer. Returning to Indiana in 1825 he continued his trade at Centerville and Indianapolis until 1828, when he went to Economy and taught school, served as Justice of the Peace and was married to Lydia Worth, June 24, 1829. He entered eighty acres of land about this time, built a log cabin in the midst of the forest, and began the development of a farm, upon which he lived until his death which occurred June 16, 1846. His wife, the daughter of Job and Rhoda (Macy) Worth, was born November 1, 1805, and came to this state at the age of eighteen, residing with her mother in West River township, Randolph county, teaching school up to the time of her marriage. She lived to an exceptionally advanced age. Both were members of the Friends church and were elders in the same, also both served as clerks of the monthly meetings. Eight children were born to them, named as follows: Caroline, married William Edgerton and they established their home on a farm in Henry county; she became a woman of ability, was president of the Organizer Publishing Company, of Indianapolis, the state organ of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. She was also a member of the board of managers of the Hadley Industrial School for Girls, was state superintendent of temperance literature for the union and for many years was actively engaged in temperance and philanthropic work. Rhoda who received a high education and was a successful teacher, died in 1859 at the age of twenty-four; Edmund remained on the old homestead in Wayne county; Laurinda was a successful teacher for more than twenty years, and in 1876 she married Thomas Ward, a banker of Winchester; Charles W., farmer; Narcissa was also a teacher, married Henry Charles, a farmer of Wayne county, and she died in 1878, at the age of thirty-seven years; Martha and Eunice died in 1848, aged five and two years respectively.

Charles W. Osborn, father of the immediate subject of this sketch, was taught to read by his mother as he sat near her spinning-wheel while she worked to clothe her family. Until large enough to work on the farm he attended the denominational or Friends school. His father died when he was thirteen years old, and the work of the farm devolved on him, so that he seldom got more than two months schooling out of the year till he was twenty years old. In 1853 he attended the Union Literary Institute, a manual labor school in the eastern part of Randolph county, where students could work out a part of their board and tuition. He was in the school twelve months under Professor Ebenezer Tucker, meeting his own expenses and a part of his sister Rhoda's by his own labor and keeping up his studies. In later years he assisted the professor in the preparation of a history of Randolph county. For some time Mr. Osborn had the entire superintendency on the farm, the providing for forty boarders, attending to the correspondence, keeping the books and doing a number of other things, in connection with keeping up five studies and hearing a class recite each day. Seven years' experience and training at home had made it possible to attend to such business, and it was any way to get an education so it was honest and honorable. After leaving the institute he taught two terms of school in Wayne county; one in Henry county, and then raised a crop on the farm, and entered Antioch College in the fall of 1856. Here he supported himself in part by sweeping the floors of the college and dormitory. A portion of his earnings heretofore was given to his mother for the support of the family. He was at Antioch six months, then removed to Wayne county and farmed in the summer and taught school in the winter. In the spring of 1858 he married Asenath W. Wood, a daughter of Jacob and Phoebe (Pickering) Wood, of Henry county, and continued the operation of the old homestead, teaching in the winter until 1870, when he removed to a farm in West River township, Randolph county, his place consisting of sixty acres.

To Charles W. Osborn and wife six children were born, named as follows: Arthur W. was the eldest; Daniel W., of this sketch; Laura Cordelia died at the age of eleven years; Edgar C. died when two years old; Carrie died in infancy; William E. was the youngest of the family.

Charles W. Osborn and wife were always active members in the Friends church and he was a local preacher in the same. For eighteen years he served his monthly meeting as clerk and presiding officer. He was long prominent in Sunday school and temperance work, and did everything in his power to advance the cause of Christianity. He was an Abolitionist from boyhood, as were his parents before him. His father cast the only vote for James G. Birney in 1840 that was cast at Economy. As the Republican party was pledged to the non-extension of slavery, Charles W. Osborn was identified with it from the first, and got leave of absence from Antioch College to go home to vote, casting his first presidential ballot for John C. Fremont. Upon the abolition of slavery he turned his attention to temprance work. On becoming convinced that the question of intemperance could not be settled by the Republican party, he assisted, in 1884, in the organization of the Prohibition party in Indiana, and continued to vote with that party and labor for its success. When old age came on, he retired from active life and moved to Economy where his death occurred May 22, 1905. His widow is still living in that town, being now advanced in years, but she is in full possession of her faculties.

Daniel W. Osborn was reared in his native community and when growing to manhood assisted with the general work on the farm. He received his education in the common schools. He began life for himself as a farmer and this continued to be his vocation through life. He moved on his present well-kept and productive farm in Washington township in 1885. In connection with general farming he raised and fed stock for the market. He was a Prohibitionist and a member of the Friends church.

Mr. Osborn was married, first, March 25, 1887 to Magnolia Hammer, who was born October 17, 1865, at Milton, Wayne county, Indiana. She was a daughter of Jesse and Mary (Farquhar) Hammer. To this union three children were born, namely: Alma L., whose birth occurred January 31, 1888; Mary A., born August 7, 1889, and Edgar L., born February 27, 1891. They are all living at home. The wife and mother was summoned to her rest on March 6, 1891. On October 19, 1893 our subject married Alma L. Hammer, a sister of his first wife; she was born August 6, 1867. To this union one child was born, Magnolia E., whose birth occurred May 22, 1909, died three days later. Jesse Hammer, father of Mrs. Osborn, was born April 9, 1838 in Wayne county, Indiana. He was a son of Joseph and Matilda (Macy) Hammer. Joseph Hammer was born in Tennessee, from which state he came to Wayne county, Indiana, when seventeen years old. His death occurred in 1889. The following is from the home paper prepared by a friend.

"On January 24, 1914, Mr. Osborn died at the Home Hospital at La-Fayette, Indiana. He was buried at Economy. Mr. Osborn had spent his entire life in Randolph county where he was well and most favorably known.

Mr. Osborn enjoyed a birthright membership in the society of Friends. He came of a long line of illustrious Quaker ancestry, reaching back for at least five generations in the past. The life of Mr. Osborn has reflected credit on the religious training of his predecessors in the fact that the quiet forms of worship which were peculiar to the Friends in the years that are past were reproduced in this manner of worship through his life. Although never making as much of an outward demonstration as some he aimed for his life to show for itself, and while he frequently expressed himself as not fully understanding some things, he said that nothing more come than the fact that he was accepted of God. At the time of the surgical operation on his body when he recovered sufficiently from the anesthetic and they thought it best to inform him of his condition he was as calm as if being told he was about to leave home on a short journey.

He referred during his sickness to some of his brightest experiences in the old Lebanon church and later in the Jackson school house before the church at Martindale was built and later in this church. For many years he was an efficient Sabbath school worker and teacher and always faithful to the church of Christ.

Mr. Osborn coming from staunch abolition stock, it was natural that he should ally himself with the great reform movements on the anti-slavery and temperance questions and before he was a legal voter he worked ardently for the overthrow of the liquor traffic and when he reached his majority he cast his first vote for John P. St. John in 1884 and he has always voted with the reform party through life. Although he was chosen by the temperance committee of the Cherry Grove Monthly Meeting to obtain speakers for their meetings he declined to do so rather than wound the feelings of those who did not see things as he did. He also gave of his time and means and was a frequent visitor at our great national conventions as well as in state and county. His earthly life has come to an end but his influence will live a tireless force for good in all the coming years."

WILLIAM HARRIS.

Through an active and interesting career duty has ever been the motive of action of William Harris, the present popular and capable ex-mayor of Union City, and one of the progressive business men of Randolph county, and usefulness to his fellow-men has not been by any means a secondary consideration. He has performed well his part in life, and it is a compliment worthily bestowed to say that this locality is honored by his citizenship, for he has achieved definite success through his own efforts and is thoroughly deserving of the proud American title of self-made man, the term being one that, in its better sense, can not but appeal to the loyal admiration of all who are appreciative of our national institutions and the privileges afforded for individual accomplishment, and it is a privilege, ever gratifying, in this day and age, to meet a man who has the courage to face the battles of life with a strong heart and steady hand and to win in the stern conflict by bringing to bear only those forces with which Nature has equipped him,—self-reliance, self-respect, energy, foresight and integrity.

Mr. Harris was born at Ovid, Seneca county, New York, August 21, 1845. He is a son of William and Amanda (Osborn) Harris, natives of Seneca county, New York. The former died there at the age of twenty-eight years, and the latter made her home with our subject at Union City, dying at the age of eighty-four years. William, our subject, was the only child.

William Harris spent his boyhood in his native state and there received a meager education in the public schools, but being ambitious he has studied at home and by this means and by actual contact with the world has become a well-informed man. He commenced life without capital, a poor boy without assistance or influential friends, but he persevered in the face of obstacles until success abundantly crowned his life work. He earned his first money when only eight years of age by dropping corn, receiving five dollars in all for his work. With that he purchased a pair of fine boots for himself. He assisted his maternal grandfather on the farm, working out among the neighbors when he could find spare time from his grandfather's farm. When sixteen years old he had earned and saved sufficient money to buy a horse and buggy, also a cutter or sleigh, and was as well equipped in that respect as any of the neighbor boys whose fathers had purchased for them. Immediately afterwards he got severely injured, his foot being crushed in the cog wheels of a cider mill, and he was on crutches for nearly a year. Upon his recovery he hired out on a farm for twenty dollars per month. and worked eight months, during which he spent only twenty dollars of his entire wages, that sum being spent for a suit of clothes. He had a large doctor bill to pay which he paid by selling his horse, buggy and cutter. In October, 1865, when twenty years old, he went to Findlay, Ohio, and clerked in a store and produce house, remaining there five months. At that time the firm for which he was working bought a produce house in Union City, Indiana, in 1866, and Mr. Harris was sent back home where he remained six weeks, then came to Union City and commenced work for the same people at a salary of twenty-five dollars per month and board, and he worked at the new place six months, then the firm sent him out on the road at a salary of one thousand dollars a year and expenses. He worked thus for one year; then in 1867, he organized the firm of Turpen & Harris and they launched out in the grocery and produce business, wholesale and retail, and continued with ever-increasing success until 1894, building up a large trade which extended over a vast territory, in fact, the business rapidly grew to proportions that far exceeded their most sanguine dreams at the beginning, and at three different times the firm was worth a half million dollars, but they were completely wiped out during the panic of 1894 and dissolved business. Afterwards Mr. Harris took a position with a firm in New York City to travel and he remained with the concern for a period of six years, giving eminent satisfaction as he had with all his former employers, his efforts being very largely responsible for an increase in the business from five hundred thousand dollars to eight and a half million dollars annually. He then took a position with another firm in New York City, subsequently working for a company in Boston, being connected with the two latter for a period of six years also with equal success, thus making twelve years of consecutive work as a commercial traveler, during which he covered a vast territory and became widely known and was very popular with the trade. In 1908 he opened up a brokerage business of his own in Union City and is continuing in the same business with gratifying results.

In 1909 the people of Union City insisted on him becoming their mayor which he consented to do and was accordingly elected on a Democratic ticket against a heavy Republican majority, and the entire council was also elected on the Democratic ticket. He did a most commendable work as mayor, doing much for the permanent good of the town. Union City being conceded by all to be in better condition financially, morally and cleaner from a sanitary standpoint than ever before as a result of his efforts. More important improvements were made within a shorter time than in the history of the place, and all was so skilfully managed that at the close of his administration the city was no deeper in debt than before. He was regarded as one of the best financiers in Randolph county, conservative, certain, far-seeing, making few mistakes. He has always practiced following the Golden Rule in all relations of life and everyone reposes implicit confidence in him. To his efforts the first gas well of Union City is due. In fact, he put down the first gas well in the state. The well reached a depth of eighteen hundred feet. A flash of gas was found at eleven hundred and fifty-five feet, enough to ignite. Ten other wells were put down in this vicinity but none were successful. Mr. Harris was also interested in the development and growth of Muncie, Marion and many other cities and towns of Indiana.

Mr. Harris was married in Union City in 1867 to Anna Eliza Turpen, who was born in New Madison, Ohio, March 20, 1847. She was a woman of many praiseworthy characteristics and a favorite with a wide circle of friends. Her death occurred on September 17, 1911. To this union the following children were born: Stella A., who died in 1894, was the wife of Elmer E. McRay, of Kendalville, Indiana, where he was a large manufacturer of refrigerators; Carrie May died at the age of five and one-half years; Jeanette T. died unmarried at the age of twenty-five years; Juliette, also remained single, and is living at home; Grace A. married Harry C. Platt, who has a store in Union City, handling groceries and electrical supplies, and to them one child was born, Anna C. Platt, born August 20, 1909, died in early life; Crissa Anna died at the age of two and one-half years. The five deceased daughters came to their deaths by the same cause, appendicitis, according to the statement of skilled physicians, which is undoubtedly a hereditary disease in the Harris family. The father of our subject died from the same cause at the early age of twenty-eight years, passing away five months prior to the birth of our subject.

Politically Mr. Harris is a Democrat. He was a member of Governor Gray's staff for a period of four years. He maintains liberal views on the question of religion. He was made honorary member of the Hoosier Club of Union City by a unanimous vote of its members which comprise one hundred of the best young men of Union City. This action came as a surprise to Mr. Harris, but he is very proud of the honor. At the expiration of his term of office as mayor Mr. Harris was presented with a beautiful solid gold watch by the citizens of Union City, as a slight appreciation of the service he had rendered. The following is engraved on it, "From Citizens Union City, Indiana, to William Harris, Their Mayor, 1910-1914." Mr. Harris is one of the first and foremost citizens of Union City, always a leader in promoting the city's advancement in every way. He has assisted many a worthy young man to a position, when starting out in life in a business way, and many a man today in this and other localities will tell you that they have worked their ways to positions of prosperity and influence through the early assistance of Mr. Harris. He is a gentleman whom it is a pleasure to meet, being genial, obliging and courteous.

MILES J. FURNAS.

Miles J. Furnas, well-known business man and politician of Winchester, was born November 10, 1866, in Bridgeport, Marion county, Indiana. He is a son of Isaac H. and Jane M. (Coffin) Furnas. The father was born in Bridgeport, Indiana, and the mother was a native of Winchester. The family lived in Bridgeport until 1883, then moved to Clayton, Indiana, and in 1888 took up their residence in Winchester. Isaac H. Furnas devoted his active life to farming and stock raising, but is now living retired in this city. Politically, he is a Republican, and while deeply interested in the success of the party, has never been an office seeker. He and his wife are members of the Friends church. Only two children were born to them, our subject and Joseph L., of Westfield, Indiana.

Miles J. Furnas was reared on the home farm and received his early education in the district schools of his neighborhood. On November 24, 1887, he was married to Ozella E. Hadley, a daughter of Matthias and Matilda (Bringle) Hadley, of Hendricks county, Indiana. In March, 1888, he located on a farm near Lynn and later moved to Winchester. To our subject and wife one son has been born, I. Lester Furnas, whose birth occurred September 13, 1888. He was educated in the public schools of Winchester and Indianapolis and graduated from the Indiana Dental College in 1910, since which time he has been connected with the faculty of the above-named institution. He was married October 2, 1909, to Agnes M. Revels, a daughter of P. J. and Beatrice (Loftus) Revels, of Scranton, Pennsylvania. To this union one child has been born, Eleanor.

Mr. Furnas is a stanch Republican and has long been an influential leader in his party. In the fall of 1906 he was elected representative from Randolph county to the state Legislature, and he was twice re-elected, in 1908 and 1910. Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men. He is a member of the Friends church and teacher of the young men's class in the Sunday school.

JOHN LAWRENCE SMITH.

John Lawrence Smith, a native of New England, was born November 30, 1860. His father was a native American and his mother a daughter of Erin. At the outbreak of the Civil war, the father enlisted and was in the Union army a year or more when he was transferred to the navy. He was killed by an explosion on the flag-ship of the fleet sometime in the latter part of the war. The widow, then left with three small children—the subject of this sketch aged five, Kate three, and Minnie one—found herself penniless and homeless in the streets of New York City. Sickness and exhaustion had overtaken her, and she was lifted to an ambulance in Bleeker street one autumn day and taken to Bellevue Hospital to die. Her three fatherless children were transported up the Hudson to Randall's Island, and consigned to the House of Refuge. Here, after a few months, Minnie sickened and died. In May, 1867, John and Kate were given over along with thirty other children from Randall's Island, to Charles Loring Brace, at the head of the Children's Aid Society at that time, and when taken across the river, found themselves a portion of two passenger coach loads of orphan children and waifs gathered up in the city, preparatory to finding homes for them in the West.

JOHN L. SMITH.

On account of Mr. Brace's ill health, he was on the Pacific coast, and these children were assigned to the charge of Mr. Roosevelt, father of former President, Theodore Roosevelt. After two days and two nights journey, the train made its first stop at Williamsport, Indiana, and the children were marched two successive days to the court house for inspection by those who might desire to furnish homes for the fatherless little ones. John and Kate Smith were taken by a young lawyer of Williamsport. After two or three weeks the lad was turned over to a local baker and after a few months given to a farmer ten miles down the Wabash.

Here the boy's life was one of hardship and often of torture. He was beaten brutally by the man and nagged constantly by the peevish wife. After six years on the farm the family moved to Williamsport, and the head of the house opened up a saloon. The young lad, now thirteen years of age, was put behind the bar to wait upon customers and bade to drink every time one proffered to treat. Three times a week he was required to drive a team to Attica for wagon loads of beer. Every inducement was presented the boy to make him a debauchee but by Providential grace and an inherent will to turn from evil, he escaped. Two years later, when the saloon keeper had broken up and was closed out by the sheriff, in the middle of February, barefooted, the boy ran away from his brutal taskmaster, traveling ten miles over the frozen ground that day. Up to this time he had no schooling worthy of mention, but now he arranged to have a home for his labor on a farm and the privilege of attending school in the winter months. Four winters he thus managed to attend the district schools. In 1878 he went to Newport, Vermilion county, and worked on a farm for wages. In the school year of 1881 and '82 he attended the State Normal school at Terre Haute, qualifying himself to teach. For six consecutive years he then taught in the district schools.

In the spring of 1887 he bought the Dana News, a Democratic weekly, as it was about to suspend, and built it up into a successful journal. In 1891 Mr. Smith became superintendent of the Dana schools, also continuing as editor of the paper. In January, 1893, he was candidate before the Legislature for State Librarian at the suggestion of Governor Claude Matthews. For this position, however, he was defeated, but in July of the same year he was appointed postmaster of Dana by President Cleveland. After a year he sold the newspaper, and within the next year resigned the post-office to get back into newspaper work. In September, 1895, he bought the Winchester Democrat and moved to Randolph county the same month. Through the memorable campaign of 1896 he conducted a red-hot William Jennings Bryan paper, having been a delegate to the convention that nominated the Nebraskan.

In May, 1897, Mr. Smith retired from the Winchester Democrat and bought a half interest in the Richmond Daily Sun and removed to Richmond. After a few months he withdrew from this partnership and engaged in the insurance business. In June, 1899, he again removed to Winchester and was associated for something more than two years with A. C. Hindsley in the publication of the Winchester Democrat. In November 1901 he engaged in the insurance work again and during the past ten years has been manager of the Insurance department of the Peoples Loan & Trust Company.

In November, 1887, Mr. Smith was married to Kate Jordan, a native of Vermilion county, Indiana. Two children have been born to the union, Marian Bernece, now a teacher in the public schools of Randolph county, and Lawrence J., who died when five and a half years of age.

Mr. Smith is a Democrat of the most pronounced Jeffersonian type, and has an abiding faith in the political tenets advocated by his party.

Our subject has been an ardent lover of books, particularly the standard American and English authors. He is reputed to have the largest private library now in the state, his collection amounting to nearly six thousand volumes. He is an untiring reader, and is well abreast of all the advanced thinking of the day.

Likewise, Mr. Smith is devoted to nature, a lover of flowers and birds and trees. To his city lot he has transplanted forty-three varieties of wild flowers, and bird song is life among the trees because he has furnished homes for them, houses for purple martins and house wrens, leafy trees for others.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Odd Fellows. When seventeen years of age he united with the Christian church at West Lebanon, Indiana, but at present is a member of the First Presbyterian church of Winchester.

Mr. Smith has been quite active with his pen, writing both in verse and prose. He has contributed to "The Forum," "The Arena," "The Christian Register," and the "National Magazine," as well as to the state and local papers. In 1892 he contributed two monographs to the State Board for the Columbian Exposition for which he received an honorarium of one hundred dollars each. In preparation of a literary history of Indiana he has collected more than six hundred volumes of the works of Indiana writers. In 1896 and '97 he was secretary of the Western Association of Writers, and formed lasting friendships with the genial souls that assembled at the annual meetings for many years.

HENRY E. BUTTERWORTH.

In examining the life records of self-made men, it will invariably be found that indefatigable industry has constituted the basis of their success. True there are other elements which enter in and conserve the advancement of personal interests,—perseverance, discrimination and mastering of expedients—but the foundation of all achievement is earnest, persistent labor. At the outset of his career Henry E. Butterworth, well-known business man of Winchester, Randolph county, recognized this fact and he did not seek any royal road to the goal of prosperity and independence, but began to work earnestly and diligently to advance himself and the result is that he is now numbered among the progressive, successful and influential citizens of this locality where he has always made his home and whose interests he has ever had at heart and sought to promote in every legitimate way.

Mr. Butterworth was born in Winchester, near where he is now living. He is a son of Thomas and Susan (Edwards) Butterworth. The father was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and the mother in Wayne county, Indiana. Grandfather Thomas Butterworth emigrated to America from Europe in 1819, locating in Baltimore, where he spent the rest of his life, engaged in his trade as weaver. His son, Thomas, came west in 1843, and first settled in what is now Fountain City, Wayne county, Indiana. He had learned the wagon maker's trade at which he worked after coming west. All vehicles were made by hand in those days. The Edwards family came from North Carolina in the early thirties. They entered one hundred and sixty acres of land which is now a part of the county farm, two miles south of Winchester. Thomas Butterworth, father of our subject, came to Winchester about 1844 and opened a wagon shop on what is now East Washington street. He and Susan Edwards were married in Winchester in 1845, and two children were born to them, Henry E., of this sketch, and Annetta, now the wife of David Hippenheimer, a farmer in White River township, living one mile east of Winchester. Politically, Mr. Butterworth was a Republican and active in political matters but never held office. His death occurred July 25, 1885, his widow surviving until March 17, 1896. They are both buried in White River Cemetery.

Henry E. Butterworth was reared in Winchester and there was educated in the public schools. He was born July 10, 1846 and when he was eleven years old, in 1857, the family moved to their farm, two and one-half miles south of Winchester where the father spent the rest of his life and where our subject grew to manhood, continuing to farm on the home place until 1886 when he moved to the county-seat and engaged in buying and shipping livestock, also the hay business for about four years, when he turned his attention to the ice business in which he has been continuously engaged to the present time. He has a large and rapidly growing business, one of the most extensive of its kind in this section of the state. He cuts and packs his own ice from Funks lake and has controlled the local ice trade ever since he started in business. Promptness and honesty are his watchwords. He is well equipped in every way for the successful handling of his large trade.

Mr. Butterworth was married on October 10, 1871, to Sarah Alice Irvin, daughter of George and Eliza (Quinn) Irvin, of Randolph county, of which Mr. Irvin is a native, but his wife was born in Preble county, Ohio.

The union of our subject and wife has been without issue.

Politically, Mr. Butterworth is a Republican, but has never been an office seeker, although interested in whatever promoted the affairs of his city and county.

ISAAC ROUTH GILMORE.

One of the well remembered men of a past generation in Randolph county was the late Isaac Routh Gilmore, who devoted his life successfullly to agricultural pursuits and proved to be a good neighbor and citizen. He was one of the honored veterans of the great war between the states. Such men are worthy of both material success and the esteem of their acquaintances, for it has been by such men as Mr. Gilmore that this locality has been reclaimed from a wild state and brought up to one of the foremost agricultural sections of Indiana. He left his descendants an inheritance of which they may well be proud, a good example and an untarnished family name.

Mr. Gilmore was born near Pendleton, Madison county, Indiana, November 11, 1839. He was a son of Samuel and Nancy (Roberts) Gilmore, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Tennessee. To them the following children were born: John R., Eleanor Jane, Isaac R. (subject of this memoir), Nancy, James, Malinda Susan, Thomas E., Joseph W., Adaliza Marie, Martha, Emily, Samuel, Henry, William, Rachael, Robert C. and Sarah Ann. This exceptionally large family is now all deceased except Robert C., Adaliza Maria and Rachael.

Isaac R. Gilmore was reared on the home farm and he received a common school education. He assisted his father to clear the home farm and later cleared and developed a farm of his own, erecting thereon good buildings and became a substantial farmer. When quite young he removed with his parents to Illinois, where he lived until the beginning of the Civil War, when he enlisted in Company I, Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served faithfully until the close of the struggle, seeing much hard service and taking part in many of the important engagements. After the war he resumed farming, eventually moving to Randolph county, Indiana where the rest of his life was spent. At his death he owned a finely improved and productive farm of one hundred acres in Nettle Creek township, which his widow still owns. He previously owned much more land which he divided among his children and gave them a good start in life.

Mr. Gilmore married Elizabeth Thornburg, March 24, 1864. She is a daughter of Edward and Susannah (Thornburg) Thornburg, the father a native of Ohio and the mother a native of Indiana. They were the parents of twelve children, namely: Eliza Jane and Peggie are both deceased; Mrs. Mary Ann Terrell, lives in Delaware county, Indiana; Martha is deceased; Isaac Henry, Joseph Morris and Sarah Ellen, all died in infancy; Mrs. Rebecca Gilmore, lives in Iowa; Elizabeth, who married Mr. Gilmore, of this sketch; John, lives at Economy, this state; Mrs. Carolina Dudley, lives in Marion, Indiana; George is a resident of Delaware county.

To Mr. and Mrs. Isaac R. Gilmore the following children were born: Mary Luella, the oldest died at the age of nine months, ten days; Mrs. Venora Ann Chamness, of Henry county; Mrs. Addie Udora Campbell, of Muncie, who has two children, Frank and Ina. They are both married and Frank has four children, Edith, Lois, Jonathan and Joseph William. Ina has three children, Marcile Luella, Thelma Ruth and Cletis Cornelus Geneviene; Wellrose Douglass, third child of the subject of this sketch, lives in Randolph county and has one child, Revillo; Andrew Clayton died leaving three children, Valetta Carrel, Carcie Harold, and Lois, all except the last named now making their home with their grandmother, Gilmore; Joseph Henry, also died and left two children, Arline and Richard Harold; Mrs. Ora Estella Jones, who lives in Parker and has two children, Survetus and Lelia; Arthur Edward, of this county, has three children, Oletta Blanche, Raymond Leo, and Cleo Lavon; Lee Dennis, youngest of our subject's children, lives in North Dakota and has one child, Lucille Estella.

The first home built by Mr. Gilmore was destroyed by fire, but, nothing daunted, he at once set about to build another and left his family in good circumstances and the widow occupies the old home and the place is operated by his son, Arthur E.

For forty years Mr. Gilmore was a worthy member of the Christian church, devoting a great amount of his time, labor and money for the benefit of the church and the betterment of his community in every way. At the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic he became a member of that order and was always devoted to its work. On September 23, 1871, he was made a master Mason by the Blountsville lodge, and in all ways tried to practice the teachings of this great order.

The death of Mr. Gilmore occurred October 30, 1909 at the age of sixty-nine years, eleven months and nineteen days, leaving a widow, seven children, twelve grandchildren, five great grandchildren, a brother and two sisters and a host of devoted friends.

COLUMBUS R. CARTER.

One of the most enterprising and substantial citizens of Lynn, Randolph county, is Columbus R. Carter, who has been engaged in a number of things in all of which he has shown himself a capable man of affairs, and, having accumulated a handsome competency he is now living practically retired, although still in the full vigor of manhood. He was well prepared for life's serious work, being given a good education and excellent training by an able and worthy father. Another thing, he selected a splendid woman to share his triumphs and defeats, his joys and sorrows, which come in the course of the years to everyone. And thus equipped he began the battle of life on his own account, and so it is not surprising that success has attended his efforts all along the line.

Mr. Carter was born in the northeastern corner of Howard county, Indiana. He is a son of Thomas Wesley Carter and Lydia (Rhoades) Carter. The father was born October 11, 1836, near Mt. Zion neighborhood, White River township, Randolph county. He was a son of Thomas and Mariam (Cartwright) Carter. Thomas Carter, Sr., was born in Randolph county, North Carolina and he came to Randolph county, Indiana, in the latter twenties, entering eighty acres of land in White River township, and was thus one of our earliest settlers. He began clearing and improving his land here, but death overtook him about three years later, and he passed away in early manhood, leaving a wife and several children. He and Mariam Cartwright were married in North Carolina, of which state she was a native, and she spent the rest of her life in this locality.

Thomas W. Carter was left an orphan at the age of eleven years. He made his home with an elder sister and worked on a farm, and suffered the privations and hardships incident to a parentless boy in the pioneer days.

He secured a colt for some of his services and with that for a start he gradually worked his way up. When twenty years old he married Lydia Rhoades and soon after located on a farm east of Snow Hill, this county and in 1860 moved to Howard county where he continued farming until the fall of 1875, then moved back into the same house he had before occupied near Snow Hill, and farmed there one year then moved to the farm where he spent the rest of his life, dying November 26, 1906, when a little past seventy years of age. He and Lydia Rhoades were married October 19, 1856. She was born in Randolph county, Indiana, October 22, 1839. She was a daughter of Miles and Margaret Rhoades. Miles Rhoades was a native of North Carolina. The death of Mrs. Carter occurred July 16, 1876. Mr. Carter subsequently married Hannah Baldwin. Nine children were born to this first union, two of the daughters preceding him to the Silent Land. He was a worthy member of the Christian church. He was regarded by all as being a good and useful man in every respect.

Columbus R. Carter received a common school education, and attended Roanoke Academy one term, also attended the Converse high school. He began life for himself by teaching school, after one term he began farming and alternated the two for a period of years, being very successful in both. He then engaged in merchandising at Snow Hill, also was a grain dealer there for a period of fourteen years, building up a large trade in the meantime. He then went to Lynn and engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business, and also became secretary and manager of the Lynn Tile & Brick Company, which he conducted for four years building it up to large proportions, also had a splendid real estate and insurance business. In 1912 he traveled extensively throughout the West. He is now living practically retired. He owns one-third interest in the splendid cement block building on Main street in Lynn, also other valuable properties, including a handsome residence. Politically he is a Prohibitionist, and religiously belongs to the Church of Christ.

Mr. Carter was married September 12, 1885, to Mary Jane Buroker, who was born in Grant county, Indiana, November 22, 1863. She is a daughter of William and Julia Buroker. The father was born October 18, 1834, in Grant county, Indiana, and his death occurred March 22, 1871; his wife died April 6, 1876.

To Mr. and Mrs. Carter two children have been born, a son dying in infancy and Thelma Iona who is now attending the Lynn high school and will graduate with the class of 1916.

The descendants of Thomas Carter, Sr., hold their family reunion annually near Snow Hill Station and the descendants of Miles Rhoades, Sr., hold their family reunion annually at the old homestead near Converse, Indiana. The subject of this sketch is the president of both these reunions, thus showing that he is an honored member of both families.

ROBERT G. HUNT.

Such a life as that of Robert G. Hunt, successful farmer and stock man, of Union City, for a long lapse of years one of the leading citizens of Randolph county and a veteran of the Civil War, is an inspiration to others who are less courageous and more prone to giving up the fight when obstacles thwart their way, or their ideals have been reached or definite success has been obtained in any field of endeavor. In the life history of Mr. Hunt are found evidences of a peculiar characteristic that always makes for achievement, persistency coupled with fortitude and honest traits, and as the result of such a life he has acquired not only material success but also an honored place in the community.

Mr. Hunt was born in Kentucky, September 20, 1843. He is a son of Hugh M. Hunt, a native of Union county, South Carolina where he spent his boyhood years, removing to Kentucky when twenty-three years old, where he remained until 1848 when he moved with his family to Indiana, locating on a farm two miles west of Huntsville, Randolph county, where he spent the rest of his life, dying January 24, 1888. He married Maranda Hunt, a daughter of Rev. Bazel Hunt, (no relation). Her death occurred May 29, 1891. Grandfather Elisha Hunt died in South Carolina many years ago. He was of Scotch ancestry. The Hunts are an old southern family.

Robert G. Hunt grew to manhood on the home farm and was educated in the common schools of Randolph county, and when only eighteen years of age he enlisted in Company E, Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Col. Grose, of New Castle, and Capt. Kerney. He saw considerable hard service and proved to be a gallant and faithful soldier for the union. He fought in the battle of Shiloh where he was wounded and discharged for disability not long thereafter; but as soon as he was able he re-enlisted, this time in Company B, Seventh Indiana Cavalry, and was made quarter-master sergeant, the duties of which position he discharged in a highly commendable manner until he was honorably discharged at Austin, Texas, February 18, 1866. After his military career he remained in the Lone Star state until the spring of 1867 when he returned to Randolph county, Indiana, removing to Ringgold county, Iowa two years later, where he remained nearly a year, then returned to this county and bought a small farm in West River township, and in connection with farming he began buying and shipping livestock on an extensive scale, his business growing to large proportions. In 1885 he moved to a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Nettle Creek township, he having purchased this place in 1883. He sold out in 1889 and bought a farm immediately across the road from his last place, in West River township, the latter farm consisting of two hundred and thirteen acres, which was poorly improved, and he improved same and sold it in two years and moved to Indianapolis. About 1895 he bought a farm in West River township to which he removed soon thereafter and lived on it two and one-half years when he sold out and moved to Modoc. After remaining there a few months he moved back to Indianapolis, and in 1909 bought a farm in Jay county on which he lived until 1912 when he sold out and moved to Union City, buying a fine home on the Ohio side of the city where he now resides, surrounded by every convenience and comfort and here he expects to spend his old age in quiet. He has been very successful in his life work, always made good trades in his various farms and is now in very comfortable circumstances financially. Politically, he is a Republican.

Mr. Hunt was married May 12, 1878 to Elvira H. Hunt, (no relation). She was born in Randolph county, October 19, 1856, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of John W. Hunt, for many years a well-known and highly respected citizen of Randolph county. His death occurred March 22, 1870. He was of English ancestry. His wife, Rachael Andrews, was a daughter of Barton Andrews, and her death occurred April 17, 1873. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Hunt has been without issue.

BENJAMIN WORTH DAGGETT.

Notwithstanding opinions to the contrary, much depends upon being well born, and the old adage that "blood will tell" is not only true, but profoundly philosophical. In a large measure we are what our ancestors were, their characteristics and their attributes as a rule constituting a heritage which has had a powerful influence in moulding our lives for good or evil. "Like produces like," a recognized law of the physical world, also obtains in matters of mind and morals, as the experience of the human race abundantly attests. That parents have a wonderful influence upon the minds and hearts of their offspring cannot for a moment be gainsaid, hence, the necessity of measuring up to the high standard which both Nature and the Creator require of fatherhood and motherhood. In matter of birth Benjamin Worth Daggett, of the vicinity of Union City, Randolph county, has been fortunate, inheriting as he does the sterling characteristics of his ancestors.

Mr. Daggett was born in Adams county, Ohio, May 23, 1852. He is a son of George Daggett, who was born near Fredericksburg, Virginia where he spent his boyhood and was educated in the common schools. When twenty-one years of age he left his native state and came to Ohio where he bought a small farm. He learned the cooper's trade when young and worked at the same, maintaining a shop of his own for many years. His family consisted of ten children, namely: Andrew Jackson died in infancy; Martin Van Buren, Richard Johnson, Camora H., Martha E., Thomas K., Virginia A., Mary I., Sarah E., and Benjamin Worth. Benjamin F. Daggett, paternal grandfather of the above named children, was born in Virginia, August 4, 1790. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, in which war his father was a captain.

Benjamin W. Daggett grew up on his father's farm in Ohio where he worked when a boy and he received his education in the country schools in his neighborhood in Adams county, at the old Foster school-house, which was three miles distant from his home. When eighteen years of age he began auctioneering which he followed successfully for a number of years, later in life turning his attention to farming. He came to Randolph county, Indiana in 1900 and here he has been engaged in farming, principally, ever since. During the past four years he has been running the school wagon in vicinity of Union City and has never had an accident. He purchased his present home farm of forty-four acres on January 5, 1901. He has improved it and has a comfortable home. He is a self-made man, for he received little assistance from his parents who had a large family to rear, educate and provide for.

Mr. Daggett was married July 18, 1883 to Julia Ann Wilson, who was born in Clinton county, Ohio, November 27, 1861, and there she grew to womanhood and was educated in the public schools. She is a daughter of James Wilson, a farmer, who was born on a farm January 1, 1810, and died May 3, 1880. He was a shoemaker by trade, and he reared a family of nine children. He married Margaret Plymire. Mrs. Daggett was the youngest of their family. Her father, James Wilson was twice married, his first wife having been Katherine Childers, and to this union three children were born, namely: Mary Elizabeth, John A., and Thomas C. The following children were born to his union with Margaret Plymire: Susanna, Katherine, Martin A., James B., Margaret Ellen, Samuel P., Lovina, Lewis and Julia Ann. The paternal grandfather of the above named children was Joshua Wilson, who was born April 11, 1763, and died June 2, 1831, at the age of sixty-eight years, one month and three days. James Wilson was owner of a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, at the time of his death. He reared four boys who never drank, chewed or smoked.

Six children were born to our subject and wife, namely: Olin, born in Grant county, Indiana, March 7, 1884 and was married January 18, 1911 to Nettie Kaufman. They have one child Florence; Anna Pearl, born in Grant county, Indiana, October 10, 1887 and married Melvin Douge, agent for the traction company at Eaton, Indiana; Minnie Margaret born in Adams county, Ohio; February 12, 1890 and is a stenographer at Eaton, Indiana; Lella L., was born in Adams county, Ohio, December 29, 1892 and is a stenographer at Muncie, Indiana; May Thelma born in Union City, Indiana, May 2, 1902; and Leo Worth born in Union City, Indiana, March 15, 1908.

Politically, Mr. Daggett is a Republican and religiously, he and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal church.

WILLIAM KING.

One of the enterprising farmers and public-spirited citizens of Jackson township, Randolph county, who is deserving of specific mention in this volume, is William King, a man who has never been inclined to depend upon others to do his work or lay his plans, and, as a result of his habits of self-reliance, foresight, close application and integrity he now finds himself very comfortably situated and one of the highly respected men of his township.

Mr. King was born in the above-named township and county August 1, 1855. He is a son of Dr. James V. King, one of the prominent pioneer physicians of Jackson township, who died here about 1890. The mother of our subject was known in her maidenhood as Mary Jane Devor, who survived her husband, the Doctor, some sixteen years, dying in 1906. The paternal grandfather of our subject was William King, a farmer in Brown county, Ohio, in the early days, who eventually moved to Randolph county, Indiana, and located in Jackson township, of which he became trustee, holding the office many years. He is long since deceased, as has also his wife, Mary (Bowd) King.

William King, of this review, was reared in his native community and he received his education in the common schools of Jackson township and Ridgeville College, finishing his education by home study. He began life for himself as a teacher, which profession he followed with very gratifying results for a period of sixteen years, during which time he became one of our most popular and efficient teachers. Most of his teaching was in Randolph county. He finally gave up teaching and turned his attention to general farming, which he has followed ever since. He owns fifty acres, on which he makes a very comfortable living, and he has a cozy home. He is contented to lead the simple life, not caring to put forth the strenuous efforts necessary to horde up a large fortune, knowing that happiness is not gained in such a course.

Politically, Mr. King is a Progressive, and while he is deeply interested in public matters, he is not a seeker after the emoluments of office. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. King was married September 1, 1881, to Sadie Johnson, who was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, November 3, 1858, and here she was reared and educated. She is a daughter of Edward Johnson, whose death occurred in 1894. The mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson, died in 1900. They were highly respected by all who knew them, having lived a life above reproach.

To William King and wife the following children were born: Lota, born August 14, 1882, who was educated in the common schools and Union City High School, finishing at Marion College, from which institution she was graduated. She has been a successful teacher for the past eleven years, and has been superintendent of the Spartanburg schools for the past three years; Vesta, second daughter of our subject, was born March 22, 1884, was educated in the Jackson township schools, passing through the Union City high school and Marion College, having specialized in the scientific course, later graduating at the University of Indiana. She is now a student at Chicago University. She has been teaching with most gratifying results for the past eight years; Hazel, third child of our subject, was born August 28, 1886, passed through the local public schools, was graduated from the Union City high school, also Marion College, and Indiana University in 1909. She did work later on an advanced degree, and has been one of our popular teachers for the past six years. She married A. J. Thompson on September 1, 1912, and they reside in Ellettsville, Monroe county, Indiana. Mollie King, born July 7, 1888, passed through the home public schools, was graduated from the Union City high school and Indiana University, and is at present attending the Indiana Medical College in Indianapolis, preparatory to a career as a physician. Elsie King, born May 22, 1890, received her education in the local public schools, the high school at Union City, and is now a student at Indiana University. Ethel King, born May 9, 1892, was educated in the same manner as her elder sisters, graduating from Indiana University with honors in 1913. She is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity. Cecil King, born December 22, 1899, is at this writing a student in the Jackson township high school. Our subject and wife are very proud of their children, and not without just cause, for they are the possessors of fine minds, cultured and ambitious to accomplish something worth while.

JOHN H. BICKEL.

Darke county, Ohio has sent a large number of her enterprising citizens to Randolph county, Indiana and they have, almost invariably, proved to be industrious and public-spirited, and excellent farmers, for nearly all of them have chosen husbandry for their vocations. Of this number John H. Bickel, of near Union City is deserving of special mention. He has made a success as a general farmer and has proven to be a valuable man in public matters.

Mr. Bickel was born in Darke county, Ohio, October 29, 1863. He is a son of Daniel W. and Rebecca (Chenoweth) Bickel. The father was born in Miami county, Ohio, in November, 1838. He devoted his life to farming, laying by a competency sufficient to insure his old age free from want, and he is now living retired. His wife died in 1900. Tobias Bickel, paternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania, but spent most of his life on a farm in Ohio where he died a number of years ago. This is an old Pennsylvania family and has always been noted for its sterling honesty and unwavering industry.

John H. Bickel grew to manhood on the home farm and he worked there with his father during the crop seasons when he became of proper age. In the meantime he attended the district schools of his neighborhood in the wintertime. He subsequently attended the Normal school at Ada, Ohio, now known as the Northwestern Ohio Normal. He thus acquired a good practical education.

Mr. Bickel began life for himself as a farmer upon reaching manhood and this line has continued to claim his attention to the present time with ever-increasing success. While working his father's land as a boy he used his observing powers and thereby acquired a definite knowledge of the various phases of husbandry. He worked the homestead for some time on the shares, and when he married he purchased his present home near Union City, Indiana where he came when a young man from Darke county, Ohio. He now owns eighty acres of well improved and valuable land where he carries on diversified farming and stock raising, and on which stand a cozy dwelling and good buildings in general. He operates one hundred and twenty acres. He keeps large numbers of live stock, making a specialty of raising and fattening one hundred or more annually, hogs for the market, and no small portion of his income is derived from this source.

Mr. Bickel was married October 5, 1887 to Florence A. Cole, a daughter of Edmund and Eliza Cole, of Darke county, Ohio. Mr. Cole died about 1889, after a successful life as a farmer. Mrs. Cole survives and is now advanced in years. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Bickel has been without issue.

Politically, Mr. Bickel is a Republican. In 1910 he was appointed ditch commissioner of Randolph county which office he still holds, discharging its duties in a manner entirely acceptable to all concerned. In religious matters he is a member of the Christian church.

FRANCIS FRAZIER.

The history of Randolph county reveals the handiwork of many a great and noble soul who wrought heroically and unselfishly. Her smiling fields and splendid homes, her high-grade institutions, her happy, prosperous people speak volumes of someone's steadfastness of purpose, of someone's strength of arm, courage of heart, activity of brain—of someone's sacrifice. But time, that grim obliterator, before whose destroying fingers the stubborn granite must, in the end succumb, is ever at his work of disintegration. Beneath his blighting touch even memory fails, and too often a life of glorious achievement is forgotten in a day. Lest we forget, then, this tribute to the Fraziers, one of our very earliest pioneer families, is paid. It is the desire of the biographer, as it must be of all who know the family, that their deeds and characters be recorded for the benefit of those who follow. One of the well-known members is Francis Frazier, for a long lapse of years a popular blacksmith of Wayne township. By no means rich, as mere worldly possessions are estimated, he is rich in a thousand thronging memories of the rugged days of his boyhood, which were spent in a pioneer environment in this locality.

Mr. Frazier was born in Randolph county March 7, 1842. He is a son of Francis Frazier, Sr., who was born February 16, 1802, in Guilford county, North Carolina, and there he spent his boyhood, removing with his father to Clinton county, Ohio, in 1811. They remained there until 1817, when they removed to Randolph county, Indiana, finding here a vast wilderness where settlers were very few. They settled east of the present village of Lynn on one hundred and sixty acres which was entered from the government. The land was cleared and improved by our subject's father, and here he farmed and engaged in blacksmithing, maintaining a shop on his farm. He did all kinds of blacksmithing, but made a specialty of bell making, also made pocket knives and razors, some of the latter being still in use. His first home was a hut in the woods. He had a pile of logs ready to erect a more substantial log house when a band of Indians camped near them one night, built a camp-fire near them, and when the smoke and fire was seen by Mr. Frazier he began to investigate, and explained to the Indians, who understood English, that the logs were for the purpose of building a house, the red men moved further away and established their camp, and he observed that they prepared their suppers by cooking wild turkey and squirrels without dressing them. Mr. Frazier prospered on his farm here and spent the rest of his life engaged in farming and blacksmithing, dying in 1883. He married Letitia Clearwater, a daughter of Jacob Clearwater. Her death occurred in August, 1891. Our subject's grandfather, James Frazier, was born in 1772 in North Carolina. He married Susanna Stanley, who was born in North Carolina in 1767. His death occurred in 1822. He was also a blacksmith and bell maker by trade. His father was also a blacksmith.

Francis Frazier, our subject, was reared in his native community and received a common school education, his first school being in an old log house. He began life as a farmer, later learning the blacksmith's trade, an adaptation for which was inherited through several generations before him, and in a short time he became expert, and he continued to ply the forge with much success for a period of twenty-five years. He had four brothers, who also followed the blacksmith's trade, and his son, Hugh, is a blacksmith, with a finely equipped country shop and is doing an excellent business. Our subject was always regarded as one of the most skilful workmen in the county and always had all the work he could do, many of his regular customers coming from remote distances.

Mr. Frazier was married in 1861 to Sarah Whitson, whose death occurred December 17, 1862, leaving one daughter, Sarah L., and on March 3, 1864, he married Jane C. Shockney, who was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, who proved to be a true and worthy helpmeet, a fond and loving mother, living a most exemplary life. Mr. Frazier's first marriage was blessed with one child, viz.: Sarah L., who married Addison Hockett, lives at New Madison, Ohio, and they have five children, Clarence, who married Kate Miller; Carrie F. married Clarence Flater, of New Madison, Ohio;

Frank is deceased; Earl is single. Dorothy is the youngest. The following children were of our subject's second marriage: John, who married Rosa Jenkins, lives in Blackford county, Indiana, near Hartford City, and they have eight children, Edith, Raymond, Gould Frazier, who married Maud Robins, has two children, Francis and Elizabeth; Homer, George, Ruth, Esther, Mary; Neomi, Eunice, Hannah is deceased; Jesse married Lizzie Hassher, and they have five children, Cecil, Mary M., Catherine and Martha E. Hugh Frazier married Cora Johnston, and they have four children, Francis Leroy, Charles H., Ralph and Harry James. Martha married Charles Welch, of near Spartanburg, and they have eight children, Florence V., Paul, Esther, Ruth C., Edna, Bertha A., Myrtle and Donald E.; Mary J. married John Hinshaw, and they have two children, Miriam C. and Everett F. James A. Frazier being the youngest of the family. The children of the subject of this sketch received good educational advantages in the schools of Wayne township and the Winchester high school. James later attended the Normal at Muncie, also Valparaiso University, and has followed teaching for seven years, being at this writing principal of No. 10 school, near Union City.

WILLIAM H. WARREN.

The Warren family has long been one of the best known and classed among the most industrious in Jackson township, Randolph county, a very creditable representative of the present generation being William H. Warren, who was born and reared here and who has spent his life at home, and he has done what he could to develop and advertise to the world the wonderful resources of a county that now occupies a proud position among the most progressive and enlightened sections of Indiana.

The date of Mr. Warren's birth was January 1, 1857. He is a son of Dolphin Warren, who was born in North Carolina and there he spent his boyhood years, removing, when a young man, with his parents to Hollinsburg, Ohio, where he commenced the trade of brick mason at which he worked for two years. At twenty years of age he owned a horse and cow and had eighty dollars in money. He purchased some land at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, the farm where his son, William H. Warren of this review, now lives, having decided to take up his permanent abode in Randolph county, Indiana, and he eventually became one of the leading farmers of Jackson township. This land was all timbered. Here he erected a primitive log cabin, with rude furnishings, the cabin having no floor and the cracks between the logs served for windows, and openings for doors, over which blankets were hung to keep out the cold. Here he worked and struggled, his good wife assisting in clearing and getting the land seeded for crops, and here they reared their eleven children and eventually prospered. All the children are still living but three. Dolphin Warren lived to be nearly eighty-nine years of age. He was always robust and appeared much younger than he really was. He owned at one time nine hundred and sixty acres of good land, all in one body. He managed well and was far-seeing, and eventually became one of the substantial men of his township. He took great pleasure in his home and his family. He was constantly at work, always delighting in being busy. Politically, he was a Republican, and the only one of this party's adherents in the family. He was a faithful member of the Christian church. His death occurred in 1904. His wife, Nancy L. Taylor, died in 1902. The paternal grandfather, James Madison Warren, spent his earlier years in North Carolina and the latter part of his life in Ohio, he too, reaching the advanced age of eighty-nine years. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. He and his wife both died when the subject of this sketch was young.

William H. Warren grew to manhood on the home farm and there he did his share of the work when a boy. He received his education in the rural schools of his community, and when but a boy took up general farming which he has continued to follow to the present time, with very gratifying results. When twenty-one years of age he began renting land of his father, working thus for five years when he bought seventy acres, and in 1905 he purchased the old homestead where he now lives, his place consisting of one hundred and forty-nine acres, in which he takes a great pride and has brought it up to a high state of improvement and cultivation. The house was built in 1859 and, having been kept well repaired is yet in splendid condition. He carries on general farming and stock raising, keeping a good grade of livestock. He has served his locality as road supervisor for more than twenty years. Politically, he is a Republican, and he belongs to the Methodist church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Warren was married in 1878 to Elizabeth J. Girton, who was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, June 27, 1861, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Levi P. Girton, a soldier in the Civil war, who served under Gen. Sherman and was on the memorable march to the sea. He was a private in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-first Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was honorably discharged August 31, 1865 at Greensboro, North Carolina. He was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, Indiana in 1835, and was of one of our pioneer families. His death occurred in 1890.

To Mr. and Mrs. Warren the following children were born: Daisy, born December 12, 1879, married Eli Puterbaugh, a farmer of Jay county, and this union has been without issue; Dora, born December 6, 1881, married Wesley Miller, a farmer, also of Jay county, and to them five children have been born, Tressie, Vera Myrtle, Ralph, Dale, deceased, and Iva Elizabeth; Edward, born July 3, 1884, married Retta Fowler; he is engaged in farming in Jackson township, and they have two children, Bessie and Arthur. William Warren was born September 6, 1889, married Mamie Whitesell, and to them two children have been born, Kenneth William and Elva Elizabeth; Myrtle, born January 31, 1893, married Willie Lewis, of Jackson township and they have one child, Hanly Berlin; Wesley A., born January 1, 1898, was recently graduated from the local high school and he is at home with his parents.

Mr. Warren, of this sketch, has been a delegate to the state political conventions of his party a number of times and has always made his influence felt for the good of his party and the locality where he lives, also a delegate to the county conventions for the past twenty years and is one of the Republican leaders in Randolph county.

LEROY EMRICK.

This is often called the age of electricity and it could be no better named, for all contemplative minds will agree that this subtle, inscrutable, indefinable substance, or force, or whatever it is, (not even the great Edison or Tesla knows) has done more toward changing our present modes of life than anything else during the past half century, and it is not within any seer's horoscope to predict what will yet be accomplished in this fascinating field. It is a vocation rich in possibilities, surprises and wonders, a field wherein its devotees may keep on going without ever gaining so much as a glimpse of the goal. The young man who takes up the study of electricity and is persistent will always be insured of a good livelihood, his services will be in great and constant demand wherever he may care to work. It is about the only vocation that is not overcrowded. Many enter it, true enough, but only a few make anything more than a mediocre success, the others drifting along or falling out of the ranks entirely. LeRoy Emrick, who is engaged in the electrical business in the town of Lynn, Randolph county, is a young man who will doubtless be heard from in this great field, for he seems to have inherited the attributes necessary to succeed in this line, besides being greatly enamored of his work, a close observer and a deep student in all that pertains to the same.

Mr. Emrick was born in Darke county, Ohio, April 3, 1892. He is a son of Orphus and Isaphene (Sarver) Emrick. The father is also a native of Darke county, Ohio, his birth having occurred there on September 9, 1868. He is a son of William and Susanna Emrick. Orphus Emrick grew to manhood in his native county in the Buckeye state and there received a common school education. He remained there engaged in carpentering and farming until 1906 when he removed to Randolph county, Indiana and located in Washington township where he continued general farming until 1912 when he moved just west of Lynn on a seven acre tract where he is engaged in gardening at this writing, also follows carpentering, being regarded as an exceptionally skilled workman. Politically, he is a Democrat, and in religious matters he belongs to the German Lutheran church. He also belongs to the Jr. O. U. A. M. He and Isaphene Sarver were married in Darke county, Ohio, in 1891. She was born in that county March 6, 1872, and there grew to womanhood and received her education. To Orphus Emrick and wife four children have been born, namely: LeRoy, of this sketch; Carl is at home with his parents; Fern is deceased; Hazel is at home.

LeRoy Emrick received a good common school education, and between terms he worked with his father on the farm. Having a bent toward electricity he took the electrical course provided by the International Correspondence School, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, and made rapid progress with it, graduating from the same in 1911. He at once began working in Winchester for a Lighting Company located in Winchester. The work was between Winchester and Lynn, Indiana, and in Lynn, remaining there a year and getting much practical experience the meanwhile. In 1912 he came to Lynn and opened an electrical shop which he has disposed of and is now working as a substation operator for the Commonwealth Edison Company of Chicago, Illinois, one of the largest central stations in the United States, having fifty-six substations and four generating plants. This company supplies electricity for light and power to nearly all of Chicago.

Mr. Emrick is a Democrat, a member of the Christian church, and fraternally belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Encampment. He is unmarried.

JAMES W. HINDSLEY.

It is the progressive, wide-awake man of affairs who makes the real history of a community, and his influence as a potential factor of the body politic is difficult to estimate. The examples such men furnish of patient purpose and steadfast integrity strongly illustrate what is in the power of each to accomplish, and there is always a full measure of satisfaction of adverting, even in a casual way, to their achievements in advancing the interests of their fellow-men and in giving strength and solidity to the institutions which tell so much for the prosperity of the community. A man of this type is James W. Hindsley, one of the leading citizens of Jackson township, Randolph county and worthy representative of a splendid old family.

Mr. Hindsley was born where he now lives, on the old home place, in the above named township and county, August 14, 1860. He is a son of Stephen Hindsley who was born in Chowan county, North Carolina, August 20, 1818. He was a son of John Hindsley, who was born in Maryland, January 17, 1767. He married Hannah Stone, March 8, 1807. She was born in North Carolina. March 8, 1788, and died September 6, 1866, her husband preceding her to the grave August 16. 1847. Stephen Hindsley moved from North Carolina to Tennessee with his parents in 1823, but remained in the latter state only one year, then removing to Darke county, Ohio where he grew to manhood and married Anna McConnell, March 7, 1841. To this union ten children were born, an equal number of sons and daughters, namely: Sarah A., born January 19, 1842, married Wesley Johnson, and they had six children; Malinda is deceased; Thomas W., Bertha, Joseph and William were twins; Alfretta resides in Union City, Indiana; Joseph G., a farmer of Jackson township, born April 28, 1843, married Mary C. Musselman, and to them two children were born, Jannetta and Eva; Malinda, born August 23, 1844, married Absalom Mangas, and to them three children have been born, Edward C., Marshall O. and Charles E.; Rufus G., born February 21, 1847, married Malinda A. Noffsinger, and they have six children, Alva C., O. L., Minnie, Audessa, Almeda and Esther; John W. born July 6, 1849, married Martha J. Johnson, and they have two children living, Daisy and Jessie; Mary E., born December 8, 1851, died in September, 1853; George M., born March 23, 1854, married Caroline E. Warren, and they have two children, Cora and Alfa; Melissa J., born September 10, 1856, married E. W. McFarland, and they have two children, Olive and Pearl; Annetta, born October 23, 1858, died July 15, 1882; James W., of this sketch, is the youngest of the family. The father was always a farmer and stock raiser and successful in his life work and a highly respected citizen.

MR. AND MRS. JAS. W. HINDSLEY.

James W. Hindsley grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools of Jackson township. When twenty-two years old he began life for himself and has followed general farming ever since. At the outset he built a small dwelling which he still keeps in good repair, but in 1913 he erected a more commodious and modern residence, and he also owns the old family home, built in 1848 by his father. He esteems it above all the others and takes a delight in keeping it well repaired. It is the house in which he was born. He has prospered with advancing years and at one time owned two hundred and forty acres of good land. He has made homes for each of his children as soon as they married, selling each of the three forty acres of land at a price low enough to enable them to have a good start in life. Our subject now owns one hundred and twenty acres of well kept and very productive land.

Politically, Mr. Hindsley is a Democrat and is active in local public affairs. He served four years on the advisory board and was one of the first in assisting to establish a high school in Jackson township, and although there was considerable opposition he together with other progressive citizens carried the project through. Now everybody is much pleased with the result, seeing the good of the institution. Mr. Hindsley has frequently been solicited to become a candidate for various offices within the gift of the people, but had steadily declined, preferring to devote his attention to his home and farm. However, he was finally prevailed upon to become a candidate for county commissioner in 1914. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious matters belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Hindsley was married September 28, 1882, to Fidela Byrum, known to her friends and acquaintances as "Della." She was born in Jackson township, Randolph county, March 15, 1863, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Frank and Mary Byrum, for many years farmers of this township. The death of the father occurred when Mrs. Hindsley was thirteen years old. The mother is still living.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hindsley the following children have been born: Edith A., born in June, 1883, married Volney D. Strader, a farmer, and they have one child, Doris Louise, born September 11, 1907; Cecil M., born January 12, 1885, was graduated from Marion Normal College, after which she taught school five years, then married Robert R. Kemp, and they have three children, Thetis, born February 20, 1907; James B., born August 7, 1909; Roger, born August 14, 1912. Mr. Kemp was educated in the public schools and the Marion Normal School, and has taught school for many terms, also engaged in farming. Glen G., third child of our subject, was born September 1, 1886, was educated in the common schools of Jackson township as were also his sisters, and he later studied at the Marion Normal and the State Normal at Terre Haute, and he specialized in science and commercial law and was graduated; he married Carrie O. Lynn, and they have one child, Phillip W., born May 1, 1913. Glen G. Hindsley is in the rural mail delivery service out of Union City.

JOHN HENRY JONES.

One of the most progressive and painstaking agriculturists of Washington township, Randolph county, is John Henry Jones, who is a worthy representative of the great middle class of Anglo-Saxons from which the true noblemen of our republic spring; for it is a fact patent to all of a contemplative mind that those who belong to the respectable middle class of society, being early taught to rely upon themselves, will be more able to discharge the duties of citizenship in a commendable manner.

Mr. Jones was born in Owen county, Indiana, April 13, 1848. He is a son of Warren and Sarah (Stauffer) Jones. The father was born in Wayne county, Indiana, and was a son of Edmond and Ruth Jones. Edmond Jones was a native of Virginia, from which state he emigrated to Indiana in an early day and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in Wayne county, which he cleared and made a good farm of and there he spent the rest of his life. He was a man of influence in his community and served as justice of the peace for many years. Warren Jones grew to manhood amid pioneer environment and worked hard when a boy. When a young man he went to Owen county, Indiana, and purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land, which he farmed eight years, then removed to Randolph county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres three miles south of Winchester. Here he prospered, adding to his original purchase until he owned a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres, which he farmed on an extensive scale until, accumulating a competency, he retired from active life, moving near Sallsbury, where he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1902. Politically, he was a Democrat, and in religious matters a Baptist. His widow survived until 1908.

John H. Jones, of this review, grew to manhood on the home farm, where he did his full share of the work when a boy and he received his education in the public schools. He began life for himself by teaching school in Randolph and Wayne counties, which he continued with success until 1880, when he took up farming, which occupation he has since followed. He is now owner of a valuable and productive farm of one hundred and eight acres, where he carries on general farming and stock raising, specializing in hogs which he fattens for the market, shipping from his place about six hundred dollars' worth annually, and no small portion of his income is derived from this source.

Politically, Mr. Jones is a Democrat, but has never been especially active in public affairs. He is a member of the Friends church, and, fraternally, belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Jones married Ella Helton in 1872. She was a native of Randolph county, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. Her death occurred in 1878, leaving three children, namely: Clement L. lives near New Paris, Ohio; John E. makes his home in California; and Eliza F. is in the state of Nevada. Mr. Jones was married a second time on September 15, 1882, his last wife being Mary C. Shank, a native of Wayne county, Indiana. To this union ten children have been born, named as follows: Ina M., wife of Omar Platt; Estella, wife of Fred Moore; James T. lives in Greenville, Ohio; Homer V. lives in Muncie, Indiana; Herbert T. lives in Lafayette, and Lester also is in that city at this writing attending Purdue University; John Paul, Florence, Everett and Ernest are all at home.

NOAH F. SMILEY.

Realizing at the outset of his career that success never comes to those who dream and wait beside the busy arena of life, Noah F. Smiley, farmer of Jackson township, Randolph county, and formerly one of our popular teachers, did not attempt to evade the responsibilities of life, but set about equipping himself in the best manner possible for the struggle, and, persevering, not infrequently in the face of obstacles that would have daunted one of less seasoned fiber, he has succeeded and is today very comfortably situated and has won an honored position among his neighbors and acquaintances, for, while laboring for his own advancement he has also tried to encourage others, believing, with the inspired writer of old, "that man liveth not for himself alone."

Mr. Smiley was born in Ward township, this county, December 13, 1876, and has been contented to remain in his native locality. He is a son of John Smiley, who was born in Botetourt county, Virginia, March 1, 1824, and grandson of Walter and Susan Smiley, also of Virginia. His father received his education in a subscription school, taught in a log cabin and came to this county in 1841, and settled in the woods; was married September 10, 1857, to Miss Louisa Bragg, who was born February 9, 1836, daughter of Ephraim Bragg, an early settler of this county; he died in Ward township June 15, 1886, and Louisa, his wife, died February 18, 1901.

Mr. Smiley grew to manhood in his native township and he received his education in the common schools and in the State Normal at Terre Haute, Indiana. He prepared himself for a teacher's career and after leaving school began teaching at the age of twenty-five years. He had, however, followed farming previously. He continued teaching for a period of seven years in the public schools of Randolph county, giving eminent satisfaction, and his services were in great demand, for he was a thorough and entertaining instructor, and did much to build up the local schools. Finally tiring of the school room he returned to the farm, which has claimed his attention ever since. In the spring of 1904 he purchased eight acres, where he now resides in Jackson township. He works this and also rents land from year to year and is making a comfortable living by his industry and good management. He has a cozy home and keeps good live stock. Politically, he is a Democrat, and, religiously, belongs to the United Brethren church.

Mr. Smiley was married August 14, 1904, to Lucy L. Cultice, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, January 18, 1885. She is a daughter of John Cultice, of that county. However, he was born in Virginia and after marriage moved to Darke county, Ohio. Here Mrs. Smiley grew to womanhood and received a good common school education, after which she attended school at Dayton, Virginia.

To Mr. and Mrs. Smiley four children have been born, namely: Beulah L., born May 23, 1905; Lowell E., born December 19, 1906; Dale A., born October 13, 1910; and Merrit E., born August 27, 1913.

EZRA NOFFSINGER.

It is a well attested maxim that the greatness of the state lies not in the machinery of government or even in its institutions, but in the sterling qualities of its individual citizens in their capacity of high and unselfish effort and their devotion to the public good. To this class belongs Ezra Noffsinger, one of the well known farmers of Jackson township, Randolph county. He has always been actuated by the highest motives and the most lofty principles. He is a scion of one of our honored pioneer families, the name Noffsinger having been a familiar one in this locality since the early days of its settlement.

Mr. Noffsinger was born in the above named, township and county,

EZRA NOFFSINGER AND FAMILY.

February 2, 1859. He is a son of Joel Noffsinger, who was born in Middletown, Indiana, December 13, 1823, but who grew to manhood in Montgomery county, Ohio, remaining there until 1848 when he removed to Randolph county, Indiana, and settled in Wayne township on a farm. When twenty-one years old he made a trip on foot from Montgomery county to Darke county, leaving his home about five miles north of Dayton at sunrise and coming within three miles of Union City by sunset, there being at that time but one dwelling, a log hut on the present site of Union City and all around was the great woods. Here he purchased eighty acres of timbered land for four hundred dollars, the latter being known as the Dan Clapp farm, west of Union City, near the Creek. It was about 1853 that he purchased the old homestead now owned by the subject of this sketch, and on this he spent the remainder of his life, clearing and improving the same. The mother of our subject was Mary Johnson. She married Mr. Noffsinger about 1853 and to them six children were born, namely: Saloma, Mary, Rebecca, Ezra, Jacob and Eli W. The death of the father occurred here October 16, 1901, at the age of seventy-eight years, and was buried in the old church yard nearby. The death of the mother occurred in February, 1903, and they both rest in the Dunkard cemetary near where they spent the major portion of their honest, industrious and useful lives. Eli Noffsinger, the paternal grandfather, was born in Montgomery county, Ohio, and he came to Indiana in 1848, with his family. He was a practicing physician of the old school, but carried on farming also. Later he moved to Illinois and died there at the age of eighty-four years. His wife, Mary Pressle, also died in that state at the age of seventy-four years.

Ezra Noffsinger grew up on the home farm and was educated in the common schools of Jackson township, and he has always devoted his life to general farming, owning now the homestead of eighty acres which he has kept well improved and well cultivated. He takes an interest in local affairs and has done much for the general good of his township. He has been an elder in the church of the Brethern for several years. He votes independently in politics.

Mr. Noffsinger was married May 1, 1884 to Dora D. Isenhower, who was born in October, 1866. To this union was born, Grace, whose birth occurred January 1, 1887; she married Charles Stocksdale, March 24, 1906, and they have these children, Theodore, Grant, Emerson, Ezra and Larkin; they reside in Darke county, Ohio, Mr. Stocksdale being a teacher in the public schools of Washington township, is also a minister in the church of the Brethern. Roy D., second child of our subject, was born October 30, 1890, married Hazel Brown, March 22, 1911, and they have two children, Robert E., and Elizabeth; Mary E., born April 22, 1892 is single; Ruth, born September 20, 1894, is also unmarried. Mrs. Noffsinger, mother of the above named children, died March 30, 1902, and Mr. Noffsinger was married a second time, his last wife being Amanda E. Brumbaugh, whom he espoused on February 12, 1908. She was born July 4, 1868. She is a daughter of John R. Brumbaugh, whose death occurred September 5, 1902 at the age of seventy-two years, after a successful life as a farmer. Mrs. Noffsinger's mother was Nancy J. Heckman, whose death occurred November 5, 1909 at the advanced age of seventy-two years.

GEORGE W. WARNER.

Old age should be pleasant to such a man as George W. Warner, of Union City, Randolph county, for his life has been rightly lived and through his industry and good management he has laid by a comfortable competency to insure his declining years from want. He spent the major portion of his life engaged in general farming and stock raising. He is one of our honored veterans of the great Civil war. Mr. Warner was born in Carroll county, Maryland, March 13, 1842. He is a son of Elias and Mary Ann (Morningstar) Warner. The father was a wheelwright by trade and died many years ago, as did also the mother, in the early seventies.

George W. Warner spent his earlier years in the old Oriole state, and there he received a common school education. When twelve years old his father put him on the farm. He earned his way from boyhood and is a purely self-made man. He was an indefatigable worker and was successful as a general farmer from the start, each succeeding year finding him further advanced, until he is now owner of three well improved, productive and valuable farms. He formerly operated them on an extensive scale, raising and marketing annually large numbers of live stock, but he is now living retired from the active duties of life, enjoying the comforts of his commodious home in town. All his property was earned solely by himself with no assistance save that by his good wife.

Mr. Warner enlisted for service in the Union army in 1864, in Company B, Forty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and went immediately to the front. He was in many engagements, including the battle of Fort McAlester, which was taken by the Federal forces.

Mr. Warner has been twice married, first, to Albino Skidmore, a native of Darke county, Ohio. This marriage took place on August 28, 1870, and to this union the following children were born: Effie May, born August 16, 1871, married Eder Simons; they reside in Jackson township, Randolph county, and have two children, Gleamer and Glade; Elvin Warner, born December 4, 1875, married Clara Woodbury, a daughter of Samuel C. Woodbury, and they have two children, Hugh and Samuel; Maggie, born August 16, 1878, married Newton Mangus; they reside in Jackson township, Randolph county, and have two children, Claude and Stanley; Goldie married Orville Hindsley, and they have three children, Dale, Hubert and Pauline; Jesse married Ethel Isenhart, and they have three children, Kennett, Reva and an infant son.

The first wife of our subject was a daughter of Samuel C. Skidmore. She was a woman of many praiseworthy characteristics and had a host of warm friends, who deeply mourned her passing away to the Silent Land on August 8, 1903. Mr. Warner subsequently married Mrs. Carrie L. Ostergren, a lady of culture and their home is noted for hospitality and good cheer.

Mr. Warner is independent in politics, and a number of years ago he served one term as county commissioner. Religiously, he is a member of the Christian church.

JOSEPH F. HIGI.

The biographer is always glad to give a self-made man specific mention in a work of this kind, for all will agree that he who starts in life empty handed and with no assistance carves out a fortune from a resisting environment is deserving of far greater credit than the man who has influential friends to help him and has been given something on which to build his fortune. One of the men of the vicinity of Union City, Randolph county, who has forged his way from a none too favorable beginning to first rank as an agriculturist and stock man is Joseph F. Higi, who was born in Butler county, Ohio, March 18, 1861. He is a son of Fidel Higi, who was born in 1838 in Germany, and who became a soldier in the Civil war, serving throughout the conflict in the Sixteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He participated in many important campaigns and leading engagements, including the battle of Gettysburg, the greatest of the war, and although he was in the thickest of the fight, he was fortunate enough to come out only slightly wounded. He was with the army when Lee surrendered at Appomattox. He finally took up his residence in Jackson township, Randolph county, Indiana, where he has been successfully engaged in general farming. He is now residing at Union City. He married Caroline Shetzley, who is also living. Seven children were born to them, three sons and four daughters, namely: William, Stephen, Joseph F., of this sketch; Mary, Clara, Lizzie and Isabel.

Fidel Higi, the father, spent his early life in the Fatherland, and was educated there, being twenty-one years of age when he emigrated to the United States. He at once took up farming. His father served for some time as a soldier in the German army and fought against France in the wars that proved disastrous to the latter nation. He spent his life in his native land and died there many years ago.

Joseph F. Higi grew to manhood on the home farm, and he received his education in the common schools of Jackson township, Randolph county. When only eighteen years of age he began life for himself, engaging in the lumber business, which he followed for four years, during which he got a good start, then turned his attention to farming, which he has continued to the present time. He bought his first farm in 1892, consisting of forty acres. He has managed well and worked hard, adding to his original holdings from time to time, until he is now owner of three hundred and forty acres of choice farming land, where he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. He had to borrow money with which to start, but now he is one of the substantial men of the neighborhood. He has an excellent group of buildings on his farm and keeps large numbers of a good grade of live stock.

Mr. Higi was married in 1895 to Bridget Ruan, who was born near Richmond, Indiana, March 26, 1861. She is a daughter of Garrett Ruan, of Irish ancestry. He devoted his life to farming, and his death occurred in 1890.

To Mr. and Mrs. Higi the following children have been born: Elsie M., born in Jackson township, Randolph county, October 27, 1895, was educated in the local common schools, and was graduated from the Union City high school and is at this writing attending the State University at Bloomington, Indiana, where she is making a brilliant record for scholarship, keeping up her record at the head of her classes; Joseph Raymond, born in Wayne township, Randolph county, May 4, 1899, was graduated from the common schools of Union City, and is engaged in farming between school terms; Clarence, born in Wayne township, this county, March 19, 1903, is attending the common schools.

Politically, Mr. Higi is a Republican. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and is a member of St. Mary's Catholic church at Union City.

JACOB E. CONKLIN.

The Conklin family is eminently entitled to specific mention in a work of the nature of the one in hand, for the name has been an honored and influential one here since the early pioneer days. The various members of the family have played well their parts in the local drama of civilization, leading industrious, helpful and honorable lives, taking a leading part in the general upbuilding of the locality. One of the best known of the younger generation is Jacob E. Conklin, successful farmer and stock raiser of Wayne township.

Mr. Conklin was born in the above-named township and county on September 19, 1874. He is a son of Jacob Conklin, who was born in Randolph county on April 14, 1846, and was a son of Samuel and Catherine Conklin, who were among the first settlers of the county, braving the wilderness here when neighbors were few and privations and hardships many. Jacob Conklin, the father, grew up amid pioneer conditions and found plenty of hard work to do in assisting his father develop the home farm from the virgin soil. He received such education as the old-time schools of the rural districts afforded. In 1865 he married Mary A. Ingle, and to them six children were born, three of whom are still living. Mr. Conklin has devoted his life to general farming and has been very successful. He owns a valuable and well-kept farm of one hundred and forty acres three miles west of Union City. He and his wife are members of the Christian church at Harrisville. The paternal great-grandfather, Samuel Conklin, was one of the earliest settlers of Randolph county. He was a native of New Jersey, from which state he came overland to this county when it was considered on the frontier of American civilization, and here he made for himself and family a home in the great woods, when neighbors were few and far between, but he was a man of resolute determination and far-seeing traits which have ever predominated in the Conklin family, so he directed his strength and efforts with that iron will which such hardy frontiersmen usually possessed, and he cleared his land to fertile fields, a comfortable home in due time arising as a result of his efforts. This family to the present day are all people of industry and frugality and are prosperous, prominent and highly respected citizens.

The subject of this sketch has two sisters, Mrs. Melissa Jones, of Wayne township, and Mrs. Catherine Combs, of White River township, this county.

Jacob E. Conklin grew to manhood on the home farm and he assisted with the general work there when a boy. He was educated in the common schools of his community and at the Union City high school. Early in life he took up farming, which has continued to be his vocation and he has made a pronounced success as a general farmer and stock raiser. He now owns a choice and valuable farm of eighty acres in Wayne township, where is to be seen a tastily kept dwelling, substantial outbuildings and a good grade of live stock. He has every modern convenience about his home and farm and everything denotes that a gentleman of good management and thrift is in charge here. His valuable place lies just north of Harrisville.

Politically, Mr. Conklin is a Democrat, but has never aspired to the emoluments of office, although interested deeply in public matters. Religiously, he is a member of the Christian church.

Mr. Conklin was married on September 12, 1896, to Margaret E. Diehl, who was born in White River township, this county, December 28, 1878. Here she grew to womanhood and received a common school education. She is a daughter of W. R. Diehl, a substantial farmer of White River township, this county. To our subject and wife one child has been born, Bessie Mae Conklin, whose birth occurred July 23, 1913.

THE UNION CITY PUBLIC LIBRARY.

What is now known as the Union City Public Library had its inception with a society of young ladies, designated as the G. G. G.'s. This society was organized April 23, 1887, having for its object the cultivation of social amenities and the performance of benevolent works. For ten years its surplus, raised by various efforts, was distributed among the poor of the city, but with the advent of better times, a new object presented itself in the nature of establishing a foundation fund for a public library.

The efforts of the G. G. G.'s in this direction were ably seconded by the married G. G. G.'s, the Ticknor Club, the Wednesday Club, the Twentieth Century Club, the Research Club, the Bancroft Club, the Merry Nines, the Cecelian Club, the Over the Tea Cups Club, the Inseparable Club, the Rathbone Sisters, and the Merry-Go-Round Club. The movement, however, lacked organization, but an efficient director was found in Mr. Linneaus N. Hines, the superintendent of the public schools of the city. Early in the work, which he undertook vigorously, he announced a "Book Social," resulting in the donation of about three hundred and fifty volumes, which ranged from juvenile books to encyclopedia. With this as a foundation, Mr. Hines organized a public library in connection with the public schools. Miss Susan Weimer, a member of the high school, was appointed librarian, giving an hour or two daily to the care and distribution of the books.

The next step was to effect an organization of the library interests under the provisions of the statute of 1901. Accordingly, Mr. Hines prepared subscription lists for an organization as provided by the said statute. As a result, the following library board was appointed by the judge of Randolph county circuit court: Mrs. J. C. Northlane, for three years; Mr. Cyrus M. Thompson, for two years, and Mr. S. R. Bell, for one year; by the board of education, Miss Susan Hardy and Mr. George P Kennedy, each for two years; by the common council of the city, Miss Nelle Smith and Dr. William Commons, each for one year. This board met and formally organized April 10, 1902, by the election of Mr. S. R. Bell, president; Mrs. J. C. Northlane, vice-president; and Mr. Cyrus M. Thompson, secretary, the city treasurer being by law the treasurer of the board.

The board procured two rooms in the Wallace building, situated in the business part of the city, and at the close of the school year of 1901-1902, moved to the new quarters the books heretofore accumulated. Miss Lizzie Ruby was installed as the first librarian.

In June, 1903, Miss Susan Weimer was chosen librarian. The library rooms were furnished with the money raised by the G. G. G's. Books and magazines were purchased or donated by interested citizens and various literary and social clubs of the city, until the library approximately contained seven hundred and fifty volumes, besides the magazines.

The rapid growth of the library soon demanded larger and permanent quarters. Mr. James Moorman had previously donated to the city four lots, centrally located, forming a square of about one hundred and eighty-five feet, to be used as a public park and as a site for a public library building. With this in view, Mr. L. N. Hines solicited Mr. Andrew Carnegie for funds for a library, and in December, 1903, the common council of the city accepted his proposition to furnish ten thousand dollars, with the usual conditions, for the erection of a public library building on the above-mentioned site. The following were the members of the building committee: Mr. C. S. Hook, president; Mr. George P. Kennedy, secretary; Mr. S. H. Dunn, treasurer; Mr. L. C. Huesmann; Mr. G. Adolph Rosenbush (mayor); Mr. L. N. Hines, superintendent of schools); Mr. C. M. Thompson; and Mr. Frank Fletcher (members of the city council); and Mr. Theodore Shockney (president of the school board). J. M. Steele was the contractor and Wright & Duncan, of Muncie, Indiana, were the architects..

The building was completed and formally opened in June, 1905. From that time until the present, the interest has been such, that not only the city and public organizations, but also private citizens, have vied with one another in efforts to make complete the public library and its surroundings. The grounds have been beautified by many donations, among which was an artistic fountain. The building, too, has been furnished and completed in the same way in a most modern manner. In fact, the prevailing interest of Union City and its citizens in the public library makes it a most efficient intellectual and social center.

The splendid work of librarianship was continued by Miss Mina Harris and the present librarian, Miss Jessie Kerr, who is assisted by Miss Nelle Carter. Today the Union City library contains the best periodicals and magazines and approximately five thousand volumes of the world's best books, covering almost every subject of literature, science, invention, travel, adventure and so forth. Donations of books have been made frequently, not least of which has been the Catholic Encyclopedia, through the efforts of the Newman club.

The recent death of Mr. S. R. Bell, who ably served as president of the board from the time of its organization, caused a reorganization. The following is the present board of the Union City Public Library: Dr. Granville Reynard, president; Miss Susan Hardy, vice-president; Mr. Cyrus M. Thompson, secretary and treasurer. Mrs. Frank Parker, Miss Lena Brady, Mr. George P Kennedy and Mr. James Hook.

ISRAEL J. LORTON.

It is not every one who can make a success of stock raising, and the breeding of high-grade livestock, any kind of domestic animals or fowls, if a success, requires an infinite amount of care, much patience, wide research and close study. But the ultimate amount of good which those accomplish who specialize in this field of endeavor is indeed incalculable. Among those of Randolph county who make a specialty of raising fine live stock for the market is Israel J. Lorton, of Jackson township, whose reputation as a stock man has penetrated to remote sections of the country.

Mr. Lorton was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, September 21, 1870. He is a son of John Lorton, who was born in Jackson township, this county, October 16, 1841, spent his life here successfully engaged in farming, and died on July 19, 1911. His wife, Marguette Elwell, was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, and her death occurred in April, 1872. Two children were born to these parents, Israel J. Lorton, of this sketch, and Joseph, who died in infancy. His paternal grandfather, Israel Lorton, was a native of Virginia, from which state he finally came west, and his death occurred in Jackson township, Randolph county in 1858, after a life spent on the farm. His wife, Sarah Heckman, also a native of Virginia, came to Clark county, Ohio, with her parents when she was five years old. She possessed a remarkable memory and could relate many an interesting story of the Indians and early-day customs and events. Her death occurred in 1906 at the unusual age of ninety-eight years, and she retained her faculties until within a short time of the end.

Israel J. Lorton grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools of his locality, and when only eighteen years of age he commenced farming for himself, renting land on the shares, and thereby got a good start. In 1903 he bought a forty acre farm which was the property of William Sutton, the grandfather of our subject's wife, the latter inheriting forty acres, of the old Sutton homestead, owned by her father. Thus our subject has a nice eighty acre farm, all once owned by the Suttons. Fanny Alberta Sutton, whom Mr. Lorton married November 24, 1894, was born December 28, 1875 in Jackson township, this county and here she was reared and grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools. She was the only child of Robert Sutton who was born in England, where he spent his earlier years, finally emigrating to the United States, located on a farm in Jackson township, in 1855. He is now living retired in Jay county, Indiana. His wife, Lavina Fought, died January 10, 1888.

Israel J. Lorton and wife are the parents of two children, Cloy R., born September 25, 1895, is a graduate of the Jackson high school; Audry F., born December 4, 1900, is in his seventh grade in school; both are making excellent records as students.

Mr. Lorton makes a specialty of raising, in connection with general farming, Duroc-Jersey hogs, being the owner of some of the finest of this breed in the state of Indiana, and is the second largest private salesman in the state. He is an exceptionally good judge of hogs, and his fine stock has taken many blue ribbons at the state fairs. He is constantly improving his drove. His prices are never exhorbitant, and he finds a very ready market for all he offers for sale, and satisfaction is given his customers in every way, and they all highly recommend his fine stock and praise his honest and straightforward dealings. Mrs. Lorton is a breeder of White Minorcas and has taken several blue ribbons with her fine poultry on both cockerels and pullets at the Indiana Poultry show at Indianapolis and at other places in the state and at Chicago.

She is vice-president of the White Minorca Club of the state of Indiana. She ships both stock and eggs in season to all parts of the country, there being a great demand for both, owing to her superior breed of fowls. Her customers are to be found all the way from Minnesota to New York. Each customer invariably sends additional orders, showing that they are well satisfied with the results. She is well informed on raising fancy poultry.

Politically, Mr. Lorton is a Democrat and he is a member of the advisory board of Jackson township. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

ISAAC F. BEESON.

Randolph county can boast of no more progressive and successful stock breeders and agriculturists than the well-known gentleman whose name furnishes the caption of this article. He is known as one of the best judges and handlers of horses and other live stock in northeastern Indiana, and as a citizen is intelligent and enterprising, combining within himself those sterling qualities of manhood that make not only a useful member of society, but a leader in whatever he undertakes. He has ever had an honest determination of purpose and an obliging nature which has frequently impelled him to assist others on the highway of life while making plain the path of prosperity for himself and family. Mr. Beeson is a public-spirited man and has not withheld his aid from any worthy movement having for its object the advancement of his community in any way.

Isaac F. Beeson, of Losantville, Randolph county, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, August 13, 1866. He is a son of Benjamin B. and Olinda (Lamb) Beeson, and was the eldest of four children, the other three being Mary, who married J. C. Taylor, a farmer of Wayne county, has borne her husband six children, an equal number of sons and daughters; Edward O. and Frederick L., twins; the former, who is engaged in farming and sawmilling in Wayne county, married Lena Waltz, and they have one son and one daughter; Frederick L., who is farming in Randolph county, married Laura Davis, and they have seven sons and two daughters. The father of the above-named children was born in Wayne county, Indiana, March 17, 1843, and there he grew to manhood, was educated in the district schools, devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising, became a large land holder and one of the prosperous farmers of his locality. At one time he owned seven hundred acres of valuable land. He often bought, improved and sold farms. His death occurred on the old homestead in his native county, January 2, 1901. His father, Isaac W. Beeson, came from North Carolina, where the family had long resided. Two brothers of this name emigrated to the United States with William Penn, and they finally went to North Carolina and established homes. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1841, and there reared and educated, and she is still living on the old home place.

Isaac F. Beeson grew to manhood on the home farm in Wayne county, and was educated in the common schools in his community. On October 6, 1888, he married Sarah C. Huffman, of Henry county, Indiana, a daughter of Sylvester H. and Margaret (Bowman) Huffman, and was one of five children, four sons and one daughter. There were twins in both families. Mrs. Beeson received a good public school education.

To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Grace, born September 5, 1889, married Louis Bookout, who is now studying theology at Upland-Taylor University; Benjamin Paul, born February 3, 1892, was graduated from the high school at Losantville, then studied two years at Earlham College, Richmond, then was graduated from the State Normal School at Terre Haute; he has taught one term in Nettle Creek township, and for two years was principal of the school at Dalton; he married Zola Chamness, of Richmond, March 29, 1913; her father is a salesman for the Jesse French Piano Company. Margaret Beeson was born October 20, 1896, was graduated from the high school at Losantville, later taking a normal course, and she is now teaching in Nettle Creek township; Donald H., the youngest child, was born August 12, 1901.

Mr. Beeson was engaged in the grain and elevator business for a period of thirteen years at Losantville, enjoying an extensive trade, and becoming known as one of the leading grain dealers in this section of the state. He owns a valuable and well-managed farm of one hundred acres, located one-half mile southeast of Losantville, which he purchased a number of years ago, and which he has kept well-improved and on which is to be seen an attractive dwelling and large outbuildings. It was formerly known as the Bob Lumpkin farm. In connection with general farming he is extensively engaged in stock breeding, making a specialty of Percheron and Belgian horses, and Jersey cattle. His fine stock attracts much attention owing to their superior qualities, having no superiors in the county. No small part of his annual income is derived from this source.

Politically, Mr. Beeson is a Prohibitionist, and while he is pronounced in his views, he has never been very active in public affairs, having no ambition to be a political leader, and yet he readily supports all measures looking to the general improvement of his township and county.

ARTHUR R. MOORE.

Never before has there been so much interest taken in the best methods of farming and in the conditions of rural homes. The struggle to bring rural life from the present to ideal conditions is not an easy one, nor will it be speedily accomplished. Yet there are now farms and country homes which may be taken as models worth imitating, such as that of Arthur R. Moore, of near Farmland, Randolph county. In different localities the spirit of better things manifests itself in different ways. Sometimes it takes the form of increasing the fertility of the soil; at other places there is a demand for good roads; it is shown in the desire to keep better live stock, to have more attractive farmyard surroundings or to grow larger crops. It is shown in rural improvement clubs, in home economic organizations, in the consolidation of rural schools, in labor-saving appliances in the home, in making the home attractive and in a general belief that farmers are entitled to as pleasant surroundings as anyone else, and that a richer, fuller life may be better developed in the country than in any other place in the world.

Mr. Moore was born August 23, 1870, in Randolph county, Indiana, and here he was reared and educated in the common schools of his vicinity, and here he has been content to spend his life. He is a son of David W. and Catherine (Myers) Moore. The paternal grandfather, George Moore, was one of the early settlers in West River township, this county, and here he engaged in farming on a farm of one hundred and fifty-two acres until his death, on April 4, 1897. He was born in the state of Delaware in September, 1808, and was a son of David and Mary (Wilkins) Moore, natives of Ireland. His grandparents were Matthew and Sarah (McDowell) Moore, who removed from Delaware to Pennsylvania, later to Ohio, and in 1817 to Wayne county, Indiana, where David and Mary Moore spent their last days. The family were all members of the Society of Friends. George Moore's father was a blacksmith by trade. His family consisted of nine children, namely: Sarah, Mrs. Mary Commons, Mrs. Rachael Townsend, Mrs. Elizabeth Graves, Mrs. Lydia V Martin, Henry, George, Benjamin and Alexander. George Moore grew up on the home farm and when twenty-two years old he married Mary Hiatt, a daughter of Isaac and Hannah (Sulgrove) Hiatt, natives of North Carolina. The young couple located on a farm in Wayne county, where Mr. Moore followed his trade of cooper until 1839, when he came to Randolph county and purchased forty acres of land in West River township. At his father's death he received eighty acres, later buying fifty-two acres more, making one hundred and seventy-two acres. He built a split log cabin, which continued to be his home for a number of years, but, prospering, he made modern improvements in due course of time.

To George Moore and wife six children were born, namely: Mahala, William A., Mrs. Rachel Feagins, David, Mrs. Martha Cox, and Henry A. The wife and mother died in January, 1884, after which his neice, Mrs. Armeda Cougill, kept house for him, she being the daughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Wright) Moore, and the widow of B. P. Cougill. Mr. Moore and wife were members of the New Light church, and were good, honest people.

David W. Moore, father of our subject, grew to manhood in West River township, this county, just a half mile from his present home, where he was born December 13, 1839. He received the usual meager education of those early days and when a boy began farming for himself, which has continued to be his life work, remaining at home until he was twenty-eight years old, when, on September 22, 1867, he married Catherine Myers, daughter of Benvell and Eliza (Glick) Myers, who were born, reared and married in Pennsylvania. After a short residence in Ohio they located in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, Indiana. David W. Moore and wife began housekeeping on his father's farm, where they lived three years, then operated a rented farm a year. In the autumn of 1872 he purchased seventy acres of partly improved land and moved into a log house, which he later replaced with a substantial frame dwelling. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore two children were born, Arthur R., of this sketch; and Mrs. Minnie E. Gordon. The wife and mother passed to her rest March 9, 1882. She was a faithful member of the New Light church. Mr. Moore subsequently married Mrs. Mary Allison, widow of John Allison. She is a daughter of John and Catherine (Haper) Moyer, natives of Pennsylvania, who settled on a farm in this county in 1858, and reared the following children: Mrs. Martha Townsend, Mrs. Julia Stakebake, Henry, Mrs. Catherine Brewer, Mrs. Mary Moore, and two who died in early life. The death of the father occurred in 1885, and the mother died in May, 1898. John Allison was a soldier in Company G, Twelfth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, for three years. He and Mary Moyer were married December 23, 1869, and removed to Arkansas, where he lived until his death, August 1, 1877.

David W. Moore was a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting for one year in February, 1865, as a member of Company D, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Hiatt, and he was honorably discharged in August of the same year. Returning home, he took up farming, owning seventy acres of good land, which he has kept well improved and has devoted considerable time to raising horses and sheep. He is one of the directors and stockholders in the Citizens Bank at Modoc, this county. He is a member of the New Light church, as is also his wife.

Arthur R. Moore was married on March 17, 1893, to Sarah J. Stewart, who was born in Wayne county, Indiana, March 24, 1874. She is a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hardwick) Stewart. The father was born near Bellefontaine, Logan county, Ohio, and he has devoted his life to farming and mechanical work.

Seven children have been born to Arthur R. Moore and wife, namely: Mary C., born September 8, 1893, married Elmer Disinger, and they live in Union City; Paul W., born July 28, 1900, died March 28, 1901; Ethel P., born September 15, 1902; Ralph M., born July 27, 1904; Olive I., born January 27, 1905; Lewis N., born December 27, 1908; Charles L., born December 24, 1910.

Mr. Moore has always engaged in general farming and stock raising. He owns one hundred acres, which he has kept well improved and he built his own home. He makes a specialty of raising Jersey cows, Duroc hogs and general purpose horses, and is one of the successful stock raisers and general farmers of West River township. He is a stockholder and a director in the Citizens Bank at Modoc, Indiana. Politically, he is a Republican, but has never been especially active, and in religious matters he is a member of the Christian church.

JOSEPH H. THORNHILL.

This review of Joseph H. Thornhill, well-known cement contractor and builder of Winchester, Randolph county, is entitled to a place in the front, with the younger successful business men of this locality. He, by his pluck, energy and enterprise, controlled by right principles and founded upon unswerving honor, has attained to a position meriting the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Thornhill was born January 29, 1874, in Harrisville, Randolph county, Indiana. He is a son of James and Isabell (Wickersham) Thornhill. The father was born in England, of an excellent old Anglo-Saxon family.

but the major portion of his life has been spent in the United States, he having been brought to America when six years of age by his parents, the family first settling in the state of New York, later coming to Preble county, Ohio, and finally coming on to Randolph county, Indiana. James Thornhill was loyal to American institutions, as is seen from the fact that he was a soldier for the Union during the Civil war, enlisting from Preble county, Ohio, for a three-year service, during which he proved to be an excellent soldier. After the war he returned north and joined his family in Randolph county, Indiana, where he and Isabell Wickersham were later married and where their son, Joseph H., was born. Here James Thornhill became a successful general farmer and stock raiser. In 1909 he removed to Texas with his second wife, his first wife having died some years previously.

James Thornhill learned the carpenter's trade when a young man and he worked at the same a great deal in later life, and his son, Joseph H., of this sketch, learned the trade under him when a boy, finding time the meanwhile to receive a good practical education in the public schools. After working for C. A. Peacock, of Winchester, for eleven years, during which he gave eminent satisfaction and learned the various phases of the business, he became a building contractor, which he has since continued with ever-increasing success, until he is today recognized as one of the leading contractors and builders in this section of the state, and many of the most substantial and attractive business houses, public buildings and residences in Winchester and vicinity stand today as monuments to his skill and honesty as a builder. Recently he has turned his attention for the most part to cement contracting and the manufacture of all kinds of cement building blocks. He also deals in all kinds of building material. He contracts for every kind of cement construction work, making a specialty of bridge building and has erected many substantial and attractive ones for this and other counties, also the state, being regarded as an expert, reliable and thoroughly up-to-date bridge man of high standing throughout this section of the state. He has a wide reputation as a builder of cement block porches and verandas for residences.

Mr. Thornhill was married on December 23, 1897, to Nora E. Hinkle, a daughter of Mahlon P. and Nancy (Sutton) Hinkle, an honored old family of Randolph county, the father being a successful farmer of Jackson township, where he and his wife are highly esteemed by all who know them.

The union of our subject and wife has resulted in the birth of two sons, namely: Ernest A. and Kenneth M.

Mr. Thornhill is a progressive business man and devotes his attention exclusively to his large business affairs; however, he has been more or less active in public affairs. He is a member of the Masonic Order, and the Sons of Veterans. He and his wife belong to the Society of Friends, and are active in church and Sunday school work. The family home, one of the attractive residences of Winchester, is located at 616 East North streeet.

GEORGE W. HARTER.

The character of George W. Harter, of Wayne township, Randolph county, certainly needs no embellishing on the part of the biographer, for it has stood the test of a long, useful and worthy life in this vicinity, he never having cared to live elsewhere. He is a worthy scion of one of our sterling old families, none being more eligible for special mention in a work of the nature of the one in hand than the Harters.

George W. Harter was born in the above named township and county February 7, 1860. He is a son of Solomon J. Harter, who was a soldier in Company F, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he became a sergeant for meritorious conduct, serving under Col. Orrin Perry. Mr. Harter was killed at the battle of Fort Blakely April 6, 1865, a little more than a week before the close of the war. He had served the Union faithfully from 1862. He was only thirty-three years old at the time of his death. His wife was Martha Margaret Fisher, who died April 5, 1913, at the age of eighty-one years. Mr. Harter was a carpenter by trade, also followed farming, and in his early life he taught school several terms. Of his family four sons and two daughters are living, namely: Mrs. Mary J. Stidham, widow of Oscar Stidham, who died in 1884, but left no children; John H., who married Ida Hartman, is a farmer of Wayne township, but they have no children; James R., who married Sarah J. Maxwell, lives at Canyon, Texas, is a blacksmith, and has three children, Charles S., Ralph E., and Blanch Mabel; Parmelia Viella married Jonathan Bowman, a farmer near South Salem, but they have no children; Solomon F. married Rosa L. Hoffman, by whom he had two children, Earl E. and Mary Myrtle Harter who died February 8, 1904; and George W., of this sketch. The paternal grandfather, Solomon Harter at one time lived in Darke county, Ohio. The mother of our subject died when Mrs. Harter was born and was a daughter of John Fisher. Her birth occurred in Clinton county, Indiana, and when young she moved to Darke county, Ohio. Her mother was Martha McCrary, of Irish ancestry.

George W. Harter of this sketch was educated in the common schools and in early life took up farming which he continued until his marriage, then engaged in the mercantile business at Bartonia, Randolph county where he has kept a general store ever since, and has always enjoyed a good business, having a large trade with the surrounding country, and carrying a large and well selected stock of goods at all seasons, and, dealing courteously and honestly with his many customers he has retained their good will and confidence. He has been one of the directors of the Union Loan & Trust Company of Union City for two years and is also one of the stockholders in this popular bank. He purchased the old Macy homestead, containing ninety-three acres, which is well-improved and on which is to be found a good set of buildings.

Mr. Harter was married November 22, 1892 to Rose Belle Macy, who was born in Wayne township, Randolph county, October 1, 1865, and to this union one child has been born, Macy Harter, whose birth occurred October 2, 1896, and who is now in his third year in high school and is making a splendid record. Mrs. Harter grew to womanhood in this county and here received her education. She is a daughter of Jacob C. Macy, who was born May 2, 1839, and who died in September, 1882. Her mother was Mary Shreeves, born in Maryland in 1838, and died in 1882; she and Mr. Macy were married December 25, 1858. Jacob C. Macy was born on the old homestead in Wayne township, which place was entered from the government by his father, William A. Macy, who was one of the early pioneers of this locality, having come here from North Carolina in early life. He married Jemima O. Rogers in North Carolina, and they came to Indiana soon afterward. The following were Jacob C. Macy's children: Cora May, who married Morton Chenoweth, a carpenter of Omaha, Nebraska, had three children, Roy was drowned when a school boy at Greencastle, Indiana; Viola, who married Clarence Horner, lives at Lynn, Indiana and has two children; Nina Chenoweth married George Tiffany, also of Omaha, Nebraska; William A. Macy married Malinda Brumfield, and they have three children, Chester, Merle and Mary; Rose Belle, who married our subject; Elwood Macy married Olive Kunkle, of Union City, and they have four children, George, Ralph, Rhoda and Lloyd; Henry Macy married Flora Locke, and they have one child, Harold; Christine Macy married Charles Ebling, and she died in 1896; Rufus Macy married Lillian Kennon, and they have two children, John and William, twins; Lorenzo Dow Macy, the youngest child, is single.

The father of Jacob C. Macy was William A. Macy, born in Guilford county, North Carolina, November 6, 1809. His father was Obed Macy, who married Mary Armfield; his father was Paul Macy who was a son of Joseph Macy, a son of Thomas Macy, a son of John Macy, a son of Thomas

Macy, the first of the name in America of which we have direct knowledge. He married Sarah Hopcott. He was a native of England, from which country he emigrated to Nantucket, Massachusetts. He was a merchant and planter, a selectman of the town, and often held positions of honor. He was also a juryman and a preacher of the Baptist persuasion. Sarah Hopcott was born in Chilmark, England, in 1612, and died at Nantucket in 1706. William A. Macy married Jemima O. Rogers. Jacob C. Macy was born in Randolph county, Indiana, May 2, 1839, and he married Mary R. Shreeves, a daughter of Elisha and Minerva Shreeves; they were married at Union City, December 25, 1858. Thomas Macy came to America prior to 1644.

Our subject and wife were born almost on adjoining farms and played together when children, were later schoolmates, and it would seem that they made no mistake by deciding to tread the path of life together, for theirs has been a singularly happy and harmonious union, as well as mutually helpful, and they can look backward with no compunction and forward with no fear.

HENRY S. CURRY.

"Through struggle to triumph" seems to be the old-time maxim which holds sway for the majority of our citizens, and, though it is undoubtedly true that many fall exhausted in the conflict, a few, by their inherent force of character and strong mentality, rise above their environment and all which seems to hinder them until they reach the plane of affluence toward which their face was set through the long years of struggle that must necessarily precede any accomplishment of great magnitude. Such has been the history of Henry S. Curry, who, after a long, busy and useful life, is living in honorable retirement in his pleasant home at Winchester, Randolph county, having started at the bottom of the ladder and is now, when past his three-score and ten milepost, the possessor of a handsome competency and several valuable farms.

Mr. Curry was born in Dayton, Ohio, January 23, 1842. He is a son of Robert H. and Elizabeth (Summers) Curry, whose family consisted of six children. named as follows: Elizabeth, who lives in Indianapolis, married F. M. Curran, a railroad man, who died in 1911, leaving one child, Florence M.; Richard J., who was a soldier in the Civil war, was killed at the battle of Port Gibson, Mississippi; Henry S., of this review; Elmira, who remained single, is deceased; Nancy, who married Wesley Stephens, a farmer in Illi nois, is deceased; David, a farmer living in Richland county, Illinois, married a Miss Byers, and they have six children.

Robert H. Curry, father of the above-named children, was born and reared in Pennsylvania, near the city of Pittsburg, and there he was educated in the early-day schools and then went to Dayton, Ohio, where he married, after which he went to Illinois. His death occurred in 1870. His father was born in Scotland, emigrating to the United States when a young man and locating on a farm in Pennsylvania, where he spent the rest of his life. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in Virginia, and there she spent her girlhood, being sixteen years of age when her parents brought her to Dayton, Ohio. Later they moved to Winchester, Indiana, then moved to Illinois. Mrs. Curry's father was twice married, his first wife having been a native of Germany.

Robert H. Curry received his education in the common schools. On June 2, 1866, he married Nancy Wright in Winchester, Indiana, a native of Randolph county. She was a daughter of Edward Wright, whose family consisted of four daughters, all of whom survive at this writing.

To Mr. and Mrs. Curry three sons have been born, namely: David H., who operates a creamery in Winchester, married Ida N. Leslie, and they have two children, English, born March 13, 1891, and Lester, born June 2, 1892 Edward W. Curry, second son of our subject, is in the employ of the Oliver Chilled Plow Company, of South Bend, Indiana; he married Maude S. Ashville, and they have one child, Joseph G., born December 13, 1894. Simeon D. Curry, youngest son of our subject, is farming in White River township; he married Alice Rosa, and they have one child, Robert J., born April 26, 1911.

The maternal grandfather of the above-named children came from Ohio to Randolph county, Indiana, among the very first settlers, and he was well-known in Winchester and vicinity in its early history. The Currys have been noted for their piety for many generations, being strict Protestants as far back as the history of the family can be traced, and they left Scotland to escape persecution by the Catholics. Our subject attends the Christian church. Politically, he is a Democrat, but has never been specially active in public affairs. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, Lodge No. 56. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic by virtue of the fact that he was in the active service of the Union army during the Civil war, having enlisted in April, 1864, in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, proving to be a faithful soldier in defense of the flag.

Mr. Curry has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits and stock raising, and he has prospered with advancing years, until he now owns several of the best farms of Randolph county, which he rents, merely overseeing them in a general way.

JAMES B. HUMPHREYS.

The farmer has been criticised by those who know nothing of the basic principles of husbandry but who think they know its every phase since civilization began and will continue to the end of time. The delinquents we will always have with us, and likewise the frivolous, the indulgent and the enthusiast, but those who would assist the farmer must turn from them and cooperate with the bone and sinew of agriculture. Those who have no personal knowledge of agriculture appear to judge the farmer by the isolated cases of incompetency and take his frivolous achievements, consider him incapable of comprehending his own problems, and, unconscious of his possibilities, regard him as a public ward, to be assisted but not consulted. One of the broad-minded and capable farmers of Randolph county, who has succeeded all along the line, being able to meet changing conditions successfully is James B. Humphreys of West River township.

Mr. Humphreys was born in Randolph county, July 2, 1860. He is a son of George W. and Ruth Ann (Banks) Humphreys, whose family consisted of three sons, Lemuel C., the eldest; James B., of this review; and one who died in infancy. The father was born in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, and he came to Indiana when a youth, his father settling in the southeastern corner of Randolph county. George W. Humphreys spent his life here engaged in the practice of medicine and his death occurred in 1864 as a result of exposure and over work during the Civil war. The mother of our subject was born in Darke county, Ohio. Her family was from Virginia. She remained a widow for a period of eighteen years after the death of the father of our subject, her two sons growing to manhood the meantime. She finally married Martin Alexander, a farmer in Missouri, in which state she spent the balance of her life, dying in 1901.

James B. Humphreys grew up on the farm and he worked hard when a boy assisting in the support of his mother. He received a common school education. He has been twice married, first, to Emma Bowen, by whom nine children were born. His second wife, Mrs. Iva M. Helm, had one child by her first husband, and one child, Ruth, by her second husband, our subject. The following children were born to Mr. Humphreys and his first wife: Maude G., married Clarence Pittman, a rural mail carrier, and has three children; Merl G., working in a factory at Connersville, married Fanny Retz and has six children; Mabel G., a telephone operator; Minnie G., married a Mr. Johnson, butcher, at Lynn and has one child; Mary G., a bookkeeper; Mervyn G., teaching school; Squire B., in insurance business; Harry W., attending Indiana University; and Belle, attending school.

Mr. Humphreys has devoted his later life to general farming and has lived on his present farm for the past fifteen years. It is well located, consists of ninety acres and has been well kept and well tilled. He has a pleasant home and good outbuildings and a good grade of livestock is always to be seen about his place.

Mr. Humphreys is a well read man and well educated. Besides the common schools he attended the Spartanburg high school, and a business college in Indianapolis, and he began life for himself by teaching school which he followed for a period of nineteen years in different parts of Indiana, giving earnest and faithful service and ranking among the state's most progressive and popular educators. His services were in great demand. His son, Mervyn taught four years at Lynn, this county. Merl is a skilled mechanic.

Politically, Mr. Humphreys is a Republican and while he has always been deeply interested in local public affairs and has always stood ready to support any measure looking toward the general improvement of Randolph county, he has never sought to be a political leader. He is a gentleman of friendly address and is neighborly and honest in his relations with his fellow men. He has been a member of the Masonic order since 1883, and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since 1885.

NATHAN C. SIMMONS.

One of the successful, honored and deserving native sons of Randolph county is Nathan C. Simmons, well-known real estate dealer of Winchester. He has come down to us from pioneer days, and is now getting along toward his three-score and ten milestone, these long years having nearly all been spent within the borders of the county of which this history treats, and he has lived to see and take part in the great changes that have come to this locality. He is one of the gallant veterans of the greatest civil war recorded in history and for that, if for no other, is deserving of special attention by the biographer in this work.

Mr. Simmons was born in this county May 26, 1844. He is a son of James and Aveline (Hawkins) Simmons, and is one of a family of twelve children, an equal number of sons and daughters, of whom four girls and three boys survive. The paternal grandfather came here from North Carolina when our subject's father was three years old and erected his log cabin in the wilderness, cleared and developed a farm, establishing the future home of the family. Our subject is of Scotch descent, his great-grandfather having emigrated from Scotland to America at an early age. His sire was a ship builder of repute. The Hawkins family, which is descended from Sir John Hawkins, who was among the early slave dealers and a record of which extends back to the seventeenth century, came to Randolph county from Preble county, Ohio. The father of our subject grew to manhood in Randolph county and here spent his life successfully engaged in general farming and stock raising.

Nathan C. Simmons grew to manhood in his native community and he received his education in the rural schools of his day, later attending college at Ridgeville, also Liber College. On October 21, 1875, he married Malinda E. Kem, a daughter of William Kem, a farmer, who emigrated to this state from Virginia in an early day, settling in Wayne county. His family consisted of nine children. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Simmons, namely: Detroit M. is assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Winchester; he married Rosa Holdaman, of Winchester, and they had six children, Margaret, Alice, Mary and Ruth are twins, Pauline and Rosa Belle; the wife and mother died in 1913; Mattie O. lives in Winchester; Everett Earl, who is with the Central Supply Company, of Indianapolis, married twice; William C. is in the postoffice at Winchester; Bashie is secretary of the Monarch Gas Company; Icie L. is teaching in the Winchester schools; Walter C. is at this writing a student in Purdue University; Nolan V is employed in the furniture store of Thomas H. Johnson.

Early in life Mr. Simmons devoted his attention to farming, but for many years he has conducted a large real estate business in Winchester and is regarded as being one of our best posted men on the values of Randolph real estate, both farm and city. He attends the Friends church, and politically, he is a Progressive. He was at one time deputy county treasurer. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. Simmons enlisted in June, 1862, in Company F, Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. L. K. Harris. He saw much hard service, in all of which he proved to be a faithful and brave soldier for the Union. He was in nine general engagements and a number of lesser note. He was in the battles at Richmond, Kentucky, Chickasaw Bluffs, Mississippi, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Thompson's Hill, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Jackson, Mississippi; siege of Vicksburg; then was in the Red River expedition with General Banks. He was sick during the winter of 1863-64 and was in the hospital at Memphis, and was later discharged for disability and sent home, receiving an honorable discharge in April, 1864. In common with most veterans, Mr. Simmons still suffers from his exposures during the war, but he has never regretted his service to his country.

CHRISTOPHER C. BROSEY.

Christopher C. Brosey, of West River township, Randolph county, was born in Darke county, Ohio, July 27, 1864. He is a son of Noah and Mahala (Smith) Brosey, and was one of seven children, namely: Hiram, Frank, William, Lizzie, Angeline, Christopher C., and Lucy. The father of the above-named children was a farmer in Darke county, Ohio, and he removed to West River township, Randolph county, Indiana, in 1892, and purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which place is now cultivated by our subject and his brother. The death of the father occurred on October 7, 1901. Gottlieb Brosey, the paternal grandfather, was born in Germany, from which country he emigrated to the United States when a young man and settled in Maryland with the rest of his family, later coming west to Clark county, Ohio, where he established his home. The mother of the subject of this sketch was a native of Indiana and her death occurred in Ohio at the age of sixty-four years.

Christopher C. Brosey grew to manhood on the home farm, where he did his full share of the general work during crop seasons when he became of proper age, and he received his early education in the district schools. He has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising, remaining on the homestead, as related above, which he has kept well improved and well cultivated and the buildings well repaired. He is a careful and successful farmer in every respect.

Mr. Brosey has been twice married, first, to Sarah M. Gordon, by whom one child was born, Bernice May, born December 13, 1896, is a graduate of the Modoc high school. The wife and mother passed to her rest on March 28, 1904. On March 6, 1907, Mr. Brosey married Agnes Ulrich, a daughter of Daniel D. Ulrich, of Hagerstown, Wayne county, Indiana. Mrs. Brosey is one of nine sisters. She grew to womanhood in her native community and was educated in the common schools. Politically, Mr. Brosey is independent, and he and his wife attend the Methodist Episcopal church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHN B. FORTENBAUGH.

One of the leading citizens of Harrisville, Randolph county is John B. Fortenbaugh, formerly engaged in the milling business and contracting here but long since one of our best farmers. He has long been connected with public affairs in his township and has become known as one of our worthy public servants, always discharging his duties with that fidelity and earnestness that stamps the truly public-spirited man, and as a result of these commendable qualities he enjoys the esteem of all who know him. Like many of our best citizens he hails from the old Keystone state.

Mr. Fortenbaugh was born April 14, 1848 in York county, Pennsylvania. He is a son of Peter Fortenbaugh, also a native of that county and state, the date of his birth being 1839. He devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, dying at the age of seventy-four years. His wife was Elizabeth Brubaker, whose death occurred at an advanced age in 1902. Abraham Fortenbaugh, the paternal grandfather, was a resident of Pennsylvania and he died many years ago. This family is of old Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry.

John B. Fortenbaugh grew to manhood in York county, Pennsylvania and there he received his education in the common schools. He left home when seventeen years of age and began life for himself. He came to Ohio and engaged in contracting and building at Wooster, Wayne county, remaining there in that business four years, then came to Randolph county where he continued in that line of endeavor, also ran a milling business in connection with the same for four years. He made a pronounced success of both and many buildings yet stand in Wooster, Ohio and in Harrisville and vicinity as monuments to his skill and honesty as a builder.

In 1882 Mr. Fortenbaugh was elected township trustee. He performed his duties so satisfactorily that he was re-elected to the same office and served two terms. The principal part of his early life was spent in contracting. In 1894 he purchased a fine farm near Harrisville containing one hundred and twenty-five acres of choice farm land, adjacent to the village, and here he has since resided engaged successfully in general farming and stock raising. He was elected to the office of county commissioner in 1906 which office he held with his usual satisfaction for three years. At the present time he is chairman of the advisory board and a member of the county council. Politically, he is a staunch Republican. He belongs to the Christian church and fraternally is a member of the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Golden Eagle, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Fortenbaugh was married December 9, 1875 to Martha Naome

JOHN B. FORTENBAUGH.

MRS. JOHN B. FORTENBAUGH.

Whitesel, who was born in Randolph county, June 6, 1853. She was a daughter of Tobias and Mary (Shelly) Whitesel. She grew to womanhood in her native community and was educated in the public schools. She proved to be a most faithful helpmeet, and the large material success of her husband was due in no small measure to her assistance. To their union four children were born, namely: Gracie Elizabeth died in infancy; Bessie May married Solomon Ingle, a farmer of Harrisville, and they have two children, John F., and Garold C.; Blanche D. married Clyde F. Shultz; Mary Madge died when two years old.

The living daughters were educated in the common schools at Ridgeville, Bessie May finishing her education at Ridgeville College. Blanche D. finished at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana.

Mrs. Martha N. Fortenbaugh became a member of the Harrisville Christian church in December, 1877, and remained a faithful and worthy member of the same for a period of thirty-six years, or until her death which occurred on August 9, 1913 at the age of sixty years. She was well and favorably known in the community where she spent her entire life. While health permitted she was very faithful in her attendance at church and Sunday school, often coming to church when it taxed her physical powers to the limit. Her home was ever open to her neighbors and friends, and was surely the welcome retreat of the ministers of her church. During her married life it was evident to all that every sacrifice was made for the best interests of her family, their comfort and happiness being uppermost in her thoughts. Hers was a busy life, her active mind and willing hands ever finding something to do. During her last illness she was patient and long-suffering, and she faced the great Unknown with true Christian fortitude and unswerving faith.

THOMAS P. MILLER.

There is a vice in much of the publicity given to agriculture that should he eliminated. It is true, isolated cases of ignorance and indolence exist, but these instances are always the exception in any community, and the percentage of delinquents is no greater than in any other line of industry. Men who are unable to make their way in the highways of trade move from the cities to the farm and perish for want of adaptability. Agricultural missionaries, sometimes inclined to be sensational, startle the public with reports of thrilling rescues made from the furrows of ignorance. To encourage our boys we sometimes give them the garden spot of the farm and give it first preference in cultivation. The result is a larger yield, and it is heralded to the world that the child can beat his father farming. Those who are inclined to be eccentric practice fancy farming, and enthusiasts announce the discovery of visionary methods of culture that will revolutionize farming, and these instances could be multiplied indefinitely. One of the citizens of West River township, who seems to know what to accept from the current agricultural journals and general literature regarding farming and what to reject and who is making a success of general farming is Thomas P. Miller.

Mr. Miller was born in Washington township, Randolph county, December 7, 1874. He is a son of John and Margaret Jane (Porter) Miller, and was one of twelve children, four of whom are deceased, namely: Sophia is deceased; Sarah Ellen; Ida is deceased; Minnie J., Letitia, Thomas P., John, Elizabeth is deceased; the other four are Georgia E., deceased; Harry, Maud and Mabel.

The father of the above-named children was born in Donegal, Ireland, and when nine years of age he was brought to the United States, and here he grew to manhood and was educated in the common schools. It was in the year 1844 that they landed in this country, and the family established their future home in West River township, Randolph county, Indiana. The father of our subject removed to Washington township in 1861 after his marriage. He made a success as a general farmer and he is still living at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in Preble county, Ohio, and from there moved to Indiana in 1855, and she died March 22, 1878, at the age of thirty-three years.

Thomas P. Miller, of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm and was educated in the district schools. He has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising. He purchased his present finely improved and productive farm in secton 20, West River township, in 1897. It consists of one hundred acres, and on it stand well repaired and convenient buildings.

Mr. Miller was married December 19, 1896, to Martha Wadman, a daughter of T. J. Wadman, a farmer of West River township, whose family consisted of nine children, seven daughters and two sons, one son and one daughter being now deceased. Mrs. Miller was reared to womanhood in her native community and was educated in the common schools.

To Mr. and Mrs. Miller one child has been born, Nina A., whose birth occurred June 26, 1898. She is a graduate of the high school at Huntsville.

Politically, Mr. Miller is a Republican, and he attends the Methodist church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

PARKER BOGUE.

There is nothing in the world more beautiful than the spectacle of a life that has reached its autumn with a harvest of good and useful deeds. It is like the frost in October days when the leaves have borrowed the richest colors of the light and glow in the mellowed sheen of the Indian summer, reflecting in their closing days all the radiance of their earthly existence. The man who has lived a clean, useful and self-denying life and has brought into potential exercise the best energies of his mind that he might make the world brighter and better for his being a part of it, while laboring for his individual advancement, cannot fail to enjoy a serenity of soul that reveals itself in his manner and conversation. When such a life is preserved in its strength and integrity so that even in age its influence continues unabated, it challenges the added admiration of those whose good fortune it is to be brought into contact with it. Such a life has been that of Parker Bogue, long one of the substantial agriculturists of West River township, Randolph county, who is now living in honorable retirement. He has played no inconspicuous part in the affairs of the community long honored by his citizenship, for he has ever had its interests at heart, and now, when past his three-score and tenth milepost of a life that has been noted for its industry, integrity and sterling honesty, and devotion to family, church and his country he can look backward with no compunction of conscience, for misdeeds and look forward to the mystic beyond, with no fear. Such a life merits the record of its deeds, that the debt due it may be acknowledged and that it may serve as a stimulus to others to endeavor to emulate it. But his record is too familiar to the people of this locality to require any fulsome encomium here, his life work speaking for itself in stronger terms than the biographer could employ in polished periods. There is no doubt but that his long life has been due to his wholesome habits, pure living and right thinking. He is hospitable and his many acts of kindness have sprung from a charitable impulse rather than from a motive to win the plaudits of men.

Mr. Bogue was born in Wayne county, Indiana, February 26, 1841. He is a son of Josiah and Harriett S. (Peele) Bogue, and was one of five children, three sons and two daughters, namely: Martha J., who married Henry Newburn, a farmer near Centerville, Indiana, and has three children; Parker, of this review; Henry married Ella Baldwin, and they had one child; all three are now deceased, he dying at the age of twenty-five years. Sarah Ann, who died when twenty-eight years old, married Lee Huff, a minister and farmer, and a boy and girl were born to them; Josiah, a farmer and painter of Fountain City, Indiana, married Mary Christ, a native of California, and to them six children have been born. The father of our subject died when Parker Bogue was a boy. He was a shoemaker by trade. The paternal grandfather was a native of North Carolina, from which state he came to Indiana and settled in Wayne county when the country was wild and there began farming. The mother of our subject survives, having attained the unusual age of ninety-one years. She also followed shoemaking in order to feed and clothe her family of little ones and keep them together. Her ancestors were also North Carolinians. She is a fine type of the courageous, hospitable and kind pioneer woman.

Parker Bogue grew up on the farm, where he worked when a boy, and he received his education in the old-time schools. On May 1, 1872, he married Mary E. Madison, a daughter of William Madison, a farmer of Henry county, Indiana, whose family consisted of thirteen children, eight of whom lived to maturity. Eleven children have been born to our subject and wife, named as follows: Arley, who died at the age of twenty-four years, left a widow, whose maiden name was Martha Baker; Minnie M. died in infancy; Everett died at the age of twenty-eight years; Hattie J. married Fred Tanner, of Saratoga, Indiana, a farmer, and they have five children; William J., an electrician of Indianapolis, married Donna Elsberry, and they have one son; Reuben R., a cabinet-maker of Newcastle, Indiana, married Nettie Shaeffer, and they have two children; Lillie Ann is the wife of Arley Sheppard, a farmer of West River township, and they have one child; Arthur Paul, born January 9, 1888, was educated in the local schools and later was graduated from DePauw University, and is now taking up the study of medicine; Jesse Parker, born August 14, 1890, was educated in the local schools, later was graduated from DePauw University, has been preaching since he was seventeen years of age, and is an exceptionally splendid public speaker. He won the state oratorical contest of Indiana in 1913, and is regarded as a young man of much promise. Oro Charles, born September 11, 1892, also a graduate of DePauw University, is preparing himself for a teacher of mathematics; Archie Lee, born September 5, 1896, will also graduate from DePauw University.

Parker Bogue is one of our honored veterans of the Civil war, having enlisted August 20, 1861, in Company C, Eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was sworn in at Williamsburg, and he saw considerable hard service in the South, was wounded at Magnolia Hills, Mississippi, in the right shoulder, and was in the hospital three months; he was in the battle of Rea Ridge, Arkansas, the siege of Vicksburg, battles of Winchester and Cedar Creek, Virginia, after which his regiment was transferred to Savannah, Georgia, and placed on patrol duty, later moved to Augusta, Georgia. Mr. Bogue proved to be a faithful and able soldier. He was mustered out at Indianapolis in 1865.

Mr. Bogue learned the carpenter's trade in early life and this he has followed in connection with his building and farming to the present time and has been very successful in a business way. He lived in Alabama for a period of twenty-one years, where he engaged in farming and where all his children were born, except three. He is now living in retirement in his cozy home at Huntsville. Politically, he is a Prohibitionist, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church.

JOHN A. MILLS.

The history of Randolph county is not a very old one, from the viewpoint of a historian. It is the record of a steady growth of a community planted in the wilderness three-quarters of a century ago and has reached its magnitude of today without other aids than those of industry. The people who redeemed it from the primitive wilds were strong-armed, hardy sons of the soil who hesitated at no difficulty and for whom hardships had little to appall. The early pioneers, having blazed the path of civilization to this part of the state, finished their labors, and many of them have passed from the scene, leaving the country to the possession of their descendants and to others who came at a later period and builded on the foundation which they laid so broad and deep. The Mills family is of this class and its members have played no inconspicuous part in the upbuilding of Randolph county, a very creditable representative of the present generation being John A. Mills, who was born and reared here and who has spent his life in his native vicinity, having done what he could to develop and advertise to the world the wonderful resources of a section singularly favored by Mother Nature.

Mr. Mills was born in West River township July 18, 1854. He is a son of Thomas W. and Nancy (Miller) Mills. The father was born in Granger county, Tennessee, April 21, 1826, and was a son of John and Nancy (Mumbowers) Mills, the former born in North Carolina in 1796 and was a son of Hardy and Sarah Mills. He twice enlisted in the war of 1812, and served for one year under General Jackson. He devoted his life to farming, and resided in Warren county, Ohio, from 1831 until 1833, then came to West River township, Randolph county, Indiana, where he entered eighty acres of land from the government. He afterwards returned to Warren county, where his death occurred in 1847, his widow surviving until August 30, 1881. They were faithful members of the Methodist church. The Mills family numbered seven children, namely: William A., James M., Joseph C., Thomas W. (father of the subject of this sketch), James, Perry G. and Elizabeth.

Thomas W. Mills was five years old when his parents brought him to Ohio. He was educated in the public schools and when twenty-three years old he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving three years of apprenticeship. He then worked as a journeyman at different places until 1852. Previous to this time he had purchased the old homestead in this county; however, after moving here he continued his trade for six seasons, then turned his attention to his farm exclusively. In 1889 he purchased a home in the town of Huntsville, where he removed, giving up active farm work, and spent the rest of his life in retirement, dying September 11, 1898, at the age of seventy-three years. The eighty acres which Grandfather Mills entered from the government is still owned by the family.

Thomas W. Mills was married in Randolph county January 15, 1852, to Nancy Miller, who was born in Ireland April 15, 1830, and was a daughter of William and Sarah (Clyde) Miller. The family emigrated to America in 1844, and in 1846 located in Randolph county, Indiana. To Thomas W. Mills and wife the following children were born: Catherine J. married Ishmael Mills, a traveling man of Stewart county, Iowa; John A., the immediate subject of this sketch; William W., now deceased, was in the mercantile business at Huntsville; Sarah Ann is the wife of George Starbuck; Mary Agnes married John I. Johnson, of Buena Vista, Indiana; and Martha Ellen, who married N. Puckett. The mother of the above-named children was fourteen years of age when she left her old home in Donegal county, in the Emerald Isle, and crossed the Atlantic to Philadelphia. Later they came on to Indiana and her father took up one hundred and twenty acres of land from the government. Grandfather Miller died at the age of sixty years, leaving a family of eight children, having previously lost one. The mother of our subject, who was born in 1830, died April 15, 1899. She and her husband were faithful members of the Christian church and took an active interest in its growth and upbuilding. In politics, Thomas W. Mills was a Republican, and in 1873 was elected justice of the peace, serving until 1876. The following year he was re-elected and filled the office until 1881.

John A. Mills, of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm and he received a very practical education in the common schools. He was married on November 2, 1876, to Ida Gordon, a daughter of William S. Gordon, a farmer near Winchester, and her death occurred in 1897. To this union six children were born, namely: Ada, who married I. J. Farquhar, of West River township, and has three children: Jeanette May married John Shores, of Muncie, and they have two children; Ethel married D. C. Moore, cashier of the National Bank at Greens Fork, Wayne county; Marie married Glenn Batcheller, a railroad man of Ross, Ohio; Eunice C., born March 14, 1894, is living at home; Alice Elizabeth, born March 12, 1906, is also at home. Of these children two became teachers, Ethel teaching eight years before her marriage and six years afterwards; Marie taught for seven years.

Mr. Mills has devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising, and he is owner of a well-kept and productive farm of one hundred and ten acres, on which stands a good set of buildings. Politically, he is a Republican, and he and his family attend the Methodist church.

He is a member of the Masonic order and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

THE WINCHESTER PUBLIC LIBRARY.

It has not been so very long ago when public libraries were to be found only in the great cities; now almost every town throughout the country can boast of a good library. Their usefulness to a community is too apparent to need any comment here. The city of Winchester is not behind in the matter of a library, her citizens maintaining one of the best in the state of Indiana outside of the largest cities, although it has not been long established. For several years there had been a local library association, being organized in 1907, consisting of various women's clubs. They obtained funds in various legitimate ways for the establishment of a library, and in the early part of 1912 a tax levy was made for this purpose, and a library board was then appointed. By March things had taken a tangible shape and through the indefatigable industry and persistency of the following members of the board the plans were consummated: O. R. Baker, president; Mrs. John Engle, vice-president; George Leggett, secretary; James Goodrich, A. L. Bales, Mrs. John Myers and Mrs. May Grey. This is a purely home product and not a Carnegie library. Forty-five thousand choice books of the world's best literature, in every branch, have already been received and the list will gradually be increased. These books are tastily and systematically arranged in the Miller building. Mary Jane Diggs is the librarian and is well qualified for the successful discharge of her duties, not only knowing well all phases of the work of a librarian, but is uniformly courteous and obliging.

GEORGE W. EDWARDS.

Formerly, nearly all the people of the earth were in direct contact with the soil, but the past three-quarters of a century has been one of city building, with the population gravitating toward the centers of population, leaving the small number remaining on the farm to provide the food necessary to preserve the lives of the city dwellers. Very often the dependent ones have looked down on or treated with indifference the man who stayed on the job of producing things to eat. Agriculture has too long been considered a less desirable, a less honorable, a less remunerative vocation than a business carried on in the city. One of our citizens who has taken a delight in farming and has always found it profitable is George W. Edwards, of West River township, Randolph county.

Mr. Edwards was born in Randolph county, December 29, 1843, and is a scion of one of our oldest families, a son of Zebulon and Sarah (McNeil) Edwards, and was one of eight children, namely: Florin T. is deceased; George W. of this sketch; James lives at Modoc; Andrew lives in Winchester; Francina lives in Atlanta, Iowa; Ely lives in Randolph county; Alva is deceased; Jason lives in Randolph county. The father of these children was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, October 23, 1818, and his parents brought him to Ohio when he was a child, but not long thereafter they removed to Randolph county, Indiana and the grandfather of our subject took up land from the government here where he established the future home of the family. Here Zebulon devoted his life successfully to farming and his death occurred September 15, 1890. The mother of our subject was born in Wayne county, Indiana, January 25, 1820, and died July 26, 1897. Her people were from Virginia.

George W. Edwards grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the local schools. On July 20, 1865 he married Victoria Harris, a daughter of William P. Harris, a farmer, whose family consisted of six children. To our subject and wife three children were born, a daughter and two sons, namely: Ida Olinda, born September 12, 1866, married Cliff Gordon, a farmer of West River township, and they have two children, Willia O. and George W.; Alden J., born April 5, 1869, married Carrie

E. W. Edwards M. V. Edwards

Adamson, is farming in this county, and they have one son, Garver Hobart; William Zebulon, born June 19, 1880, married L. Olive Sharp, and they have one child, Idris Irene. The last named son seems to be a natural born horseman, is a good trainer and he now has five valuable stock horses.

George W. Edwards was a soldier in the Civil war, having enlisted in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, from which he was discharged on account of sickness, but after he recovered he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fortieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry in which he served faithfully until the close of the war. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Richmond, Kentucky, but was soon paroled. He was in all the important engagements of his regiment.

Mr. Edwards has devoted his life successfully to general farming, and is now owner of a finely improved farm of one hundred and fifty acres, on which stands a modernly appointed dwelling and good outbuildings. He is well fixed to enjoy life in every respect, owning an automobile, good horses, the latest patterns in farming machinery, and everything about his place denotes thrift and good taste. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church, and politically he is a Republican.

RILEY SMITH LEE.

Since the days of the first plowman, it has been the custom to regard the farmer as a man who should be satisfied with a fair living and only small cash returns. With many the belief is inherent that the farmer is a man who should be glad that he is alive, whether he is out of debt or not. These people, and there are altogether too many of them, are among the class who talk about the advantages of going back to the farm—for other people, but never for themselves. They seem to be inherently capable of realizing that the farmer may have the same hopes, desires and aspirations for better things as the city man. They are prone to deplore the fact that the farmer's children want to go to the city, and they like to expatiate upon the health of the country, its pure air, uplifting scenery and the joys of living close to nature—and all that sort of thing, but they always recommend this life for someone else. One of the citizens of Randolph county who has been contented to remain in the country and has succeeded as a farmer, not only to the extent that he has always made a comfortable living, but has laid by a competency as well, is Riley Smith Lee.

Mr. Lee was born in West River township, Randolph county, August 17, 1871, and is a member of one of our oldest and most widely known agricultural families. He is a son of Ezra S. and Alice (Jordan) Lee, the father also a native of this township and county and here he grew to manhood, received his education in the early-day schools and married, and has spent his life engaged in farming. He is now sixty-two years old, and is living on the old Lee homestead, which he has kept well improved. His father was a native of Tennessee and came to this locality when settlers were few and here he developed a good farm from the woods.

Six children, three sons and three daughters, were born to Ezra S. Lee and wife, namely: Riley S., of this review, is the oldest; John, who is farming in West River township, married Martha Howell and they had four children, one of whom is deceased; Bessie married Charles R. Farquhar, a farmer of West River township, and they have five children; Jennie, who married Homer Hernley, a railroad man of Chicago, has two children; Josie is single and living at home; Graydon died in youth.

Riley S. Lee grew to manhood on the home farm and he worked hard in the summer months, and in the winter attended the district schools. Later studied at a normal school and at the State University at Bloomington. He began life for himself by teaching school in West River township for a period of thirteen years, during which his services were in great demand and he was ranked among the county's leading educators, for he waas a man of progressive methods and both instructor and entertainer in the school room. He taught eight years in the home school at Modoc. He has for some time devoted his attention to general farming and stock raising and has been very successful, owning a valuable and well-improved farm and he has a pleasant home.

Mr. Lee was married December 27, 1893, to Victoria Gaines, of West River township, Randolph county, where she was reared to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Alden Gaines, a farmer, carpenter and builder and a well-known citizen of this county for many years. Mrs. Lee has one sister. Six children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Roberta is a student of domestic science at Peoria, Illinois; she was born October 7, 1894; Oleta died in infancy; Reed, born August 6, 1898; Albert, born December 19, 1902; Walter, born October 20, 1904; Alice Elizabeth, born January 15, 1907.

Mr. Lee is a Republican in politics and is active in local public affairs. He has served as trustee of his township for some time and was influential in building two consolidated school houses, and repaired two country school buildings. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, also is a member of the Masonic Order at Huntsville. He attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

CYRUS BOUSMAN.

In this country of ours it is necessary that some people should follow the occupation of farming, some store-keeping, some banking, some the professions, and so on. All are necessary to each other and form parts and parcels of the great body of society. There was a time, in the days of our grandfathers, when each family was also wholly self-sustaining, when the mother made the garments and the father secured the food, but this older order of affairs has been done away with by advanced methods more in accordance with our progress and present-day institutions. The farmer can not get along without the store-keeper and the banker, and the two latter are depending on the farmer under the new order of things. The dependence is mutual and each is required to fill his position. One of the modern business men of Randolph county who has lived to see the transformation of this locality from the pioneer epoch to the twentieth century advancement of which we of today are acquainted is Cyrus Bousman, for many years a successful merchant and now head of the State Bank of Saratoga, and one of our best known, most useful and highly honored native sons, who has done much for the general improvement of his locality and is rounding out the Psalmist's allotted life-span of three score and ten years in a manner that stamps him as the possessor of rare attributes of both head and heart.

Mr. Bousman was born in Randolph county, Indiana, October 27, 1845. He is a son of George W. and Sarah (Almonrode) Bousman, a sterling old pioneer family, who braved the wilds of this locality three-quarters of a century ago. Their family consisted of eight children, named as follows: Susanna is the wife of Benjamin Mace, a farmer near Browerville, Minnesota, and they have six children; Mary, who died at the age of sixty years, was twice married, first, to John Coats, by which union three children were born, and secondly to Frank Holmes, by whom four children were born; Cyrus, subject of this review; John H., who lives on the old homestead in White River township, has been twice married, first to Mary Clear, by whom one child was born, and secondly to Mahala Mowry, which union resulted in the birth of six children; Sarah J., who died at the age of fifty-one years, married N. J. Beard, a farmer of White River township, and to them eight children were born; Luchion and Martin died a number of years ago, also one when quite small.

George W. Bousman, father of our subject, was born in Preble county, Ohio, February 22, 1822, and there he spent his boyhood and received such educational advantages as those early times afforded. He was sixteen years old when, in 1838, he came to Indiana, entered a section of land in White River township, Randolph county, which he cleared, developed into a good farm in due course of time and there established the future home of the family and spent the remainder of his life there, dying at the age of seventy-eight years. He was a successful farmer and a good citizen, highly respected by all who knew him. The county was practically a wilderness when he came here and he endured the usual privations and hardships of first settlers. His father was a native of Germany who emigrated to America in an early day and settled in Preble county, Ohio. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in what is now West Virginia, and there she grew to womanhood and married her first husband, Simon Holmes, by whom two children were born. She subsequently removed to Ohio where she and Mr. Bousman were married. Her death occurred May 30, 1908, at the advanced age of ninety-one years. After the death of her husband she made her home with the subject of this sketch. She was a splendid woman of the old school, possessing many fine traits of character.

Cyrus Bousman grew to manhood in his native community in this county and he received his education in the common schools. He assisted with the general work on the farm when a boy and he began life for himself as a farmer, which he followed for six years, then turned his attention to merchandising, conducting a general store at Saratoga for a period of twenty-eight years, during which time he built up a large and lucrative patronage, doing a most satisfactory business with the surrounding country, carrying at all times a large and well-selected stock of goods, and, dealing honestly and courteously with his many customers, he always enjoyed their good will and respect. Finally, selling out his store he started the Saratoga State Bank in Saratoga, in partnership with George Edger, and has been head of the same for the past ten years. His able management and wise foresight has made this one of the sound, safe and popular banks of this section of the state and it has a large number of patrons which is constantly growing and the institution is a pronounced financial success and has been of great assistance in the progress of the community during the past decade, being the center of a large and thriving agricultural community. Mr. Bousman has been very successful in a business way and is one of the most substantial and influential business men in this part of the county. He owns considerable valuable property, including a handsome and modernly furnished residence.

Politically Mr. Bousman is a Progressive, and while he exerts a potent influence on local public affairs is not a politician in any sense. He has for years been a member of the United Brethren church and, in fact, a pillar in the same.

Mr. Bousman was married November 11, 1865, to Margaret A. Fraze, a daughter of John Fraze, a prominent early-day farmer of Randolph county, where she was reared and educated. She is one of a family of six children. The union of our subject and wife has been without issue, but they have reared three children, namely: Bessie Fraze, who married Victor Harmon, and Della Jenkins and Thomas Davis.

Personally Mr. Bousman is a genial and companionable gentleman whom it is a pleasure to meet. He is a man of the best character and reputation and is one of the county's foremost citizens in every respect.

JOHN FINK.

Among the present generation of progressive farmers of Randolph county who are especially worthy of notice as having been active in the improvement and prosperity of their localities and have acquired valuable property through their individual enterprise, at the same time building up a reputation which shall endure the test for generations to come, none have exerted a more beneficial influence on those about them than the gentleman whose name introduces this biographical review.

John Fink was born August 9, 1861, in Bedford county, Pennsylvania. He is a son of Jacob Fink and wife. Both his parents and grandparents were of German descent and were among the thrifty and respected people of the old Keystone state. To Jacob Fink and wife seven children were born, six sons and one daughter, namely: Lewis is a railroad man and lives at Kankakee, Illinois; Henry lives in Colorado; Samuel; Daniel was next in order of birth; Jacob is fruit farming in the state of Washington; John, of this sketch; and the daughter's name was Mary.

John Fink spent his earlier years in his native state and there received a common school education which has in later life been greatly augmented by home reading and contact with the world. He left his native state in 1906 and came to Randolph county, Indiana, where through his industry he soon got a good foothold and here he has remained to the present time, gradually advancing his interests with passing years. He is owner of an excellent farm of 160 acres which he has brought up to a high state of improvement and cultivation and where he carries on general farming and stock raising, being regarded as one of the best farmers in the vicinity of Ridgeville. He has a pleasant home in the midst of attractive surroundings and a good set of outbuildings, everything about his place denoting good management. He is an excellent judge of all kinds of livestock and keeps some good herds and droves, which he prepares for the market annually.

Mr. Fink was married March 10, 1897, to Nannie McFarland, of Ward township, Randolph county. She is a daughter of William and Maria (Mitchell) McFarland. The father died in March, 1912. The mother is living at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

Mrs. Fink was born in Pittsburg, November 11, 1878, in Ward township, and received a good education. She is a lady of talent and has taken a great part in temperance work, for years lecturing in support of the cause, and her services are in great demand in this field of endeavor. She is an earnest, instructive and entertaining speaker and a woman of engaging personality, broad-minded, cultured and genial and makes friends wherever she goes.

To Mr. and Mrs. Fink three children have been born, namely: Fern, born March 5, 1898, was graduated from the Saratoga high school. She has decided tastes toward the field of medicine and proposes to educate herself to be a physician. Henry, the second child, was born February 15, 1900, and at this writing is in his first year in the Saratoga high school; Pauline, born September 25, 1902, intends to prepare herself for a trained nurse.

Politically Mr. Fink is a Progressive. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Methodist church. He and his wife are prominent in the affairs of their locality and number their friends only by the limits of their acquaintance.

JOHN M. WALLACE, M. D.

Devoted to the noble work which his profession implies, the gentleman whose career we essay to briefly outline in the following paragraphs has been faithful and indefatigable in his endeavors and is not only earning the due rewards of his efforts in a temporal way but has also proved himself eminently worthy to exercise the important functions of his calling, by reason of his ability, his abiding sympathy and his earnest zeal in behalf of his fellow-men. His understanding of the science of medicine has always been regarded by those who know him as being broad and comprehensive, and the profession and the public accord Dr. Wallace a distinguished place, although yet a young man, among the men of his class in northern Indiana.

Dr. John M. Wallace, of Ridgeville, Randolph county, was born September 13, 1878, in Richland, Logan county, Ohio. He is a son of Andrew M. and Susan (Manifold) Wallace, who grew up, married and established their home in Ohio and were among the highly respected citizens of Logan county. Only two children were born to them, a son, John M., of this sketch; and a daughter, Anna Gammel, wife of Rev. J. H. T. Gordon, who was a minister in the United Presbyterian church; they live in Huntsville, Ohio, and have three children, Andrew, Miriam and Philip.

The paternal grandfather of our subject came from Pennsylvania, having long been a resident of York county, and located on government land in Ohio in pioneer days. He drove a flock of sheep overland from his old home to his new one. He was a man of imposing stature with a heavy head of white hair and he was greatly admired by the Indians with whom he had no difficulty in making friends. He was a typical pioneer, rugged, honest, hard-working, and he cleared his land in the Buckeye state, redeeming a good farm from the wilderness. His family consisted of six children, five sons and one daughter, the latter was accidentally killed, and one of the sons died in youth. The father of our subject and two brothers are still living, the father remaining on the old homestead in Logan county, Ohio. The place consists of five hundred acres, and he is one of the leading farmers of his community and an influential man there. He burned the brick with which his dwelling was constructed without any assistance. His wife, mother of the Doctor, was of English descent and she was born in York county, Pennsylvania, where her father settled after emigrating from England. The paternal great-grandfather was of direct descent from Sir William Wallace, famous in history. The father of our subject and his brothers all worked their way through college. The father milked twenty-four cows to get money to pay his tuition, and he taught school for a period of ten years, during which he conducted the farm, raising a crop in the summer-time. He was very successful as a school teacher and has been equally successful as a general farmer and stock raiser.

Dr. John M. Wallace grew to manhood on the home farm in Logan county, Ohio, and there he worked hard, when he became of proper age, during the summer months, attending the district schools in the winter-time, later was a student in the high school at Belle Center, Ohio. He then entered college at Monmouth, Illinois, where he remained until his graduation in 1900, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then entered the medical college at Indianapolis where he made an excellent record and from which he was graduated with the class of 1903. He spent nine months as interne in the Deaconess hospital in Indianapolis and eighteen months as interne in the City Hospital there, giving the utmost satisfaction in both to all concerned. He then practiced his profession at Franklin and also Mount Carmel for a short time, then came to Ridgeville in June, 1910, where he has since remained, and here he has built up a large, lucrative and rapidly-growing practice, taking his place among the leaders of his professional brethren as a general physician.

Dr. Wallace was married March 15, 1906, to Dolores Strickler, a young lady of many admirable characteristics, and a daughter of Martin V. Strickler and wife, a highly esteemed family of Franklin, Indiana.

He is a member of the county, state and American Medical Associations.

Fraternally, Dr. Wallace belongs to the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Methodist church.

The union of our subject and wife has been blessed by the birth of one child, Martha Ellen Wallace, born August 3, 1907.

JOSEPH W. LOLLAR.

One of the venerable native sons of Randolph county who has made a success of his life work and at the same time has conferred honor upon his locality is Joseph W. Lollar, who, after an active and useful career, is now living retired at Saratoga. He has always been looked upon as a man thoroughly in sympathy with any movement looking to the betterment or advancement of the community in any way, never shirking his duty when questions involving the general good are at stake, for he believes it the duty of every citizen while laboring for his own advancement, to look to the progress of his locality and the happiness of his neighbors as well. He has always been regarded as a man of sterling honesty and worthy of the utmost confidence and respect, which his fellow citizens have been free to accord, owing to his genial disposition, his public-spiritedness, and his uniformly upright and industrious life.

Mr. Lollar was born December 22, 1844 in Ward township, Randolph county, and is a son of Joseph and Sarah (Pogue) Lollar, an excellent pioneer family, whose children were six in number, namely: John C., a farmer of Ward township, married Amanda J. Bousman, became the parents of six children, and they are now both deceased; Elisha D., who died in 1895 at the age of fifty-four years, leaving a widow and three children, his wife having been Mary A. Warner, was a soldier for three years in the Civil war, a member of Company E, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry; he was wounded at the battle of Chickamauga, and was discharged for disability in March, 1865. Mary Elizabeth, third child of Joseph and Sarah Lollar, died in youth; Joseph W., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Mariah and Charlotte also both died in youth.

Joseph Lollar, the father of our subject, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, October 18, 1800, and died December, 1869. He came to Indiana in 1838 and located on a farm in Ward township where his children were all born and reared. He was twice married, first, in Ohio, where his first wife died. He then married in Greene county, Ohio, Sarah Pogue, who was a daughter of a farmer in Ward township, this county, and was one of eight children. Her grandfather Pogue was a native of Virginia.

Joseph W. Lollar, of this sketch, was reared on the home farm in Ward township, as above indicated, and there he assisted with the general work. He received his education in the rural schools of his locality and early in life he took up farming which he has continued to follow successfully, however, he is now living practically retired in his pleasant home at Saratoga, having accumulated a competency for his declining years. He owns a finely improved and well kept farm of 200 acres near Saratoga on which stands an excellent group of buildings, and which is regarded as one of the choice farms of this part of the county. He has been a hard worker and has managed well and is regarded as one of the best general farmers of the community. Politically, he is a Democrat and has been influential in local public affairs. He belongs to the United Brethren church.

Mr. Lollar was married December 26, 1865 to Sarepta Ford, a native of Fairfield county, Ohio, who came to Indiana when she was nine years of age and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She proved to be a true and faithful helpmeet. Her death occurred February 21, 1912. She left to her children and grandchildren the priceless heritage of a noble Christian life. To this union two sons and two daughters were born, namely: Erastus E. was born September 25, 1866 and died October 18, 1913. He was a lawyer and school teacher and married Lizzie Dentner who survives with four children, Horace, Homer, Freda, and Pauline. Enos D. was born May 24, 1868 and was married to Nora McFarland who was a teacher before her marriage. To this union three children have been born, namely, Wallace Eugene born November 28, 1896 was accidentally killed May 29, 1913. He was a bright and promising lad and was on the eve of graduating from high school; Gordon Wright was born September 9, 1900; and Alice Elizabeth was born December 18, 1908. Enos D. Lollar is a druggist and was formerly a teacher. He has a large store in Saratoga and is a successful business man. Clara J., eldest daughter of J. W. Lollar, was born February 16, 1870, and married E. A. Fields, a farmer and lumber manufacturer of Saratoga. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fields: Hazel, born May 21, 1889; Merritt, born September 24, 1894; Sarepta Constance, born August 4, 1899, died November 21, 1903; Noble, born April 8, 1908; Richard, born September 27, 1911; Carol Lorraine, born April 6, 1913. Luella May, fourth child of Mr. and Mrs. Lollar, was born January 26, 1874 and was married to J. B. Sarff, a farmer and breeder of Percheron horses. They have the following children: Bernice deceased; Beatrice, Edna, Lola, Prudence and Delight.

LOUIS C. GABLE.

Although we are not supposed to covet our neighbor's good things, if we are making an effort to carry into our every-day lives the admonitions of the Mosaic laws, yet it would be difficult for most people who are doomed to spend their lives in the city, living in undesirable homes, mostly rented, to view the beautiful modern home and finely kept farm of Louis C. Gable in Monroe township, Randolph county, and not envy him. He has for many years ranked among the leading agriculturists and stock men of this section of the county, where his entire life has been spent, resulting in the accomplishment of a comfortable living for himself and family and no little amount of good to the locality in general, for the base element of selfishness, it seems, has never formed a very large part of his nature, and he believes in assisting others on the rugged highway of life while striving for his advancement.

Mr. Gable is a descendant of sterling German stock, but he was born in the above named township and county, on June 17, 1877. He is a son of John M. and Nancy J. (Cecil) Gable, and is one of a family of three children, a brother and sister both dying in infancy. The father was born in Delaware county and still survives, living on a good farm in Monroe township, near that of our subject. The date of the father's birth was 1851, and the mother first saw the light of day in the year 1856 in Monroe township, this county. These parents grew to maturity in their respective communities and received common school education, and they were married and began housekeeping in this locality.

Louis C. Gable was reared on the home farm where he worked when a boy and received his education in the local public schools. On December 24, 1898, he married Ella E. Starbuck, daughter of W. E. Starbuck, a farmer, who was born in Ohio, and who served three years in the Civil War, a faithful soldier for the Union. Leaving his native state after the war, he moved to Ridgeville, Randolph county, Indiana. Later he was married to Mary C. McKinney and their family consisted of six children, an equal number of sons and daughters. Mr. Starbuck was a man of sterling character, both morally, socially and intellectually, taking a leading interest in church and political enterprises, and was widely known throughout the county, while Mrs. Starbuck proved herself to be a woman of rare financial ability, as well as an enthusiastic worker in church relationship and temperance and missionary movements. The father's death occurred in 1893 and that of the mother in May, 1912.

Jesse B. McKinney, grandfather of Mrs. Gable, was one of the wealthy and popular citizens of Green township, who was born in 1822 in Clark county, Ohio, and was brought by his parents that year to Randolph county, Indiana, where he grew up, began life at the bottom of the ladder and by the exercise of good judgment and industry forged to the front, as a miller, merchant and farmer, finally acquiring some two thousand acres of valuable land here, and was regarded as a man who possessed a financial ability of a high order. His farm was generally regarded as the best in Randolph county, and on it he erected what might be called a mansion in that day, the cost of which was thirty thousand dollars. At the time of his death, which occurred February 14, 1888, he had besides his extensive landed estate, large herds of livestock and vast sums of money invested in other and safe enterprises. He was an influential man in local public affairs and was regarded as one of the leading citizens of this part of the state.

To Mr. and Mrs. Gable two children have been born, Fredora Hope, whose birth occurred December 11, 1900, and John William, who died in infancy.

Mr. Gable has followed farming all his life and is now owner of a fine farm of eighty-four acres, which was purchased from his grandfather Cecil. He has kept the place well fertilized and improved, and he has just recently erected thereon one of the most modernly appointed and attractive bungalows in the county. He pays considerable attention to the livestock business, and takes especial interest and pleasure in cattle feeding.

Politically, he is a Republican and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his family are members and liberal supporters of the Methodist Episcopal church.

CHARLES L. THORNBURG.

The Thornburg family is certainly entitled to representation in a history of Randolph county, partly because they have been among those who helped redeem the rich land from the wilderness and encourage material, civic, and moral progress, and partly because they have lived honest, industrious and patriotic lives, consequently, have ever enjoyed the respect and good will due the best citizens of a thriving community. One of the well-known members of the present generation of this name is Charles L. Thornburg, successful business man of Farmland, where he conducts an extensive undertaking and livery establishment, a man who seems to have inherited many of the sterling and commendable characteristics of his honored father and grandfather before him.

Mr. Thornburg was born in Randolph county, March 1, 1875. He is a son of Tilnias and Miranda (Ralston) Thornburg, whose family consisted of five children, namely: Lydia J., of Wayne county, married M. J. Yoke, a farmer, and they had five children, two of whom are deceased; Myrtle, of Farmland, married Charles Hobley, a commercial traveler, and they have one child, Stewart; Charles L., of this review; Cora, who lives in Colorado, married William A. Moore, a farmer; Ella who lives in Richmond, Indiana, married Leonard J. Brooks, and they have two children, Ralston and Marcile.

Tilnias Thornburg, father of the above named children, was born on the old homestead in Randolph county, which place is well located in Stoney Creek township, and which was entered from the government by Job Thornburg, grandfather of our subject, in 1825, he having thus been among the earliest settlers here. He began life in typical pioneer fashion, erecting a log cabin and clearing the land of its heavy timber. Here he spent the rest of his life, dying at the advanced age of ninety-four years. On this same farm the father of our subject lived for a period of sixty-four years, successfully engaged in general farming and stock raising; but he has been retired from active life during the past nine years, making his home in Farmland. This family is of Irish descent, all of Quaker faith. Job Thornburg, the grandfather, was born in North Carolina. James Ralston, father of the mother of our subject, was born in Randolph county, and was one of ten children, three sons and seven daughters, of a pioneer family. James Ralston spent his life on a farm here, dying in 1900. The mother survives, being now sixty-three years old.

Charles L. Thornburg was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools. He was married on February 20, 1896, to Maggie Holder, daughter of Henry and Catherine Holder, in fact, their only child. To Mr. and Mrs. Thornburg six children have been born, two of whom are deceased, namely: Irene died in infancy; Roger died in 1910 when six years old; Margaret, born October 27, 1907; Dolores, born March 10, 1909; Glen, born September 27, 1912; Ralph, born November 22, 1913.

Mr. Thornburg left the farm when twenty-nine years old, and went into the furniture and undertaking business at Farmland in 1904, and was successful from the first. In 1912 he took in H. Wasson as a partner in the livery and undertaking business, having sold out the furniture business. They are now among the leading undertakers and liverymen in Randolph county and do an extensive and rapidly growing business, their customers coming from all over this section of the state. They are well equipped in every way for these enterprises, everything modern and first-class. Honesty and prompt service are their watchwords.

Politically, Mr. Thornburg is a Republican, as are all his family, and they have been loyal in their support of the party from the time of its founding back in the fifties. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Friends church.

JAMES P. GOODRICH.

James P. Goodrich was born in Winchester, Indiana, February 19, 1864, the second of six sons born to John B. and Elizabeth (Edger) Goodrich. The father was born in Virginia in 1831, but when only one year old was brought by his parents to Randolph county. Thus the Goodrich family was among the early pioneers, and devoted arduous labors to the material, civic and moral welfare of the country. John B. Goodrich was prominent as an attorney, reading law with his uncle, Carey S. Goodrich. He was subsequently associated in the practice with the late Enos L. Watson. From 1861 to 1869 he served as clerk of the Randolph circuit court. He died in the prime of life in 1872.

James P. Goodrich was educated in Winchester, graduating from the high school in 1881, in the same class with Prof. John R. Commons, of Wisconsin University, and Hon. James E. Watson, former congressman, and for the following year and a half taught school in the rural districts of his native county. In 1884 he entered DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, where he remained two years, pursuing a literary course. After studying law in the office of Watson & Engle a short time he was admitted to the bar in Winchester in 1887, and formed a partnership with his uncle, John W. Macy, which continued for several years under the firm name of Watson, Macy & Goodrich. Later E. L. Watson's place in the firm was taken by John J. Cheney, the firm name changing to Cheney, Macy & Goodrich, which continued for five years, when Mr. Cheney retired and A. L. Nichols became a member of the firm of Macy, Nichols & Goodrich. Mr. Macy went out on the bench in 1901, and the firm became Nichols, Goodrich & Bales, A. L. Bales having been admitted to partnership. When Judge Macy left the bench he returned to the old offices and the firm became Macy, Nichols, Goodrich & Bales, continuing thus until the death of Judge Macy in 1912, when his son, J. W. Macy, Jr., succeeded to the vacancy in the firm. In 1910 Mr. Goodrich opened offices in Indianapolis with Judge L. J. Monks and John W. Robbins, under the firm name of Monks, Robbins & Goodrich, with offices in the Pythian building.

Mr. Goodrich is regarded as a most thorough, painstaking and alert attorney, an earnest, forceful, and at times, an eloquent pleader, having great weight with juries and equally impressive to the bench. He has remained a profound student of all that pertains to his vocation and has kept fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to legal matters, being familiar with the statutes of Indiana and the latest decisions of tribunals of higher courts of the United States.

However, while Mr. Goodrich holds a high position in the estimation of the public for his legal talents, he has a greater genius for constructive, commercial and fiduciary enterprises than for the love of Blackstone, and in these he has been pre-eminently successful. He has extensive interests throughout the state in various public utility enterprises, likewise similar enterprises in other states.

Mr. Goodrich was appointed receiver for the Chicago, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad in 1908, and sold, in 1911, the road to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, which is now known as the Indiana division of the last named road. His business acumen in this capacity soon manifested itself. He was also made receiver of the Noelke, Richards Iron Works of Indianapolis and Pittsburg, having been but recently appointed to the latter position.

Politically, Mr. Goodrich is a loyal Republican and is one of the party leaders of the state. He was at one time chairman of the Indiana Republican State Committee, holding this important office from 1901 to 1910, discharging the duties of the same in a manner that reflected much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned and doing much to insure the success of the party in Indiana. He has been a member of the Republican National Committee from Indiana since 1912, and is also a member of the National Executive Committee. For many years he was an ardent member of the Knights of Labor and was in charge of the labor department of the last named committee in the campaign of 1912. Prior to his connection with state politics he was county chairman for many years in Randolph county, and was a member of the Winchester school board for thirteen years. He has been trustee of Wabash College of Crawfordsville since 1902. While deeply and actively interested in political and public affairs for many years, he has never been a candidate for office. Religiously, he is a Presbyterian, and since early life has been a teacher in the Sunday school, and since 1910 he has held a men's Bible class of over one hundred and seventy-five members for the purpose of teaching, which he returns to Winchester every Sunday if possible, even if he has to travel half across the continent. While in college he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. He is a member of the Masonic order, having attained the thirty-second degree in this time-honored lodge. He also claims membership in the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Goodrich was married on March 15, 1888, to Cora I. Frist, a lady of talent and culture, whose many estimable attributes have made her a long favorite with a wide circle of friends. She was born in Middleborough, Wayne county, Indiana, and is a daughter of Jonas and Amy (Powell) Frist, old settlers of the county, and a highly esteemed and influential family. The union of our subject and wife has been graced by the birth of one child, Pierre F. Goodrich, who at this writing is a student of Wabash College, and is a young man of bright mind and rare promise.

Personally, James P. Goodrich is a gentleman of the strictest integrity, and his private character and important trusts have always been above reproach. He is a vigorous as well as an independent thinker, extensive reader of the best in literature, and he has the courage of his convictions upon all subjects which he investigates. He is also strikingly original and fearless, prosecutes his researches after his own peculiar fashion and cares little for conventionalism or for the sanctity attaching to person or place by reason of artificial distinction, tradition or accident of birth. He is essentially cosmopolitan in his ideas, broadly democratic in the non-political sense of that term, a man of the people in all the term implies and for the people—a friend of the common man, and in the best sense of the word, a representative type of that strong American manhood which commands and retains respect by reason of inherent merit, sound sense and correct conduct.

He has so impressed his individuality upon his county and state as to win the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens and has become a strong and influential power in leading them to high and noble things. Measured by the accepted standard of excellence, his career, though strenuous, has been eminently honorable and useful, and his life fraught with great good to his fellows and to the world. Unpretending as to piety, yet few men more dutifully fulfill the Master's command to care for the needy—to minister unto the sick, clothe the naked, feed the hungry and speak cheer to those in prison. Many the circumstances in which his left hand knoweth not the generosity of his right. In fact, Mr. Goodrich is a well-rounded man in all directions, keen in business, forceful in public counsel, decisive in action, faithful to confidences reposed in him, a friend and well-wisher of all human kind.

WILLIAM C. BOSWORTH.

In reading over the record of the lives of many leading citizens of a county like Randolph, one becomes impressed with the fact that certain families show at the outset their strong inclination toward books and learning generally or in at least keeping up with the times on current topics, especially dealing with educational or national affairs. Among the people of the agricultural counties of Indiana it is the rule and not the exception to find ordinary educations, but occasionally a family is met with that rises above many of their neighbors in the scale of education and the capacity to grasp the larger questions of mental improvement. Such families are somewhat numerous in Randolph county, and it is a sign that this county is equal to any in the Union in point of citizenship. One such is that represented by William C. Bosworth, the Bosworths having long been potent factors in the educational and civic affairs of the county. They are people who in every way are deserving of the high esteem in which they have ever been held by their acquaintances, for their lives have been industrious, helpful and honorable.

William C. Bosworth was born in Randolph county, Indiana, July 4, 1871. He is a son of Marcus and Colista (Barnes) Bosworth, being their only child. His father was a native of Jay county, Indiana, where he spent his boyhood and received a common school education. When a young man he moved to Ridgeville, Randolph county and began life for himself as a teacher. He taught there for a number of years in both the common and high schools with much success. He was a born teacher and was a grammarian of considerable note. He was the author of a grammar text-book which was widely adopted in the schools of the country and which received high praise from critics and educators over the land. He subsequently taught in the schools of Farmland. After teaching for a period of ten years in this county, he went to Denver, Colorado, much to the regret of the people here, for he had in that time become the foremost teacher in the county and was popular with all classes. He continued to teach in Denver, giving his usual high grade service, until his untimely death which occurred at the early age of thirty-nine years. He was buried in that city. During the Civil war he served gallantly for the Union as a member of Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, seeing much hard service in the campaign and battles with the army in the South.

W. C. BOSWORTH.

Colista Barnes, mother of the subject of this sketch, spent her girlhood years at Ridgeville and received a common school education, and there she met and married Marcus Bosworth while he was teaching in that town. Her family originally lived in Wayne county, Indiana, and moved from there to Ridgeville. Our subject's paternal grandfather came from Virginia to Jay county, Indiana in pioneer days and there engaged in farming. He was a friend of education even in those early times and was one of the prominent advocates in organizing Liber College south of Portland. Our subject had three uncles who were influential and successful teachers and ministers in the Christian church.

William C. Bosworth was educated in the common schools of his boyhood home and in Ridgeville College. He married on October 28, 1893, Zella Cortner, a daughter of Washington Cortner, a successful farmer of Monroe township, Randolph county where he still resides. His family consists of six children, four daughters and two sons.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth three children have been born, namely: Chester Orlan, born December 13, 1894, is a graduate of the Farmland high school, is now a pupil of Professor Williams of Winchester; he will follow music as a profession, being gifted as a musician and is a young man of much promise. Leo Lawrence, our subject's second child, was born November 30, 1898; the third child is Helen, born March 30, 1913.

Mr. Bosworth is a member of the Christian church. He has been secretary of the Eastern Indiana Christian Conference for the past three years and still holds same position. He has also been county superintendent of Sunday schools for three years.

Mr. Bosworth has followed farming through life and now owns a farm of one hundred and eleven acres, all under cultivation except six acres of timber. He is a member of the Democratic party.

CAPT. EDMUND ENGLE.

Capt. Edmund Engle, for years one of the most prominent insurance agents in Winchester, Randolph county, Indiana, was a native of Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was born August 8, 1831. His father, Isaac Engle, was also a native of Chester county, and was born in 1804. He was reared on a farm, but learned the wagonmaker's trade, and followed that occupation until 1842. In 1830 he married Miss Catherine Tussey, a native of Chester county, whose ancestors settled in Pennsylvania as early as 1648. In 1835 he removed with his family to Wayne county, Indiana, and in 1842 came to Randolph county, Indiana. He located in Washington township, where he purchased eighty acres of land, upon which only a partial clearing had been made. He completed the labor of clearing and developed a fine farm, which he cultivated successfully for many years. Edmund was reared on the home farm, and, during the greater part of his early life, his time was occupied in the performance of farm work. In the winter he attended school, and acquired a good, practical education. At the age of eighteen years he began an apprenticeship at the plasterer's trade, working at this trade during the summer and fall, and clerking in various business houses during the winter. He was thus engaged until 1864. In February of that year he enlisted as a private soldier in Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Regiment, but upon the organization of the regiment he was promoted to the rank of orderly sergeant. In July, 1864, he was advanced to the office of second lieutenant, for meritorious services, and in December of the same year was promoted to the office of first lieutenant. He was with his regiment in all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, and after the fall of Atlanta the regiment, under command of General Thomas, fell back to Tennessee, and took part in the battles of Franklin and Nashville. On the 9th and 10th of March, 1865, they participated in the battle of Wise's Fork, North Carolina, where Capt. J. L. Neff was killed. Lieutenant Engle was commissioned captain, and continued in command of this company until he was mustered out, at Greensboro, North Carolina, August 31, 1865.

He returned from the army with his health greatly impaired and for a few months remained out of active business. Later, however, he engaged in the sale of agricultural implements, in connection with the insurance business, associated with his son, John R. Engle. In the meantime, in connection with Dr. Markle, he laid out the Engle and Markle addition to the town of Winchester, and was extensively engaged in the sale of lots. Later on, the captain turned his attention exclusively to the insurance business, representing for years a number of the safest and wealthiest fire insurance companies in the country, as well as several life insurance corporations. Mr. Engle was married October 16, 1856, to Miss Gertrude K. Bishop, daughter of John W. Bishop, late of Randolph county. By this union they became the parents of seven children four of whom are now living, viz: John R., Emma G., Charles F., and Walter J. His wife is an estimable lady, and possesses the affectionate regard of all who know her. She is a member of the Disciple church, as was also her husband. His death occurred September 5, 1895. Although he never occupied public office, Mr. Engle took quite an active part in local politics, always wielding his influence in the favor of the Republican party. He was identified with both the Masonic and Odd Fellows of Winchester.

STEPHEN E. CLAYTON.

In the past few years a great change has been made in the manner of general farming, of constructing farm buildings. Formerly, farmers and dairymen treated the matter of farm buildings principally from the standpoint of dollars and cents. Labor-saving features were secondary in consideration, and sanitation was scarcely thought of about the outbuildings and ventilation was practically lost sight of in both barns and homes. But now all these kindred subjects are given careful consideration by the tiller of the soil and he is therefore more prosperous, happier and healthier. One of this class of modern agriculturists in Randolph county is Stephen E. Clayton, a representative of one of our oldest and most industrious families, his grandfather having braved the wilds of this locality with the early frontiersmen and here he and his father did much in advancing the cause of civilization.

Mr. Clayton of this review was born on the old home place in White River township, this county, September 21, 1864. He is a son of Samuel A. and Elizabeth M. (Ludwig) Clayton. The father was born on the farm which our subject's grandfather, Stephen Clayton, owned, March 7, 1834, and there he grew to manhood, spent his life in his native county successfully engaged in general farming and here his death occurred in 1900. He was one of seven children. The grandfather was born February 10, 1787, and his death occurred on June 29, 1834; his wife, Mary Cheffins, was born August 4, 1796. They were married February 1, 1821. They are buried in the Maxville cemetery.

Stephen E. Clayton is one of three children, the other two being Mary C., who married John Cheesman, a farmer in White River township, this county, and they have five children, two daughters and three sons; William R., a farmer of Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, married Rachel McIntyre, and they have four children.

Mr. Clayton of this sketch grew to manhood on the home farm and assisted with the general work there when a boy, and during the winter months he attended the neighboring schools. August 20, 1897. he married Sarah McIntire, a daughter of Henry McIntire, a farmer of White River township, Randolph county, where Mrs. Clayton grew to womanhood and received her education. She was one of seven children, one of whom is now deceased.

To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Henry, born March 20, 1899; Esther, born January 31, 1901.

Politically Mr. Clayton is a Republican, but has never been active in local public affairs. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he attends the Methodist Episcopal church. He has always followed farming and has kept the old home place, consisting of 100 acres, well cultivated and well improved and the buildings carefully repaired. He is a painstaking farmer and has made a comfortable living.

THOMAS WILLARD HOUGH.

It is an axiom demonstrated by human experience that industry is the keynote of prosperity. Success comes not to the man who idly waits, but to the faithful toiler whose work is characterized by sleepless vigilance and cheerful clerity, and it has been by such means that Thomas Willard Hough, widely known and capable young undertaker and funeral director of the town of Spartanburg, Randolph county, has forged to the front and won an honored place among the substantial and enterprising citizens of this locality. He is a young man of high character and therefore enjoys the confidence and respect of all who know him.

Mr. Hough was born on the old homestead in Greensfork township, this county May 28, 1886. He is a son of John and Mary B. (Manning) Hough, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work.

Thomas W. Hough grew to manhood on the home farm and there he worked when a boy, and he received his education in the common schools of his vicinity, and was graduated from the Spartanburg high school in June, 1906. He then entered the Columbus Medical College at Columbus, Ohio, where he made an excellent record and was graduated from the department of undertaking and embalming in 1913. He located for the practice of his profession at Spartanburg, Indiana, and is building up a large and lucrative patronage. He has learned his business thoroughly and is a deep student, keeping abreast of the times in all that pertains to the same, and high-grade, honest and prompt service are his watchwords. He is well equipped in every respect, having the latest model hearse and other equipment and a neat office.

Politically, Mr. Hough is a Progressive, and religiously he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has passed all the chairs in the local lodge. He is a member of the Encampment and has also passed all the chairs in it. He has been representative to the Grand Lodge from both the above named orders.

Mr. Hough was married on December 25, 1896 to Ethel Mitchel, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, November 7, 1885, and to this union three children have been born, namely: Mary Frances is in school; Thomas Hubert and John Gordon are at home.

RUFUS G. HINDSLEY.

Rufus G. Hindsley was born in Darke county, Ohio, February 21, 1847. He is a son of Stephen Hindsley, who was born in North Carolina, August 20, 1818, and when about six years of age he accompanied his parents to Darke county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood, was married and began life for himself and there he remained until 1848, when he removed to Randolph county, Indiana, and settled in Jackson township, buying a farm on which he spent the rest of his life, dying here March 29, 1893. His wife, who was known in her maidenhood as Anna McConnell, survived him less than two weeks, dying April 10, 1893, and they were buried in Lisbon cemetery. This family all lived to good ripe ages and the sixteen of them are all buried in two cemeteries only twenty-three miles apart, Lisbon and New Madison cemeteries. The father of our subject was a typical pioneer, courageous, hospitable and honest and by hard work he gained prosperity in later years.

Rufus G. Hindsley grew up on the old homestead and he was educated in the common schools and attended Ridgeville College three terms. He began life for himself by teaching school, which vocation he followed for fifteen years, but tiring of teaching he began general agricultural pursuits in 1882, which he has continued to the present time, and is now owner of a valuable farm of one hundred and fifty-five acres, on which stand a substantial dwelling and large outbuildings.

Politically, Mr. Hindsley is a Democrat, having served two terms as trustee of Jackson township, and assessor one term, and was a member of the county council for one term. Religiously, he belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Hindsley was married August 17, 1871, to Malinda Noffsinger, who was born in Randolph county November 17, 1849, and here she grew to womanhood and received a common school education. She is a daughter of Absolem and Elizabeth (Johnson) Noffsinger. The grandfather, John Noffsinger, was born January 27, 1767, and he cast his first vote for George Washington in his first race for President of the United States.

Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hindsley, namely: Alvah C., born December 24, 1872; Orvah L., second son of our subject, was born February 15, 1875; Minnie E., third child of our subject, was born November 13, 1877; Odessa B., second daughter of the subject of this sketch, was born May 22, 1880; Alice Armeda Hindsley, born February 20, 1883, and Etta A. Hindsley, born March 30, 1887.

SAMUEL H. HUNT.

One of the leading educators of Randolph county is Samuel H. Hunt, at this writing, principal of the high school at Huntsville and for eight years a teacher in various other local schools of this locality. During his successful career he has also been merchant and husbandman. He grew to manhood amid the healthful scenes of rural life. During his earlier years his employments were such as were common to farmers' boys. He alternated farming with schooling, made progress in study and books, and laid a few foundation stones upon which some parts of his life's structure yet rest. To these early years, under the tutelage of father and mother, whose chief ambitions were to impress upon the minds of their children such principles as would make possible lives of usefulness and honor, Mr. Hunt, like myriads of others, is deeply indebted for that probity of character, and those justifiable aspirations that prominently characterize him as a citizen in all the passages of life. In these immature years, when the mind is taking its bent, when youthful ambitions are shaping themselves for manhood achievements, no influences have ever been found more prolific or potential for good, than those which the farm with such accompaniments, has afforded. The farmer's home,—the chaste purity of its teachings,—the broad fields, the forest, the orchard, the meadow, hill and dale, the song of birds, the hum of bees, the merry brook, the silent river—all the opulence of beauty that Nature spreads out with lavish hand, are teachers of youth whose lessons are never forgotten. It was amid such scenes and influences that the early years of our subject were spent; and he is still a lover of Nature and a student of her secrets.

Mr. Hunt was born in Nettle Creek township, Randolph county, Indiana, January 7, 1873. He is a son of Fairfax and Mary A. (Hunt) Hunt, and is one of ten children, namely: Artaminca B., Charles Edward, Schuyler Colfax, Loretta, Samuel H. (subject), Lula Florence, Nancy Catherine (deceased), America Ellen, Pearl Lee, and Grace Greenwood.

Fairfax Hunt, father of the above named children, was born in Nettle Creek township, this county, in 1842, being a son of one of our old pioneer settlers, and from that early day to this the Hunts have been among the best known and most industrious people of the county. Fairfax Hunt grew to manhood on the old homestead and received such educational advantages as the old-time rural schools afforded. He began farming when a boy and devoted his life to general farming and stock raising, also learned the carpenter's trade when a young man and became a carpenter and builder. The last twenty years of his life were given to the latter occupation. His death occurred September 10, 1909. The mother of our subject was also a native of Nettle Creek township, this county, and represented an old family. Here she grew to womanhood and received her education in the early-day schools. Her birth occurred on April 16, 1845. She is still living, having spent her life in her native locality, and now although advanced in years is active and has the appearance of a much younger woman. The paternal grandfather of our subject was born in Kentucky, from which state he came to Indiana in an early day, and purchased land from the government which he improved through hard work. He married a native woman of this township. The Hunt family is of English descent.

Samuel H. Hunt was educated in the public schools of his native community, as already intimated, and he began life for himself by teaching, which profession he followed with pronounced success for a period of eight years in the public schools of Randolph county, then turned his attention to business affairs and conducted a store at Modoc for eight years, during which he enjoyed an excellent trade as a result of his honest and courteous dealings with his hundreds of customers, many of whom were from remote parts of the county. Selling out his mercantile business in March, 1912, he turned his attention again to educational work, and in order to further equip himself for the same he attended the Tri-State College at Angola, Indiana, and was graduated from that institution in 1913. He then accepted a position as principal of the high school at Huntsville, which he is now filling in a manner to reflect much credit upon himself and to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned.

In the school room he is both an instructor and entertainer, and, being a close student has kept well abreast of the times in everything educational, and he easily ranks among the leading teachers in this section of the state. He is a member of the United Brethren church at Modoc, of which his brother, C. E. Hunt, is pastor.

ERNEST THORNBURG.

This is an age in which the farmer stands pre-eminently above any other class as a producer of wealth, and there is a rapidly growing sentiment among the dwellers of the great cities that the rural districts are the best, so they are going back to the soil in ever-increasing numbers, for there they not only find a greater independence but really have more of the good things of life, not the least of which is better health of both body and mind. The farmer does not have to put forth such strenuous efforts to feed himself and his family. He simply takes advantage of the winds, the warm air, the bright sunshine, the life-giving rains, and, handling Nature's gifts rightly, reaps the rewards that always come to patient, persistent toil. One of Randolph county's foremost agriculturists is Ernest Thornburg, whose tastily kept and altogether model farm lies one mile southeast of the city of Winchester.

Mr. Thornburg was born March 18, 1873, on Little White river, on a farm in the southwestern part of Randolph county. He is a son of Joab A. and Harriet (Parrott) Thornburg. The father was a native of this county, but the mother was born near Lebanon, Warren county, Ohio. The Thornburgs were early pioneers of Randolph county, the paternal grandfather locating here when the country was a wilderness and settlers were few and here he developed a good farm through thrift and spent the rest of his life and here the father of our subject grew to manhood and engaged successfully in general farming, and he and his wife are now living on a farm near Jerico, where they moved when their son, Ernest, was quite young, and there the subject of this sketch grew to manhood and assisted his father with the general work on the place, attending the rural schools the meantime. He had about three years study in high school. He remained at home until his marriage, on October 18, 1893, when he espoused Irene Turner, a daughter of John M. and Mary Jane (Hartman) Turner. The mother died when the daughter, Irene, was about ten years old, but the father is still living. Two children, a son and daughter, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thornburg, namely: Marvin H., whose birth occurred March 30, 1896, and Margaret Harriet, born August 26, 1900. They are both attending the public schools of Winchester.

ERNEST THORNBURG AND FAMILY

RESIDENCE OF ERNEST THORNHILL.

Mr. Thornburg began farming for himself on part of his father's farm, where he remained three years, thereby getting a little stock around him. He then moved to a farm two miles southeast of Winchester, where he lived ten years, and in 1908 he bought his present farm, which adjoins the farm where he previously lived. The place consists of one hundred and twenty-five acres of fine land, which he has kept well improved and exceptionally well tilled. It was pretty much run down when he moved here, but being a scientific farmer as well as an industrious one he set to work with a will, employed natural fertilizers, carefully rotated his crops, etc., until the land today is as fertile as it was when first reclaimed from the wilderness. He has also constructed a splendid set of buildings on the place. Today no land in Randolph county surpasses it in point of productiveness and few farms equal it. One only has to glance at his substantial dwelling, large barn, ample granaries and sheds, also implement store rooms to quickly see that he is a twentieth-century husbandman of the first rank, to say nothing of his well-ordered fences, clean fence-rows and fields without weeds. However, in his recently erected residence is to be seen the acme of perfection reached in the modern styles of architecture. It is built of vitrified brick, with stone trimmings. It is modern in its appointments throughout and is symmetrical and attractive in general appearance. It is installed with all up-to-date appliances, electric lights, water system direct from the well, with hot air furnace, in basement for heating, also a thoroughly equipped laundry, a dairy room for the care of milk and butter, a fruit room for the storage of both canned and stored fruit; a work room, equipped with all kinds of tools and work bench; a fuel room and other apartments, all being reached from the ground floor by an elevator so there is no necessity for carrying articles up or down steps. A chute from the bath room on the second floor carries all soiled clothes to the laundry. On the living floor is a modernly equipped kitchen, with range, cupboards, closets and sinks supplied with well water and cistern water, both hot and cold. The dining room is large, as are also the drawing room and living room, all tastily arranged and elegantly finished in hardwood. The bedrooms above are large, well ventilated, well lighted and pleasant in all seasons. Above them is the attic, which is a convenient store room. This magnificent residence must be seen to be fully appreciated. It has been pronounced by many as being, not among the largest, but perhaps the most up-to-date country residence in the state.

Mr. Thornburg has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising, both of which he carries on on a large scale, feeding, from year to year, many head of live stock for the markets. He is a lover of good stock and a most excellent judge of all kinds. There are always to be seen about his barns some fine specimens of the Norman breed of horses, Durham cattle, and his hogs are among the best in the county, as are also his Barred Plymouth Rock chickens. Whatever he raises, his aim is to have the best. For a period of five years he has secured the medal for champion corn raiser of Randolph county, quality and quantity per acre, these being the two main points considered in the contest. Whatever he attempts he keeps in mind the motto, "Raise the best." Mr. Thornburg has passed the examination and qualified as an expert judge of corn and is entitled to act in that capacity at any county or state fair or exposition in the country. He was one of the promoters and organizers of the Randolph County Agricultural Association, the aim of which is to encourage better methods of tilling the soil in every manner possible. He is a member of the Indiana State Corn Growers' Association, and is the scorer in the Randolph county boys contest. He is chairman of the Randolph County Farmers' Institute work, is widely known over the eastern part of the state as one of the most influential and ambitious of the modern twentieth-century agriculturists, is actively interested in all organizations and movements that have for their object agricultural progress.

Politically, Mr. Thornburg is a Republican and is deeply interested in local public affairs, but is not an office seeker or desirous of becoming a political leader. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He and his family belong to the Friends church, and are highly esteemed by their neighbors and wide circle of friends.

JOHN R. ENGLE.

John R. Engle was born in Winchester, Indiana, December 1, 1857, and is a son of Capt. Edmund and Gertrude (Bishop) Engle. The father was in his day and generation one of the leading citizens of Randolph county, prominent in both business and public life. His death occurred here on September 5, 1895. His widow survives, being now advanced in years, and is making her home in Winchester with her son, whose name initiates this sketch.

John R. Engle grew to manhood in Winchester, and here he attended the public schools. In 1875 he accepted a clerkship in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, in which he remained until August, 1877. In August, 1881 he again became deputy clerk under I. P. Watts, serving four years.

In the fall of 1888 he was elected clerk of the circuit court for Randolph county, and assumed office in August, 1889, serving four years. He had been a law student all these years and was admitted to practice on the same day that his term of office as clerk of the court expired. He at once formed a partnership with Hon. John W. Macy and James P. Goodrich, under the firm name of Macy, Goodrich & Engle, giving special attention to probate practice and abstracting. When he was a young man he had formed a partnership with his father in the general insurance and real estate business which continued through all the years until his father's death. The partnership of Macy, Goodrich & Engle continued for some time, Mr. Engle finally becoming state agent and adjuster for various insurance companies, which line of endeavor he has since followed with great success, giving every satisfaction to the companies which he represents. His business frequently takes him into all parts of the country. He has been very successful in a business way and is a director in the Peoples Loan & Trust Company, and a stockholder in various other banks and business enterprises.

Mr. Engle has ever remained an uncompromising Republican and has long been active in local party affairs, and has been a frequent delegate to party conventions and conferences.

Mr. Engle was married February 26, 1879 to May A. Hammond, a daughter of George F. and Martha (Duncan) Hammond, a prominent family of Winchester at that time, formerly of Zanesville, Ohio, where Mrs. Engle was born. The family finally removed to Topeka, Kansas, and subsequently to Los Angeles, California, where the father's death occurred and where the mother still resides. Mrs. Engle had the advantages of a good education and is a lady of refinement.

Four children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Engle, named as follows: George Edmund is married and resides in Chicago; Robert L. is married and lives in Louisiana; Helen is a student at Hanover College; Russell B. is a student in the Winchester high school.

Fraternally, Mr. Engle is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and he often attends organizations of this order. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian church, of which he is a trustee, and is active in church and Sunday school work. He is a man of decided literary tastes and has a large and well-selected library. The family is prominent in the social life of the city of their residence, and Mrs. Engle is active in philanthropic work, and was one of the potent factors in securing the public library for Winchester. She is now a member of the public library board, the first board under the present organization.

JOHN HOUGH.

The enterprising citizen whose name introduces this sketch is one of the painstaking farmers of Randolph county, where most of his life has been spent and in the development of which during the past half century he has taken a part, for his parents brought him here in the pioneer epoch and established the family home. He has been taught to do well whatever was worth doing and he is therefore very comfortably situated, having a good farm, the old homestead, where he has been fortunate enough to spend the major portion of his life. He takes a great pride in keeping the same well-tilled and well-improved and the buildings in good repair, and he has so ordered his daily life that he has kept untarnished the splendid name of Hough.

John Hough was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 18, 1847. He is a son of Thomas and Mary W (Randolph) Hough. The father was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, in 1807 and in his boyhood days moved with his parents to Butler county, Ohio, where he grew to manhood and received his education. In 1843, in Cincinnati, he married Mary W. Ronney, where he lived a few years then in March, 1849, he moved to Spartanburg, Indiana where he owned and operated a good farm until his death, July 3, 1886. He was a progressive man of affairs and served as justice of peace of his township for twenty-four years, being esteemed by all. He was a stanch Republican and although not a soldier in the front, he was a strong supporter of the Union and wielded a venerable influence. His wife, Mary W., was born in Middleton, Connecticut, August 2, 1807, and early in life came west, locating at Cincinnati, where she met and married Mr. Hough, proving a worthy helpmeet and a fine mother. She died at Spartanburg July 3, 1873, having been a consistent member of the Episcopalian church.

John Hough grew up on the home farm and worked hard when a boy, receiving a meager education in the rural schools. When a boy, his parents removed from Ohio to Randolph county, Indiana, and located on a farm in Greensfork township, and here he has since lived, being still a resident of the old homestead, which he has kept well-improved and has made a success as a general farmer and stock raiser.

Politically, Mr. Hough is a Republican, but is "progressive" in his ideas. He was a member of the advisory board of his township for a period of twelve years, and is still a member. He has been president of the same for ten years, and has discharged his duties in a manner eminently satisfactory to all concerned, as might be surmised from his long retention on the board. He was at one time a member of the Republican County Central Committee. He has long been active and influential in local public affairs. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which he joined in 1870, and he has passed all the chairs in the local lodge. He is also a member of the Encampment and has passed all the chairs in it.

Mr. Hough was married on September 19, 1872, to Mary B. Manning, who was born in Darke county, Ohio, January 21, 1856. To this union seven children have been born, two of whom are deceased, the living being named as follows: Clarence R., of Wayne county, Indiana; Elizabeth F. married L. Chenoweth, and they live in Greensfork township, this county; Chester A. is at home; Thomas W. is an undertaker at Spartanburg; Ethel J. is the wife of Noral Anderson and they live in Greensfork township, this county.

ALDEN L. GAINES.

It is no doubt possible for every able-bodied young man to prepare against a period of ill-luck which comes to everyone sometime along the highway of life; but some instead of doing so, trust to fate, which is an elusive and capricious thing, and so, believing in the optimism of the future, they spend all on the present. Alden L. Gaines, farmer of Randolph county, has been wiser, it seems, his prudence having urged him at the outset to pursue a different course, which, all contemplative minds will agree, is wiser, and therefore his example and that of his worthy father before him as well, are to be commended to the younger readers of this work whose destinies are yet matters for future years to determine, and who now hesitate, apparently unable to clearly determine which course it were better to pursue. Mr. Gaines is one of those who believes in keeping busy, being honest, enjoying life as he goes along, but at the same time laying by a competency for the unknown future.

Mr. Gaines was born March 17, 1848, in Herkimer county, New York. He is a son of Hoyt and Sophia (Klingin) Gaines, and was one of four children, the first a son died in infancy; Mary Elizabeth died when a little more than eight years old; Alden L., of this sketch; and Wilbur H., a merchant of Huntsville, who married Zerelda Botkin, and they have four children, Frank, Martha, Frederick and Florence.

Hoyt Gaines, the father, was born near Brattleboro, Vermont, in 1812. When young he removed to Herkimer county, New York, where he engaged in farming and cheese making, removing to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1853 and locating on a farm in West River township and there engaged in general agricultural pursuits on his farm until the death of his wife in 1864, after which he made his home with relatives until 1870, after which he lived with his son, Alden L., until his death, which occurred in 1889. His wife was born in the state of New York, grew up and married there, and her death occurred in this township in 1864, when forty-eight years of age.

Alden L. Gaines grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the district schools. He learned the ins and outs of general farming and stock raising under his father and when a young man he launched out in this line of endeavor for himself and has followed the same to the present time with gratifying results, and he is now owner of a farm of two hundred and seventy-three acres in West River township, on which stand a comfortable dwelling and convenient outbuildings. He raises considerable live stock in connection with general farming. When only sixteen years of age he was thrown on his own resources. He learned the carpenter's trade when a boy, which he followed for some years. In the summer of 1868 he worked on the Union Pacific railroad, then resumed his trade, which he followed until 1883. He has been farming now for a number of years.

Mr. Gaines was married March 18, 1869, to Celia E. Harris, of West River township, a daughter of William P. Harris, and was one of six children, four sons and two daughters. She was born October 21, 1851, and her death occurred May 3, 1910, at the age of fifty-eight years, six months and twelve days. She was an excellent woman in every respect, kind, neighborly and had many friends.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gaines, namely: Clara L., who married Andrew F. Yetter (now deceased) of Hancock county. and Charlotte V., the second child, married Riley Smith Lee, of this county, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work.

Mr. Gaines is a stand-pat Republican in politics, and he attends the Methodist church.

THOMAS A. ALMONRODE.

It is not uncommon for one to take his place in public life through some daring or fortunate stroke of public policy, and ever hold an abiding place in the hearts of friends and neighbors, but to attain a position of honor in a community by dint of the practice of an upright life and without being ambitious for exaltation merely for selfish ends, whose principal desires seem to be to serve others and lead a life of usefulness and honor, is worthy of the highest commendation. Such a gentleman is Thomas A. Almonrode, widely known contractor and agriculturist of Randolph county.

Mr. Almonrode was born in the above named county on February 12, 1857, and here he has been content to spend his life. He is a son of Alexander and Delilah Jane (Pierce) Almonrode, whose family consisted of four children, namely: Anthony R., who is farming near the town of Saratoga, this county, married Rhoda Ann Dickover, and they have three children; Thomas A., of this sketch, was second in order of birth; Luther, an engineer living at Saratoga, married Nora O'Connor; Sarah E. is the wife of D. E. Barber, a farmer and contractor of Saratoga, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work, and they have five children.

Alexander Almonrode, father of our subject, was a native of Virginia, from which state he came to Ohio when young, but shortly afterwards moved on to Indiana, his mother taking up a homestead here and establishing the future home of the family thereon. This old home place is now owned by our subject, he having in his possession the original deed, signed by President James Buchanan. The homestead was proved up in 1840. Alexander Almonrode spent his life on a farm and was a well-known and highly respected citizen in this locality for many decades. His death occurred in Saratoga, March 13, 1909, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. Grandmother Pierce was a native of Randolph county, being of one of our earliest families. Her death occurred at the age of sixty-eight years. In fact, the progenitors of our subject on both sides of the house were among the substantial people of this locality in the early days of its development.

Thomas A. Almonrode grew to manhood on the home farm and there he assisted with the general work when a boy. He received his education in the local rural schools and he has devoted his life principally to general farming and stock raising. He has lived on his present farm for a period of twenty years, and his industry during that time has resulted in improving one of the best farms in the township and also in the accumulation of a substantial competency. He has a good set of buildings on his place and keeps an excellent grade of live stock. In connection with general farming and stock raising he finds time to do a great deal of general contracting, his work always coming up to a high standard.

Mr. Almonrode was married on December 29, 1882, to Katherine Kelley, a daughter of John and Bridget (Hurley) Kelley. The father died when Mrs. Almonrode was a child. He was a farmer and his family consisted of eight children, only two of whom now survive, Mrs. Katherine Almonrode and John Kelley. They both grew up in this county and were educated in the common schools. Mrs. Kelley lived with our subject and wife for twenty-seven years, dying on December 13, 1910.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Almonrode has been without issue, but they have reared two children, namely: Charles Almonrode and Lena Schaffer.

Mr. Almonrode is a member of the United Brethren church and is active in the affairs of the same. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically, he is a Republican, and he served as county assessor for two years in a highly acceptable and praiseworthy manner. He is an influential and substantial man of his locality, a successful farmer and has a large and valuable estate, and is a man respected by all who know him.

LUTHER L. WILLIAMS.

The day of the pioneer in this country is gone, and we are in the midst of a settled stability and permanency. Nevertheless, as we look about us we find a few representatives of the early days, who become at once the center of interest because they carry in their minds recollections of our hardy forefathers. In this connection we make reference to one of the sturdy farmers of Randolph county, Luther L. Williams, who having nearly reached his three score and ten milestone, has come down to us from the pioneer period of which he can relate many interesting things, and he has lived to take part in the momentous transformation of the country. Mr. Williams is one of the veterans left to us who, in the stormy and turbulent days of the great rebellion, gallantly went forth to preserve the Union, thus being entitled to our undying gratitude.

Mr. Williams was born in Fountain City, Wayne county, Indiana, July 30, 1846. He is a son of Nathan and Mary Ann (Brown) Williams, whose family consisted of five children. The father was three times married, and three children were borne by his third wife, two of whom are deceased; his children are Elizabeth, widow of Nathan Addington, a farmer, lives in Richmond, Indiana, and has three children; Luther L., of this review; Mahala married Aaron Adams, a farmer who is now deceased, and to them twelve children were born, ten of whom are still living; Joel H., of Winchester married Mary E. Wright, now deceased, and to them three children were born, one of whom is deceased; John Wesley, who is living retired in Parker, married Rebecca Herron, and they have four children.

Nathan Williams, father of the above named children, was born in Pennsylvania where he spent his childhood, being fourteen years of age when he came to Wayne county, Indiana with his parents. He learned the carpenter's trade when a young man which he followed in connection with contracting and building. After his marriage he moved to Randolph county and bought a farm of forty acres where he spent the rest of his life, dying at the age of sixty-nine years. His wife came from Ohio.

Luther L. Williams grew to manhood on the farm and he received his early education in the common schools. He has devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising, and is the owner of a valuable and highly improved farm of two hundred and twenty acres in Franklin township, Randolph county, and he has a good home. Mr. Williams was elected a director of the Ridgeville State Bank at its organization in 1901, and is still serving in same capacity. Although a mere boy in his teens when the Civil war was in progress, he proved his courage by enlisting in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry in which he served three months, then enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served faithfully in the great army of the Potomac until the close of the war when he was honorably discharged from the service at Harper's Ferry, Virginia. After the war he returned home and resumed farming, and on December 25, 1866 he married Elizabeth A. Roe, a daughter of Abraham and Hannah Roe. Mrs. Williams' father was a notable character in his day and generation. He was one of the very earliest settlers of Randolph county. He was a great hunter and had a record of killing nine hundred and eighty-seven deer. The Indians predominated in this country when he came here and the wilderness had scarcely become familiar to the sound of the axe. He worked for some time in Fort Wayne at six dollars a month. There was but one store there at that time. He walked from Randolph county to that place to obtain the job referred to above. Abraham Roe died in 1911 at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

Luther L. Williams is a prominent member and a liberal supporter of the Friends church. Politically, he is a staunch Republican and he served one term as county commissioner. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Moses Herron Post, No. 261, of Farmland.

Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams, namely: Schuyler Colfax, born in 1867, owns and operates a farm adjoining that of his father's; he married Effie Addington, and they have one child, Doris; Arlam Roy, a farmer of Franklin township, married Maud Gordon, and they have three children, Ruth, Esther and Gordon; India married Harvey Allen, a farmer of Franklin township and they have two children, Martha and Charles Lee; Nova married Clayton Addington, a farmer and to them one child has been born, Bernice.

WILLIAM D. JERLES.

The agricultural interests of Randolph county is well represented by William D. Jerles, one of our most typical twentieth century farmers, enterprising and progressive. His thorough system of tillage, the well-cared for condition of his fields, the excellent order of his buildings and fences, demonstrate his successful management and substantial thrift. This is the result of his having inherited from his ancestors a nature that believes in doing things well and in keeping at it.

Mr. Jerles was born in Greene county, Ohio, February 18, 1857. He is a son of Henry and Caroline (Minton) Jerles, whose family consisted of four children, two sons and two daughters, namely: Laura is deceased; she was the wife of John W. Bird, a farmer of Delaware county, Indiana, and to them three children were born, Bertha G., Mavie O. and Goldwin. William D., of this sketch, was the second child; one son died in infancy; and Eva, now deceased, married H. G. Hayes, a farmer of Randolph county.

Henry Jerles, father of our subject, was born in Ohio, where he spent his earlier years and received such education as the early-day schools afforded. He eventually removed to Indiana and established the family home in Randolph county, where he spent the rest of his life, his death being caused from a disease contracted while a soldier in the Union army, as a member of Company B, First Indiana Heavy Artillery. He was mustered in on March 18, 1864, and discharged January 21, 1866, with an excellent record. Caroline Minton, mother of our subject, was also a native of Ohio and there she grew to womanhood, received a meager common school education and there she and Henry Jerles were married and established their home for a time in Greene county. Both she and her husband died when our subject was young, however she had married a second time, her last husband having been G. H. Byrd. After the death of her first husband she kept a toll gate, and thus she managed, by the help of her children, to keep the wolf from the door. Mr. Jerles was always a farmer.

William D. Jerles grew to manhood on the home farm, where he worked when a boy, and during the winter attended the neighboring schools, receiving a practical education. He has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising, having begun early and has advanced with succeeding years until he is now owner of a finely improved and valuable farm on the banks of the Mississinewa river in Randolph county, where he carries on general farming and stock raising, and where he has a pleasant home and a good set of outbuildings.

Mr. Jerles was married November 12, 1880, to Lucinda E. Wright, a daughter of Washington and Hannah (Thornburg) Wright, who live on a farm near Farmland, this county, and whose family consisted of ten children. Here Mrs. Jerles grew to womanhood and received a common school education.

Two children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Harry Garfield, born October 19, 1881, married Gladys V. Goodwin and they have two children, Gilaff Mariam, born May 21, 1908, and James William, born December 8, 1911. Harry G. Jerles is engaged in farming in this county. Earl W., second child of our subject, is farming in Green township, this county; he married Lizzie Stephens January 10, 1903, and they have two children, Garnett I., born October 28, 1903, and Mary P., born May 26, 1911.

William D. Jerles attends the Methodist church. Politically, he is a Republican. He has served as trustee of his township four years in a highly acceptable manner.

BARZILLA C. MENDENHALL.

That the products of the farm will continue to have a reasonably safe market is indicated by a constantly increasing consumption in our own country; that the business of farming as a business compares favorably with any other vocation in stability; that the security of farm investment assured, invites and encourages the inclination landward. With all of these influences working in one direction supported by the incalculable forces of the agricultural schools and colleges, the press, and vast aggregation of brains identified with the vocation, it would seem that the most radical predictions of the present day may prove far too conservative before another decade has passed. So that man is indeed fortunate who is well established in agricultural pursuits, like Barzilla C. Mendenhall, of Randolph county.

Mr. Mendenhall was born in Stoney Creek township, this county, April 18, 1869. He is a son of William H. and Eunice R. (Clark) Mendenhall, and was one of nine children, six sons and three daughters, namely: Schuyler, who is engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Winchester; Addison, a farmer of Stoney Creek township; Leander, a farmer of Winchester; Barzilla C., of this sketch; Alice, who married Arthur W. Moore, a farmer of Randolph county; Florence, who married S. Ben Templino, an attorney of Winchester; Elwood, a successful doctor and surgeon; Clara married Seward Bollinger, a merchant of Muncie; Arthur, who was graduated from the Pennsylvania University, is a physician in Jamestown, Rhode Island; William H. Mendenhall, the father of the above named children, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, where his family had located upon coming from North Carolina. He was also one of nine children. He settled in Stoney Creek township, Randolph county, when a young man and here he spent the rest of his life engaged in general farming, his death occurring at the age of fifty-nine years. His wife was a native of North Carolina, from which state she came to Indiana in her girlhood. Her death occurred at the aeg of sixty-seven years. She was one of a family of twelve children.

Mr. Mendenhall, of this review, grew to manhood on the old homestead and there he assisted with the general work when a boy. He received his education in the rural schools of his native community and early in life took up general farming for a livelihood, which he has continued to follow to the present time, owning a valuable and well-kept farm. He believes in keeping his buildings in good repair and making the most of his opportunities. He was married February 22, 1896, to Gertrude Clevinger, a daughter of George E. and Sophia (Shockley) Clevinger, a farmer of Nettle Creek township, and was one of four children. She grew to womanhood in her native community and was educated in the common schools.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mendenhall, namely: George Byron, born June 4, 1898; Frank C., born December 16, 1903, died August 14, 1904; Paul, born March 16, 1905.

Mr. Mendenhall is a member of the Friends church.

SAMUEL PAUL.

We of the present generation cannot realize what the young men of the early sixties had to go through with, what a sacrifice they made of home ties, business opportunities and even health and life itself, to say nothing of the suffering in both body and mind; but they did it all gladly for the sole purpose, as the martyred Lincoln said, "in order that this nation, under God, might live." Had they not sacrificed, fought and bled, what a difference in everything there would have been today! No united, prosperous, happy people constituting the richest, mightiest and best nation on the globe. So we owe these veterans of the Union army every possible amount of respect, as we owe their fallen comrades every degree of reverence.

One of this heroic and honored host, whose place of abode is Farmland, Randolph county, is Samuel Paul, one of our most substantial and worthy citizens, a successful man of affairs and a large land owner. He was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, December 31, 1846, and is a son of James and Mary J. (Sullenberger) Paul, and is one of nine children, namely: Allen B., a merchant in Santa Anna, California, married Mary Lowe, of Galion, Ohio, and they have one child; Samuel, of this review; Margaret, Ella, John and William, twins; Anna; Donnan and Frank died in infancy.

The father, James Paul, was a shoemaker by trade in his early life, and was a minister in the United Brethren church, in later life his confirmation certificate dated from 1873. He was a native of Pennsylvania, from which state he removed to Galion, Ohio, where his death occurred at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His wife was a native of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, where her birth occurred on February 6, 1826; she died at Galion, Ohio, in 1884. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a minister in the Presbyterian church.

Samuel Paul received a common school education. When the Civil war came on he enlisted in Philadelphia in Company D, Second Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, under Capt. William P. Briton and Col. R. B. Price, serving gallantly and faithfully for three years in the Army of the Potomac. He is one who survived the horrors of Libby prison, where he was confined four months, having been captured by the enemy. Mr. Paul served in the army under Gen. Phil Sheridan, and he was orderly for some time under General Gregg, during the last year of his service. He fought in the greatest battles of the war, such as Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Fredericksburg, Cold Harbor, and many of lesser note, including skirmishes and raids. He had a horse shot from under him at the time of Stewart's raid on Washington City.

After being honorably discharged from the army, Mr. Paul returned to the peaceful pursuits of life, and for a period of forty years was engaged in railroading, being a passenger conductor for twenty-five years on the Erie, the Wabash and Lake Erie & Western railroad; in fact, was one of the first conductors on the last named road. He was one of the best known railroad men in his part of the country and his long continued service is criterion enough of his faithfulness to duty and of the confidence reposed in his ability, industry and honesty by his employers. He has for some time made his residence near Farmland, where he has a commodious and comfortable home. He owns two well-improved, productive and valuable farms of one hundred and seventy-five acres in this locality which claim his attention, however he takes life easy and merely oversees his property. He lived in Moberly, Missouri, twenty-five years.

Mr. Paul was married August 30, 1870, to Rebecca A. Gray, of Randolph county, where she grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of Lemuel Gray, a highly respected farmer, whose family consisted of nine children, and who owned a good farm in Monroe township, where his death occurred on January 19, 1909. His son, P. W. Gray, now lives on the home place, retired from active life. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Paul was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Paul: Stella May, born September 28, 1875, married George C. Deskin, a railroad man, and they have two children, Anna Mildred and Paul Cortland; Rolla S., born March 28, 1879, is a traveling salesman, married Mildred White, and they have three children, Pauline, Richard S. and Mildred.

IRA E. SMITHSON.

Among the native born farmers and stock men of Randolph county who have forged to the front alone and unaided in their own accord, proving that Aesop's old adage of the crow "where there is a will there is a way," is Ira E. Smithson, who owns a valuable place in the vicinity of Farmland, where he is held in high esteem, like his father before him, for these gentlemen always tried to be good citizens and neighbors as well as good farmers. The same may also be said of the grandfather.

Mr. Smithson was born in Randolph county, March 20, 1879. He is a son of John E. and Caroline (Beck) Smithson, whose family consisted of ten children, named as follows: Jane lives in California; Elvin L. lives in Ridgeville; George M. is deceased; William H. lives in Ridgeville; Sater lives in Long Beach, California; Kelley S., lives near Ridgeville; Charles W. lives in Ridgeville, as does also John M.; Finley T. resides at Farmland; and Ira E., of this sketch. The father of the above named children was born in Randolph county also, being a son of a pioneer who came from Virginia in an early day and here developed a farm by hard work, from the virgin soil, and from that day to the present time the Smithsons have borne excellent reputations for industry and honesty. Here the father of our subject grew to manhood, received a meager education in the log cabin schools and here he devoted his life to general farming. It was in Nettle Creek township, or more properly in what was later designated as that township, that the paternal grandfather, Wesley Smithson, took up land from the government, and here he spent the rest of his life dying at the unusual age of ninety-seven and one-half years. The father of our subject also reached an advanced age, dying at eighty years, in fact, was buried on what would have been his eightieth birthday. He was one of a family of only four children, rather small for that day.

Ira E. Smithson grew to manhood on the home farm and there worked during the summer months and during the winter months attended the district schools.

On June 4, 1902 he married Elsie G. Foster, a daughter of Charles E. Foster, of Farmland, a shoe dealer and well-known citizen, whose family consisted of two sons and a daughter.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Smithson, Helen Dolores, born March 9, 1903; and John Ellsworth, born February 22, 1910.

Mr. Smithson has devoted his life to farming which he began when a young man, however he spent two years in the dry goods business. He has lived on his present excellent farm for a period of nine years, during which he has improved his place until it is equal to any in point of productiveness in the township, and on it stand a commodious dwelling and convenient outbuildings. In connection with general farming he pays considerable attention to raising livestock, always keeping a good grade.

He has been assessor of his township for a period of six years, discharging the duties of this office in an entirely satisfactory manner to his constituents. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Woodmen. He attends the Friends church.

PHILIP ZIMMERMAN.

The gentleman whose name forms the caption of this brief outline is peculiarly entitled to mention in this volume along with other leading citizens of Randolph county. Philip Zimmerman was born on the old homestead in Green township, Randolph county, September 25, 1870, and in view of the fact that his family history is set forth on other pages of this book it will not be reproduced here, the biographer respectfully referring the reader to the sketches of Emanuel and A. E. Zimmerman. Mr. Zimmerman, like all country lads, grew to manhood very close to nature and in the crop seasons assisted with the general work about the farm. In the winter months he attended the rural schools in his neighborhood, receiving a practical education. He remained at home until arriving at his majority, when he began life for himself as a farmer, which vocation he has followed, having been very successful and has acquired a beautiful home largely through his own efforts and that of his worthy wife.

Mr. Zimmerman was married October 21, 1897, to Amy D. Boyer, a daughter of A. C. Boyer, a successful farmer of Jay county, Indiana, now deceased. Mrs. Zimmerman was reared to womanhood in Jay county and there received her education in the public schools. She has two sisters, both married.

Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman, namely: Forrest John, born September 14, 1898; Charles Edward, born June 18, 1900; Mary Marie, born August 22, 1902; Howard Boyer, born September 15, 1904; Harold Leroy, born October 12, 1907; Willard Frank, born March 18, 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Zimmerman are now enjoying the fruits of their labors surrounded by many friends. Mr. Zimmerman is a thorough, up-to-date farmer and raises a good grade of stock and is most favorably known.

Mr. Zimmerman and family are members of the Evangelical church at Emmettsville and he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Ridgeville, Indiana.

WILLIAM H. SARFF.

The name of William H. Sarff, one of our venerable native-born citizens, was too well-known to the readers of this biographical compendium to need any formal introduction here, where he was for many decades regarded as a representative citizen of Randolph county, in every relation of life, for he discharged every duty devolved upon him with commendable fidelity and proved himself eminently worthy the high esteem and confidence in which he was universally held. He was always interested in whatever tended to promote the prosperity of his community and to him as much as to any other man in the county is indebted the development which has characterized it of recent years. He used his influence in behalf of its material, civic, and moral upbuilding and benevolent enterprises, being a friend and liberal patron of the church and the school, believing these to be the most potential factors for substantial good that the world has ever known or can know.

Mr. Sarff was born in Randolph county, Indiana, October 4, 1843, and therefore attained his threescore and ten years, the span of mortal life allotted by the divinely inspired Psalmist. He was a son of John and Saloma (Hoke) Sarff, whose family consisted of eleven children, ten sons and one daughter, named as follows: Isaac, Jonas, Catherine, John, Jacob, who was a minister, and Seth, all now deceased, the last named being accidentally killed; Mannases is a retired farmer, living in Minnesota; Peter is deceased; Joshua has been a justice of the peace for a period of twenty-five years; Joseph is a truck farmer in Oregon; William H., of this sketch, now deceased, was the youngest of the family.

John Sarff, father of the above-named children, was born in York county, Pennsylvania, and there he grew to manhood, received a meager education in the early-day schools and was married, remaining in his native state until several of his children were born, then removed to Richland county, Ohio, subsequently coming on to Indiana and located in Jackson township, Randolph county, in 1840, and here he spent the rest of his life, dying August 13, 1869. He devoted his life to farming and was a hard-working, honest man, respected by all who knew him. His father was a native of Germany, from which country he emigrated to the United States when seventeen years old and settled in the state of Pennsylvania. The latter's father was an official in Germany. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in York county, Pennsylvania. She was a daughter of John Hoke and was one of a large family. Her death occurred September 8, 1869, at the age of sixty-nine years.

William H. Sarff, of this sketch, grew to manhood on the home farm in this county, and there worked hard when a boy and he received a good common school education which was greatly supplemented in after years by wide home study until he was a well-informed man on various topics. He first married Mahala Warren, of Saratoga, this county, December 4, 1862, and to this union eight children were born, namely: Joseph, a farmer, of Minnesota, married Emma Goff, and they have seven children; Laird M., who lives in Missouri, married twice, first, Rosa Barber, and then Jessie Davis, and he had four children by his first wife; Della May married Austin Bragg, a farmer near Saratoga, and they have six children; Justin B., a farmer near Saratoga, married May Lollar, and they have five children; Clara A., who married H. Stuckman, a farmer of Minnesota, has four children; Florence L., who married John Jeanette, died at the age of thirty-three years; Llewallyn died as a result of an accident, at the age of eleven years; John W., who is engaged in the lumber business in Missouri, married May Shaw, and has three children. There are also three great-grandchildren.

Mr. Sarff's first wife died February 3, 1886, and on November 4, 1886, he married his second wife, who was Celena M. Halverson, a native of Iowa, a daughter of Thomas and Eliza A. (Ross) Halverson. The father was a native of Iowa and the mother a native of Canada. The following children were born to this second union: Harold G., born June 26, 1890, is farming in Randolph county; Nellie F., born in Minnesota, September 26, 1892;

Helen Irma, born February 10, 1900, just one hundred years younger than her grandmother.

Mr. Sarff moved to Minnesota in 1870, when twenty-seven years old, and remained there for a period of twenty-five years, engaged in the ministry of the United Brethren church, occupying one pulpit for a period of sixteen years, his long retention being sufficient criterion of his ability as a minister and of his popularity with his congregation. He had studied at home five years preparing for the ministry, and being by nature an earnest, logical and forceful speaker, he was a great success in this field of endeavor, doing an incalculable amount of good wherever he labored. He returned to Indiana in 1896 and took up farming, which he continued in connection with preaching occasionally, but failing health made it necessary for him to give up the regular work. Rev. Sarff was called to his reward May 10, 1914, aged nearly seventy-one years. Politically, he was a Prohibitionist, also an influential man in his community.

The following is taken from a Winchester paper:

"In December, 1856, William H. Sarff was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal church at Old Prospect and was elected class leader, in which capacity he served for ten years. In the year of 1875 Brother Sarff was deeply impressed and felt his call to the ministry. He promised his Lord that he would go into the great, worthy and noble calling. Shortly after the death of his first wife, Brother Sarff returned to that much needy field of God's kingdom to preach his everlasting gospel. Brother Sarff received his first appointment in the Minnesota U. B. conference by Rev. S. D. Kemerer, presiding elder of the United Brethren church. He traveled what was called the Long Prairie Mission. On September 7, 1878, he joined the Minnesota Annual Conference, which was held in Faribault county, and was licensed as an annual conference preacher by Bishop Milton Wright, the father of the great modern inventors, Orval, who now resides in Dayton, Ohio, Wilbur having died a little better than a year ago. At this conference he received his first appointment by the authority of the conference and was returned to his former charge, serving this circuit for almost sixteen years. The greater part of his twenty-three years was spent in Minnesota. Receiving from his first year's labor $75.00 from the Mission Board and $43.00 from his charge as a remuneration and traveling about 5,000 miles, preaching three times on Sunday and often through the week; Brother Sarff said in his diary: 'The country was new, roads bad and the people poor financially, but rich in grace, kindness and full of love.' He was ordained to the ministry by Bishop Jonathan Weaver at an annual conference held at Cardova, Minnesota, October 13, 1883. He continued preaching in this section until 1896, when his health began failing and he, with his family, moved back to the vicinity of Saratoga. His sons and daughters are only left to duplicate his life in the Christian faith. It can be well said of him, 'I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have run the race, with patience; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto me, and not only to me, but unto all that love his appearing.'"

MARY FRANCES GWIN.

Mary Frances Gwin, an efficient and popular teacher at Huntsville, Randolph county, was born August 22, 1875 in this county, and is a representative of one of our sterling and influential old families. She is a daughter of John and Josephine (Paschall) Gwin, the father who was a carpenter and builder, was also a native of Randolph county, where his people settled in pioneer days, and here he grew to manhood, received his education in the early-day schools, and spent his life in his home community, dying at the early age of twenty-seven years, in 1882. Mr. Gwin was the son of Oliver and Eliza (Worth) Gwin. The Worths came from the Carolinas and were noted for their zeal in the abolition movement. The Rev. Aaron Worth, the Prohibition worker is an uncle of Mr. Gwin.

Jesse Zane Paschall, the maternal grandfather of our subject, was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he learned the trades of cabinet and wagon making. From that state he removed to Ohio where he remained only a short time, then came on to Indiana, locating in Randolph county, where he followed his trades, and here he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1865. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and as a result of his military career he lost his membership in the Quaker church. The maternal grandmother of our subject, who was known in her maidenhood as Mary A. Sheppard, was a native of Virginia where she grew to maturity, and from there emigrated to Indiana when twenty-five years of age, and married Ezra Doughty of Centerville. He lived but a few months and after his death, she married Jesse Paschall. In 1866 Mrs. Paschall was appointed postmistress at Huntsville (Trenton postoffice), which position she held satisfactorily until her death in 1901. The mother of the subject of this sketch was born in Huntsville and here grew to womanhood, received such educational advantages as the early-day schools afforded and here has continued to reside. Too much can not be said of the sterling character of Mrs. Gwin, who was left when young with a family of three small children and limited means; however, she has done well her part having reared her family to manhood and womanhood, giving each an excellent education. To John Gwin and wife three children were born, named as follows: Mary Frances, of this review; Albert and Alma, twins, born January 9, 1881; Albert is farming near Huntsville, and Alma married Herbert Kabel of Winchester and they have two children, Roger and Virginia.

Mary Frances Gwin grew to womanhood in her native vicinity and she received her early education in the common schools, then entered Central Normal school at Danville, Indiana, and was graduated there, completing the scientific course. She subsequently took additional work at the State University and at Winona, and, being ever a profound home student, she has become exceptionally well educated, and has long been regarded as one of the most scholarly women of Randolph county. By force of strong individuality, she has achieved more than ordinary success in one of the most responsible and exacting callings, and won for herself an enviable position among the leading educators of the section of Indiana of which this volume treats. She has devoted her life to teaching since leaving college and has been very successful, her services being in great demand, and she is popular with both pupils and patrons. She has kept fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to educational work. She first taught five years in the county schools, then four years in the intermediate grades in the Modoc schools, and for the past eleven years she has been in the Huntsville school, her long retention being sufficient criterion of her eminent satisfaction.

ANDREW C. DRAGOO.

The biographies of the representative men of a county, either of a past or present generation, bring to light many hidden treasures of mind, character and courage, well calculated to arouse the pride of their descendants and of the community, and it is a source of regret that the people are not more familiar with the personal history of such men, in the ranks of whom may be found tillers of the soil, merchants, teachers, as well as lawyers, physicians, bankers and members of other vocations and professions. Randolph county, Indiana, has been the home and scene of labor of many men who have not only led lives which should serve as a lesson and inspiration to those on the stage of life's activities, but who have also been of commendable service in important avenues of usefulness in various lines. The late Andrew C. Dragoo was such a man. He was for many decades one of the most progressive and substantial general agriculturists and stock men of Delaware county, and was one of the gallant veterans of the Civil war, a man who, while laboring for his own advancement sought to do his full share of the general work of development in his community as a good citizen.

Mr. Dragoo was born August 23, 1844 in Clinton City, Ohio, and he was a son of Andrew and Nancy (Curtis) Dragoo, whose family consisted of eleven children. The father was five years old when he was brought by his family to Indiana and here he grew to manhood and purchased eighty acres of land near the town of Parker from the government, which he cleared and developed by long, persistent work, and which is still owned by the family. The paternal grandfather of our subject was a native of Ripley county, Ohio and he devoted his life to farming. The mother of the subject of this memoir was also a native of Ohio.

Andrew C. Dragoo grew to manhood on the home farm and there he worked when a boy. He received a practical education in the common schools of his community. On June 15, 1871 he married Mary C. Baughn, a daughter of Lystra Baughn. To Mr. and Mrs. Dragoo were born seven children, namely: William Arthur, who is farming near Muncie, Indiana, married Gertrude Philip and they have two daughters; Frank Cameron, assistant cashier of the bank at Parker, Indiana, married Isca Cunningham, and they had three children, losing one; Charles W. died in infancy; Clara Alma, who married Edward Sipe, lives on the old homestead and they have two sons; Anna, born July 27, 1882, is at home; Inez O. married Russell Gabel, lives on one of the home farms, and they have three children; Susie died in infancy. The living children received good educational advantages and are well situated in life and well thought of in their respective communities.

Mr. Dragoo was one of the patriotic and courageous sons of the North who offered his services and life, if need be, to the government during the crisis of the early sixties, serving most faithfully as a member of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, during which time he contracted a disease that eventually caused his death half a century later, in 1912.

Mr. Dragoo devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, and, being a persistent worker and a man of exceptionally sound judgment and wise foresight he prospered with advancing years, and he left his widow four well-improved, productive and valuable farms, a beautiful home and a comfortable competency. Fraternally, he belonged to the Free and Accepted Masons, and, according to those who knew him best, he evidently made an effort to carry the sublime precepts of this time-honored lodge into his every-day life, for, like the one referred to in Holy Writ "he was a good man and just," charitable, hospitable, neighborly, scrupulously honest and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

Mrs. Dragoo is a woman of many commendable qualities which have attracted to her a host of warm friends who delight in visiting her neatly furnished and attractive home in Parker.

PHILIP KABEL.

The character of a community is determined in a large measure by the lives of a comparatively few of its members. If its moral and intellectual status be good, if in a social way it is a pleasant place in which to reside, if its reputation for the integrity of its citizens has extended into other localities, it will be found that the standards set by the leading men have been high, and their influence such as to mould their characters and shape the lives of those with whom they mingle. In placing Philip Kabel, the able and popular cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Winchester, in the front rank of such men as referred to above, justice is rendered, a biographical fact recognized throughout Randolph county by those at all familiar with his life record. Although a quiet and unassuming man, with no ambition for public position or leadership, he has contributed much to the material and civic advancement of the community, while his admirable qualities of head and heart and the straightforward, upright course of his daily life, have tended greatly to the moral standing of the circles in which he moves and have given him a reputation for integrity and correct conduct such as few achieve.

Mr. Kabel was born February 1, 1879, in Winchester, Indiana. He is a son of John and Rebecca (Mendenhall) Kabel, two sterling old families of this county, the grandparents on both sides of the house having emigrated from Germany to this state in an early day, and here became well established and influential. The paternal grandfather, Philip Kabel, was born in 1810, grew up in Germany and was educated there, and when twenty-two years old, in 1832, emigrated to the United States, locating first in Portland, Maine, later moved to Massachusetts, then to Ohio, and finally to Indiana. His death occurred in 1897. The maternal grandfather, Nathan Mendenhall, died when his daughter, Rebecca, was a small girl. She was born in October, 1855, in Randolph county, where she grew to womanhood and was educated, and here she spent her life, dying December 22, 1898. John Kabel was born in this county in April, 1846, and here he grew to manhood and was educated; for many years he was a traveling salesman, later engaged extensively in the wholesale produce business, but is now living retired.

His wife was an active member of the Church of Christ, and was a woman of commendable Christian character, and had a host of friends. To these parents two children were born—Alonzo J., born March 5, 1876, who is manager of the Western Union Telegraph office in Winchester; and Philip, of this review.

Philip Kabel was reared in Winchester and here received his early education, graduating from the high school in 1896, then attended Earlham College at Richmond, Indiana. When a boy he spent considerable time on a farm, herding cattle, also worked in a factory, clerked in a store in Winchester and did a number of things in order to get a start in the business world. After leaving college he taught school for a period of eight years in Randolph county in a highly acceptable manner and was regarded as one of the county's leading educators, for he promulgated modern ideas in his work and was both an instructor and entertainer in the school room, but believing that the business world held greater opportunities for him he accepted a position as assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Winchester in 1906, and his work was so faithfully and conscientiously done that he was advanced to the responsible position of cashier at the death of the former cashier in 1909, the duties of which he is now discharging in a manner that not only reflects credit upon himself but is eminently satisfactory to the stockholders and patrons of this sound, conservative and popular institution. He is also a stockholder in the same. This is a state bank.

Mr. Kabel was married August 14, 1901, to Alice Reynard, who was born in Randolph county July 12, 1885, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Elza and Martha (Adamson) Reynard, both natives of this county, also, and here they grew up and were married. The father survives, but the mother has been deceased some time.

The union of our subject and wife has been graced by the birth of two children—Martha Rebecca, born January 27, 1903, who is attending school; and Elbert Ivan, born November 15, 1910.

Mr. Kabel is active in local public affairs. In 1910 he was elected a member of the Winchester school board for a term of three years, and he did so much toward improving local educational conditions that he was re-elected for another term in 1913. He is also a member of the Fountain Park Cemetery Board. He belongs to the National Geographical Society and the American Historical Association, having been elected to the latter as a result of his work on "The Underground Railroad." He has long been interested in the history of his native county, from its earliest days to the present, and is exceptionally well versed in the same. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

JAMES M. FLETCHER.

One of the well-known, influential and worthy citizens of Winchester, Randolph county, is James M. Fletcher, the present able and popular probate officer, who formerly served the county as sheriff and the city as marshal. He has proven himself to be a man of quick perception, broad ideas and honorable character, every ready to serve his community whose interests he has long had at heart, and the high esteem which is universally accorded him is therefore well deserved. He was for a number of years successfully engaged in the cooperage business here, his being one of the leading industries of our thriving county-seat. He is a man who is eminently deserving of special mention in the present historical and biographical work, both for what he is and for what he has accomplished for the community.

Mr. Fletcher was born May 20, 1856, in New Burlington, Clinton county, Ohio. He is a son of George and Nancy (Pomeroy) Fletcher. In 1865 the family moved from the Buckeye state to Muncie, Indiana, and after a few years they came on to Winchester, this county, where the family has ever since resided. The father was a cooper by trade, and here he established himself in his business and spent the rest of his life, as did also his wife, and they are buried in the cemetery here. Since that time James M. Fletcher, of this sketch, has remained a continuous resident of Randolph county. He received a common school education, and when a boy learned the cooper's trade under his father, who was skilled in every phase of the business, consequently, the son learned it right and became also a skilled artisan. He worked for some time for Henry Carter and Wysong Miller in Winchester. He then engaged in the cooperage business for himself until he was twenty-two years old, when he was elected city marshal, which office he held for a period of twelve years, his long incumbency being sufficient criterion of his exceptional ability, his careful attention to the city's well-being and to his popularity. In 1890 he was elected sheriff of Randolph county, and, filling the office so satisfactorily was elected for a second term, thus serving in all four years, making one of the best officials the county has ever had, according to the consensus of opinion. After the expiration of his term of office he engaged with much success in private detective work. He then became probation officer and has continued to serve in that capacity for a period of nine years, or since 1904, giving the public his usual high-grade service and general satisfaction. He seems to be well qualified by nature for the duties of such offices as he has filled, being ready to grasp a situation in an instant and knowing what to do and having the courage to do it, besides he is broad-minded, capable, honest and persevering, always looking out for the best interests of the public.

Mr. Fletcher was one of the promoters of the Eastern Indiana Telephone system, of which company he has been a director for the past fifteen years, and has done much to make it a successful venture, this concern having grown to be a large and important institution.

He is a Republican in politics and active in party affairs, and has frequently served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men.

Mr. Fletcher has been twice married, first, in May, 1878, to Ellen Deardorf, daughter of Lafayette and Jane Deardorf, of Winchester. To this union one daughter, Esther, was born; she is now the wife of Thomas M. Thornbury, of Winchester. The wife and mother was called to her rest in the fall of 1879. On April 30, 1881, Mr. Fletcher married Anna Doyle, daughter of Michael and Bridget Doyle, of Winchester, and to this union was born one child, May, who is at home.

Mr. Fletcher and family affiliate with the Presbyterian church, although they are not members of the same. The family home is at 235 South Main street, Winchester, Indiana.

FREDERICK S. CALDWELL.

Frederick S. Caldwell, of Winchester, at present a member of the appellate court of Indiana, was born at Long Bottom, Ohio, January 17, 1862. He was educated in the district schools of that state, and in 1885 he was graduated from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, receiving the highest class honors, and was made valedictorian of his class. In 1882, when but twenty years of age, he was chosen as principal of the schools at New Amsterdam, Harrison county, Indiana, where he served with marked success for two years. In August, 1885, having already received a state license in Ohio, he came to Winchester and was chosen principal of the city schools. Later he secured a state license in Indiana, the youngest applicant ever receiving such license in the state up to that time.

He taught continuously for a period of six years as principal of the Winchester schools, and was then chosen superintendent, but retired at the end of one year to take up the practice of law, a subject to which he had devoted studious energy, both day and night, for several years.

In 1892 Mr. Caldwell formed a law partnership with Wesley W. Canada, now United States consul at Vera Cruz, Mexico. In 1897 he became a law partner of Mr. A. L. Nichols, whose term as county clerk had then expired, and in 1899 he joined with Hon. James S. Engle, present circuit judge, which partnership lasted until Mr. Engle assumed his duties, five years ago. He was then for about a year associated with Mr. Walter S. Parry in the practice.

In 1886, at Long Bottom, Ohio, he was united in marriage to Miss Emma Stewart. To this union were born two daughters, namely: Bernice Stewart Caldwell, now the wife of Fred Tucker, of St. Louis, Missouri, and Gladys Lucile Caldwell, now the wife of Harry Oliver, of Winchester.

In the spring of 1912 Mr. Caldwell became a candidate for supreme judge before the Democratic State Convention at Indianapolis. While defeated in that race, yet so highly was he esteemed by those with whom he came in contact, and particularly so well impressed with him was Governor Samuel M. Ralston, that he resolved to know him better. To this end Judge Caldwell was chosen as one of the governor's legal advisers to pass upon the enactments of the General Assembly of 1913. A vacancy occurring on the appellate bench on the first of September, 1913, Governor Ralston appointed Judge Caldwell to the position. On March 19, 1914, he was nominated by acclamation at the Democratic State convention to continue in the same office.

Judge Caldwell is accredited by his friends as being a very eminent lawyer and judge of the law. To its study he has brought a clear, analytical mind; keen in the discernment of complicated problems and especially endowed with that temperament so desirable in a judicial capacity.

Since 1892 Judge Caldwell has been active in each and every campaign, speaking throughout eastern Indiana. He wins favor with men of all political parties, because of his attitude of fairness and the manifest conviction in his own political principles. He is also popular as a speaker on educational, fraternal and religious matters, and is a favorite at family reunions.

Mr. Caldwell is a member of the Disciples church, and for many years has taught a Sunday school class of men and women, enrolling more than a hundred members. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows and the Masons, all of Winchester.

Among his colleagues on the appellate bench, Judge Caldwell is held in high esteem and some very important cases have been turned over to him on which to prepare the opinions. They regard his briefs as models of precision, and when knotty problems come up for solution he is not satisfied until he gets to the bottom, and knows the whole law pertaining to any set of circumstances.

Judge Caldwell's democracy has been subjected to the acid test, for he has long resided in a county normally Republican by twenty-five hundred majority, yet the fervor of his Jeffersonian principles has undergone no abatement. Equality before the law for all men is an axiom he backs up with manly vigor. Judge Caldwell's friends take great satisfaction in his elevation to the bench, and all voice the sentiment that his career may be extended through the coming years, that he may prove his worth to his state.

CHARLES L. BOTKIN, M. D.

Conspicuous among the younger physicians of Randolph county is Dr. Charles L. Botkin, of Farmland, a worthy representative of one of our sterling old families, members of which have long made their influence felt for the general upbuilding of this locality. The Doctor has led a well-regulated life, thereby gaining the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come into contact.

Doctor Botkin was born in Randolph county July 6, 1878. He is a son of Thomas W. and Mary E. (Irvin) Botkin, the mother a daughter of Lafayette Irvin. The Doctor had two brothers, namely: John L., a farmer in this county, married Suda Cheesman, and they have two children, Marvin T., born in 1897, and Harold D., born in 1899. The other brother, Clyde E., now deceased, was a physican at Parker City, was graduated from the Indiana Medical College at Indianapolis, with the class of 1907, after which he at once took up the practice of medicine at Parker City, and was making a great success. His death occurred here in 1910, at the early age of twenty-eight years. He married Ruby Wood, a daughter of Henry F. Wood, the present county auditor.

Thomas W Botkin, father of our subject, was born in Randolph county and here he has spent his life, being now sixty-nine years old. He, too, is a physician, his name having long been a household word throughout the county. He has practiced for a period of forty-five years, principally at Farmland. He was graduated from the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, and, subsequently, took a post-graduate course in a Chicago medical school. He was a soldier in the Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war.

Dr. John W. Botkin, the paternal grandfather of our subject, was also born and reared in Randolph county. He was the first of the Doctor Botkins here, having been also a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College, of Cincinnati, Ohio. He began practicing medicine at the age of twenty years and continued with uninterrupted success until the day of his death, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. He was one of the leading pioneer physicians of this section of the state, and was hailed as a leader among his professional brethren and was popular with all who knew him. His father was from North Carolina, and was one of the very earliest settlers in this part of Indiana. He was a sterling type of frontiersmen. The mother's people, the Irvins, also hailed from North Carolina, but she was born in Indiana. Her mother came from North Carolina to Kentucky, thence to Indiana. The great-grandfather of our subject took up a very large tract of land from the government.

Dr. Charles L. Botkin received his early education in the Winchester high school, then was a pupil at the Indianapolis Business College, after which he entered the Indiana Medical College, from which institution he was graduated in 1904. He then spent a year and a half in the Deaconess Hospital, Indianapolis, as senior house surgeon, then took up the practice of medicine in Farmland, March 1, 1906, and here he has remained to the present time. He seems to have inherited many of the peculiar attributes of head and heart necessary to the success and popularity of the general physician and surgeon.

Doctor Botkin was married April 19, 1910, to Myrtle Garrett, a daughter of Fremont and Adaline (Trueblood) Garrett, a prominent lawyer of Randolph county, whose family consisted of three daughters and one son, namely: Edna, married Walter Ziegler, a salesman, of Toledo, Ohio, nad they have four children; Nellie is the wife of J. D. Barger, a groceryman, of Ridgeville, and they have one son, James; Arthur, of Cleveland, Ohio, is with the Multigraph Sales Company, is married and has seven children; Myrtle, wife of Doctor Botkin. Mrs. Botkin's mother, Adaline Trueblood, was the daughter of Jonathan Trueblood, who was a native of North Carolina. The parents of the above named children are both deceased.

Politically, Doctor Botkin is a Republican. Fraternally, he belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, is a Knights Templar, and he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He attends the Methodist Episcopal church.

DANIEL W. GROVE.

The gentleman of whom the biographer now writes is widely known as one of the honored citizens of Randolph county, for Mr. Grove has been actively identified with the agricultural interests of Monroe township. His well-directed efforts in the practical affairs of life, his capable management of his own business interests and his sound judgment have brought to him prosperity, and his life demonstrates what may be accomplished by the man of energy and ambition, who is not afraid of work and who has the "nerve" to continue his labors, even in the face of seemingly discouraging circumstances.

Daniel W. Grove was born in Monroe township, Randolph county, September 6, 1857. He is a son of David H. and Susan A. (Hill) Groves, to whom eight children were born, only Daniel W., of this review, and John B. are living at this writing; the latter lives near Redkey, Indiana; he married Flora Ludwick, and they have one child, Etta.

David H. Grove was born in West Virginia, from which state he moved to Ohio with his father, where he was married, and from there moved to Indiana in the early fifties, and bought a farm between Parker and Farmland, which he later sold and moved to the farm in Monroe township in 1866, which place is owned and occupied by his son, Daniel W., of this sketch. The elder Grove was a successful agriculturist and stock raiser and provided well for his family. His death occurred in 1901. The paternal grandfather was also a native of West Virginia, from which state he removed to Clinton county, Ohio, where he bought a farm, but subsequently moved to Indiana, purchasing another farm, on which he spent most of his subsequent life, dying in September, 1876. The elder Grove went back to Ohio and spent nine years. He followed merchandising at Redkey for a period of seven years. The mother of our subject was left an orphan at an early age, and little is known of her family history.

Daniel W. Grove was reared on the home farm and he received his education in the public schools. On December 14, 1879, he married Martha E. Hupp, a daughter of Samuel Hupp, who is now living in Parker at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. His family consisted of six sons and two daughters, namely: Earl H., who is engaged in the oil business near Parker, married Luella Ulhom, and they have one son; Herbert P., of Parker, married Julia Life, and they have two daughters; Charles E. married Mary Hafkameyer, and is living on a farm; Opal, who lives in Parker, Indiana, is the wife of Hovey James, a machinist; David H., of Detroit, Michigan, married Stella Kelley. He is also a machinist by trade; Marce H. married Neva Joy, and they live on a farm; Lawrence, at home; and Martha E., wife of Mr. Grove.

Daniel W. Grove has devoted his life successfully to agricultural pursuits, now owning a large and well-cultivated farm, where he carries on general farming and stock raising, and on which stands an excellent set of buildings.

Like the rest of the family, Mr. Grove is a Republican in politics, and he has been a loyal supporter of the same. He has been township trustee during the past six years, filling the office in a manner that has won the hearty appreciation of all concerned. He was very largely instrumental in securing for the town of Parker the magnificent new school house, one of the finest in the county, one that would be a credit to a town much larger than this and which will long be of service to the community. Mr. Grove is to be heartily commended for his efforts in this direction.

HARRY I. DROLLINGER.

One of the progressive, talented and most promising of the younger journalists of the section of the Hoosier state of which this biographical compendium treats is Harry I. Drollinger, editor and owner of The Ridgeville Star, and one of the influential young men of Randolph county. He seems to be the possessor of all the peculiar attributes that go to make up the successful newspaper man, and, being uniformly fair and courteous with his numerous patrons, he has the good will and respect of all who know or have dealings with him.

Mr. Drollinger was born in Roann, Wabash county, Indiana, July 25, 1890. He is a son of Martin Van Buren and Celia A. (Belden) Drollinger, and is one of a family of twelve children, namely: Vadia died at the age of thirty-five, leaving a husband and four children; Aaron, a farmer and stockman of Arkansas, is a widower and has two sons; Rose, of Roann, married Marion Miller, a farmer and stock buyer, and their union has been without issue; Leander, a farmer of Wabash county, married Bessie Appleman, and they have one child; William, a farmer of Wabash county, married Bessie Swisher, and they have three sons; Irwin died when he was four years old; Eva, of Albany, Indiana, married Milton S. Bolerjack, owner of The Albany Chronicle, and they have one son; Grace, of Fort Wayne, is the widow of Edward Quick, a guard at the state prison, who was killed by a trusty; Marie died in infancy; Grover was next in order of birth; Harry I., of this review; Clyde, of Saratoga, owns and edits The Independent, and he enjoys the distinction of being what is doubtless the youngest editor in Indiana; he took charge of a paper when seventeen years old, formerly owning a paper at Bryan, then purchased the one at Saratoga; he is a practical newspaper man, started at the bottom of the ladder, and the future holds much of promise for him, as it does our subject.

The father, Martin V. Drollinger, was reared on the farm and received a meager education in the early-day schools. He devoted his life successfully to general farming and stock raising, rearing his large family in comfort and respectability on the old home place and gave them proper educational advantages. He was born in Ohio, but was brought by his parents to Indiana when an infant, the family locating on a three-hundred-acre tract which our subject's paternal grandfather had taken up from the government, which he cleared, erected a log cabin and began life here in typical pioneer fashion, and in due course of time had one of the best farms and most comfortable homes in the township. His son, Martin V., became owner of this place, which he conducted in such a skillful manner that it retained its original fertility. The death of Martin V. Drollinger occurred in Fort Wayne October 27, 1911. His widow still survives, being now advanced in years. Like her honored husband before her, she has a host of warm friends in Randolph county.

Harry I. Drollinger grew to manhood on the home farm and there assisted with the general work when a boy, and he received his education in the public schools of Fort Wayne, which has been greatly supplemented in after years by wide home reading and by contact with the business world.

Our subject was married February 16, 1912, to Hattie Stiek, a daughter of Samuel and Eunice Stiek, a highly respected family of Randolph county, where Mrs. Drollinger grew to womanhood and received her education in the public schools. Her father was a cabinet manufacturer.

To our subject and wife one child, a daughter, was born on January 1, 1913, who bears the name of Marie Dolores.

Mr. Drollinger took up the newspaper business when a boy and has mastered the various departments of the same. He has owned and published The Ridgeville Star for four years and has made his paper a moulder of public opinion in this vicinity and a factor for good, upholding whatever tends to promote the best interests of the township and county. His paper is rapidly increasing in circulation, and it is a valuable news dispenser as well as advertising medium, and is up-to-date from a mechanical standpoint; its proprietor, being an uncompromising Democrat, it has done much for the success of the party in this section of the state.

ALBERT C. GADDIS.

One of the farmers of West River township, who has carefully studied agricultural conditions for a half century and has profited thereby is Albert C. Gaddis, a worthy native son of Randolph county. He was born in the above-named township and county October 28, 1844, and is a son of Elisha P. and Lydia (Macy) Gaddis, and is one of eleven children, namely: T. W., Mrs. Sarah A. Harris, Albert C., of this sketch; Allen died in youth; Warren also died in early life; Mrs. Nancy E. Shoemaker, Mrs. Phoebe E. Marshall, deceased; Hiram A., Mrs. Caroline Tague died at the age of forty years; Austin S. is deceased, and Mrs. Nora E. Barker.

The father of the above-named children was born in Pennsylvania, but was only six years old when his parents brought him to Ohio. He subsequently removed to Indiana, located in Randolph county, where he married Lydia Macy and here established the future home of the family and devoted his life successfully to farming. His death occurred in 1886, his widow surviving until 1907. Her parents came to this locality from North Carolina.

Albert C. Gaddis grew to manhood on the home farm and received his education in the rural schools of his neighborhood. On March 31, 1878, he married Clara Evolen Hunt, a daughter of Lewis W. Hunt, whose family consisted of five chidren. Mr. Hunt established his home on a farm in West River township, where Mrs. Gaddis grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools.

Mr. Gaddis has only one child, Myrtle A., who was born January 25, 1879, and she grew to womanhood and was educated in her native community; she married James L. Tullis, a farmer, and they have two children, Clara N. and Albert Harvey.

In May, 1864, Mr. Gaddis enlisted for service in the Union army in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served one hundred days and was honorably discharged. He has devoted his life to general farming, and has lived on and operated the home farm since 1881, keeping it well-improved and under a fine state of cultivation, carrying on general farming and stock raising in a manner that has stamped him as equal to our best husbandmen. He has kept the buildings well repaired, and a good grade of live stock is always to be seen about his place.

Politically, he is a Republican.

JAMES ADAMSON.

One of the farmers of West River township, Randolph county, who has the sagacity to grasp properly present-day conditions and to profit by this insight is James Adamson, a scion of one of the oldest and best-known families of the locality of which this history treats. He was born in the above-named township and county January 14, 1844. He is a son of John and Phoebe (Spray) Adamson, the father born in West River township and the mother was a native of North Carolina, from which state she came with her people first to Ohio, later to Indiana. Our subject's grandfather, Abraham Adamson, was twice married, first to a Miss Puckett, by whom two children were born, and secondly to Nancy Botkin, which union resulted in the birth of eight children. John Adamson married Phoebe Spray, and they had nine children, namely: James, our subject; Sarah, Martha, Abraham, Samuel, Elizabeth, Charlotte, Mary, George. His first wife died in 1872, and subject's father married second to Mary Ann McFarland, a native of Jay county, and they had two children, Edward and Annie. John Adamson died in 1889. He was a farmer through life.

James Adamson was reared on the home farm, where he found plenty of hard work to do, for a half century ago, when he was a boy, everybody worked clearing and developing farms. He received the usual education for those days, which was not by any means extensive, but, like most of the people of that period, he added to his early training by contact with the world and by home reading, and is now a very well informed man in a general way. When the Civil war came on he enlisted in Company D, of the famous Sixty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years faithfully for the Union, seeing much hard service and taking part in engagements at Richmond, Kentucky, Alexandria, Louisiana and Blakeley, Alabama. He was mustered out at Mobile, Alabama, July 5, 1865. He then returned home and took up farming.

Mr. Adamson has devoted his life to general farming and stock raising, and has met with success all along the line. He is now owner of a productive and finely-improved farm of fifty-five acres in West River township, on which is to be seen an attractive and neatly furnished home and substantial outbuildings, and here also may be found from year to year large numbers of a good grade of livestock. His farm equals any of his neighbors' places in every respect, and he is one of the best citizens of his community, according to his neighbors.

Mr. Adamson was married twice, first, to Sarah Bussear, August 4, 1867, and her death occurred December 31, 1878. Three children were born to this union, namely: Jesse Albert, a real estate dealer in New Mexico, who is married and whose family consisted of seven children, four of whom survive; Franklin James, who lived at Dunkirk, died at the age of forty years, leaving a widow and three children, the date of his death being August 10, 1909. John James, the youngest of the three children, was born May 15, 1872, lives in Oklahoma; his wife is deceased; they had no children. Our subject's second wife was Sarah Ward, a widow, and to her union with Mr. Adamson one child has been born, Mable Ashton, whose birth occurred October 28, 1886. She married John Marion Ogle, an osteopathic doctor, and they live in Kirksville, Missouri, the home of osteopathy; they have one child, Mary Elizabeth. Mrs. Adamson was formerly Sarah Elizabeth Ashton. She was born in Columbus, Ohio, August 5, 1851. Her parents were born in England. The father, William Ashton, was a civil engineer, one of the contracts with which he was connected was the tunnel under the Thames. He married Mary Ann Copcutt in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, England, March 27, 1843. The next year, after a voyage of six weeks, they landed in New York, where Mrs. Ashton had relatives. The voyage was so trying on her constitution they never returned to their native shore. Mr. Ashton became a citizen of the United States, settling first in Columbus, Ohio. Here they became Protestants and were identified with the Presbyterian denomination. In 1853 they came to Winchester, Indiana, where they resided the remaining years of life. They had ten children, namely: Miles Anthony, George Barber, Sarah Elizabeth, Frances, Thomas Jobie, William E., Simeon Lucas, and Mary Hanna. Two girls died in infancy. Mrs. Adamson received her education in the Winchester schools and is one of the "Old Seminary Girls." Two children were born to Mrs. Adamson and her first husband, Perry Ward, namely: Emma Florence married Nelson Hiatt, and they have two children, Hildreth and Delmas Edmond; and Emmett Adney married Ella Smithson, and they have two children, Ralph S. and John Kenneth. Emma and Emmett are residents of Knightstown, Indiana. Mr. Hiatt is superintendent of the light and water plants, and Mr. Ward is a leading harness merchant.

Mr. Adamson has always been a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, holding the office of commander for five terms in the Frank Jones Post.

JAMES E. ASHWILL.

Winchester is the home of a number of gentlemen who have labored most industriously during their early years and are now spending their old age quietly and in the midst of plenty as a result of their former industry. They are men who helped redeem the virgin soil of this section of the Hoosier state and render this one of the thriving and valuable counties of the state. Such a man is James E. Ashwill, who, like many of our older citizens, came from the great Buckeye state to spend the best part of their years with us, benefiting thereby both themselves and us; and we are glad that they have done well from a material viewpoint and can take things easy.

Mr. Ashwill was born in Marion county, Ohio, May 6, 1843. He is a son of William and Susan (Bennett) Ashwill, and is one of a family of ten children, eight sons and two daughters, of whom four sons and one daughter survive at this writing. In 1844 he came, with his parents, to Indiana, locating at Centerville, Wayne county, remaining there two years, after which he moved to Benton, Elkhart county, and in 1852 came to Winchester. On August 4, 1864, he proved his courage and patriotism by enlisting in Company F, One Hundred and Fortieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Smuck, and saw considerable hard service, having fought in the battles of Nashville, Stone River, Franklin, Clifton, Fort Fisher, Fort Smith, Fort Anderson, Towns Creek and Wilmington. After the battle of Wilmington he was in the hospital for several weeks, again joining his regiment at Goldsborough, and continuing on the Butler expedition after Johnson until the surrender, which virtually ended the war. He was transferred to Greensborough, North Carolina, from which place he was mustered out of the service, July 11, 1865, and returned to Randolph county, his former home, and engaged in farming until the fall of 1910, when he removed to Winchester, where he now has a pleasant home.

Mr. Ashwill was married July 19, 1866, to Susan Martin, daughter of Elisha and Susan (Kelley) Martin, of Winchester. To this union were born four children, one son and three daughters, namely: Charles E., of Seattle, Washington; Estella Duvall, of Washington, D. C.; Maud S. Curry; and Mabel Ross, of Winchester.

Mr. Ashwill is a Republican in politics, a member of Nelson Trusler Post No. 60, Grand Army of the Republic, and a member of the Men's Bible Class of the First Presbyterian church.

DAVID E. BARKER.

Endowed with a liberal share of good common sense and possessing sound judgment, backed by a well-founded purpose to succeed, David E. Barker, proprietor of a well patronized harness store at Modoc, Randolph county, has labored with the object primarily in view of making a good home for himself and family and acquiring a competency for his declining years.

Mr. Barker was born near Farmland, Randolph county, September 5, 1865. He is a son of Jacob M. and Laura A. (Macy) Barker. The father was born on a farm near Farmland September 26, 1846, his people being early settlers of this locality, coming here when the land was little improved. Here the father grew to manhood, assisting in the early settlement and development of the town of Farmland, locating there in 1852, when six years old. Here he received a meager education in the old-time schools and was married. He devoted his early life successfully to the harness business, and is one of the township's highly respected citizens. The mother of our subject was born in Henry county, Indiana, and her death occurred in April, 1898.

Seven children were born to Jacob M. Barker and wife, named as follows: David E., of this sketch, is the oldest; Samuel M., a harness maker, of Farmland, and has seven children; Nancy P. died in infancy; Pearl also died in infancy; Leo, who is conducting an elevator in Farmland, married Media Wagner; Nina May married William P Glass, a tent maker, of Dayton, Ohio; Letta B. married Clyde Burrows, a rural mail carrier out of Farmland, and they had three children; John, now deceased.

David E. Barker was reared in the community of his birth, and he received his education in the common schools of Farmland. When ten years of age, he commenced learning the harness maker's trade under his father, and became quite proficient in the same when young in years. In 1889 he established a harness shop in Modoc, which he still conducts. He was successful from the first, and his business has grown steadily, for he has a wide reputation as a conscientious and skilled workman, and he handles a good grade of material. Many of his patrons come from remote parts of the county. He keeps all kinds of harness and leather goods.

Mr. Barker has been twice married, first, to Nannie A. Flood, whose death occurred after nearly four years of married life. Mr. Barker subsequently married Mrs. Nora E. Thomas, who was born August 9, 1864, and was reared on the old homestead, one mile east of where the town of Modoc was afterwards located. She was the daughter of Elisha and Lydia (Macy) Gaddis. The father came to this locality from Ohio in the early settling of this part of the county. The mother spent her entire life in Randolph county, Indiana. They were the parents of eleven children, namely: Thomas William, of Huntsville; Sarah A. Harris, deceased; Albert C., of near Modoc; Allen, deceased; Warren, deceased; Nancy E. Shoemaker, of near Modoc; Hiram A., grain dealer of Modoc; Phoebe E. Marshal, deceased; Austin S., deceased; Caroline Teage, deceased; and Nora E., our subject's wife. Mrs. Barker was first married October 10, 1886, to James Thomas, and to this union two children were born: Opal died in infancy; Otis R., born September 21, 1888, and is engineer in the flouring mill at Modoc. He married Ival Bennett, and three children have been born to them, Kenneth, Juanita and Valaria.

To our subject and wife four children have been born, namely: Guy died when four years of age; Lena Odell, born January 12, 1894, married Leonard Darah, and they have one child; Lucile Esther, born July 12, 1898, is preparing for a teacher; Cleo, born September 19, 1903, is the youngest.

Politically, Mr. Barker is an independent, Abe Lincoln Republican, and a stanch fighter of political graft and corruption. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his family attend the Methodist and United Brethren churches, there being no Christian church there. He served very acceptably as town treasurer for a period of ten years.

CHARLES A. FIELDS.

Who can measure the results of a life work, especially such a life work as that of the venerable and honored minister of the gospel whose name forms the caption of this sketch? The practice of his life has been not to condemn but to aid, devoting his best energies to the uplifting of humanity, and the world is better and brighter because he has lived in it, and the spirit of his work will continue to abide as the deep undercurrent of a mighty stream, noiseless but irresistable, his wholesome influence pervading the world like the scent of flowers. He possessed rare ability as a pulpit orator and is a well-informed man, his reading having covered the wide realms of science, art, history and classical literature. He has a quick eye for the beautiful, the heroic, the true, the purposeful. He has found all manifestations of Mother Nature interesting, genuine, restful, always the same—finds solace for the ills of life in the repose and sympathy of her solitudes. He is a versatile, thoroughly self-educated, self-made man, having left unexplored no branch of true culture, truly one of Nature's noblemen.

Mr. Fields was born in Hawkins county, Butcher's valley, Tennessee, December 2, 1830. He is a son of Martin and Margaret (Maness) Fields, and they had nine sons and two daughters. Only two of these children now survive, our subject and William H.

Martin Fields, the father, was born in North Carolina, from which state he moved into Tennessee in a very early day, then came on to Indiana shortly after the birth of our subject. He was a gunsmith by trade, also followed farming. He spent the latter part of his life on a farm in Jackson township, Randolph county, dying there in 1850, and was buried in Ward township. His wife was born in Tennessee and there grew to womanhood. She died in Randolph county, Indiana, in 1840.

Charles A. Fields grew to manhood on the farm in this county and he received his education in the old-time local schools and by continuous home reading and study in later life. Early in young manhood he began preaching in the United Brethren church, was ordained in Allen county, Indiana, and preached under the auspices of the Auglaise conference in Indiana and Ohio, in the pioneer days, when the mail was carried on horseback from Winchester to Fort Wayne, and the carrier often slept in a tree to keep out of harm's way by the wolves. Our subject was in Indianapolis in 1847, when the future metropolis was only an acre in extent. He performed a great service to the people of the early times and endured many hardships and privations in order to carry help and the gospel to the needy, but he never complained, regarding it as a great privilege to be thus called to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene. He was always an earnest, forceful and not infrequently truly eloquent pulpit orator, and well versed in the Bible.

Mr. Fields was married April 15, 1851, to Sarah Diehl, a native of Ohio, and to this union the following children were born, namely: W. S., a real estate dealer of Gas City, Indiana, married Minerva Baker, and they have six children, having lost two by death; Etta is the wife of W. H. Fraze, a farmer of Union City, Indiana, and they had thirteen children, two of whom are deceased; Rumina married Samuel Sipe, a contractor of Gas City, and they have five sons and one daughter, and they lost one son and one daughter; E. L. is engaged in the lumber business at Shreveport, Louisiana, married Ida Ross, and they have three children; Eli A., who lives at Saratoga, is a prominent business man and influential citizen of that vicinity, owning three hundred acres of well improved and valuable land, and a large saw mill, being extensively engaged in the manufacture of hardwood lumber; he married Clara Lollar, of Saratoga, a daughter of Joseph W. Lollar, a successful farmer of Ward township, where Mrs. Fields grew to womanhood and was educated. To Eli A. Fields and wife the following children have been born: Hazel, Merritt, Constance died in youth; Noble, Richard and Carol. William M. Fields, son of the subject of this sketch, is a contractor and builder at Richmond, Indiana; he married Cora Ballard, and they have one child.

Charles A. Fields is now living retired in his cozy home in Union City, this county, where he is highly esteemed by all classes. It is a fact worthy of mention here that when seventy-five years of age he verified tax titles of transfers that were made when he was thirteen years old. He has passed his eighty-third milestone, and is a grand old man, eminently deserving of the high esteem in which he is universally held.

CHARLES H. LENNON.

Charles H. Lennon was born August 16, 1869, in Winchester, Randolph county, and here he has been pleased to spend his life, contending that home was good enough. He is a son of Dennis and Susan (Martin) Lennon. The father was born in Ireland and the mother in Pennsylvania. The elder Lennon emigrated from the Emerald Isle to the United States when a young man, landing in New York City, where he remained a few months, then came to Winchester, Indiana, where he established the future home of the family, and here spent the rest of his active life engaged in railroading. He and his wife are now living retired from the active duties of life. She came to this city when a young girl with her family from Pennsylvania and here met and married Mr. Lennon.

Charles H. Lennon was reared in Winchester, spending his boyhood much like that of other town boys of his time. He received his education in the public schools. He began life for himself by railroading, which he followed for about four years, then became connected with the bridge construction builders of the Big Four railroad, and this line of work he followed for about thirteen years, during which he gave eminent satisfaction and mastered the ins and outs of the work. In 1901 he began the business of building and contracting in Winchester, and has been engaged in this line of endeavor continuously to the present time, during which he has erected some of the best public and private buildings and residences in the city. His reputation for prompt and high grade work is widespread, and his services are in great demand. He carries on an extensive work all over this section of the state. He keeps fully abreast of the times in all that pertains to the building world, and is well equipped in every respect for his work. He contracts to complete buildings from cellar to roof. He always has many contracts in surrounding towns and counties. He has a beautiful residence and is one of our substantial citizens.

Mr. Lennon is a Republican in politics, and is more or less active in public affairs. Fraternally, he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Encampment, and the Knights of Pythias, and the Modern Woodmen of America.

On October 13, 1889, Mr. Lennon was married to Viola Hodson, a daughter of Stephen R. and Eliza (Ellis) Hodson, of Geneva, Adams county, Indiana, and to this union the following children have been born, namely: Ava, George, Thelma, Ida and Will, twins, and Ralph, all at home with their parents.

CHARLES W. PIERCE.

The chief characteristics of Charles W. Pierce, one of the best-known business men of Union City, Randolph county, are keenness of perception, an unflagging energy, honesty of purpose and motive and every-day common sense, which have enabled him not only to advance his own interests, but also largely contribute to the moral and material advancement of the locality. He worked his way from a modest beginning, having started on his career, "a youth to fortune and to fame unknown," and step by step has risen to a position of no mean importance, by his individual efforts, which have been practically unaided, which fact renders him the more worthy of the praise that is freely accorded him by his fellow-men, his life having been one of unceasing industry and perseverance, and the honorable and systematic methods he has ever employed are commended to others, if they court the goddess, Success.

Mr. Pierce was born in New York City January 12, 1835. He is a son of Levi Pierce and wife, and a descendant of Capt. Michael Pierce, who emigrated to America about the year 1645, locating in Hingham, Massachusetts, in 1656, removing the following year to Scituate, where he lived until he met an untimely death, in 1662. He was born in England in 1615, was twice married, his last wife being Mrs. Anna James, of Hingham, later of Scituate. She was killed by the Indians Sunday, March 26, 1676. The following were the Captain's children: Persis, Benjamin, John, Ephraim, Eliza, Deborah, Anna, Abijah, Ruth and Abigail. The present Pierce family, so numerous throughout the United States, is directly descended from the above-named children.

Levi Pierce, father of our subject, was born in Rehoboth, Bristol county, Massachusetts, and was brought up on his father's farm. When nineteen years of age he became dissatisfied with farm life and started for the city of Providence, Rhode Island, much against the wishes of his father. There he soon mastered the trade of a mason and in a short time became a contractor and builder, erecting the first factory near Providence. Later he engaged in the livery business; selling that out, he next started in the manufacture of clothing, which grew to large proportions, and he became a wealthy man, and owned two schooners which he loaded with clothing and shipped to the South. Soon afterwards he went west, taking with him his son, Franklin F. During their absence the family moved to Buffalo, New York, making the trip on a canal boat. Soon after the family had settled in their new home, news came to them, in the year 1838, that the father was dead. As Franklin F. never returned it was supposed that he, too, was dead. Mr. Pierce was a man of fine personal appearance, kind-hearted and generous, fond of his family and was an excellent provider, and he gave his children every advantage possible. He was born June 8, 1797. On March 9, 1818, he married Betsey S. Wheeler, who was born in 1800, and died February 23, 1881. His death is supposed to have occurred in 1838. The following children were born to them: Charles W., of this sketch; Levi L., born November 18, 1830, married Ellen E. Wright; Elizabeth S., born March 22, 1822, married in Buffalo, New York, December 16, 1840, to Cortland Philip Livingston Butler, who was born March 8, 1813. Levi Pierce was a son of Isaac Pierce, born September 12, 1763, who married on October 7, 1782, Anna Fitch, a daughter of Capt. Amos Fitch, of Swansea, who was born March 1, 1763, and died November 15, 1809, and is buried in the Pierce cemetery in Rehoboth, Massachusetts. He was married a second time, November 1, 1810, by Elder Preserve Pierce, to Polly Brown, who was born August 21, 1789, and who died March 10, 1838. His third wife was Elizabeth Carpenter. Isaac Pierce resided at Rehoboth, Massachusetts, where his death occurred November 26, 1849. The following were his children: Hannah Hiram W., Lyman, Nancy, Isaac, Mahala, Angia, Levi, Mary A. Waterman, Betsey, Poly, Jeremiah B., Delana, Laura A., Sophronia, Cyrus and Holiness—eighteen in all.

Isaac Pierce, son of Nathan Pierce, was born in Rehoboth, Massachusetts, in 1763, and always resided in that town and within four miles of the place of his birth. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war for a short time, when but sixteen years of age, at the time the British were in Newport. After his marriage he lived a short time with his grandfather, Michael Pierce, at the end of a year returning to his father's farm, where he passed the remainder of his days. He reared a large family in comfort, being a man of industry, and kept out of debt. When he was a boy there was not a vehicle in the town of Rehoboth—everybody rode on horseback. There were a few heavy, clumsy ox-carts, built after the English pattern. He often went to church with an ox-team and wagon. He was a man of good sound sense and judgment. When eighteen years of age he joined his father's church, but at the age of twenty-five he was excommunicated from the society, because he went twice to hear a Universalist preacher.

Rev. Nathan Pierce was a son of Michael Pierce, born February 21, 1716, married on October 6, 1736, Lydia Martin, who was born July 17, 1718, and she died December 21, 1798. She was a daughter of Ephraim Martin and was a remarkably smart woman. His death occurred April 14, 1793. She was from Barrington, Rhode Island, was noted for her learning and personal attractiveness, and she gave her husband much assistance in his work as a Baptist minister, he having preached for forty years in one church. He was succeeded by his son, Rev. Preserve Pierce, who also preached in the same pulpit for a period of forty years, a remarkable record for father and son, which, perhaps, is not paralleled throughout the country. The church is still known as the Pierce meeting-house. The following children were born to Nathan Pierce and wife: Freelove, Nathan, Jr., Benjamin, Pardon, Mary, Martin, Judah, Hezekiah, Peleg, Preserve, Isaac, Chloe, Lydia, David and Joseph. Michael Pierce, mentioned above, was born April 24, 1692, married Judith Ellis, a daughter of Judge Ellis, and she was born in 1686, died October 6, 1744. His death occurred October 18, 1786, at the age of ninety-four years. He resided at Warwick, Rhode Island; Swansea and Rehoboth, Massachusetts. His children were Ephraim, Wheeler, Nathan, Mary, Judith, Michael, Job, Caleb and Joshua. Michael Pierce was a son of Ephraim, the third, who was born in 1674, married Mary Law, and they lived at Rehoboth and Swansea, Massachusetts. Their children were Michael, David, Elizabeth, Mary, Clothier and Ephraim.

Ephraim Pierce, Jr., was the son of Ephraim, Sr., who married Hannah Holbrook. He moved to Warwick, Rhode Island, from Weymouth, Massachusetts, where his first child was born, and according to the town records was called Isricum. On May 3, 1681, he was made a freeman of the colony from Providence. His will was dated July 18, 1718, and was proved in Warwick, September 23, 1719. His death occurred September 14, 1719, and his wife died the same year. Ephraim Pierce, the first, was a son of Capt. Michael Pierce, mentioned at the outset of this article.

Charles W. Pierce, the immediate subject of this sketch, received a practical education in the public schools, and when a boy he started out in the business world. He came to Union City, Indiana, in 1865 and bought a farm and soon had a good foothold. In 1875 he began in the grain and elevator business at Union City, which is still operated, having attained very large proportions, gradually growing from a small beginning. The company was first incorporated in 1899, and again in 1905. Today the Pierce Elevator Company is one of the best known in northern Indiana. Mr. Pierce is also owner of one thousand acres of valuable and productive farming land, all in the vicinity of Union City, the farthest being only seven miles away. He manages all these farms himself, visiting them several times each week. He owns one-third interest in the Pierce Elevator Company. He deserves a great deal of credit for what he has accomplished, starting with nothing and is now one of the substantial and influential citizens of Randolph county.

Charles W. Pierce is independent in politics, and he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for a period of fifty years. He was married, first, to Emma Haddock, whose death occurred March 12, 1874. To this union the following children were born: Mary C., who married William R. Craven, of Dayton, Ohio, he being vice-president and general manager of the Dayton Savings and Trust Company, where an extensive business is carried on and more than fifteen clerks are employed. Mrs. Craven received her education in the common schools and in DePauw University. They have one child, Dorothy Craven, now about seventeen years of age. Clarence Stewart Pierce was born in Randolph county, December 9, 1870, married Bertha Prior in March, 1894. She is a step-daughter of Charles Prior. She finished her education in the college at Oxford, Ohio. Their children are Charles Stewart Pierce, Jr., born February 6, 1895, was graduated from the high school and passed his first year at Ann Arbor, in the University of Michigan. Mary Almeda Pierce was born July 18, 1897, is now in high school.

Clarence S. Pierce was elected mayor of Union City in 1898 and was elected to the legislature of Indiana from Randolph county, in 1912, serving in the session of 1913 where he made his influence felt for the general good of his locality and the entire state and won the hearty approval of his constituents, proving himself to be a faithful and conscientious and able public servant. He was appointed a member of the school board in Union City in 1910 and elected a member of the same in 1913 for a term of three years. He has done much for the improvement of local schools. He is a graduate of the high school of Union City, later studying at DePauw University. He has held business connection with his father since 1890 and is now the able and energetic president of the Pierce Elevator Company, which includes two branch elevators in other localities, all doing a large and growing business.

Frank Wright Pierce resides in the East. This son was legally adopted by Levi L. Pierce, a brother of Charles W. Pierce, when an infant.

The second wife of Charles W Pierce was Anna J. Fisher, who was born near Richmond, Indiana, in 1837. [Mr. Pierce died a few weeks after this sketch was written.]

FRANK R. DAVIS.

Frank R. Davis was born at Barton, Ohio, June 5, 1871. He is a son of Frank C. Davis, who was born in Virginia, April 15, 1840. He was engaged in the piano business for a period of thirty-seven years and spent the major portion of his business life in Boston, Massachusetts, and died in that city from an injury, May 29, 1896. His wife's name was Phillips and she was born in Virginia, September 27, 1842. She at present resides with one of her sons in Columbus, Ohio. To Frank C. Davis and wife the following children were born: Dr. James R., a physician of Columbus, Ohio; Dr. Howard H., a dentist of Bridgeport, Ohio; George S., formerly a well-known ball player, who is now practicing law in New York City; Mary C. married Henry Simmons, a foreign missionary; Loretta N. married George L. Hardy, a hardware merchant of the firm of Hardy & Son, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, and Frank R., our subject.

Our subject's paternal grandfather, H. G. Davis, lived in Maryland, reaching the remarkable age of one hundred and two years. Henry L. Phillips, the maternal grandfather, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, also in the war of 1812. It is believed that he died in Mississippi.

Frank R. Davis grew to manhood at Barton, Ohio, and there he received his education. After graduating from the high school he spent one year in the Ohio State University. Following in the footsteps of his father in a business way, he purchased on August 27, 1910, the piano business at 311 Oak street, Union City, Indiana, and here he still maintains his store which he has made a great success from the start, and now enjoys a very wide and rapidly growing business which extends over an astonishingly large territory. He has mastered the various phases of the business, having been engaged in the sale of pianos from early manhood and is familiar with all makes and grades of pianos, from the lowest to the highest, and his education and familiarity along that line gives him a great advantage. His uniform courtesy and fairness to his hundreds of customers have won him the confidence and good will of all. He was engaged in selling pianos for seventeen years prior to locating in Union City, having been employed by H. P. Nelson, for whom he traveled from coast to coast, giving his employer the utmost satisfaction in every respect. He was brought up in the piano business and fully understands the manufacture as well as the sale of these instruments.

Politically, Mr. Davis is a Republican, but he has never been an office seeker. Religiously, he belongs to the Christian church.

Mr. Davis was married June 22, 1909 to Blanche Grace Hinkle, who was born in North Manchester, Indiana, October 29, 1884. To this union one child has been born, Douglas Davis, whose birth occurred December 18, 1912. Mrs. Davis is a daughter of Henry and Jennie Hinkle, now living in retirement in North Manchester, where she grew to womanhood and received her education graduating from the high school, after which she taught school for five years, teaching in the eighth grade for three years. She was also given an excellent musical education at North Manchester and taught music for several years in the Central high school. She is very proficient on the piano. She has two sisters, Georgia Ethel, who was graduated from the North Manchester High school. She married Ben H. Willis, in September, 1910, and they have one child, Max Harold Willis, born November 30, 1911. Wilma M., the other sister of Mrs. Davis, was born November 16, 1893, educated in North Manchester, and married Jack Cone, a moulder of Indianapolis where they reside. Grandfather Hinkle was a native of Pennsylvania, from which state he finally moved to Missouri, later to Ohio, thence to Indiana and died here many years ago. His wife was a Miss Flickenger and died about 1886.

EDWARD I. BROWN.

The most of people who have never lived on a farm think that it does not require any special skill to conduct the operations of husbandry. They are accustomed to think that the driving of a team of horses to a plow or harrow, a reaper or a wagon, the scores of other duties connected with general husbandry do not require a finished education or a high degree of intellectual activity. Neither does it to conduct a grocery store, a hotel or a foundry. In these cases it does require, however, a thorough knowledge of the subject. The farmer must know how to sow grain, how to select the best varieties and whether it is in good condition, when to cut his wheat and his grass, how it should be cured, when it is ready to stack, whether it has gone through the sweating process and is ready to thresh—in fact, he must know a thousand such things, without a proper knowledge of which he is certain to lose heavily, a thing he can not afford to do, because the farmer's profits are some years small and he must figure very close if he is adequately repaid for his expenditure of hard labor. Such a farmer is Edward I. Brown, of Washington township, Randolph county.

Mr. Brown was born in Darke county, Ohio, April 29, 1850. He is a son of Elisha and Nancy W. (Thomas) Brown. The father was born in the same township and county as was our subject on November 17, 1819. He was a son of John Brown, who was a native of Maryland from which state he came to Ohio when a young man and was one of the pioneer settlers of Darke county, where he spent the rest of his life, as did also his wife Sarah Stockdale, who was a native of Maryland, too. Elisha Brown grew to manhood amid pioneer conditions and had little opportunity to obtain an education. He followed farming in his native county until 1867 when he removed to Champaign county, Illinois where he lived two years, then came to Randolph county, Indiana and located in Greensfork township, buying one hundred and twenty acres which he farmed until his death, May 30, 1888. Politically, he was a Democrat and while living in Ohio was a school director in his district. He was an active member of the Christian church. He and Nancy W. Thomas were married March 1, 1849. She was born in Wayne county, Indiana, November 28, 1833 and her death occurred May 16, 1890. To the parents of our subject seven children were born, five sons and two daughters.

Edward I. Brown grew to manhood on the home farm and he received a common school education. He began teaching in 1868 which he continued until 1871, teaching two terms in West River township and one in Greensfork township, this county. He then took up farming, buying forty acres of land in Washington township and has continued general farming and stock raising to the present time, now owning a valuable farm of one hundred and sixty acres here. He makes a specialty of Poland-China hogs He takes a great interest in public affairs as affecting his own locality, especially the schools and has done much to improve them. Politically, he was formerly a Republican, but is now inclined to the Progressive party. In religious matters, he belongs to the Christian church and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Brown was married March 1, 1871 to Mellsena J. Hinshaw, who was born in Washington township, February 22, 1852. Her death occurred July 7, 1892. She was a daughter of Timothy and Jane (Wright) Hinshaw. To this union four children were born namely: Arla M., who is secretary of the Poland-China Record Association in Winchester; William E., born February 8, 1878, died October 16, 1897; Anna E., born March 12, 1882, married James E. Jennings, a farmer in Washington township; Grace R., born October 2, 1885 is the wife of Jesse A. Wright, a farmer of Washington township. Mr. Brown was again married on February 26, 1898, his last wife being Louisa O. (Wilmore) Lesley. She was the daughter of John L. and Mary Wilmore and widow of Charles Lesley. She had one son, Eldon T. who was born October 16, 1882. He graduated from Purdue in Civil Engineering in 1908 and is located at Memphis, Tennessee. Mrs. Brown before her marriage was a teacher in the public schools of Randolph county.

SYLVANDER G. CLARK.

Sylvander G. Clark was born in Greensfork township, this county, September 25, 1855. He is a son of James and Martha (Scott) Clark. The father was born in January, 1805, in North Carolina, and there he remained until he was fifteen years old, in 1820, coming with his father overland to Randolph county, Indiana and entered eighty acres in what is now Greensfork township. They found here a great and almost interminable forest for they were among the earliest settlers. They set to work like true pioneers and cleared and developed the land into a good farm. The mother of James Clark had died in 1810 when he was but five years old. He continued farming here the rest of his life, but retired and moved to Lynn a few years prior to his death in 1890 at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Politically, he was a Democrat and in religious matters was a member of the Christian church. He married Mary Longfellow who died in the early forties and during the latter forties he married Martha Scott, whose death occurred in 1881 on the home farm at the age of sixty-one years.

Sylvander G. Clark grew to manhood on the home farm and he received his education in the common schools. He worked on the farm until he was of age then began life for himself. In 1894 he went into the lumber business in Spartanburg, also maintained a saw mill there, and built up a large and lucrative business which he continued until 1911 when he went into the grocery and lunch business. He was also the local undertaker for a period of nine years previous to 1912. He has always been a man of industry and good judgment and has made a success of whatever he has turned his attention to.

Politically, Mr. Clark is a Democrat, and religiously he belongs to the Christian church. He is at this writing janitor at Spartanburg high school. He is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masonic order, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in which he is Past Grand and also belongs to the Encampment in which he is also an officer. He has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge and the Encampment.

Mr. Clark was married in April, 1878, to Mary E. Harrison, a native of Darke county, Ohio, and to this union five children have been born, named as follows: Ernest is in the undertaking business at Winchester; Everett lives in Winchester also; Lester; Russell; Byron; and Florence, all of Spartanburg.

OLIVER PERRY BOTKIN.

All will agree that the country has many advantages over the city. Likewise, it has its disadvantages, one of the greatest being the lack of opportunity to gain a competency within a reasonable period of time. Many farmers have grown rich through increased valuation of their land, others through carefully husbanding their resources, rigid and economical living and good business ability, ofttimes combined with favorable seasons for their principal product. But the farmers throughout the land should be receiving more of the extra high prices which the city people are paying for their produce than they are, because the tillers of the soil are entitled to it. And it costs too much for the farmer to market his stuff, the middleman's profits are excessive and there is not at present sufficient security for the farmer to enable him to secure just and honest returns from all commission dealers, few of whom are honest. But the signs of the times are pointing to a day when the government will devote its talented experts to the task of enabling the farmer to market his stuff at a reasonable price, and this will ultimately be of advantage to all the people. One of the successful farmers of Randolph county who has the sagacity to manage his land and live stock so that he not only makes a comfortable living from year to year but is laying by sufficient for his old age and family is Oliver Perry Botkin, of West River township.

MR. AND MRS. O. P. BOTKIN.

Mr. Botkin was born in the above-named township and county August 15, 1859. He is a son of William and Martha (Hiatt) Botkin, the father having also been born on the old homestead in West River township in 1823, being truly a pioneer child, for his parents were among the first settlers in this vicinity. They entered this farm from the government, which they cleared and developed and which has never been out of the possession of the Botkin family. Hugh Botkin, the grandfather, was a native of Tennessee, and he died in Randolph county in 1833. He had twelve children besides our subject's father. The mother of the subject of this sketch died in October, 1864, when he was five years old. William Botkin subsequently married Docia C. Butler. Six children were born to his first union, namely: Emma, who married R. Clark, a farmer and merchant of Economy, died when she was twenty-eight years old; Mary V. married Thomas Harris, and they have four children, two sons and two daughters; Lewis A., who is farming near Parker City, this county, married Cora Meeks, and they have three sons; Oliver Perry, of this review: Elmer E., a lawyer of Muncie, Indiana, married Leota Davis, and they have one daughter; Ira M., a farmer near Carlos, married Minnie Miller, and they have two sons and two daughters. Three children were born to the second union of William Botkin, namely: William, Jr., the eldest; Hattie, who died when twenty-five years old; and Mrs. Thirza R. Coffin.

Oliver P. Botkin grew to manhood on the homestead, where he made himself useful during the crop seasons, and in the winter months he attended the neighboring schools. He took up farming for himself when a young man and this has continued to be his vocation. He owns a valuable and well-kept place of one hundred and twenty acres, on which he has lived for the past thirty years, and here he keeps a good grade of live stock from year to year, and is very comfortably fixed in every respect.

Mr. Botkin was married September 21, 1883, to Celia E. Christopher, a daughter of Addison G. Christopher, whose family is mentioned on another page of this work. Mrs. Botkin grew to womanhood in West River township and here received a common school education.

To our subject ond wife six children have been born, namely: Blanche, who married Thomas Gaddis, a minister, and they have four children; Edith, who married Walter A. Pursley, a farmer of West River township, and they have one child, Virginia, born May 4, 1910; Gilbert, a veterinary physician of Mooreland, Indiana, is a graduate of the Indianapolis Veterinary College, married Edna McGonegal, and they have two sons, Dragoo, born May 24, 1910, and Kermit, born June 4, 1911; Olive, born December 12, 1890, was graduated from Winchester high school in 1910, and later attended Earlham College, of Richmond, Indiana; Nellie, born March 9, 1897; Robert, born February 10, 1903.

Politically, Mr. Botkin is a Republican and he and his family attend the Methodist church.

FRANK FLETCHER

Another enterprising citizen of Union City, Randolph county who hails from Darke county, Ohio, from which locality so many of our best people came, is Frank Fletcher, widely known real estate man. Mr. Fletcher was born in Darke county, Ohio, March 24, 1865. He is a son of John C. Fletcher, a contractor who retired early in life, and died in 1906. He married Rebecca Campbell, who is now living at Union City.

Mr. Fletcher did not have the advantages of a high education, but he made the best use possible of what opportunities he did have in that line, and he possesses by nature certain attributes which make up for the lack of book learning. He is now a well-informed man, being a keen observer and a wide reader of general literature. He came to Union City in early life and has built up gradually by persistent endeavor and honest dealings one of the largest and most lucrative real estate businesses in Randolph county. He has owned many properties in Union City which he has improved and beautified, thereby doing much for the better appearance of the city.

Mr. Fletcher was married August 4, 1887 to Anna T. Warren, who was born in Randolph county, Indiana, near Deerfield, in October, 1863. She has proven to be a most faithful helpmeet and is a lady of many commendable characteristics. She is a daughter of Henry T. Warren, a highly respected citizen of Union City.

To Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher one child has been born, namely: Noble J. Fletcher, whose birth occurred July 17, 1892; he is a graduate of the Union City high school and is a young man of much promise.

Politically, Mr. Fletcher is a Republican and while actively interested in public affairs, he is not desirous of becoming a political leader or an office holder, preferring to devote his attention exclusively to his large business interests. Fraternally he belongs to the Improved Order of Red Men and religiously is a member of the Presbyterian church. He was a member of the Union City council for two terms.

WILLIAM HENDERSON THORNBURG.

If anyone within the borders of Randolph county is entitled to special mention in a volume of the nature of the one in hand, it is William Henderson Thornburg, one of our venerable native-born citizens, who has here spent the major part, practically all in fact. of his seventy-three years, during which he has seen the country develop in a wonderful way and has done what he could in his immediate vicinity for the general progress of the same. He has led an active and honorable life and is a veteran of the great Civil war, and now that the calm Indian summer of his life is about him he can watch the fading of the yellow leaf with no compunction or regrets, well knowing that he has done the best he could on life's rugged pathway, under existing circumstances.

Mr. Thornburg was born on the farm on which he now lives, near Lynn, Randolph county, May 11, 1840. He is a son of Nathan and Elnora L. (Neal) Thornburg. Nathan Thornburg was born on a farm just north of his son's present place in 1815 and was thus among the earliest white children born in this county, his parents having been very early settlers here. He was a son of Joseph and Rachael Thornburg. Joseph Thornburg was a native of Ohio, from which state he came to Randolph county, Indiana and entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in what is now Washington township. This he cleared and farmed until his death. Nathan Thornburg was reared on the farm here amid primitive frontier conditions and when a young man he purchased eighty acres, which a Mr. David had entered from the government. This land he farmed until his death in 1872. He first married Hannah Johnson, by which union three children were born, two of whom are now living. The wife and mother passed away after four years of married life. Mr. Thornburg subsequently married Elnora L. Neal, in 1838. She was a native of North Carolina, and her death occurred in February, 1885.

William H. Thornburg grew up on the home farm and he received very little schooling. He remained with his parents until he was eighteen years of age, then began learning the blacksmith's trade. In August, 1861, he proved his patriotism by enlisting in Company F, Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he served faithfully in a number of campaigns, skirmishes and battles, including that of Pittsburg Landing. He was discharged for disability in the fall of 1862. He returned home and on February 2, 1862, re-enlisted in the Forty-first Regiment, Second Indiana Cavalry, and was sent to the South a second time, and was with Sherman on his march to the sea, thence down the coast to Tallahassee, Florida, then back to Nashville, Tennessee. For meritorious service he was made a corporal. He was honorably discharged July 29, 1865. After returning home he followed blacksmithing until 1882, being regarded as one of the most skillful workmen in the county. He was elected sheriff of Randolph county in 1882 and served one term in a most satisfactory manner, and although he was urged to accept a second, declined to do so. He then bought the home farm where he has since lived, successfully engaged in general farming and stock raising. He has kept the place well improved and well cultivated.

Politically, Mr. Thornburg is Progressive. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and the Masonic order. Religiously he belongs to the Society of Friends.

Mr. Thornburg was married in February, 1864 to Emily A. Chamness, who was born in North Carolina, February 25, 1845. To this union eleven children were born, seven of whom are still living, namely: Malinda J., who married W. J. Roberts, lives in Oregon; Elizabeth E. is the wife of J. Clendenning, of Jay county, Indiana; James N. lives in White River township; J. F lives in Arkansas; Raymond A. is a teacher in the state of Washington; Emory H. is a veterinary physician of Lynn, this county; and Reba is the wife of O. Clark and they are living in Oregon.

Emory H. Thornburg was born August 3, 1888 in Washington township, this county, and here he grew to manhood and received his education in the common schools and spent one year in the Valparaiso Normal, taking the teachers' course. He taught school two years in Jay county, then entered the Indiana Veterinary College at Indianapolis, from which he was graduated, in 1912, having made a splendid record there. He practiced with Dr. Clevenger at Winchester a short time, then opened an office at Lynn where he has remained and is building up a large and lucrative practice. He has had splendid success in all his work. Politically, he is a Republican. He is a member of the Masonic order, the Friends church and belongs to the Indiana Veterinary College Association.

CHARLES T. BOLINGER.

The late Charles T. Bolinger, for many years one of the substantial and well-known agriculturists and merchants of Franklin township, Randolph county, was a man respected and honored, not alone because of the vigorous training of his special talents, but also because of his daily life, each day having been one that was above criticism and passed upon in the light of real, true manhood. Strong and forceful in his relations with his fellow-men, he not only made his presence felt, but also gained the good will of both his associates and the general public, ever retaining his reputation among men for integrity and high character, no matter how trying the circumstances, and never losing that dignity which is the birthright of the model gentleman. Consequently, his influence for good in the general upbuilding of his locality was most pronounced and still continues, although the material man has been engulfed in the "inevitable hour," which awaits all that is mortal, and he will long be sadly missed from the various circles in which he moved, and over which his influence was like sunshine on a field of ripened wheat.

Mr. Bolinger was born in Randolph county, March 30, 1865. He is a son of Moses E. and Mariah L. (Miller) Bolinger, and was one of a family of five children, two sons and three daughters, namely: Rosa married Emerson Addington, a farmer of this county, which union has been without issue; Waldo, a farmer near Ridgeville, married Rose Smith and they have six children; Charles T., of this memoir, was next in order; Minnie married S. Smithson, a farmer near Ridgeville, and they have two sons and two daughters; Pearl married Asa Addington, also a farmer near Ridgeville, and they have a son, Harry, and a daughter, Catherine.

Moses E. Bolinger, father of our subject, was born in Pennsylvania, where he spent his boyhood and was educated, coming to Indiana when a young man, he located near Farmland on a farm, and here he met and married Mariah L. Miller, who was born in that vicinity and there reared and educated.

Charles T. Bolinger grew to manhood on the home farm near Farmland village where he was born and he assisted his father with the general work during crop seasons when he became of proper age, and during the winter he attended the public schools of his neighborhood, receiving a practical education which was added to in later life by contact with the business world and by home reading.

Mr. Bolinger was married on June 16, 1887 and by this marriage one child was born, Ernest C., whose birth occurred August 5, 1888. He was graduated from the local public schools and is now operating the home farm in Franklin township in a decidedly successful manner, and is a young man of much promise. He married Inez Wise, a daughter of Riley Wise, a farmer of the vicinity of Ridgeville, their wedding taking place in 1910. They have a son, Wayne LeRoy, born March 30, 1912.

Charles T. Bolinger began farming when a young man and this continued to be his chief life work and he prospered with advancing years through good management and close application and he became owner of a productive and valuable farm on which his widow and son still reside. It has been placed under an excellent state of cultivation and improvement. He also engaged in the general merchandise business in this vicinity for a period of thirteen years, conducting his farm in the meantime. He enjoyed a large trade with the surrounding country, treating his many customers with uniform fairness and courtesy. Politically, he was a Republican and was influential in local politics. He served as assessor of his township for four years in an eminently successful manner. He was a man of fine moral character, and he was faithful in his attendance of the Quaker church.

The death of Mr. Bolinger occurred after a brief illness on October 4, 1912 at the early age of forty-seven years, when in the prime of life.

FERMEN C. FOCHT.

Examples that impress force of character on all who study them are worthy of record in the annals of history wherever they are found. By a few general observations the biographer hopes to convey in the following paragraphs, succinctly and yet without fulsome enconium, some idea of the high standing of Fermen C. Focht, of Winchester, as an attorney-at-law and public benefactor, one of the representative citizens of Randolph county. Those who know him best will readily acquiesce in the statement that many elements of a solid and practical nature are united in his composition, and which during a series of years have brought him into prominent notice in the northern section of Indiana, his achievements earning for him a conspicuous place among his compeers.

Mr. Focht was born May 30, 1867, in Gratis, Preble county, Ohio. He is a son of Alfred C. and Lavina (Zimmerman) Focht. The father was reared on the farm, and in his youth learned the backsmith's trade. When only seventeen years old he enlisted for service in the Union army during the Civil war. His health was impaired by the exposure and after returning home he took up farming, which he followed the rest of his life, dying in September, 1873. His widow survives, making her home in Gratis, Ohio.

Fermen C. Focht was reared on the home farm in Preble county, Ohio, and there worked hard when a boy during the summer months, attending the district schools during the winter. He was only six years old when his father died, so when he became old enough he found it necessary to do all he could toward the support of the family. When sixteen years old he determined to obtain more schooling than that acquired during the few winter months he had been a student up to that time, so he started out for himself, without assistance from any one. He worked at a livery stable and attended the public schools of Gratis. The following summer, 1884, he worked for a farmer near Germantown, Montgomery county, Ohio, helping to raise a crop of tobacco. On September 13th of the same year he came to Randolph county, Indiana, and found a home with John W. Jarnegin, who lived a mile south of Winchester. In the fall of that year he entered the high school in Winchester and assisted in the farm work. He remained with Mr. Jarnegin four years, working on the farm and attending high school, completing the high school course. He then attended the Holbrook Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, two terms, making an excellent record. Thus well equipped for the more serious duties of life, he began teaching in the fall of 1888 in the district schools of White River township, Randolph county, continuing there for four years and was giving every satisfaction, but believing that his true bent was in the direction of a legal career, he began the study of law in the spring of 1891 in the office of Hon. A. O. Marsh and Joseph M. Thompson; however, he continued teaching until the spring of 1892, pursuing his law studies at the same time. During the years 1893 and 1894, in addition to assisting Mr. Thompson in completing, revising and proof-reading his pubication, The Indiana Citations, he carried on his other work. The above publication is recognized as a standard authority in Indiana.

Mr. Focht was admitted to practice his profession prior to this, however. He remained in the office of Marsh & Thompson, and continued to practice with the latter until Mr. Marsh's retirement. In 1898 our subject formed a partnership with Mr. Thompson, which lasted until the fall of 1901, when the latter removed to Indianapolis, after which Mr. Focht continued to practice alone until December 3, 1906, when he formed a partnership with Thomas W. Hutchens, which still continues, this firm ranking among the strongest in Randolph county, and is one of the busiest. Mr. Focht has been admitted to practice in all the state and federal courts. He is a member of the Randolph County Bar Association, and is recognized by all as one of the most painstaking, earnest and capable lawyers in the county, and one of the best pleaders before a jury. He has built up a large and lucrative practice.

Mr. Focht has long been active and influential in the affairs of the Republican party, and at this writing is secretary of the Republican Central Committee of Randolph county. He was elected mayor of the city of Winchester, serving one term with satisfaction to all concerned, doing much for the general good of the city. He is a member of the Fountain Park Cemetery Board of Trustees. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, and was the chancellor commander when the Winchester lodge first occupied its magnificent new home, and he has passed all the chairs in the local lodge, and he has served on the state board of by-laws for the order. He is a member of the Masonic order, and is treasurer for the Winchester lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, also belongs to the Chapter, Council and Eastern Star. He is a member of the William T. Sherman Camp, Sons of Veterans, No. 44.

Mr. Focht was married December 2, 1896, to Mary A. Hiatt, a daughter of Riley A. and Mary A. (Clark) Hiatt. She was born, reared and educated in Winchester, where Mr. Hiatt was a successful merchant for many years and one of the substantial and leading citizens of Randolph county. Both he and his wife were deceased at the time their daughter married Mr. Focht. She was bookkeeper at the Farmers and Merchants Bank. a position she had held for a period of seven years.

Two children have been born to our subject and wife, namely: Wilbur H., whose birth occurred December 4, 1897, is attending high school; and Frank A., born October 2, 1899, is also a student in high school. The parents and children are members of the Presbyterian church, our subject being superintendent of the Sunday school and has long been active in church and Sunday school work.

JAMES C. JARRETT.

James C. Jarrett, well-known liveryman of Lynn, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, June 24, 1874. He is a son of Jonathan and Lydia (Fender) Jarrett. The father was a native of Virginia, born in January, 1826. He was a small boy when his parents brought him to Wayne county, Indiana and there he grew to manhood amid pioneer conditions. He devoted his life to trading in livestock and was very successful, being an exceptionally good judge of stock. His death occurred in February, 1911, at an advanced age. He was a Prohibitionist, a Methodist and a Mason, also belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and Lydia Fender were married about 1851. She was a native of Illinois, born in 1834. She is still living, now nearing her four-score years. She makes her home in Paris, Ohio.

James C. Jarrett received a good common school education, and in his earlier career, he farmed and raised livestock in Butler and Preble counties, Ohio, thereby getting a good start in life. Turning his attention to the livery business he engaged in that at Columbus, Ohio, with much success for two years, then carried on the same at Eldorado, that state three years. Then in September, 1912, he came to Lynn, Indiana and resumed the livery business and has built up a large and rapidly increasing patronage and at the same time won a wide circle of friends who repose every confidence in him as a man and citizen.

Mr. Jarrett is independent in politics. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Order of United American Mechanics.

Mr. Jarrett was married June 10, 1899 to Susan E. Rupe. She was born in Wayne county, Indiana, July 22, 1877, and there she grew to womanhood and was educated in the common schools.

To our subject and wife three children were born, namely: Ellen, born June 28, 1904; Clifford C., born June 30, 1907; and Esther, born July 20, 1913.

LEAVELL & HOLSAPPLE.

The livery firm of Leavell & Holsapple, of Winchester, has never had a superior in this line of business in Randolph county and it well deserves the large patronage and pronounced success which it can claim for its proprietors, Thomas C. Leavell and Samuel J. Holsapple, are not only enterprising and progressive, but are men of splendid moral and commendable civic principles, desiring at all times to do their full share in furthering movements calculated to be of general good to the city and county of their residence.

Mr. Leavell was born July 1, 1859, in Randolph county. He is a son of James and Matilda (Jones) Leavell. The father was born in Henry county, Indiana, in 1811, and he died in 1863 in this county, whither he came after his marriage, spending the rest of his life here. The mother of our subject was born in Taylor county, West Virginia, in 1836, and her death occurred in 1910. James Leavell was twice married, our subject being by his second wife. To this union five children were born, namely: Samuel and Sarah R. are both deceased; Thomas L., subject of this sketch; Lewis H. is deceased, and Susan M., who is the youngest of the family.

Thomas L. Leavell received a common school education, and on November 1, 1881, he married Emma F. Read, who was born August 14, 1860, in Randolph county. She is a daughter of Cyrus O. and Sarah (Lawrence) Read, both natives of Greene county, Ohio. Mrs. Leavell received a common and high school education. To our subject and wife five children have been born, namely: Jessie R., born June 17, 1884; D. Kemp, born August 28, 1889; Carrie A., born November 1, 1891; Elenore E., born February 22, 1900, and James C., born August 4, 1901.

Mr. Leavell has devoted most of his life to agricultural pursuits, at which he made a pronounced success and is now owner of a number of valuable farms, containing one hundred and sixty-seven acres in all. His land is productive and well-improved. However, he makes his home in Winchester, where he is dealing in real estate to some extent. In April, 1912, he formed a partnership with Mr. Holsapple in the livery business, and they also buy and sell livestock on an extensive scale. They have a large and well-equipped livery barn, keeping up-to-date rigs and good horses and prompt and high grade service are their watchwords.

Politically Mr. Leavell is a Republican and fraternally he belongs to the Masonic order, the Blue Lodge and the Council; and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Samuel J. Holsapple was born in Darke county, Ohio, June 26, 1876. He is a son of Noah and Susan (Munich) Holsapple. The father was born in Miami county, Ohio, and died when our subject was small, August 4, 1887. The mother, also a native of Darke county, Ohio, died September 25, 1891. Noah Holsapple engaged in the saw mill business most of his life. His family consisted of five children, all still living, namely: Thomas W., William H., John W., Mary M., and Samuel J., of this sketch.

Samuel J. Holsapple received a common school education in Jay county, Indiana, whither he removed when about ten years of age, with his parents, and his father died there. Our subject left Jay county about 1897 and lived in various places for a few years, locating in "Winchester, Randolph county, in 1901, and engaged first in the livery business, later farmed, and in 1908 resumed the livery business, forming a partnership with A. L. Thompson, under the firm name of Thompson & Holsapple. Later our subject bought out his partner and conducted the business alone until about a year ago when he and Mr. Leavell formed a partnership and all the while he has met with much success because of his energy, honesty and good judgment. They have a good location and keep on an average of twenty good horses, and in connection with their regular buggies maintain three cabs.

Mr. Holsapple married on December 25, 1901, Rosie B. Harruff, who was born in Jay county, Indiana, October 12, 1874. She is a daughter of James P. and Julia Ann (Badder) Harruff, both natives of Ohio. Mrs. Holsapple received a common school education. The union of our subject and wife has been without issue.

Politically Mr. Holsapple is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Loyal Order of Moose.

ALBERT T. DELONG.

One of the successful young farmers of Randolph county who has spent his life here is Albert T. DeLong. It would seem that he has been wiser than so many of his contemporaries who have in their boyhood left the old home community and gone out into other states to seek their fortunes where conditions and people are alike strange and where so many fortunes assume the marsh-light aspect—alluring to the sight, but hard to grasp in tangible form.

Albert T. DeLong was born in Ward township, Randolph county, March 24, 1877. He is a son of Calvin and Mary E. (Hinkle) DeLong, and is one of a family of ten children.

The father of Mr. DeLong was a native of Indiana, and grew to manhood, was educated and married in his native state, and he and his wife are now living in Saratoga, this county. His parents came from Pennsylvania, and her parents from Virginia, first locating in Ohio, later moving on to Indiana; both the DeLongs and Hinkles were early settlers in this locality.

Albert T. DeLong grew to manhood in Ward township, Randolph county, and when of proper age he began working on his father's farm. He was educated in the common schools of Saratoga, later attended the Central Normal School at Danville, Indiana, then studied at the State Normal at Terre Haute. He began life for himself by teaching in Ward township, which he followed for seven years in a manner that stamped him as one of the leading educators of the county and his services were in great demand. But finally tiring of the school room and believing that a business career was more to his liking, he took up merchandising at Deerfield and continued in this field of endeavor for a period of six years, during which he enjoyed a large and lucrative business, then sold his stock of goods and purchased a farm on which he now resides.

Mr. DeLong was married November 4, 1899, to Lulu Hooker, a daughter of Charles Hooker, of Fort Recovery, Ohio. She was one of eight children, an equal number of sons and daughters, two sons being now deceased, Mrs. DeLong being the eldest of the daughters. Mr. Hooker is a successful farmer. Mrs. DeLong received good educational advantages.

To Mr. and Mrs. DeLong one child has been born, Rebecca Elizabeth, bearing the good old name of her grandmother. She was born February 22, 1911, on the anniversary of the great father of our country.

Mr. and Mrs. DeLong are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Deerfield, and Mr. DeLong has been a trustee in the same for six yeaers. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having taken all the degrees in the same, and is a member of the grand lodge. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen. He wields quite an influence in local public affairs. The Jefferson school was built under his direction, in the face of some opposition; but it is the finest school building in Randolph county and a credit to the same and should be the pride of all.

JOSEPH H. McFARLAND.

It is not everyone who could make a success as a commercial traveler, and the reason is obvious. One must possess the peculiar temperament necessary to a life on the road, must be able to adjust himself to any environment immediately, must take the dark days with a smile, must bear the many trials with fortitude, must be a good mixer, a genial, obliging, courteous gentleman, whose earnestness and candor impresses all. One of the best known and successful traveling in northern Indiana is Joseph H. McFarland, who maintains a pleasant home at the town of Farmland, Randolph county, where he has long resided and where he is held in high esteem by all who knew him.

Mr. McFarland was born in Jay City, Indiana, July 16, 1863. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Langte) McFarland, whose family consisted of eight children, of whom two sons and three daughters survive. John McFarland was born in 1840 at Darke City, Ohio. When he was young in years he was brought to Indiana by his father, and here he has lived for a period of seventy years during which he has noted and taken part in many great changes that have come to the country which was practically a wilderness when he first arrived. He is of Scotch-Irish descent. His wife was born in this state, in October, 1843. She is of German extraction, and her parents came from Pennsylvania to Indiana in pioneer days.

Joseph H. McFarland grew to manhood in his native locality and he received his education in the common schools and the college at Ridgeville. He has had a remarkable career in the mercantile business. When twenty years old he went to work in a general store in Ridgeville, where he remained about eleven years, then went to Marion, Indiana, and worked in the Boston store for seven years as manager and buyer, then took a position with the W. A. McNaughton Company, of Muncie, with which he remained ten years as manager of the carpet, rug and drapery department. He was then road salesman for the Indiana Steel and Wire Company for two years, then was with the Crescent Paper Company, of Indianapolis, as salesman for a year. Then bought a hardware store which he operated a year and sold out at a profit and returned to the road. Since he first entered the mercantile field he has never been out of employment, his services having been in great demand, and, unless to add that they were always most satisfactory in every respect.

Mr. McFarland was married June 20, 1894, to Nellie Korp, a daughter of Charles L. Korp, of Harding City, Missouri. Mrs. McFarland was born in Ridgeville, Indiana. When she was quite young her mother died and she was reared by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Rice, of Winchester, and here she grew to womanhood and was educated, graduating from the high school, after which she taught most acceptably in the schools of Winchester for four years.

Politically Mr. McFarland is a Democrat, fraternally a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. He has one of the best homes in Farmland, and he and his wife are popular with a wide circle of friends.

CALVIN SMITH, M. D.

Success in what are popularly termed the learned professions is the legitimate result of merit and painstaking endeavor. In commercial life one may come into possession of a lucrative business through inheritance or gift, but professional advancement is gained only by critical study and consecutive research long continued. One of the leading physicians and surgeons of a past generation in Monroe township, Randolph county, one indeed, who took his place in the front rank of medical men in this section of the Hoosier state during a period of thirty-six years, and who will be held in grateful remembrance for many decades to come was the late Dr. Calvin Smith. The large success which crowned his life work, coupled with his ripe experience and kind heart enabled him to bring comfort, hope and confidence to the sick room and he also brought sunshine into many a home erstwhile shrouded in gloom. Much of this same sunshine and happiness fled when the people among whom his name had become a household word heard the news of his transition to a higher plane of endeavor.

Dr. Smith was born in Fayette county, Indiana, August 23, 1845. He was a son of Ezra and Phebe (Brown) Smith, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. They came to Fayette county, Indiana when young and were married there, and there Ezra Brown engaged in carpentering and farming, but his death occurred in Marion county, this state, in July, 1865; his widow survived over thirty years, making her home at Indianapolis. They were both faithful members of the Christian church. They were the parents of eleven children, five sons and six daughters, all now deceased but two daughters.

Calvin Smith spent his early boyhood in Fayette county, being nine years old when he removed with his parents to Marion county, Indiana, where he received his early education, and then attended the schools of Indianapolis, where he prepared for college. In 1872 he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he attended the Eclectic College of Medicine two terms, from which he received a degree in 1876. He also attended the Eclectic Medical Association, of Indianapolis, from which he was graduated on May 13, 1885. From 1870 until 1876 he was engaged in practice in Indianapolis, and in the latter year came to Farmland, where he spent the rest of his life, a successful practitioner of medicine for a period of thirty-six years. In his earlier career he also practiced for a time in Muncie. He remained a student all his life and had great success as a general practitioner, building up a large and lucrative practice which extended over a wide territory.

Dr. Smith was married on November 30, 1872, in Dayton, O., to Jennie Flood, a native of Montgomery county, that state, her birth having occurred November 20, 1847. She was a daughter of John L. Flood and wife, both natives of Ohio, where they grew up and married and lived until 1850, when they removed to Randolph county, Indiana, and engaged in farming until their deaths, the father passing away in 1902 and the mother in 1905. Their family consisted of twelve children. Five children were born to Dr. Smith and wife, all of whom died in infancy. Politically the Doctor was a Republican, and he belonged to the Free and Accepted Masons. He was a member of the Christian church. He was summoned to his eternal rest on July 12, 1912, at the age of sixty-seven years.

SAMUEL C. FRIDDLE.

A man who has proven himself to be capable of making a success of more than one line of endeavor is Samuel C. Friddle, one of Windsor's most enterprising citizens and one of Randolph county's worthy native sons. As a farmer, blacksmith and now merchant he has forged ahead until he has become very comfortably fixed and can look forward to an old age free from the material wants that some experience. Mr. Friddle was born in Randolph county, September 19, 1856, and here he grew to manhood and received his education in the common schools of his native community. He is a son of William Friddle, and is one of four children, he being the oldest; the others are Clel, who lived at Farmland, this county, died at the age of forty years, leaving a widow and four children; Maggie, who married Mock Mills, a farmer in Minnesota, died some time ago and left one son; Grant, who is engaged in farming near Ridgeville, Randolph county, married Rosa Greene, and they have one child living. The father of the above named children was one of the early-day farmers of this county and a highly respected citizen.

Mr. Friddle, of this sketch, began life for himself by farming on the old homestead for a few years, after his marriage. When a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade at which he became quite skillful and this he followed with much success for a period of twenty years, maintaining a shop at Windsor and many of his customers came from remote parts of the county. Abandoning his trade ten years ago he has since conducted a general store in Windsor, being associated in business with his son, Ralph Friddle, a young business man of exceptional ability. They have built up a large and growing trade with the surrounding country and carry a splendid stock of well-selected goods, most everything used by a farming community.

Mr. Friddle was married in May, 1877, to ——— Burres, who was born near Farmland, Indiana, and there grew to womanhood and received her education. She is a daughter of William Burres and wife, who have long been engaged in farming here, whose family consisted of eight children.

To Mr. and Mrs. Friddle four daughters and one son have been born, namely: Leona, who maried George E. Swingley, a farmer of Delaware county, Indiana, has three children; Glenwood C., of Windsor, married O. B. Cline; Maetie, who married Charles Rogers, of Muncie; Grace, who married Fay Suplee, of Muncie, has one daughter; Ralph, married Daisy Oxley, a daughter of William Oxley, of Newcastle, Indiana. Ralph Friddle was educated in the common schools of Windsor and by wide home reading and contact with the business world is now a well-informed man and popular with all classes, is a live wire, a competent buyer, showing excellent judgment in what and when he buys, and is recognized as one of the up-to-date business men of the county.

Samuel C. Friddle has been a justice of the peace for a period of fifteen years, discharging the duties of this important office in a manner that has reflected much credit upon himself and to the satisfaction of the people. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and fraternally belongs to the Knights of Pythias, the Improved Order of Red Men and Knights of the Golden Eagle.

WILLIAM W. FOWLER.

One of the well remembered citizens of a past generation in Randolph county was the late William W. Fowler, who for a long lapse of years was one of our leading carpenters and builders, and many substantial and attractive residences, business and public buildings stand throughout this locality as monuments to his skill as a builder. He was one of the honored veterans of the Civil war who did what he could for the perpetuity of the Union, and he remained a loyal supporter of the government to the end. He was one of the few residents of this county who came from the West, for the tide of emigration has always been from the East towards the lands of the setting sun, and very few in comparison, have taken their course in the opposite direction. He was a man whom everybody respected because he was of an obliging, kindly and helpful nature, never failing in honesty and fairness when dealing with his fellowmen.

William W. Fowler was born in Liberty, Clay county, Missouri, December 5, 1838, but little of his life was spent in the land of the "big muddy water," he having been small when his parents removed from there to the state of Ohio, from which state he eventually came to Indiana and spent the remainder of his life. He was a son of John and Marinda Alice Fowler, and was one of a family of six children, three sons and three daughters. John Fowler, the father, was a contractor and builder and was an excellent workman for his day.

William W. Fowler received a common school education and when a boy he learned the carpenter's trade under his father, becoming quite expert in the same, and he followed this line of endeavor the major part of his active life, or until his health failed, when he took up the fire insurance business and also secured a commission as notary public, engaging in these lines of activity until his death. He was well known in Farmland and vicinity for a period of half a century, and he lived in one house for forty-seven years.

Mr. Fowler enlisted on August 5, 1862, in Company A, Eighty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served very faithfully in numerous campaigns and battles until his discharge, January 5, 1865, having won the admiration of both his comrades and officers for his faithful bravery and patriotism. Politically, he was a Republican, and fraternally, belonged to the Free and Accepted Masons in Farmland. He attended the Christian church. The death of this excellent citizen occurred February 21, 1911, at the advanced age of seventy-three years.

BENJAMIN F. BOLTZ.

Benjamin F. Boltz was born in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, September 10, 1848. He is a son of Benjamin and Mariah (Schneckengost) Boltz, an old Pennsylvania family, in which state the parents grew to maturity, were educated in the early-day schools and married and spent their earlier years, removing with their family to Randolph county, Indiana, in 1859, locating at Ridgeville, in the northern part of the county. The father was a shoemaker by profession. Later the family moved to Winchester, where the parents spent the rest of their lives, both being long since deceased.

Benjamin F. Boltz was reared in Ridgeville, and there received a common school education, also attended the Ridgeville College. He began life for himself by teaching school, which he followed for three years, then came to Winchester and clerked in the store of John Richardson for three years. Then, in 1875, he became a clerk in the county auditor's office, serving seven years as deputy, then became county auditor by popular election and served four years. During his long service in this office he gave entire satisfaction to all concerned, proving to be a most faithful and conscientious public official.

After leaving the county auditor's office, Mr. Boltz engaged in the insurance business for some years, and in 1888 he began the manufacture of washing machines, in which he was immediately successful and subsequently he engaged in the manufacture of stock-staves, barrel headings and other wood novelties, and has been conducting to the present time a general saw mill and wood furniture manufacturing business, which has grown to large proportions and is constantly increasing. Prompt and high-grade service has ever been his watchword, as well as scrupulous honesty in all his dealings with the business world.

Mr. Boltz was married November 19, 1872, to Martha J. Spera, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Shook) Spera, an excellent family of Randolph county, whither they came from Portage county, Ohio, in 1860. Both parents are now deceased. To our subject and wife the following children have been born, namely: Myrtie, who married W. G. Johnson, of Youngstown, Ohio; Laura, who married F. W. Howard, of Winchester; Ralph W., of Winchester, and Mary, now the wife of Arthur Purdy. These children were all given excellent educational advantages, and are all well situated in life, highly respected by wide circles of friends and acquaintances, as are their parents.

Mr. Boltz is a Republican politically, and has long been more or less active in public affairs. He was at one time chairman of the Republican County Central Committee. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is a trustee and is active in church and Sunday school work.

WILLIAM J. HOOK.

William J. Hook was born in Montreal, Canada, August 15, 1845, and therefore now getting along in years, but it hale and hearty owing to a life carefully lived. He is a son of James Hook, who was born in Glouchester, England, from which country he emigrated to America when a young man, bringing his wife, who was Martha Constance before her marriage, and their three children. James W. Hook was the first of the family born in the new world. They first located in Troy, New York, but soon thereafter emigrated to Wisconsin, and in 1880 came to Indiana. The father was employed in farming, and his death occurred in 1885. His widow surviving until 1895. Besides his brother Charles Hook, he had two sisters, Mrs. E. M. Higgs, of Columbus, Ohio, and Mrs. W. B. Sylvester, who resides in New Mexico. The maternal grandfather, William Hook, married Constance Lane, who was of Welsh ancestry.

William J. Hook, of this review, was educated in the common schools of Wisconsin, and he commenced business for himself when only about sixteen years of age and he has spent his life in partnership with his brother, Charles S. Hook.

Mr. Hook went to Morrow county, Ohio, in 1868 and began the manufacture of wooden ware with his brother, Charles S. Hook, and in 1877 came to Indiana and located in Union City in the same business, and they built up an extensive trade all over the United States, there being a great demand for their products owing to their superiority in workmanship and quality. Shipments were also made constantly into Canada. This line of business was continued with great success from a financial viewpoint until 1898, when their plant burned, since which time Mr. Hook has not been regularly engaged in business, spending most of his time looking after his large holdings in city real estate. He is one of the stockholders of the Commercial Bank of Union City. He has a large fine residence here and is one of the substantial citizens of the town. Politically he is a Republican. He belongs to the Baptist church, and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

William J. Hook was married in 1871 to Mary St. John, who was born in Morrow county, Ohio, in 1850, and her death occurred in 1892. She was a daughter of Anson St. John, who is deceased.

To William J. Hook and wife the following children were born: Charles S., born August 19, 1874, married Nellie Anderson, who was born in 1875, and they have one child, Helen Hook, born November 28, 1906. Warren S. Hook was born in 1877, was educated in music, is single and lives at home; Florence Hook married Elder Charles S. Pier, a Methodist minister, station now at Charleston, Illinois, and they have one child, Ruth Pier; Mary H. Hook, born in 1893, was educated in the high school, and is well up in music, especially vocal, having sung many times to an appreciative audience in public, and is now taking private music lessons in Chicago, no means being spared to give her the very best advantages.

Charles S. Hook, Sr., brother of our subject, was also educated in the common schools of Wisconsin and he began life for himself when sixteen years of age, and as stated, has always been associated in business with our subject. He has made a great success and is now vice-president of the Commercial National Bank and a director in the same. He is also vice-president of the German Package Manufacturing Company of Chicago, the largest manufacturing concern of dairy and creamery supplies in the world. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally belongs to the Masonic Order. He is a member of the Presbyterian church. He married in 1876, Ella Maxwell, who was born in Morrow county, Ohio, September 2, 1853. She is a daughter of Levi Maxwell, a lumberman, who died in 1903, his wife having died in 1865. Mrs. Hook's grandfather, Abner Maxwell, was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The Maxwells is an old family in Virginia. The mother of Mrs. Hook was Lucinda Page, a native of Montreal, Canada. The grandmother was a Bond.

To Charles S. Hook, Sr., and wife the following children were born: Mary C., born in Union City, was graduated from the high school here, later was graduated from Dean Academy, at Franklin, Massachusetts, also was graduated in music from the conservatory at Oberlin, Ohio, then took a business course in Indianapolis. James M. Hook, the second child, was graduated from the Union City high school, later taking a course at Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, in the electrical department.

JOHN A. GATES.

John A. Gates was born November 15, 1852 at Burlington, Indiana. He is a son of Albro and Lucy (Russell) Gates. The father was married twice before. Our subject was one of five children, he being the eldest; the others were Henry M., a carpenter of Farmland; Emily lives in Anderson; Loring, who is farming in Delaware county; Russell lives on the old homestead at Burlington. Albro Gates, the father, was born in the state of New York and he spent his boyhood in Chautauqua county and received a meager education in the early-day schools. He subsequently removed to Erie county, Pennsylvania, and he and his four brothers eventually came to Indiana. He had but fifty cents when he arrived here, but he was a man of courage and thrift and went to work with a will, first cutting cord wood in order to get a start, and he in due course of time became owner of a valuable farm near Burlington. His father was a captain in the American navy and followed the sea most of his life.

John A. Gates grew to manhood on the home farm where he worked hard when a boy. He received his education in the common schools of his community and early in life began farming for himself. He worked hard and managed well and has prospered, owning now a finely-improved and productive farm of four hundred acres, which he purchased in 1895, and here he carries on general farming and stock raising on an extensive scale. His dwelling was burned in 1910, but he soon erected a large attractive home, one of the most desirable in the township, and he also has numerous substantial outbuildings. He is a good judge of livestock and large numbers of well-graded stock are always to be found on his place.

Mr. Gates was married January 14, 1904 to Olive Clevenger and to this union three children were born, namely: Frederick, who is farming in Delaware county, married May Kline, and they have three children, DeVoe, Francis and Marcella; Letta is the wife of Thurman Porter, of Parker City, Indiana, and they have one child, Sarah Elizabeth; Clarence, a druggist of Muncie, married Helen Durst.

Mr. Gates is a thorough and practical farmer and is highly respected wherever known. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

E. REED ABEL.

E. Reed Abel was born July 11, 1898, in Bryant, Jay county, Indiana. He is a son of Dr. Oscar E. and Ada G. (Miller) Abel, the father born in Jay county and the mother at Portland, this state. The Abels is an old family of Jay county, where George W. Abel, our subject's grandfather settled in 1838. A complete sketch of Dr. Abel is to be found on another page of this volume.

E. Reed Abel received his education in the public schools of Winchester, the high school at Huntsville and in the Normal at Marion, Indiana. Thus well-equipped he began life for himself as a teacher and taught two years in the district schools, then attended Purdue University one term, then taught two years more. He gave eminent satisfaction as a teacher, but preferring the outdoors to the confinement of the school room he began farming on the place where he now resides near Huntsville, and has made a pronounced success as a general farmer and stock raiser, owning a productive and well-improved farm, where is to be found a good grade of livestock from year to year and an excellent group of buildings.

Mr. Abel was married December 27, 1911, to Lucille Haines, a native of West River township, this county, where she grew to womanhood and was educated. She is a daughter of Asa Haines and wife, a highly respected family of this community. She is the eldest of four children, her three sisters being Jennie, Ruth and Dorothy.

Mr. Abel and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

CHARLES ALVIN ROLL.

Charles Alvin Roll, liveryman of Lynn, Randolph county, is one of the fortunate type who spent his younger days on the farm. He was born in Darke county, Ohio, November 2, 1876, and is a son of John C. and Matilda (Shields) Roll. The father was born in Wayne county, Indiana in January, 1832. He devoted his active life to farming. His death occurred in April, 1908. His widow who was born in May, 1839, is still living, now nearing her seventy-fifth birthday. She is a product of pioneer days and talks interestingly of the olden times. Like her husband before her she has always enjoyed a wide circle of warm friends throughout the locality where she has lived so long.

Charles A. Roll grew to manhood on the home farm and there he worked hard when a boy, assisting his father with the crops and he received a fair education in the rural public schools. He remained on the home farm until he was twenty-five years old, then turned his attention to the livery business which has continued to be his vocation. He first established himself in this line of endeavor in Greenville, Ohio, where he remained nine years, during which time he got a good start. He then went into the same business in Arcanum, Ohio, where he remained three years with his usual success, then came to Lynn, Indiana, and has been in the livery business here ever since. He has a large patronage being popular with the general traveling public and is well equipped for prompt and high-class service. He has ten good horses and substantial rigs. He also owns a hay-bailer which he operates in season. Mr. Roll is an auctioneer of rare ability and his services are in great demand in this connection. He has given eminent satisfaction at all the sales which he has cried.

Mr. Roll was married January 30, 1900, to Virginia Creighton, who was born in Greenville, Ohio, October 20, 1883, and there grew to womanhood and was educated. To our subject and wife two children have been born, namely: Mason, born January 10, 1902; and Creighton, born October 2, 1905. They are both attending school.

CLARENCE L. MARLATT, M. D.

The life of the scholarly or professional man seldom exhibits any of those striking incidents that seize upon public feeling and attract attention to himself. His character is generally made up of the aggregate qualities and qualifications he may possess as these may be elicited by the exercise of the duties of his vocation or the particular profession to which he belongs. But when such a man has so impressed his individuality upon his fellowmen as to gain their confidence and through that confidence and his individual merit rises to an important place in the locality in which he resides, his name is worthy of mention on the pages of history. Dr. Clarence L. Marlatt, of Indianapolis, one of Randolph county's boys, not content to hide his talents amid life's sequestered ways, has by force of his will and a laudable ambition forged to the front in a responsible and exacting calling and earned an honorable reputation in one of the most useful of professions. His life has been one of hard study and research from his youth and since maturity of laborious professional duty, and he is eminently deserving of the success he has achieved.

Doctor Marlatt was born at Winchester January 2, 1875, being the son of William P. and Hannah (Moorman) Marlatt, who are both natives of Indiana. (See sketch on page 1116 of this work.) Doctor Marlatt had the advantage of the common schools of Winchester and then finished the high school course in a private school in Indianapolis, after which he entered, in 1894, the Central College of Physicians and Surgeons and graduated therefrom in the spring of 1897. April 1, 1897, he began the practice of medicine on Massachusetts avenue, near St. Clair street, and a year later located at 760 Massachusetts avenue, where he has been in active practice since. Doctor Marlatt has built up a large business and has won a host of friends.

He has been twice married, first, in September, 1899, to Miss Margaret Dwyer, of Muncie, Indiana, a graduate nurse of the City Hospital of Indianapolis. Her death occurred in January, 1901, and January 2, 1902, Doctor Marlatt married Miss Katharine C. Rottman, of Greenfield, Indiana, where she grew to womanhood and was educated. Mrs. Marlatt is the youngest of five daughters and two sons born to John H. and Elizabeth (Geiss) Rottman, who are both of German extraction. John H. Rottman was a native of Germany, emigrating to America in early manhood, and was a soldier in the Civil war.

Doctor Marlatt is a Democrat in politics. He served as physician of the county infirmary in 1911 and 1912, and since that time has been physician at the county jail. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and, fraternally, belongs to the Masons, Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.
